The opinion of the trial court, printed in the appendix to appellant's brief, shows that the trial court was convinced that all the proceedings taken by counsel for the defendant were taken in good faith, and that, while anticipated contests did not materialize, or that not more than a formal contest was made to the proceedings instituted by counsel for the plaintiff to secure title to the property as herein indicted, the circumstances were such as justified counsel in thoroughly preparing for any contingency that might arise. The opinion further indicates that the court was impressed with the necessity of prompt action on the part of counsel for the defendant to prevent loss to her of property valued at the sum of $75,000. Whatever may have been the position taken by the trustees of the estate of Bernhardt A. Kipp, deceased, it is evident from the record that Bauermeister was in a position to dictate terms by reason of the time limit contained in the escrow agreement, and the record does show that Bauermeister made considerable difficulty and some effort to escape from the terms of said agreement, whether with the intent of securing release therefrom by insisting upon the time limit contained therein, or simply for the purpose of obtaining additional money is immaterial. That this situation had to be handled carefully is patent, and the services of counsel in relation thereto were matters properly to be taken into consideration by the trial court. The record shows that the additional time was secured to the defendant by the payment of some additional bonuses to Bauermeister.

[2-4] The transcript also sets forth the testimony of a number of expert witnesses, all of whom testified as to the value of the services, and placed a higher estimate thereon than was allowed by the trial court. This, however, is not the sole criterion by which to judge of the value of counsel's services. The opinions of experts are admissible, but, after such testimony is admitted, the case goes back to the sound judgment of the trial court, and, unless we can say that that judgment and discretion have been abused and the amount of compensation awarded grossly excessive or exorbitant, we are not in a position to order a reversal or even a modification of the judgment. In the case at bar, the amount allowed seems rather large, as we gather the extent of the services from the cold record. But, for the reasons hereinbefore stated, we are not in the same position as the trial court in passing judgment, as the transcript is necessarily lacking in many of the elements which must be taken into consideration by the trial court. The mere fact that we may think the trial court erred somewhat in judgment and allowed more than this court would have allowed presents no cause for reversal. An appeal in cases of this kind cannot be converted into a trial de novo. The law upon this subject is so fully set forth in the cases cited by the opinion of this court, written by Mr. Justice Hart, in the matter of the Estate of Iser, 52 Cal. App. 405, 198 P. 1014, that we only need to give the citation in support of what we have just said.

Being of the opinion that the amount of attorney's fees awarded in this case is not so grossly excessive as to justify interference on the part of an appellate court, the judgment of the trial court is hereby affirmed.

TRACY v. RINGOLE. (Civ. 5760.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 14, 1927.

1. Attorney and client ⚖️143—Attorney may contract for professional services and fix compensation thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 1021).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1021, an attorney may contract for his professional services, and such contract may fix amount of his compensation.

2. Attorney and client ⚖️63—Express contract for attorney's services, fairly made, controls, and construction is same as between others sustaining like fiduciary relations.

Express contract for attorney's professional services, when fairly entered into, will control between parties, and construction of such contracts does not differ from construction of contracts between other persons who sustain like fiduciary relation toward each other.

3. Attorney and client ⚖️176—Attorney's lien on judgment may be created by contract.

A lien on judgment for attorney's compensation may be created by contract of parties.

4. Attorney and client ⚖️189—Under attorney's contingent fee contract giving attorney lien on cause of action and judgment, attorney had lien on money received in settlement by substituted attorney.

Where contract between attorney and client provided for contingent fee for one-third of sum recovered, and provided that attorney should have lien on cause of action and on any judgment that might be secured for such share and that no substitution of attorneys could be made without attorney's being paid first, except in event of his misconduct, attorney became equitable owner of an undivided one-third of whatever sum might become due by reason of prosecution of action, and had lien on fund in hands of substituted attorney as proceeds of settlement of case.

5. Trusts ⚖️103(4)—Where attorney had contract lien for contingent fee, substituted attorney, employed on same terms, became "constructive trustee" of money received in settlement.

Where original attorney took case on contingent fee basis, and contract with client provided that he should have lien on cause of action and on judgment for such share, and that there should be no substitution of attorneys without paying him, substituted attorney, employed on same terms, took cause of action and money received therefrom in settlement, subject to original attorney's interest therein, and became "constructive trustee" of cause of action and money arising therefrom to extent of his interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action to enforce a lien for attorney's fees by J. A. Tracy against G. C. Ringole. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. A. Tracy and Wm. Steers, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Samuel D. Hamburg, of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action to enforce a lien for attorney's fees. The complaint alleges, in substance, that one Sperro was seriously injured in an automobile accident, and, being in indigent circumstances, he employed plaintiff upon a contingent fee to collect damages for his injuries. Plaintiff agreed to advance all costs and to render all necessary legal services in consideration of receiving one-third of any amount that might be finally recovered. The agreement, which was in writing, contained a clause giving to plaintiff a lien on the cause of action and on any judgment that might be secured for the sum and share agreed upon, and it was provided that no substitution of attorneys could be had without plaintiff being first paid, except in the event of his misconduct. The complaint then charges that after plaintiff had performed certain services, defendant, an attorney at law, fraudulently, and for the purpose of depriving plaintiff of his fee, induced Sperro to discharge plaintiff as his attorney, without justifiable reason, and caused and procured himself to be appointed and engaged as the attorney of Sperro, upon the same terms as plaintiff had been employed; that thereafter defendant herein made a settlement of the case with the defendants in the action and their insurance carriers for the sum of $3,000. It is then claimed that plaintiff has a lien upon one-third of this amount for his fee under his contract with Sperro; that defendant knew of all the facts and circumstances concerning plaintiff's lien, but, notwithstanding such knowledge, converted the amount thereof to his own use in fraud of plaintiff's rights. A demurrer was interposed to the complaint and sustained. This is an appeal from the order.

of the judgment or recovery in the particular action, the attorney to the extent of such services being regarded as an equitable assignee of the judgment. It is based, as in the case of a lien proper, on the natural equity that a party should not be allowed to appropriate the whole of a judgment in his favor without paying for the services of his attorney in obtaining such judgment. The use of the term lien in this connection has been criticized as inaccurate, and the right of the attorney has been said to be merely a claim to the equitable interference of the court. 6 C. J. 767.

In California there is no statute giving a lien to an attorney upon a judgment for services rendered in favor of his client, and they must consequently recover for their services in the ordinary mode. McGown v. Dalzell, 72 Cal. App. 197, 236 P. 941. It has been said that the paucity of the California cases on attorney's liens, and particularly the entire absence of authority on retaining liens, is remarkable. 3 Cal. Jur. 683. A lien, however, may be created by contract of the parties. Here the contract did provide for a lien, and it is alleged that defendant had full knowledge of this fact. In such a case it has been held that the agreement for a lien is decisive as to its existence and amount, and it constitutes a valid equitable assignment of the judgment pro tanto and creates a lien upon the specific fund, notwithstanding that the action in which the judgment was obtained was on a cause of action for a tort in itself unassignable. 6 Cyc. 742. See, also, Goad v. Hart, 128 Cal. 197, 60 P. 761, 964; Hoffman v. Vallejo, 45 Cal. 564.

[4, 5] We are of the opinion, therefore, that by reason of his contract plaintiff became the equitable owner of an undivided one-third of whatever sum might become due by reason of the prosecution of the action, and that a lien was created in favor of plaintiff upon the fund in the hands of defendant; that defendant took such cause of action and the money received therefrom in settlement, subject to plaintiff's interest therein, and thereupon became a constructive trustee of the cause of action and the moneys arising therefrom to the extent of plaintiff's interest. Hoffman v. Vallejo, supra; Goad v. Hart, supra. This being so, the complaint states a cause of action, and the demurrer to the same was improperly sustained.

PEOPLE v. COSTELLO et al. (Cr. 1394.)★

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 2, 1928.

1. Criminal law §736(2)—Conflicting testimony as to whether defendants' confessions were freely and voluntarily made held to make question for trial court.

Where testimony was conflicting as to whether confessions of defendants were given freely and voluntarily, it was function of trial court to determine issues thus raised preliminary to ruling on admissibility of confessions.

2. Criminal law §519(2)—Admitting confessions relative to unsuspected crimes voluntarily repeated to stenographer held not error, under conflicting evidence as to whether they were voluntary in first instance.

Action of court in admitting evidence of confessions obtained from persons accused of robbery, under conflicting evidence as to whether confessions were freely obtained, held not error, where defendants voluntarily returned on following day to have their confessions taken down by stenographer, and where confessions related to other crimes than those of which defendants were suspected.

3. Robbery §24(3)—Failure of complaining witness to positively identify all persons accused held not to prevent conviction, where evidence showed defendants had been acting jointly in commission of similar robberies.

Failure of complaining witness to identify all of persons charged with robbery held not to prevent conviction, where evidence indicated that defendants had been working together in commission of similar robberies, and used same automobile, and were gathered together at time of their arrest preparing to commit another robbery.

4. Criminal law §530—Signed confessions merely referring to Chinese laundry on L. street as scene of robbery were sufficiently definite, under evidence showing oral confessions disclosed street number.

That signed confessions of robbery merely related to place of crime as Chinese laundry on L. street, did not render confessions inadequate to show defendants' connection with crime, where it appeared from testimony that oral confessions originally made identified place of crime by street number.

5. Criminal law §517(1)—Variance between confessions and complaining witness' testimony as to bystanders present at robbery and amount taken held not to prevent use of confessions.

Fact that there was a discrepancy between confessions and testimony of complaining witness as to bystanders present at time of robbery, and as to amount of money taken, held not to require exclusion of confessions, since number of persons present and amount of money taken were immaterial on question whether crime was committed.

6. Criminal law §400(9)—Notes of confessions held properly admitted under reporter's testimony that notes correctly represented defendants' statements, were signed by defendants as interpreted and re-read, and that transcription was accurate.

Where reporter, who took notes of defendants' confessions, made in foreign language, and transcribed them into typewriting, testified that notes were true and correct copies of what was said by defendants, that each signed same as they had been interpreted and re-read to him, and that the typewritten documents were true transcriptions of notes, reporter's notes were admissible in evidence as written confessions, and as such might be read by jury or translated to them by reporter.

7. Criminal law §663—Prosecution was entitled to have confessions in foreign language, properly in evidence, interpreted by having notes read into record, or by filing transcription in evidence.

Where confessions in foreign language were properly before jury as evidence, prosecution was entitled to have them interpreted in language which jury could understand, either by having reporter read his notes into the record, or by filing in evidence a transcription of the notes for the jury's convenience.

8. Criminal law §400(9)—Reporter's notes constitute "best evidence" of confessions.

Reporter's notes of confessions, identified by reporter as correct statement of matters related to him, constitute "best evidence" of confessions.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Best Evidence.]

9. Criminal law §1169(12)—Admission of typewritten translations of reporter's notes of confessions properly in evidence held not prejudicial.

Where reporter's notes of confessions made in foreign language were identified as correct and were properly in evidence, admission of typewritten transcription shown to be true translation of original notes was not prejudicial.

10. Criminal law §695(2)—Where typewritten translations of notes of confessions are otherwise admissible, specific objection must be made that notes detail other crimes.

Where typewritten translations of notes of confessions, made in foreign language, contain confessions relating to other crimes besides that for which defendants are being prosecuted, specific objection must be made to admission of translations on ground that they contain details of other crimes in order to have them excluded on that ground.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Frank Costello, William Avelino, and William Raleigh were convicted of robbery while armed with a deadly weapon, and they appeal. Affirmed as to appellant Frank Costello.

See, also, 262 P. 78.

Milton T. U'Ren, of San Francisco, and H. Edward Manning, of Vallejo, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendant Costello was tried jointly with Avelino and Raleigh before a jury upon an information charging them with robbery. The jury returned separate verdicts finding each of the defendants guilty of robbery in the first degree, the crime having been committed while each of the defendants was armed with a deadly weapon. From the judgments following these verdicts and from the orders denying each of the defendants a new trial they have appealed separately, but by stipulation the three appeals have been presented upon a single typewritten record.

At about 10 o'clock p. m. of June 19, 1926, the three defendants entered the laundry of Yee Lung, located at No. 9 Langton street, San Francisco, upon the pretense that one of them had left clothes with the complaining witness to be laundered. As the witness opened the door, the defendant Costello pointed a revolver at him and he and one of the other defendants took the witness upstairs, made a search of the premises, and took from a trunk belonging to the witness the sum of $432. They then bound the witness and the three defendants left the premises. On the night of June 25, 1926, a number of police officers entered a rooming house conducted by the mother of defendant Raleigh in search of parties suspected of having been guilty of an attempt to commit murder in the county of San Mateo. The officers there encountered the three defendants, one of whom endeavored to make his escape through a window, while the other two concealed themselves under a bed. The three defendants were handcuffed and questioned by the officers for a period running from about midnight of the night of the arrest until 5 o'clock of the following morning. During the course of the examination one of the officers discovered a lunch basket containing five revolvers, which were shown to the defendants after they had stated that no arms were concealed in the house. About this time the defendant Costello expressed the willingness to make a full confession of the crimes in which he had participated. He was taken into another room and made a full confession to the officers implicating himself and the other two defendants in a series of robberies committed within a period of about 10 days immediately preceding. Costello was then taken back to the other defendants, who were told of the confession made by Costello, and each admitted the truth of the statements made by him. Each defendant was then asked to point out the revolver which he had used in the several robberies detailed in this confession, and each did so while a newspaper photographer took pictures of them in the act. The defendants were then taken to the hall of justice where they were assembled at about 8 o'clock a. m. of June 26th, in the office of the police commissioners in the presence of some 15 or 20 police officers and newspaper men. Costello was then asked if he desired to make a confession and stated that he would do so if it was satisfactory to his codefendants. They both nodded their assent, and Costello proceeded to give in detail a description of all robberies in which he had participated during a period of some 10 days prior to his arrest. This confession was taken down in shorthand by a reporter, read back to Costello, who thereupon signed the shorthand notes. The same proceeding was had with each of the other defendants, and all three in the presence of this group of officers and newspaper men stated that their confessions were made voluntarily and without any duress or promise of reward. The shorthand reporter thereafter transcribed his notes, and these shorthand notes, together with the typewritten transcriptions, were all offered and received in evidence during the course of the trial.

[1, 2] On this appeal the appellants have raised four grounds which we will consider in the order presented. It is argued that the trial court erred in admitting the confessions of these defendants on the ground that they were not freely and voluntarily given. In support of the argument the testimony of the three appellants and of other roomers in the house where they were arrested is cited to show that before the confessions were given the appellants were handcuffed and kept upon the floor for several hours; that they were beaten and abused by some of the officers and threatened with further punishment if confessions were not made. All this testimony was denied by creditable witnesses, and it was, of course, the function of the trial court to determine the conflict. It stands out unmistakably from the record that the witnesses for the defense were carefully coached to present a picture of cruelty and maltreatment on the part of the officers, but that their stories were so conflicting and improbable that the trial court could not have justly found otherwise than that the confessions were freely and voluntarily given. When the appellants were brought into the presence of the officers on the following morning for the purpose of taking their confessions down in shorthand, there was no pretense that they were threatened or abused or induced to confess their crimes by any promise on the part of the officers. But outside of the question of the conflict between these witnesses as to what occurred preceding the confessions, the outstanding fact is that each of these appellants gave detailed accounts of the various crimes in which they had participated over a period of some 10 days or 2 weeks immediately prior to their arrest, and in so doing brought to the attention of the arresting officers for the first time the details and circumstances of these various crimes. It is also significant that, though each of the appellants was taken into custody on suspicion of having participated in an attempt to commit murder in another county, and that, while each was being questioned as to his participation in that crime, each detailed to the arresting officers his participation in these robberies committed in San Francisco, for none which any one of the appellants had theretofore been suspected.

[3] It is argued that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the convictions of Avelino and Raleigh because the complaining witness failed to positively identify them, and because their confessions did not admit the commission of the crime charged and were not true. It is true that Avelino and Raleigh were not identified by the complaining witness, but it was shown that the three appellants had been working together over a considerable period of time in the commission of similar robberies; that the three had teamed together and used the same automobile and the pistols which were found in the house at the time of their arrest; that they were gathered at this house at the time of their arrest preparing to commit another robbery that night; and that the automobile which had been used in their previous crimes was standing in front of the door, the driver ready to take them to the seat of the crime planned for that night.

[4] It is argued that the confessions do not link either of these two appellants with the particular crime for which they were on trial, because they referred merely to a Chinese laundry on Langton street without giving the street number or the date of the robbery. This is true in so far as it relates to the confessions given in the office of the police commission, but it is not true in reference to the confessions given at the Gough street house at the time of the appellants' arrest. In the examination of one of the officers relative to the confession made by Costello, he was asked: "What did he say about the robbery at No. 9 Langton street in this city and county?" The witness answered: "He said he participated in that robbery." This witness then gave in detail the statement of Costello covering all the circumstances of the robbery of this laundry and of his codefendants' participation in the crime. This was then all repeated to Avelino and Raleigh, who stated at the time that the facts were true as given by Costello. It is apparent that throughout the making of these confessions the parties had in mind the particular robbery committed at No. 9 Langton street upon the complaining witness in this trial, and that it was for this reason that they did not in each instance designate the time, place, parties present, and amount of money taken. The case is like People v. Dutro, 75 Cal. App. 138, 142, 242 P. 84, where a confession which was indefinite in similar respects was held properly admitted.

[5] The argument is also made that these confessions in so far as they relate to Avelino and Raleigh cannot be treated as confessions because they were untrue. The argument is that inasmuch as the complaining witness stated he was alone in the laundry at the time of the robbery and that $432 was taken from him, whereas one of the appellants stated that two other Chinamen were present at the time of the robbery and that all stated that they took but $200, we must assume that the appellants were not telling the truth and that their statements cannot therefore be treated as confessions of the crime charged. The number of Chinamen present at the time of the robbery and the amount of money taken had no bearing upon the crime for which the appellants were all tried, and a variance in either of these particulars had no effect upon the use of the admissions made by the appellants. It is significant that Costello alone stated that three Chinamen were present at the time of the crime, and that each of the three differed as to the exact amount of money received, a circumstance which may have occurred through mistake or misinformation.

[6] It is argued that the trial court erred in admitting the shorthand notes and the typewritten transcriptions of these notes. Before these documents were admitted, the reporter who made the notes and transcribed them into typewriting was called to the stand and testified that the notes were true and correct notes of what was said by the appellants, and that each signed the same as they had been interpreted and re-read to him. The same witness also testified that the typewritten documents were true transcriptions of these notes. The reporter's notes were properly admitted in evidence as written confessions of the accused and could have been read by the jury or translated to them by the reporter if the members of the jury were unable to read them. The same situation would arise if the confessions had been written in a foreign language and signed by the accused and then translated into English. The original writings with the signature of the accused would be admissible in evidence as the written confessions of the accused. 16 Cor. Jur. § 1508.

[7-10] When these confessions were before the jury, the prosecution was entitled to have them interpreted into language which the jury could understand, and this might have been done either by having the reporter read his notes into the record or by filing in evidence a transcription of those notes for the convenience of the jury. When the reporter was on the stand he might have been asked to then translate his notes or to read the typewritten transcription, the state having shown that this transcription was a true translation of the original notes, but because of the objection of the appellants, and in order to avoid placing before the jury the details and circumstances of the various other crimes committed by these appellants, the district attorney read from this typewritten translation the facts and circumstances which related to this particular crime alone for which the appellants were all tried. By this process the district attorney, in reading from the typewritten translation, eliminated those portions of the confessions which did not pertain to the offense charged in the information, whereas, if the reporter had been called on to translate his notes, it would have been difficult to avoid giving a complete translation covering all these other crimes. The reporter's notes, which were the best evidence of the confessions, being properly in evidence, the appellants were not prejudiced by the admission of the typewritten translations, unless it be because these contained the details of the other crimes. These, however, could have been eliminated if the appellants had made their objection upon that ground.

Upon the whole case we are satisfied from an examination of the entire record that all the appellants were fairly tried and convicted upon evidence which unmistakably demonstrates their guilt of the crime charged in the information.

JONES v. EXPRESS PUB. CO. et al. (Civ. 5981.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 2, 1927.

1. Libel and slander $\S$ 48(2)—One contesting authority to discharge her from public office during time of publication of alleged libelous matter was estopped from denying she was public officer, and doctrine of privileged communications applied (Civ. Code, $\S$ 47).

Where plaintiff, in public investigation before civil service commission, was contesting authority of district attorney to discharge her from office of deputy having charge of investigation of juvenile offenses, when alleged libelous matter was published, she was estopped from denying that she was in fact a public officer so as to relieve her from application of doctrine of privileged communications under Civ. Code, $\S$ 47, and communication was privileged.

2. Libel and slander $\S$ 86(4)—Plaintiff declaring construction of alleged libelous language by use of innuendo is bound by interpretation, except where language has obvious meaning independent of explanation.

Having formally declared her construction of alleged libelous language by use of specific innuendo, plaintiff was bound by her interpretation, except where language had clear and obvious meaning independent of any explanation.

3. Libel and slander $\S$ 10(6)—Charge that employee in district attorney's office threatened to sell her affidavit regarding intimate relations with district attorney, held not actionable, where affidavit itself showed unchastity.

Action for libel would not lie, based upon charge that plaintiff threatened to sell her own affidavit regarding her intimate relations with district attorney to his enemies, which affidavit in fact declared truth respecting plaintiff's own character.

4. Libel and slander $\S$ 10(6)—Public employee could not complain of publication of facts regarding her character, which she subsequently admitted to be true in public investigation respecting her fitness for office.

Plaintiff could not be heard to complain of publication of facts regarding her character, which in public investigation respecting her fitness for office she admitted to be true, even though this confession was made subsequent to first publication, since she must be deemed to have anticipated result of public confession amounting to acknowledgment of unchastity.

5. Libel and slander $\S$ 10(6)—Newspaper acting without malice is not liable for damages for publishing communication concerning fitness for public office, admitted to be true (Civ. Code, $\S$ 47).

Newspaper cannot be held liable for damages under Civ. Code, $\S$ 47, for publication of communication, without malice, concerning fitness of one for public office, which statement is voluntarily admitted by accused to be true.

6. Libel and slander $\S$ 93—One relying upon doctrine of privileged communications must adequately plead facts (Civ. Code, $\S$ 47).

One who relies upon doctrine of privileged communications, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 47, as special defense, must adequately plead facts.

7. Libel and slander $\S$ 101(1)—Where pleadings admit or plaintiff's evidence establishes affirmative defense in libel action, defendant need not prove such defense.

Burden is upon defendant to prove any affirmative defense upon which he relies in libel action, including defense of truth of charge or that communication is privileged, but, when pleadings admit or evidence on part of plaintiff affirmatively establishes such facts, defendant is relieved of this burden.

8. Libel and slander $\S$ 123(8)—When essential facts are undisputed, privilege is question of law for court (Civ. Code, $\S$ 47).

When essential facts in libel action are not disputed, question as to whether communication is privileged under Civ. Code, $\S$ 47, is solely question of law for determination of judge.

9. Libel and slander $\S$ 101(4)—When facts clearly constitute privileged communication, although language employed under other circumstances might be slanderous per se, privilege creates presumption of no malice (Civ. Code, $\S$ 47).

When facts clearly constitute a privileged communication under Civ. Code, $\S$ 47, even though language employed under other circumstances might be slanderous per se, privilege creates presumption that communication is used innocently and without malice.

10. Libel and slander $\S$ 51(1)—Statute requiring reasonable ground for supposing motive for privileged communication to be innocent applies to newspaper publications (Civ. Code, $\S$ 47).

A newspaper stands in same class as an individual, so far as application of principle of privileged communication under Civ. Code, $\S$ 47, is concerned.

11. Libel and slander $\S$ 48(2)—Newspaper publication as to fitness for public office of public employee who was stranger to publishers held privileged; "privileged communication" (Civ. Code, $\S$ 47, subd. 3).

Where plaintiff was an entire stranger to publishers of newspaper, which published article regarding plaintiff's fitness for office of investigating juvenile offenses, mere presumption of malice would be refuted under Civ. Code, $\S$ 47, subd. 3, defining "privileged communication" as one without malice to person interested therein by one who is also interested, since public was vitally interested in knowing character of such an officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Privileged Communication (In Libel and Slander).]

12. Libel and slander $\S$ 41—Communication may be privileged, even though communication is false (Civ. Code, $\S$ 47).

Communication may be privileged, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 47, even though communication is false, and, when communication is clearly privileged, question of truth or falsity of charge is not necessarily involved.

13. Libel and slander $\S$ 54—Truth of published communication is defense to charge of libel (Civ. Code, $\S$ 47).

Truth of published communication is complete defense to charge of libel in itself, and claim of privileged communication under Civ. Code, $\S$ 47, is defense entirely independent of question of truth of charge.

14. Libel and slander $\S$ 50—Criticism of faults and misconduct of public officers impairing their fitness for office, by citizens or newspapers in good faith, is not libelous (Civ. Code, $\S$ 47).

It is not only the privilege but the duty of every citizen and every newspaper in community to fairly and impartially criticize faults and misconduct of public officers, which faults impair their fitness or usefulness for office which they seek or hold, and, so long as this is done in good faith and without malice, it is not libelous under Civ. Code, $\S$ 47, relating to privileged communications.

15. Appeal and error $\S$ 1056(1)—Excluding evidence in libel action which was mere aggravation of former charge of unchastity held not prejudicial error.

In libel action against newspaper company, where newspaper had published articles concerning plaintiff's intimate relations with district attorney, sustaining objection to question, "It is stated in this article of May 13, 1922, that, according to attachés of the district attorney's office who investigated the case, Miss Jones made charges of intimacy against four other prominent men of Los Angeles, one of them a city official, one of them a state official, the third a doctor, and the fourth a lawyer; I will now ask you whether or not you made such a statement to any person?" where statement was mere aggravation of former charge of unchastity, held not prejudicial error.

16. Appeal and error ☞1026—Error not prejudicing substantial rights of appellant will not suffice to reverse judgment.

Error which does not prejudice substantial rights of appellant will not suffice to reverse judgment.

17. Witnesses ☞393(4)—Where gist of libelous publications was imputed lack of chastity on plaintiff's part, use of deposition admitting unchastity and circumstances characterizing publications as privileged on cross-examination held proper.

In libel action, where gist of alleged libelous publications was imputed lack of chastity on part of plaintiff and she claimed that defendants had falsely charged her with unchastity, her deposition, taken in public proceedings before civil service commission, acting in quasi judicial capacity, containing her sworn statements amounting to admissions of her unchastity, together with circumstances characterizing publications as privileged, held properly used on cross-examination.

18. Appeal and error ☞927(2)—After nonsuit, every presumption favors the judgment.

After a nonsuit is granted, every presumption is in favor of the judgment.

19. Appeal and error ☞757(3), 901—Appellant seeking to reverse judgment has burden of showing that it was improperly granted, and full and fair record of evidence applicable to points relied on should be printed in briefs.

When one seeks on appeal to reverse judgment, burden is on appellant to show that it was improperly granted, and full and fair record of evidence applicable to points relied on by appellant should be printed in briefs.

20. Appeal and error ☞757(3)—Appellate court is not required to search typewritten record for error.

Appellate court is not required to assume vexatious burden of searching typewritten record for error.

21. Appeal and error ☞757(3)—Where appellant does not pretend to present fair summary of evidence applicable to points relied on, court will assume that record supports judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 953c).

Where there is no pretense on part of appellant to conform to Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, to present fair summary of evidence applicable to points relied on, appellate court will assume that record amply supports judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action of libel by Ida Wright Jones against the Express Publishing Company and others.

From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Halverson & Price, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, for respondents Express Pub. Co., Kellogg, and Dickson.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit rendered at the close of plaintiff's case, in an action for libel. The plaintiff claims that the nonsuit was erroneously granted, since she had proved a prima facie case by showing that the published language which charged her with unchastity was libelous per se, and that, under such circumstances, the law presumes malice and casts the burden on the defendants to show an absence of actual malice. Respondents assert that the evidence shows that the alleged libelous language was privileged, and that the charge therein contained was true.

The defendants were jointly charged with libel in the publication of alleged false and malicious statements concerning the character of plaintiff, which were made in the Los Angeles Evening Express on May 13 and June 2, 1922. Separate answers were filed, one by the defendant Woolwine, and the other by the remaining defendants jointly. At the close of plaintiff's case, a nonsuit was granted as to all defendants. Pending the appeal, the defendant Woolwine died, and the action survives only as to the remaining defendants. The Express Publishing Company, F. W. Kellogg, and Edward A. Dickson were publishers of the Los Angeles Evening Express, a daily newspaper of general circulation, having a subscription list of some 50,000 readers in and about the city of Los Angeles. At the time of the publication of the alleged libelous matter, the defendant Woolwine was district attorney of Los Angeles county, and plaintiff was his deputy, having charge of the investigation of juvenile offenses. The district attorney sought to discharge her by letter, but she refused to acknowledge his authority to do so without confirmation by the Los Angeles county civil service commission, to which she appealed for vindication. During a public investigation of the affair by this commission, plaintiff voluntarily made admissions of her guilt of the material portions of the alleged libelous publications. The publishers of the newspaper were entire strangers to the plaintiff, and no express malice was shown.

The record in this case discloses a state of affairs with relation to the personal association of the defendant Woolwine and the plaintiff, which, if true, would have justified the dismissal of both as unfit to hold their respective offices. Dissension arose between them. May 2, 1922, Mr. Woolwine sent the following letter to plaintiff:

"You are hereby discharged from the position you now hold in the district attorney's office, that of juvenile investigator, for the good of the service. It is my usual custom to allow employees who have forfeited a right to hold their position in the district attorney's office to resign, but, after a consideration of all the circumstances, I do not deem that you are entitled to this courtesy.

"Yours very truly,

"Thomas Lee Woolwine,
"District Attorney."

On the same date he addressed a communication to the civil service commission, pursuant to the requirements of section 34, subd. 13, of the charter of Los Angeles, which read as follows:

"This is to advise you that I have discharged Ida Wright Jones, an employee of the district attorney's office. Her dismissal was embodied in a letter of date May 2, 1922, a copy of which I inclose.

"In accordance with the provisions of subdivision 13 of section 34 of the Charter, I give my reason for such action as follows:

"It was communicated to me by one of the employees of the district attorney's office that Miss Jones had stated to him that she was going to make an affidavit to the effect that she had been intimate with me, and that she was going to sell this affidavit to my political enemies for the sum of $10,000 and then leave the state. Upon verifying the fact that she made such a statement and that she had planned to take such action, I immediately discharged her.

"Very respectfully,

"Thomas Lee Woolwine,
"District Attorney."

Subsequent to the delivery of these letters, the plaintiff demanded and secured a public hearing before the civil service commission, and on May 17, 1922, her deposition was taken in shorthand at great length, and with minute details she voluntarily confessed to a continuing course of sexual intimacies with the district attorney, extending over a period of several years, and resulting in a miscarriage on one occasion, and the performance of an illegal operation upon her at another time. She also admitted that she had consulted with her attorney and that she had made an affidavit concerning this illicit relationship, which affidavit she alleged was solely for her own protection, and denied that it was made for the purpose of selling it to his enemies.

[1] This conflict between the district attorney and the plaintiff led to several conferences. It was a common topic of conversation about the courthouse and in political circles, and was known to the reporters of the public press. An investigation of the truth of these stories was made by the reporters of the Los Angeles Evening Express.

Several interviews occurred between the reporters and the defendant Woolwine, and a request was made of him to furnish a true statement of the facts, in response to which he provided the newspaper reporters with copies of the two letters above quoted, together with a written statement concerning the affair. Plaintiff immediately learned of the district attorney's letter to the civil service commission, and of its contents. She did not deny the charge of unchastity. Indeed, she subsequently admitted the truth of this charge. There was good reason for the reporters to believe that the charge of unchastity was true. It was therefore in perfect good faith that these two letters, together with excerpts from the district attorney's written statement, with explanatory headlines, was, on May 13, 1922, published in the Los Angeles Evening Express. The material portion of this newspaper article was true. The plaintiff subsequently confessed her unchastity. While, in a public investigation before the civil service commission, she was contesting the authority of the district attorney to discharge her, she will be estopped from denying that she was in fact a public officer so as to relieve her from the application of the doctrine of privileged communications. The occasion rendered the communication privileged under the circumstances.

It is unnecessary to quote the entire newspaper article. The gist of this publication was found in the first paragraph, as follows:

"A plot to ruin him through charges of immorality was made today by district attorney Thomas Lee Woolwine in a letter to the county civil service commission announcing he had discharged Ida Wright Jones, an investigator in his office. The district attorney alleged that Miss Jones had tried to sell to his political enemies for $10,000 a false affidavit in which she claimed to have had intimate relations with him."

The complaint contained two causes of action. The first count was based upon the newspaper publication of May 13th. The innuendo of this language was alleged to be that—

"Defendants meant thereby, and that it was so understood by those who read that article, that the plaintiff had made a false affidavit and had tried to sell said false affidavit to the political enemies of the defendant Thomas Lee Woolwine for $10,000, and further that the plaintiff had falsely and dishonestly entered into a plot to ruin said defendant, Woolwine."

The second cause of action consisted of a charge of libel in the publication of the newspaper article of June 2, 1922, composed chiefly of quotations from the district attorney's statements, in which he severely criticized the civil service commission, and the individual members thereof, for their manner of investigation and their disposition of his attempt to dismiss the plaintiff from his employ, together with a reiteration of his claim that plaintiff had threatened to sell her affidavit to the enemies of the district attorney, in which affidavit she claimed to have had intimate relations with him. This article also commented upon the evidence adduced at the investigation of the civil service commission, and quoted from chairman Burger as follows:

"We have taken a lengthy statement from Miss Jones in the presence of witnesses, in which she gives dates and places of misconduct and the names of witnesses. We have established that an illegal operation was performed in January, 1921. * * * The question of the discharge of Miss Jones has paled into insignificance. * * * Her own communication shows that she is no fit person to be in the employ of the county. * * * With such charges involving a public officer, this matter has gone beyond the province of the civil service commission, and should be taken to the grand jury."

The innuendo of the language of this second cause of action was alleged to be that—

"Defendants meant thereby, and that it was so understood by those who read said article, that the plaintiff was an unchaste, immoral, and evil woman, and that the plaintiff was at said time a prostitute."

It is evident from the innuendo employed with respect to both causes of action that the gravamen of the entire complaint is a charge that the defendants had falsely accused the plaintiff of unchastity.

[2] Having formally declared her construction of the alleged libelous language by the use of specific innuendo, the plaintiff will be bound by her interpretation, except where the language has a clear and obvious meaning independent of any explanation. Gatley on Libel and Slander, p. 474; Newell on Libel and Slander (4th Ed.) 599, §§ 546, 547; 16 Cal. Jur. 88, § 57. The last citation quoted approvingly from Mitchell v. Sharon (C. C.) 51 F. 424, which said:

"When the plaintiff, by innuendo, puts a meaning on the language uttered, he is bound by it, although the interpretation he chooses may be such as to destroy his right of action."

[3, 4] In the instant case, while much of the language employed is clear and requires no explanation, the purport of the entire publications is a challenge to the chastity of plaintiff, and a denial of her fitness for the office which she held. It is true that in the first cause of action plaintiff does complain of an alleged charge that she had planned to sell to the enemies of the district attorney a false affidavit, but the alleged falsity of this affidavit referred only to her lack of chastity. Certainly, if the affidavit were otherwise true, and the plaintiff admitted her lack of chastity, then the affidavit was not false, and an action for libel would not lie, based upon a charge that she threatened to sell her own affidavit which in fact declared the truth respecting her own character. The only other specific charge complained of in the innuendo was that the defendants accused plaintiff of falsely and dishonestly entering into a plot to ruin the defendant Woolwine. The nature of this alleged plot is not revealed. Neither the pleadings nor the evidence disclose any facts upon which the charge of such a plot was founded. With respect to her chastity, the deposition of plaintiff before the civil service commission leaves no room for doubt. She freely admits the truth of this charge and condemns herself. By this confession she acknowledges her own unfitness for the office which she held, and she may therefore not be heard to complain of the publication of facts regarding her character, which, in a public investigation respecting her fitness for office, she admitted to be true, even though this confession was made subsequent to the first publication. In retaliation for the district attorney's effort to discharge her from his service, she confessed her shame for the evident purpose of punishing him. Harmful as this may have been to her reputation, she must be deemed to have anticipated the result of a public confession amounting to an acknowledgment of unchastity. In Kenyon v. Hartford A. & I. Co. (Cal. App.) 260 P. 952, it is said:

"The general rule of law is that whoever does an illegal or wrongful act is answerable for all the consequences that ensue in the ordinary and natural course of events, though those consequences be immediately brought about by intervening agents, provided such agents were set in motion by the primary wrongdoer, or provided those acts, causing the damage, were the necessary or legal and natural consequence of the * * * act. The publication was such a natural, usual, and ordinary consequence" of the act (of publicly admitting her lack of chastity in an investigation of her fitness for her office), and its publicity "must be deemed to have been contemplated."

See Filer v. Smith, 96 Mich. 347, 55 N. W. 1002, 35 Am. St. Rep. 603; Burke v. Watts, 188 Cal. 118, 127, 204 P. 578; Ray Wong v. Earl C. Anthony, Inc., 199 Cal. 15, 18, 247 P. 894.

[5] "Libel is a false and unprivileged publication. * * *" Civ. Code, § 45. The communication in the instant case was neither false nor unprivileged. Certainly a newspaper cannot be held liable for damages for the publication of a communication without malice, concerning the fitness of one for a public office, which statement is voluntarily admitted by the accused to be true. But the appellant denies the application of the principle respecting privileged communications, for the reason that she was no longer a public officer, having been previously dismissed by her employer. While it is true that the letter of dismissal had been sent to her the same day on which a copy was delivered to the reporters, she refused to acknowledge the authority of the district attorney to discharge her without the confirmation of the civil service commission. At the very time of the publications complained of she was engaged in resisting her employer's efforts to dismiss her. The question of the truth of these charges and of her fitness for the position which she held was then an issue before the commission, and not yet determined. Under such circumstances, for the purpose of the application of the principles respecting privileged communications, she must be deemed to come within the classification of public officers.

Privileged communications are defined in section 47 of the Civil Code as follows:

"A privileged publication is one made * * * (3) in a communication, without malice, to a person interested therein, by one who is also interested, or by one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication innocent, or who is requested by the person interested to give the information. * * *

The appellant contends that, since the language of the challenged publications was libelous per se, they were not privileged, but upon the contrary, were presumed by law to be malicious, and that the burden of proving an absence of actual malice rested upon the defendants. In support of this assertion, the case of Stevens v. Storke, 191 Cal. 329, 216 P. 371, is cited. That case was an action for libel against the editor of the Daily News of Santa Barbara, on the part of a private citizen. No question of the fitness of a public officer was there involved. So also the entire group of authorities cited in appellant's brief in support of the principle that a newspaper report which imputes to a person grave offenses or discloses conduct which will expose one to contempt and disgrace, is libelous per se, have reference to false charges against private individuals, and not against public officers. Quite a different rule prevails with respect to fair criticism of the necessary qualifications of a public officer.

[6, 7] The doctrine of privileged communications rests essentially upon public policy. Under proper circumstances the interest and necessities of society become paramount to the welfare or reputation of a private individual, and the occasion and circumstances may for the public good absolve one from punishment for such communications even though they be false. Newell on Libel, 340, § 341. It is the settled law of this state that one who relies upon the doctrine of privileged communications as a special defense, must adequately plead the facts. Stevens v. Snow, 191 Cal. 58, 64, 214 P. 968. This was done in the instant case. It is true that, where the facts do not constitute a privileged communication, and the language is libelous per se, the law implies malice, and the burden is then upon the defense to prove a lack of actual malice. Stevens v. Storke, supra. The burden is also upon the defendant to prove any affirmative defense upon which he relies, including the defense of the truth of the charge, or that the communication is privileged. But when the pleadings admit, or the evidence on the part of the plaintiff affirmatively establishes, such facts, manifestly the defendant is thereby relieved of this burden. In Gatley on Libel and Slander, at page 280, it is said:

"When a defense of qualified privilege is set up, it is for the defense to allege and prove all such facts and circumstances as are necessary to bring the words complained of within the privilege, unless such facts are admitted before or at the trial of the action."

[8, 9] When essential facts are not disputed, the question as to whether the communication is privileged, is solely a question of law for the determination of the judge. Newell on Libel, 382, §§ 345-347; Gatley on Libel, 280-284, 650; Dauphiny v. Buhne, 153 Cal. 757, 96 P. 880, 126 Am. St. Rep. 136. "It is exclusively for the judge to determine whether the occasion on which the defamatory statement was made, was such as to render the communication a privileged one. * * * If, taken in connection with admitted facts, the words complained of are such as must have been honestly and in good faith used by the defendant, the judge may withdraw the case from the jury." Newell on Libel, 383, § 345. And when the facts clearly constitute a privileged communication, even though the language employed under other circumstances might be slanderous per se, the very privilege creates a presumption that the communication is used innocently and without malice. Newell on Libel, 381, § 342; Jones on Evidence (3d Ed.) 34, § 29.

[10] A newspaper stands in the same class as an individual so far as the application of the principle of privileged communications is concerned. In the case of Snively v. Record Pub. Co., 185 Cal. 565, 198 P. 1, it is said:

"A newspaper stands in such relation to the people of the community in which it is published and circulated that, with regard to publications therein concerning local public officers, it comes within the scope of that part of subdivision 3 [Civ. Code, § 47] requiring a reasonable ground for supposing the motive of the communication innocent, if the matter published has the other characteristics of a privileged communication."

The appellant, however, contends that, where the language is libelous per se, even though it is applied to a public officer, innocent as the motives may be, malice is implied, and it will not be privileged. In support of this assertion, appellant relies upon the cases of Jarman v. Rea, 137 Cal. 350, 70 P. 216, and Dauphiny v. Buhne, supra. Both of these cases, however, have been overruled by the Snively Case, supra, so far as they seek to limit the application of the doctrine of privileged communications. The opinion in the Snively Case is authority to the effect that proof of circumstances which characterize a communication as privileged under the provisions of the Civil Code, § 47, completely refutes the presumption of malice, even when the language is libelous per se. The statute provides that the very relationship existing between the publisher of the alleged libelous matter and the interested parties may afford reasonable grounds for supposing the motive for the communication to be innocent, and therefore privileged.

[11-13] In the instant case the proof seems conclusive of the absence of malice on the part of these respondents. The appellant was an entire stranger to the publishers of the newspaper. It was their business to disseminate news. The question of the fitness of a county officer was involved. Good moral character is peculiarly essential to an officer whose duties require her to supervise juveniles in the plastic years of their lives. The public was vitally interested in knowing the character of such an officer. No possible reason for malice on the part of these respondents was shown. Under such circumstances the mere presumption of malice will be refuted. Moreover, when a communication is clearly privileged, the question of the truth or falsity of the charge is not necessarily involved. It may be privileged even though the communication is false. The truth of a published communication is a complete defense to a charge of libel in itself. The claim of privileged communications under the statute is a defense entirely independent of the question of the truth of the charge.

[14] It is not only the privilege but the duty of every citizen and every newspaper in the community to fairly and impartially criticize the faults and misconduct of public officers, which faults impair their fitness or usefulness for the office which they seek or hold. So long as this is done in good faith and without malice, it is not libelous. In this regard the opinion in the Snively Case, supra, says:

"Since the conduct of public officers * * * is a matter in which every citizen of the community in which they serve is interested, the publication, * * * if otherwise privileged, must be considered as one made to persons interested. * * * There are some decisions which hold that a communication concerning a public officer which is not made to those having the power of removal or of appointment, but is made to the public generally, is not privileged. We are of the opinion, however, that this rule should not be followed. * * * Communications made in good faith and without malice to the public generally respecting the conduct of such officer come within the spirit and purpose of the statute regarding privileged communications. They tend to promote knowledge concerning such officers and give citizens a basis for their petitions [for election or removal]."

So, also, in Gatley on Libel, at page 224, it is said:

"It is of the highest importance that none but persons of good character should be elected to public office. If a citizen honestly believes that a candidate for public office has committed an offense (or is unworthy or unfit for public service) * * * he is under a moral duty to society to communicate the facts as he believes them to exist, * * * and, if he does so without malice, his communication will be privileged."

This principle manifestly applies not only to candidates for office but to incumbents as well. Nor is the rule different with respect to appointive officers. Better service may be expected from public officers who are conscious of the watchful eyes of their constituents.

[15] The appellant charges error on the part of the trial court in sustaining an objection to the following question:

"It is stated in this article of May 13, 1922, that according to attachés of the district attorney's office who investigated the case, Miss Jones made charges of intimacy against four other prominent men of Los Angeles, one of them a city official, one of them a state official, the third a doctor and the fourth a lawyer. I will now ask you whether or not you made such a statement to any person?"

Respondents' objection to this question was sustained on the ground that appellant was bound by her construction of the language as indicated by her innuendo. This statement was a mere aggravation of the former charge of unchastity. If it were true, it would merely mean that she was more common and promiscuous in her sexual indulgences than she had admitted. When one is accused of unchastity and admits the charge a court will not indulge in critical distinctions to determine just what degree of profligacy the accused has attained. This ruling was therefore not prejudicial error.

[16, 17] The appellant also complains of the unwarranted extent to which respondents were permitted to range in cross-examination of her witnesses. But scant evidence is printed in her briefs, and the court's attention is not called to any fact thus elicited which appears to have been prejudicial to her cause. Error which does not prejudice the substantial rights of the appellant will not suffice to reverse the judgment. 2 Cal. Jur. 1004, § 595. The gist of the alleged libelous publications was imputed lack of chastity on the part of appellant. She claimed that the respondents had falsely charged her with unchastity. Her deposition, taken in a public proceeding before the civil service commission, acting in a quasi judicial capacity, contained her sworn statements amounting to admissions of her own unchastity, together with circumstances which characterize the publications as privileged. The use of this deposition on cross-examination was therefore competent and proper.

[18-21] This appeal was perfected under the provisions of section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure. Very little evidence was printed in appellant's briefs. Substantially all that appears in her opening brief is a bare record of the publication of the alleged libelous language. Because this language charged unchastity, and was libelous per se, it was assumed that it implied malice, and that proof of its publication constituted a prima facie case. But the original transcript of evidence, containing 425 pages, discloses satisfactory proof of the truth of the alleged libelous language, and of circumstances which rendered it privileged. After a nonsuit is granted, every presumption is in favor of the judgment. 2 Cal. Jur. 884, §§ 519, 520. When one seeks on appeal to reverse a judgment, the burden is upon the appellant to show that it was improperly granted, and a full and fair record of the evidence applicable to the points relied upon by appellant should be printed in the briefs. "It is not a compliance with the procedure governing appeals under the so-called alternative method, for an appellant to print in his opening brief, or in the supplement thereto, only the testimony in the case favorable to his contentions. All the evidence, material to the point made on the appeal, should be presented in order that the court may consider its weight and sufficiency, and any conflict presented therein. * * *" Eddy v. Stowe, 43 Cal. App. 789, 792, 185 P. 1024, 1025. The appellate court is not required to assume the vexatious burden of searching the typewritten record for error. 2 Cal. Jur., 645; Scott v. Hollywood Park Co., 176 Cal. 680, 169 P. 379; McLaren v. Hards, 39 Cal. App. 104, 178 P. 332. In the instant case a judgment of nonsuit was granted on the theory that the plaintiff's case showed that the alleged libelous matter was both true and privileged. Where there is no pretense on the part of appellant to conform to section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, to print a fair summary of the evidence applicable to the points relied upon, this court will assume that the record amply supports the judgment. The burden placed upon the appellate courts, with the multitude of appeals which are now pending, is too onerous to permit a search of voluminous records to ascertain whether the judgment is supported by substantial evidence.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Hearing Denied in Bank Jan. 5, 1928.

1. Pleading ⚡237(6)—Where broker inadvertently attached proposed modified agreement of sale to complaint instead of original agreement, on which he based claim for commission, court properly permitted amendment to conform to proof.

In action to recover commission on sale of real property, where plaintiff through inadvertence attached as an exhibit to his amended complaint proposed modified agreement of sale of land, instead of original agreement, on which he was basing claim for commission, permitting amendment to conform to proof with orig-real property. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied in bank; Langdon, J., voting for a hearing.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fogel & Beman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This is an appeal from judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover an alleged commission of $3,000 earned by him in the sale of certain real estate owned by defendant. The trial court found in substance that defendant, by written agreement of January 8, 1924, employed plaintiff, a duly licensed real estate broker, to sell his said property for $78,000, payable upon the terms stipulated in said agreement, plaintiff to receive for his services a commission of 5 per cent. of the purchase price, and the agreement to continue until terminated by 15 days' notice to plaintiff; that plaintiff waived the right to collect any sum greater than $3,000 as such commission; that on February 2, 1924, prior to any revocation of said agency agreement, plaintiff procured a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase said property at the price and according to the terms agreed upon; that on said day defendant, his wife, and said purchaser entered into a written agreement of sale and purchase of said property (being Exhibit B to plaintiff's complaint to conform to proof) at a price of $78,000, $8,000 thereof payable upon execution of the agreement and the balance in stipulated installments; that said purchaser was at all times ready, willing, and able to carry out said agreement, and did make the first $8,000 payment therein provided to defendant; that on February 13, 1924, defendant and said purchaser, by written mutual release, canceled said contract of February 2, 1924, the $8,000 initial payment being returned to purchaser; that no part of said 5 per cent. commission was paid to plaintiff, wherefore the court gave judgment in his favor for $3,000, interest and costs.

[1, 2] It appears that shortly after the agreement of sale of February 2, 1924, between defendant and the purchaser was executed, the purchaser returned and attempted to secure defendant's consent to several slight modifications. The principal amendment related to having notes secured by trust deed subject to a mortgage of $40,000 instead of $35,000. Defendant refused to accede to the proposed changes. The document as amended was never executed by the parties, and later, on February 13, 1924, they signed said mutual release. Up to the date of execution of this release, however, the original contract of sale was in full force and effect. Through inadvertence, plaintiff attached as an exhibit to his amended complaint the proposed modified agreement of sale instead of the original agreement. Therefore the court permitted him to file a complaint to conform to proof with the original agreement as an exhibit thereto. Appellant claims to have been prejudiced by such action, but we hold that no abuse of discretion is shown and that the permitting of the amendment was plainly justified and clearly correct. It is elementary that the allowance of amendments to conform to proof rests in the discretion of the court. The utmost liberality is allowed in this respect, and no abuse of discretion is shown unless by permitting the amendment new and substantially different issues are introduced in the case or the rights of the adverse party prejudiced. 21 Cal. Jur. pp. 209, 210, § 143, and many cases there cited.

[3, 4] Appellant's contention that the broker did not find a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy the property at the price and terms mentioned in his contract of employment is likewise unfounded. It is true that said employment contract specified that the broker should secure a $21,000 cash payment, but it also contained the following saving clause:

"* * * Terms can be arranged satisfactorily or at any other price or terms that said owner may accept."

And the owner did in fact accept other price or terms, to wit, those set forth in the agreement of sale. His unqualified acceptance thereof could have been expressed no more plainly than it was by his signature to that document. Furthermore the execution by the owner of said contract of sale is conclusive proof that he was satisfied as to the qualifications of the purchaser and his ability to carry out the terms of the contract. In addition to the above, the record abundantly supports the finding of the court to the effect that the purchaser was ready, able, and willing to carry out the contract. Defendant endeavored to prove that said purchaser had been induced to enter into the sale by false and fraudulent representations of plaintiff, especially to the effect that plaintiff would aid in carrying the financial burden of the deferred payments. However, the court specifically found against defendant on these allegations, and such conclusion likewise has ample support in the record and is final. The principles of law governing the several questions raised by this issue are set forth fully in the case of Wood & Tatum Co. v. Basler, 37 Cal. App. 381, 383, 385, 173 P. 1109, 1110, which involved a more or less similar situation, and from that case we quote with approval the following:

"The consideration results from the services performed in securing purchasers for the land upon terms that were agreeable to and ratified by appellant. It is a matter of no consequence that in the beginning somewhat different terms were contemplated. * * * As to the extent of the services required of an agent to entitle him to his commission, the rule is well settled, and no elaboration is called for. We find in the record ample evidence to show that the parties were able, willing, and ready to complete the purchase, and the failure of the consummation of the sale was due to the neglect of appellant to perfect his title. And it may be added that appellant is estopped from objecting to the qualifications of the proposed purchasers for the reason that the evidence brings the case clearly within the principle announced in 4 R. C. L. p. 309, as follows: 'Once the customer procured by the broker is accepted by the employer, the latter is thereafter estopped from denying the purchaser's ability or willingness to complete the contract, inasmuch as he is not bound to accept the offer of such person without a reasonable opportunity to inquire and satisfy himself in relation to it. Consequently his acceptance should estop him from denying anything against this claim except fraud on the part of the broker in inducing the acceptance.' See, also, Carrington v. Smithers, 26 Cal. App. 460, 147 P. 225. As we have seen, plaintiff notified defendant of the sale of the property, and informed him who were the purchasers. These parties were all known to the defendant. * * * With knowledge of these things, defendant accepted the deposit of $600, approved of the sale in writing, and promised to pay the said commission of $5,000. He thereby accepted said purchasers upon his own responsibility, and could not thereafter dispute their capacity and disposition to make the purchase."

See, also, to the same effect, Sobaje v. Schubert, 37 Cal. App. 709, 174 P. 364.

The real issue to be determined upon this appeal, however, concerns the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that plaintiff was a duly licensed real estate broker. He testified that individually he held no license, but that he was president of T. J. McNamara, Inc., a corporation, and produced the license of said corporation to engage in the real estate business for the year 1924, the second paragraph of which reads as follows:

"The president of said corporation is also by this license entitled to engage in the real estate business for the term last hereinabove mentioned, such real estate business being said business engaged in during the term of this license, by the corporation aforesaid. * * *"

He likewise produced a card certifying as follows:

"* * * This statement is to certify that T. J. McNamara is the president of T. J. McNamara, Inc., * * * which was issued corporation license * * * in accordance with the provisions of chapter 605, Statutes of 1919. * * * [Signed] State Real Estate Department, Edwin T. Keiser, Commissioner."

Appellant contends that the sale should have been negotiated and this action brought in the name of T. J. McNamara, Inc., that, inasmuch as plaintiff as an individual held no real estate license, if he had any right at all as a broker to negotiate the sale or to pursue the action, it was a right as president of the corporation only; hence his execution of the contract with defendant and his institution of this action as an individual, without reference to his office as president, was unauthorized and unlicensed, and he cannot recover.

Section 2 of the Broker's Act (Deering's Gen. Laws, 1923, p. 26) defines a real estate broker, within the meaning of the act, as "a person, copartnership or corporation who, for a compensation, sells, or offers for sale. * * * real estate. * * *"

Section 8 provides:

"No real estate license shall give authority to do any act mentioned in section two of this act to any person, copartnership or corporation other than those to whom said license is issued; provided, however, that when a license is issued to a corporation the officers thereof, other than the president, shall be required to obtain a license. * * *"

Section 9 provides that, if the applicant is a corporation the real estate commissioner may require such proof as he may deem advisable as to the honesty, truthfulness, and good reputation of the officers thereof.

Section 10, providing for license fees, reads in part:

"* * * If the licensee be a corporation, the license issued to it shall entitle the president thereof to engage in the business of real estate broker within the meaning of this act. * * *"

[5, 6] There is no uncertainty or ambiguity in this clause, and it cannot be interpreted to mean other than what the wording clearly imports, to wit, that a license to a corporation is also a license authorizing the president thereof to act as a real estate broker. This meaning is made even more plain when the provision is read in connection with the various other provisions of the statute, particularly section 8, requiring all officers other than the president to obtain a license. The specific wording of the license itself as above set forth is likewise significant. It is a cardinal rule of construction that a statute, including all its provisions, must be read and considered as a whole in order that the true legislative intention may be determined (23 Cal. Jur. § 134, p. 760), and it is also the rule that a statute free from ambiguity or uncertainty, as is this statute, needs no interpretation (Davis v. Hart, 123 Cal. 387, 55 P. 1060).

If the intent and purpose of the act were merely to authorize the corporation alone to act as broker, what possible meaning or value could be attached to the clause reading, "* * * shall entitle the president thereof to engage in the business of real estate broker * * *"? Would not the various references to his authority be merely surplusage? And how could or would a licensed corporation act except through its officers?

We therefore have no hesitancy in concluding that under said statute a license to a corporation also authorizes its president to engage in the business of a real estate broker.

[7] But the further question arises as to whether such authorization extends to acts performed by him as a broker in his individual capacity in transactions unconnected with the corporate business. We are directed to no citation of law other than the statute itself, and there are no cases in this state bearing directly on the point. The purport of decisions from other jurisdictions would appear to harmonize with the holding that the license also extends to acts performed by the broker in his individual capacity. In the case of Friedland v. Isenstein, 191 Ill. App. 109, 115, it was held that, when a broker's license is issued to a partnership, and one of the partners succeeds to the business of the partnership upon dissolution of the firm and continues business individually at the same location, he is to be considered a licensed broker. Quoting with approval from City of St. Charles v. Hackman, 133 Mo. 634, 34 S. W. 878, the court in that case said:

"Looking at the purpose of the tax and the terms of this ordinance it would seem that a license to two persons to carry on a certain business for a year at a certain place should naturally be interpreted to include the right of one of them to so carry on that business. A license to a firm of two would ordinarily be understood to be a license to one of the firm, on the general principle that the greater includes the less."

Would any advantage be gained by requiring a president of a licensed corporation to secure a second permit if he desired to negotiate a sale as an individual? "The single primary purpose of the [Brokers'] Act [as defined in the case of Riley v. Chambers, 181 Cal. 589, 593, 185 P. 855, 856 (8 A. L. R. 418)], is to require of real estate brokers and salesmen that they be 'honest, truthful and of good reputation.' All of its provisions, including the requirement of a license, are but incidental to this single purpose and designed to accomplish it." Riley v. Chambers, supra. Now, this single, primary purpose of the act is accomplished both as to the corporation and its president, whether he acts for the company or individually, through compliance by the real estate commissioner with the requirement of section 9 that he secure such proof as he deems advisable as to the honesty, truthfulness, and good reputation of the officers of an applicant corporation. It would certainly be illogical to have the commissioner institute two inquiries into the qualifications of the officer and then issue two permits to him, one as president and one as an individual. If the commissioner is satisfied as to his honesty, integrity and truthfulness as an officer, he cannot question his possession of like qualities as an individual. We hold that under said statute the president of a licensed corporation is authorized by the corporate license to conduct the business of a real estate broker either as such president or as an individual.

We are not concerned in this case with the question as to whether plaintiff should turn over to the corporation the amount of the commission received by him, for that is a distinct and separate matter to be adjusted between his corporation and himself.

Judgment affirmed.

CONTINENTAL NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES v. REPUBLIC CASUALTY CO. et al. (L. A. 8853.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 12, 1927.

1. Schools and school districts $\S$ 81(2)—Contractor's bond to school district, given in sum and in manner required, held "statutory bond," precluding recovery by assignee of unperfected materialmen's claims (Public Works Act).

Bond given by contractor to school district for construction of school buildings in proportion to amount of contract required by Public Works Act (St. 1919, p. 487), given and accepted at time and in manner required by statute, held "statutory bond," under which no recovery could be had for certain assigned claims of materialmen and laborers which had not been perfected prior to assignment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Statutory Bond.]

2. Schools and school districts $\S$ 81(2)—Omission of required provisions, included by implication, held not to prevent treatment of contractor's bond to school district as statutory bond (Public Works Act).

Fact that bond of contractor, given school district on construction of school buildings, omitted certain obligations required by Public Works Act (St. 1919, p. 487), held not to prevent bond being statutory bond, where omitted details might be included in obligations assumed by liberal construction of language used.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles A. Burnell, Judge.

Action by the Continental National Bank of Los Angeles against the Republic Casualty Company and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Paul Barksdale D'Orr and A. L. Abrahams, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fredericks & Hanna, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles in favor of the defendants in an action instituted by the plaintiff as assignee of certain claimants to recover upon a bond upon which the defendant the Republic Casualty Company was a surety, and which bond its principal, the National Construction Company, a corporation, caused to be executed in connection with certain contracts entered into between said construction company and the board of trustees of Santa Ana school district for the construction of two certain public school buildings in said district. After the execution of said bond and after the work of construction upon said buildings had proceeded for some time, the plaintiff loaned to the contractor upon several occasions certain sums of money aggregating $11,600 for the purpose of assisting him in the performance of his contract. Thereafter the plaintiff further agreed to finance said contract, provided the contractor would turn over to it the warrants issued and to be issued to him by the school district as the work upon said buildings went on. The plaintiff also became the assignee of the claims of various materialmen and laborers who had furnished material or performed work upon the erection of one of said buildings, and the indebtedness thus accruing to it, not having been paid by the contractor or by said district, the said plaintiff commenced this action upon said contractor's bond for the recovery of the several amounts alleged to be due to it upon said claims. The trial court rendered judgment for the defendants, and in so doing made its findings of fact upon the hearing of said action, and with such findings of fact the appellant herein does not disagree, and for that reason has presented its appeal upon the judgment roll alone. The appellant, however, bases its appeal upon the alleged erroneous conclusion of law which the trial court deduced from said findings of fact; the appellant's chief and only substantial contention being that the conclusion of law of the trial court to the effect that "the bond set forth in plaintiff's complaint and recovery upon which is sought in this action against the surety, defendant the Republic Casualty Company, is the statutory bond required by the Act approved May 10, 1919, and known as the 'Public Works Act.'" The appellant herein, in order to perfectly clarify the question presented upon this appeal, concedes that, if the foregoing conclusion of the trial court "is sound, * * * then the judgment must be affirmed; but, if not, the judgment should be reversed and a new judgment ordered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant the Republic Casualty Company." The reason why the said bond, if it is held to be the statutory bond referred to in the trial court's aforesaid conclusion of law, is ineffectual as binding upon the surety, is to be found in the findings of fact with which the appellant agrees and wherein it appears that at the time of the transfer of the claims to it upon which its action as the assignee thereof is predicated, the assignors thereof had not so far perfected their said claims as to entitle them to make assignments of the same, or as to entitle the plaintiff as the assignee thereof to recover upon said bond as a statutory bond. It is, however, the contention of the appellant that said bond, though not a statutory bond, is a common-law bond and should have been held by the trial court in its conclusions of law to be such, in which event the plaintiff would have been entitled to a recovery upon its said assigned claims.

[1] We are of the opinion that the trial court was correct in holding the bond in question to be the statutory bond required by the provisions of the statute to which its conclusion of law refers. The findings of fact of the trial court show that said bond and the contract to which it relates were delivered together as parts of one and the same transaction; that the bond in question was such a bond as was referred to and required by the specifications under which the contract was awarded; that the bond is in the proportion of the amount of the contract which the statute requires; that the bond was given to and accepted by the school board at the time and in the manner required by the statute; that the law requires said school board to exact from the contractor such a bond, and that in the exaction thereof said school board performed its mandatory duty under said law; that the school board accepted said bond as being the bond required by statute, and thereafter did certain acts which it was expressly forbidden to do until such bond had been filed; that said bond, in the formalities of its execution and in its essential and material provisions embraces the requirements of the statute as to what must be included in such statutory bond. From the foregoing undisputed facts the conclusion is irresistible that it was the intention of all of the parties to the transaction in the course of which such bond was given that it should be, and be considered as, the statutory bond which the law in question required.

[2] It is, however, the contention of the appellant that said bond is not to be treated as a statutory bond, for the reason that it omits from its requirements certain of the obligations which the statutory bond was required to embrace and assure. We are of the opinion that this contention is without substantial merit for two main reasons; the first of which is that, while the bond does not enter into the detail of its assumed obligations in certain particulars required by the statute, its language, when liberally construed, is broad enough to include these details, and the second reason is that supplied by certain recent decisions of this court and the District Court of Appeal which to our minds furnish sufficiently identical requisites in bonds of this character to render such decisions decisive of the instant case. We are unable to distinguish between this case and the case of Stone v. Shackelford, 64 Cal. App. 750, 222 P. 846, wherein a bond given in pursuance of the Public Works Act (St. 1919, p. 487), under which the bond in question here was given, and, being literally identical as to its binding clauses with the bond herein, was held to be a statutory bond. Neither are we able to discover a basic distinction between the bond here under review and that considered and held to be a statutory bond in the case of Miles v. Baley, 170 Cal. 151, 149 P. 45. The cases of Pacific Wood & Coal Co. v. Oswald, 179 Cal. 712, 178 P. 854, and Sherman v. American Surety Co. of New York, 178 Cal. 286, 173 P. 161, are also instructive and controlling in reaching the conclusion that the bond in question here is in substantial compliance, as to the very matters which form the basis of the appellant's criticism, with the terms of the statute which prescribes the form and substance of such bond. We are therefore of the opinion that the trial court was entirely correct in its conclusion of law holding the bond here under review to be a statutory bond, and hence was also correct in its judgment denying the plaintiff any relief in its action thereon.

1. Conspiracy ⇨18—Complaint for damages from conspiracy to defraud by land scheme held to state cause of action as against general demurrer.

Complaint for damages resulting from conspiracy to defraud by means of land scheme, alleging that all defendants conspired to create fictitious value for desert land, and to buy building material and supplies and construct a few improvements thereon as part of scheme, and to subdivide tract, sell it for large aggregate sum, receive proceeds, and escape liabilities, and that plaintiff was deceived and furnished corporation, which was alter ego of one conspirator, hardware and building material used in scheme and was not paid, held to state cause of action as against a general demurrer.

2. Conspiracy ⇨1—Elements of "action for conspiracy" are formation and operation of conspiracy and damage from acts in furtherance thereof; cause of action being damage suffered.

Elements of action for damages from civil conspiracy are formation and operation of conspiracy and damage resulting to plaintiff from act or acts done in furtherance of common design; cause of action being the damage suffered.

3. Conspiracy ⇨14—All conspirators are liable for act of one done in furtherance of conspiracy during its continuance.

All conspirators are liable for act of any one of them, which is done in furtherance of conspiracy during its continuance, and hence conspirator may be held liable, though he in fact committed no overt act.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action for damages for conspiracy, brought by Mox, Incorporated, against Frank E. Woods and others. From a judgment dismissing the action as to certain defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Pritchard & Daniels, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. E. Lady, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff corporation from judgment dismissing from the action certain defendants, following order sustaining general demurrers separately interposed by them, plaintiff having declined to amend. The defendants who had judgment are Frank E. Woods and Nancy E. Woods, husband and wife, and Bank of America, a corporation.

The complaint attempts, and we think successfully, to plead damages as the result of a civil conspiracy, to wit, a conspiracy to inflict damages by wrongful acts. We are not concerned with the question of the ability of the plaintiff to prove the allegations of the complaint, and this would be true even though we could foresee insuperable difficulties in making such proof. We are merely to pass upon the sufficiency of the complaint as a pleading.

[1, 2] The conspiracy charged and the damages alleged may be set forth briefly as follows: Defendants Woods and wife were the owners in 1923 of some 1,540 acres of desert lands in San Bernardino county of a market value not to exceed $17,000. Intending to create a false and fictitious value therefor and to thereby cheat and defraud the public in the sale and disposition of these lands in small tracts, a scheme or joint venture of all defendants was planned, whereby they were to receive all the proceeds from such venture and yet not be responsible for any of the losses or liabilities that would surely occur on the eventual dissipation of the real estate bubble. Accordingly, the properties were named as the Lenwood Estates. Defendant William Barnard, a man known to all the other defendants to be insolvent, was selected as the manager of said Lenwood Estates, although he was to and did operate under the name of Arizona-California Land Company, a corporation, said company being his alter ego. A secret trust agreement was entered into among the defendants by which the lands were to be deeded to defendant Bank of America as trustee, and defendants Woods and wife, former owners of the property, were to be free from liability of any kind in connection with the scheme. Said lands were to be subdivided and prices were fixed for the sale of the various small tracts, which said prices would in the aggregate amount to some $200,000 or more for the entire tract. The whole scheme was from its inception one to cheat and defraud, as it was never the intention of defendants to do more than create a fictitious value for said properties, and then at the most appropriate time abandon the scheme, divide the receipts, and at the same time escape liability for the losses and outlays. As a part of said plan it was the intention of defendants to make a false showing as to their intended development of said tract, and to that end it was their intention to buy building material and supplies and construct a few improvements on a part of said property, to aid in creating a false belief in the public as to said plans and intentions to develop said tract. The scheme of defendants was successfully carried through. The public was cheated out of thousands of dollars, and the creditors and investors of the scheme were left to suffer without redress. Plaintiff was one of said sufferers, having furnished to said Arizona-California Land Company hardware and building material which was used and employed as a part of said scheme. Plaintiff was deceived into believing that the goods were being furnished to a concern which included the owners of the tract and that the owners would be responsible for the goods so furnished. Defendant bank represented to said plaintiff that said owners would be responsible therefor should they be sold and delivered to said concern. The purchase price of said goods was never paid, and plaintiff suffered damages as the result of said conspiracy in the amount set forth in said complaint.

There is no escape from the conclusion that the complaint states a cause of action. The elements of an action for civil conspiracy are the formation and operation of the conspiracy and damage resulting to plaintiff from an act or acts done in furtherance of the common design. The cause of action is the damage suffered. "It is a general and well-settled principle of law that, where two or more persons are sued for a civil wrong, it is the civil wrong resulting in damage, and not the conspiracy, which constitutes the cause of action. Herron v. Hughes, 25 Cal. 555; Davitt v. Bakers' Union, 124 Cal. 99, 56 P. 775; Dowdell v. Carpy, 129 Cal. 168, 61 P. 948; Menner v. Slater, 148 Cal. 284, 83 P. 35. In such an action, the major significance of the conspiracy lies in the fact that it renders each participant in the wrongful act responsible as a joint tort-feasor for all damages ensuing from the wrong, irrespective of whether or not he was a direct actor and regardless of the degree of his activity. Cohen v. Fisher, 135 App. Div. 238, 120 N. Y. S. 546; White v. White, 132 Wis. 121, 111 N. W. 1116; Miller v. John, 208 Ill. 173, 70 N. E. 27. A plaintiff is entitled to a joint recovery of damages against such defendants as he can show have united or co-operated in inflicting a wrong upon him. Herron v. Hughes, supra; More v. Finger, 128 Cal. 318, 60 P. 933; Nevin v. Gary, 12 Cal. App. 1, 106 P. 422." Revert v. Hesse, 184 Cal. 295, 301, 193 P. 943, 946.

See, also, Bowman v. Wohlke, 166 Cal. 121, 135 P. 37, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1011; 5 Cal. Jur. p. 528, §§ 29-31.

[3] The advantage gained in charging a conspiracy is that the act of one during the conspiracy is the act of all if done in furtherance thereof, and thus defendants may be held liable who in fact committed no overt act whatsoever and gained no benefit therefrom. Revert v. Hesse, supra.

The attorney for respondents has not dignified the cause by the filing of any brief therein and we have had before us only the unanswered arguments and citations of appellant. On the hearing, the attorney for respondents was invited to appear. He not only declined to attend the hearing of the cause, but also declined to file a brief. "His blessed assurance" that all is well has caused us to halt and re-examine the principles controlling this investigation, but, after a careful consideration of the whole cause, we are constrained to assert that, as against a general demurrer, the complaint over and again states a cause of action against the said defendants.

The judgment entered in favor of defendants Frank E. Woods, Nancy E. Woods, and Bank of America, a corporation, is therefore reversed.

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 16, 1927.

1. Specific performance ⇨28(3)—Contract providing extension of time, not specifying who could grant extension, held too uncertain for specific performance.

Provision of contract for sale of land that "time is the essence of this contract but the time for any act required to be done may be extended not longer than thirty days," which did not specify what person or persons had authority to grant extension, was too indefinite and uncertain to form the basis of an action in specific performance.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨78—Contract with time of the essence held terminated within time limited for performance, where provision for extension was unenforceable.

Where contract for sale of land provided that acts be done within 30 days and that "time is the essence of this contract but the time for any act required to be done may be extended not more than thirty days," without specifying who could grant extension, held, that provision granting extension of time in addition to the 30 days was too indefinite and uncertain and vendor at the end of 30-day period had right to consider contract at end, in absence of valid extension of time for performance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Amelia J. Schellenbach against Simeon Lagasse and others to quiet title to certain land. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

D. A. Knapp, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Dockweiler, Dockweiler & Finch, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, J. Plaintiff brought this action to quiet her title to certain land in Los Angeles county. The complaint is in the usual form. In their second amended answer the defendants set up as their interest in said land a contract of purchase dated October 25, 1924, wherein the plaintiff agreed to sell and the defendant Simeon Lagasse agreed to buy said land for $7,750 and assume a mortgage of $6,000 on the property. The sum of $350 was to be paid and was paid upon the execution of the contract, and the remaining cash payment of $7,400 was payable within 30 days from the date of the contract. It was then alleged that "said contract stipulated that either party should have 30 days to prepare for and to consummate said contract, said period to be extended thirty days at the option of either party." Other allegations with reference to the state of the title are then set forth, but it is deemed unnecessary to recite them for the reason that they do not have any controlling bearing on the disposition of this appeal. By the second amended cross-complaint the defendants realleged in substance the matters set forth in their second amended answer, and in addition thereto alleged facts intended to entitle them to a specific performance of said contract. It was therein averred that on the 14th day of November, 1924, the defendants discovered that a tenant was in possession of said property under a leasehold running for a term of years, and thereupon notified the plaintiff to cause the immediate removal of said tenant, and that plaintiff failed, refused, and neglected to do so; that thereupon the defendant Simeon Lagasse notified the plaintiff "that he would exercise his option of extending said term for consummation of said contract to and until the 25th day of December, 1924, and would at his own expense in the meantime secure the removal of said tenant." The complaint was filed on December 4, 1924, which was before the expiration of the 30-day period thus attempted by the defendant Simeon Lagasse to extend the time of payment. The cause was called for trial and the plaintiff made proof of her title. A discussion ensued between court and counsel, during which the contract of purchase and sale was received in evidence. The court then inquired of counsel for defendants what he intended to prove, and he stated in effect that the defendants were standing on a clause in the contract, as follows:

"Sixth. Time is the essence of this contract but the time for any act required to be done may be extended not longer than thirty days by (c) — (d) —. By — Real Estate Agent."

After further discussion the plaintiff's counsel interposed an objection to the defendants' further participation in the case on the ground that the second amended answer and the second amended cross-complaint, in conjunction with the admitted facts and the statement of defendants' counsel as to what he intended to prove, did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense or a cause of action. The objection was sustained. No application was made by the defendants to amend and judgment was ordered for the plaintiff from which judgment the defendants appeal.

[1, 2] The controversy turns upon the right of the defendants to a 30-day extension of time under the contract or to a reasonable extension of time under the circumstances involved. The trial court took the view that clause "Sixth" of the contract, above quoted, was too indefinite and uncertain to form the basis of an action in specific performance. In this the court, we think, was correct. The contract was on a standard form containing appended instructions as to what should be inserted in the blank spaces. These instructions were not followed, and it is impossible to tell from the incomplete provision for the extension of time what person or persons have authority to grant the extension. The defendants insist that the power to extend the time was vested in either party at his option. But the contract does not so provide. No attempt was made to reform the instrument, and the allegation of the second amended answer and cross-complaint, to the effect that either party could at his option extend the time for 30 days beyond the 30-day period provided in the contract for the consummation of the deal, must fail in the light of the provisions of the contract itself. The same conclusion must also be announced concerning the claim of the defendants that they would have a reasonable time after the 25th day of November, 1924, in which to perform. When the contract period of 30 days elapsed, the plaintiff had the right to consider the contract at an end in the absence of some valid extension of time for performance. As the incomplete provision of the contract did not have that effect and no right to an extension of time was otherwise shown, the trial court was right in ordering judgment for the plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

SCHUSTER v. WILLIAMS. (L. A. 8890.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1927.

Pleading §349—Where answer denied indebtedness, admission in counterclaim did not authorize judgment on pleadings.

In action for money due, where defendant had, in her answer, denied that she was indebted to plaintiff in any sum whatever, any admission of indebtedness she may have made in her counterclaim did not impair denials of her answer, and plaintiff's motion for judgment on pleadings was properly denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Hudner, Judge.

Action for money due by Elsbeth Schuster against Emma A. Williams. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. V. Beaulieu, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lawler & Degnan, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. There is no merit in this appeal. Appellant claims that the court erred in denying her motion for judgment on the pleadings. This motion was based upon the ground that the answer admitted the indebtedness set forth in the complaint, and to recover which the action was instituted by plaintiff. The answer denies in apt language the allegations of the complaint. It is contended, however, by appellant that respondent in a counterclaim admitted that she was indebted to appellant in the sum demanded by the appellant. On account of what is undoubtedly a typographical error in said counterclaim it may be susceptible, of such a construction. This, however, cannot avail the appellant. As defendant had in her answer denied that she was indebted to plaintiff in any sum whatever, any admissions she may have made in her counterclaim did not impair these denials of her answer. The motion for judgment on the pleadings was therefore properly denied. Cass v. Rochester, 174 Cal. 358, 163 P. 212; Botto v. Vandament, 67 Cal. 332, 7 P. 753.

In the matter of the estate of Leonard Ovid Vaughan, deceased. After admission of will to probate, Grace B. Vaughan filed petition against David N. Kelly and others for revocation of will. Consent decree was entered, denying petition for revocation, and directing distribution, and Howard Smith Vaughan and Edna Vaughan Daniels separately appeal. On motion to dismiss appeals. Appeals dismissed.

Feemster & Cleary, of Visalia, for appellants.

Scarborough, Forgy & Reinhaus, A. W. Rutan, Head, Rutan & Scovel, Clyde Bishop, and Chas. D. Swanner, all of Santa Ana, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. Leonard Ovid Vaughan died testate, leaving an estate which was subsequently inventoried in an amount in excess of $230,000. By the terms of the will practically the entire estate, all of which was declared by the testator to be his separate property, was divided among the decedent's children, grandchildren, and other relatives. He bequeathed to his wife, Grace B. Vaughan, "one thousand dollars and no more." After the admission of the will to probate, the surviving wife instituted a contest, and filed a petition for revocation of the will upon various grounds, and citation was issued. David N. Kelly, the executor of the will, Gertrude F. Wagner, a daughter, and various minors by their guardian ad litem, A. W. Rutan, filed an answer, putting in issue the allegations of the contestant. The citation was served on Edna Vaughan Daniels, a daughter of the decedent, and on Howard Smith Vaughan, a son, among others, but they did not appear. Other than noted, there were no appearances, pleadings, or opposition to the contest.

When the matter came on for hearing, the contestant, the parties who had answered, and Charles E. Wagner, as trustee for the grandchildren, appeared and stipulated for the entry of a judgment and decree. The stipulation was approved by the court, and on April 12, 1927, a decree was entered by the terms of which it was ordered (1) that the contest of the surviving wife of the decedent was denied; (2) that there be distributed to her, in lieu of the provision in the will, certain designated and described real property; (3) that there be distributed to Gertrude F. Wagner certain real property, with a provision for the execution by her of a promissory note in favor of the trustee for the grandchildren; and (4) "that in all other particulars, distribution be had in accordance with the last will and testament of said deceased." No notice of the entry of the decree was given to any of the parties named in or served with the citation.

On the 6th day of May, following, Edna Vaughan Daniels and Howard Smith Vaughan severally filed notices of intention to move for a new trial of the proceeding to revoke the probate of the will. The motions, each of which was noticed to be made on statutory grounds and upon the minutes of the court, came on regularly for hearing and were duly argued. The court took the matter under advisement, but no decision or order disposing of the motions was made. Within 60 days after its entry Edna Vaughan Daniels and Howard Smith Vaughan each filed in the court below a notice of appeal to this court from the judgment and decree entered by stipulation on April 12. All the parties who appeared and stipulated to the judgment and decree below have united here, as respondents, in motions to dismiss these appeals, upon the ground that no transcript of the record has been prepared or filed within time, and on the further ground that the appeals are not taken by parties to the proceedings in which the judgment was made, and that the appellants are not parties aggrieved by the order and decree entered.

We deem it sufficient to consider only the last ground of the motions to dismiss, that the persons attempting to appeal are not parties aggrieved by the judgment. No interests of the appellants were injuriously or at all affected by the settlement of the contest. No personal rights or property interests of either of them are so affected by a judgment relating only to the interests of other parties to the proceeding to revoke the probate of the will as to render them aggrieved parties. They, as participants in the distribution of the estate to be finally made, are in exactly the same position as they were before the rendition of the judgment. The only interest either of them had was a specific bequest of the sum of $1,000. Neither was entitled to share in any other property or in the residue of the estate. No contest was, or can now be, instituted by the appellants, and their interests are still fixed and limited by the provisions of the will as admitted to probate. All claims and demands against the estate, except expenses of administration, compensation of the executor and his attorneys, and state inheritance taxes amounting to less than $1,000, have been paid, and the executor has in his possession real and personal property valued in excess of $130,000. The only bequests to be paid are legacies totaling $6,000, of which $1,000 is a legacy to the appellant Edna Vaughan Daniels, and $1,000 a legacy to the appellant Howard Smith Vaughan.

It therefore follows that the purported appeals have not been taken by parties aggrieved by the judgment, and they should be and each of them is ordered dismissed.

In the Matter of the Estate of Leonard Ovid VAUGHAN, Deceased. Edna Vaughan DANIELS, Appellant, v. David N. KELLY, etc., Respondent. (L. A. 10120.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 17, 1927.

Motion to dismiss appeal from an order of the Superior Court of Orange County, E. J. Marks, Judge, confirming sale of real property. Granted; appeal dismissed.

Feemster & Cleary, of Visalia, for appellant. Scarborough, Forgy & Reinhaus, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. This is one of three motions to dismiss appeal. During the administration of the estate of Leonard Ovid Vaughan, deceased, the court below made an order confirming the sale of real property made by the executor. Edna Vaughan Daniels, a daughter of the deceased, and one of the persons entitled to a specific bequest of $1,000 under the provisions of the will of the decedent, appealed. Motion is now made to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the appellant is not a party aggrieved.

The moving parties and the appellant concede that, if it be held by this court, in disposing of the other motions to dismiss, that Edna Vaughan Daniels is not a party aggrieved by the judgment and decree denying the petition to revoke the probate of the will entered April 12, 1927, this appeal should be dismissed. The court has so decided. Estate of Vaughan, L. A. Nos. 10121 and 10122 (Cal. Sup.) 262 P. 305.

IN RE STRAWN'S ESTATE.

STRAWN v. STRAWN.

(L. A. No. 9663.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1927.

Costs $$260(1)$ —Where appeal from approval of trustee's account was frivolous, trustee may have money judgment and costs in addition to affirmance.

Where appeal by adjudged missing person from order approving trustee's account was adjudged frivolous, appellant, though properly notified, having failed to appear at hearing at which order was entered, trustee held entitled to judgment against appellant for $100 and costs of appeal in addition to affirmance of order appealed from.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of George W. Strawn, a missing person. From an order settling the account of Lou A. Strawn, trustee, George W. Strawn appeals. Affirmed with directions.

R. O. Noleman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. R. Wilder, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, made and entered under the provisions of section 1822 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which relate to the appointment of a trustee for the estate of a missing person in order that the property of such person may be given proper care and attention. The appellant disappeared while living in the county of Los Angeles some time in the year 1923; his whereabouts being unknown. He therefore came within the proper description of a missing person; whereupon one Lou A. Strawn, alleging herself to be his wife, applied to said court under the provisions of the foregoing section of the Code for the appointment of herself as trustee of the estate of George W. Strawn, an alleged missing person. After such notice as the provisions of the Code directed and the court ordered a hearing was had, whereupon said Lou A. Strawn was appointed trustee of the estate of said missing person. Three years later George W. Strawn reappeared and presented in said court and matter an affidavit setting forth that said Lou A. Strawn as such trustee had upon her appointment taken over certain personal property of the affiant of the approximate value of $400 and also assumed control over a certain described plot of real estate, and asked that a citation issue against the said Lou A. Strawn as such trustee to show cause why she had not made an account or report to the court, and that, upon making such account and report, she deliver to affiant said personal property, and that her trusteeship should be terminated. The court issued such citation, whereupon the trustee responded by rendering a detailed account of her trusteeship, which showed that there was due to said trustee, in excess of the sum received by her, the sum of $1,414, which said account she prayed might be approved and the amount due thereon declared a lien upon the property of the affiant. Thereupon George W. Strawn filed his objections and exceptions to said account, in the course of which he alleged that the said trustee and he were not husband and wife, and that the former was not, therefore, entitled to charge the items in her said account expended for her support against his estate. Upon the filing of said exceptions, the court set the matter of said account and the exceptions thereto down for hearing upon a particular day, and directed the proper notices thereof to be given, and thereafter and on the day fixed for the hearing thereon proceeded to hear the same. The appellant herein, though properly notified, did not appear at said hearing, but nevertheless the court proceeded to hear the evidence offered on behalf of said trustee thereon, and, after so doing, made and entered its order settling the final account of the trustee as being in all respects approved, allowed and settled as rendered. The court also in its said order expressly overruled the exceptions filed to said account. It is from the order of the trial court thus made that this appeal is taken; the only record on appeal being the clerk's transcript. It is evident from an examination of this record that this is an utterly frivolous appeal. The only possible contention which the appellant presents as having any semblance of reason is that the court in its order settling the final account of the trustee fastens a lien upon his real estate to the extent of the sum found to be due the trustee; but an inspection of the order of the trial court made in settling said account shows that no such action was taken, and that the entire scope of the court's order amounted to nothing more than a mere approval of said account. It follows that the only point made by the appellant upon this appeal is entirely unjustified by the state of the record before us.

This appeal being thus shown to be frivolous and evidently taken for the purpose of delaying and harassing the respondent, it is hereby ordered that the judgment is affirmed, with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment in favor of respondent and against appellant for the sum of $100 and costs of appeal.

THIELE et ux. v. SECURITY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK, GUARANTEE BRANCH. (L. A. 8930.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1927.

1. Pleading $\S$ 127(2)—Denial, when construed with complaint, held to admit defendant claimed under deed from plaintiffs to T. and that deed was valid conveyance.

In action to quiet title, where plaintiff alleged defendant claimed an interest in property based partly on forged instrument purporting to have been acknowledged by plaintiffs in favor of T., defendant's denial that his claim was based on such instrument and that deed from plaintiffs to T. was false, forged, or fraudulent, but not denying that it claimed under a deed from plaintiffs to T., held, when construed with allegations of plaintiff's complaint, to be in effect an admission that it claimed under a deed from plaintiffs to T., and that such deed was a valid conveyance from plaintiffs.

2. Quieting title $\S$ 44(1)—Where defendant claimed title through plaintiffs, plaintiffs need not prove title in their grantor.

In action to quiet title, where defendants, in claiming under a deed which plaintiffs alleged was a forgery, claimed title through plaintiffs, it was unnecessary for plaintiffs to prove title in their grantor.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Louis Thiele and wife against the Security Trust & Savings Bank, Guarantee Branch, executor of the estate of George W. Hazeltine, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Schweitzer & Hutton, of Los Angeles (H. F. Clary and B. R. Ware, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Rosecrans & Emme, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. [1, 2] Action to quiet title. The complaint is in the form usually employed in an action of that nature. In a second count, however, the plaintiffs alleged that defendant claims an interest in said real property under a deed purporting to have been executed by plaintiffs to one Hester Thompson, but that plaintiffs never executed said deed, and that said deed was false, fraudulent, and forged. Defendant by answer denied plaintiffs' ownership, admitted that defendant claims an interest in said real property, denied that it claimed under any forged deed, and further alleged that it became the owner of said real property by virtue of a sheriff's deed issued in an action in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, brought by said defendant against Hester Thompson for the foreclosure of a mortgage given by her to said defendant. Upon the trial, the plaintiffs introduced a deed to the said real property from Strawberry Park Land Company in favor of said plaintiffs. They further testified that they never executed any deed to said real property in favor of Hester Thompson or any other person, and that the purported deed from them to Hester Thompson was a forgery. The court made findings in favor of plaintiffs and entered judgment quieting their title to said real property.

The defendant has appealed, and the only point made for a reversal of the judgment is that the evidence fails to support the finding of the court that plaintiffs are the owners of said property. It is contended by appellant that, in an action to quiet title, the plaintiff must recover upon the strength of his own title and not on the weakness of the defendant's, and that in this action, admitting that there was evidence to support the finding that the deed to Hester Thompson was a forgery, and therefore defendant had no title to said real property, still there was an utter lack of any evidence to show plaintiffs to be the owners of said property. In plaintiffs' complaint they alleged that defendant claimed an interest in said property based in part upon a forged instrument purporting to have been executed by plaintiffs in favor of Hester Thompson. Defendant denied that its claim was based upon a forged instrument executed by plaintiffs in favor of Hester Thompson, and denied that the deed from plaintiffs to Hester Thompson was false, forged, or fraudulent. There was no denial that defendant claimed under a deed from plaintiffs to Hester Thompson. Defendant's denial taken in connection with the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, was in effect an admission that it claimed under a deed from plaintiffs to Hester Thompson, and that said deed was a valid conveyance from plaintiffs. If, therefore, defendant claimed under said deed it must claim title to the property through the plaintiffs. This being the case, it was not necessary for the plaintiffs to prove title in their grantor. It is well settled, in an action to quiet title, that plaintiff need not prove title in his grantor when both parties claim title under a common source. Phillips v. Menotti, 167 Cal. 328, 139 P. 796; McGorray v. Robinson, 135 Cal. 312, 67 P. 279. The rule applies with much greater force when the defendant claims title through the plaintiffs.

HARTFORD ACCIDENT & INDEMNITY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (L. A. 10002.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1927.

1. Master and servant §375(1)—Injuries to newspaper carrier delivering milk for milk wagon driver with whom he rode in delivering papers held "in course of employment."

Where newspaper carrier arranged to assist in delivering milk in return for being carried in milk truck on newspaper route, which arrangement was to his employer's benefit and was reasonable under the circumstances, and means of transportation had been left to carrier, injury occurring while carrier was temporarily off newspaper route delivering milk held to arise out of and "in course of employment" for newspaper, as well as in course of employment by creamery.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Course of Employment.]

2. Master and servant §375(1)—To be entitled to compensation for injuries, newspaper carrier need not necessarily be in act of delivering newspaper.

It is not essential to support compensation award for injuries sustained by newspaper carrier that injuries were received while carrier was in the act of delivering a newspaper.

3. Master and servant §417(7)—Industrial Commission's award, supported by inferences fairly drawn, is conclusive.

Where findings of Industrial Commission are supported by inferences, which may be fairly drawn from the evidence, even though the evidence be susceptible of opposing inferences, appellate court will not disturb award.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by George Abram, by his guardian ad litem, Henry D. Abram, opposed by the Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company, insurance carrier. The Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation, and the insurance carrier applies for certiorari to review the order of award. Award affirmed.

Superseding opinion in District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, 256 P. 873.

George L. Greer, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Frank J. Creede, of San Francisco, for respondent State Compensation Fund

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for other respondents.

SHENK, J. By this proceeding the petitioner seeks to annul an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission to George Abram in so far as said award applies to the owner of a daily newspaper, of which the petitioner is the insurance carrier. The relationship of employer and employee between the newspaper proprietor and Abram is admitted, but it is contended that at the time of the injury for which compensation was awarded the employee was not acting within the scope of his employment.

The facts, in brief, are as follows: George Abram, a minor, was employed by the newspaper proprietor to deliver its newspapers to certain subscribers, a list of whom was furnished to him. The method of accomplishing the delivery, the means of transportation, and the particular route to be followed were left to the arrangement and discretion of Abram. He was, however, required to commence deliveries about 4:30 o'clock in the morning and to make deliveries to the subscribers as soon thereafter as possible. The driver of a milk truck, operated by a creamery company, traversed in a general way the same territory in the delivery of milk and cream as that covered by the newspaper route. The milk driver passed near young Abram's home about 4:30 in the morning. Abram made an arrangement with the driver of the milk truck to carry him and his newspapers over this general route. At times it was necessary to leave the milk route in order to deliver the papers, and at times it was also necessary to leave the newspaper route to make deliveries of milk. Along some portions of the route deliveries of both milk and newspapers were made at the same residence. In return for the transportation received by Abram he assisted the driver of the milk truck in the delivery of milk and cream. He received no other reward for his services so long as there were newspapers undelivered. On school days he left the driver when delivery of his newspapers was completed, which was usually about 7 o'clock, and returned home to have his breakfast and go to school. On Saturdays and Sundays, however, after his papers were delivered, instead of leaving the driver, he continued on with him and assisted him to the end of the milk route. For this service the driver paid him 75 cents in cash and furnished him with breakfast.

On the morning of Saturday, May 15, 1926, Abram started out with his newspapers and with the milk driver as usual. At about the hour of 7 o'clock, and before his newspaper deliveries had been completed, he was reaching for a bottle of milk when his foot slipped and he fell under one of the wheels of the truck and suffered the injury for which compensation was awarded. The accident occurred on Portia street, which was on the milk route, but not on the newspaper route. The next and final paper to be delivered by Abram that day was to be left at a house on Quintero street, about two blocks away from the scene of the accident. Abram testified that he intended to make that delivery when the milk truck should proceed on Sutherland street, which was a block nearer to the Quintero address than the place where the accident occurred, and that if the accident had not happened he would have arrived at the last place of newspaper delivery in about five or ten minutes.

[1, 2] The commission found that at the time of the injury Abram was "being conveyed in said delivery wagon in the joint course of both employments." The ratio of liability of the respective employers was then computed and the award made accordingly. We think the commission was justified in its findings and conclusions as to both employers. As to the creamery company, the award was not questioned. As to the newspaper proprietor, the record shows that no restrictions were placed on Abram as to the method or means of transportation he might secure; that the method or means actually employed redounded to the benefit of the newspaper employer in that earlier deliveries were thereby brought about, and that the means thus employed were reasonable under all the circumstances shown. "An employee is in the 'course of his employment' when he does those reasonable things which his contract with his employment expressly or impliedly permits him to do." State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Ind. Acc. Com., 194 Cal. 28, 33, 227 P. 168, 169.

Petitioner contends that the activities of Abram at the time of the injury did not have anything to do with his employment to deliver newspapers; that the injury cannot be traced to any risk reasonably incident to that employment; that the act was for his own personal benefit; and that, therefore, the commission exceeded its jurisdiction because, it is claimed, the injury did not arise out of and in the course of his employment with the newspaper proprietor. It is further urged that Abram had deviated from his employment to deliver newspapers, and that the deviation had not been completed at the time of the injury. With these contentions we cannot agree. It is not essential to the support of an award of compensation that the injured person must actually have been "manipulating the tools of his calling"—in this case actually in the act of delivering a newspaper. Judson Mfg. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 181 Cal. 300, 302, 184 P. 1. It would have been entirely proper for Abram, under the evidence, to have employed the truck driver for a cash consideration to haul him and his newspapers over the newspaper route. The fact that the consideration was personal service in assisting the driver to deliver the milk cannot affect the principle applicable to the case. And this assistance was not complete unless it was afforded to the milk driver at points other than those where newspapers were to be delivered as well as those where both milk and newspapers were to be delivered. The newspaper route may well be, as it undoubtedly was by the commission, considered as a unit. There was no deviation from the employment so long as the newspaper deliveries were not completed. Also, the service Abram was performing at the time of the injury was in furtherance of the contract made for the benefit of his newspaper employer and was incidental thereto. A case very similar to the present one and involving dual employment in the delivery of milk and newspapers was presented to the court in Press Publishing Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 190 Cal. 114, 210 P. 820, and the award imposing joint liability on the employers was affirmed.

[3] It is, of course, well settled that this court will not annul an award of the commission where there is substantial evidence to support the commission's finding and order. Southern Pacific Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 177 Cal. 378, 170 P. 822; Western Ind. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 182 Cal. 709, 190 P. 27; Dearborn v. Ind. Acc. Com., 187 Cal. 594, 203 P. 112; Pruitt v. Ind. Acc. Com., 189 Cal. 459, 209 P. 31; Market St. Ry. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 193 Cal. 178, 224 P. 95. And if the findings are supported by inferences which may fairly be drawn from the evidence even though the evidence be susceptible of opposing inferences, the reviewing court will not disturb the award. Western Pac. R. R. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 193 Cal. 413, 224 P. 754, and cases cited at p. 417 (224 P. 755). Such we find the state of the record in this case to be.

It is deemed unnecessary to review the cases relied upon by petitioner, as we discover nothing therein which is opposed in principle to the determination here made on the record presented.

The award is affirmed.

Upon review, the court must, where the testimony was conflicting upon the question of negligence, accept that which supports the verdict.

2. Physicians and surgeons ⇨18(8)—Evidence held to show that alleged negligence of dentist in extraction of teeth was proximate cause of infection in plaintiff's arm.

In action against dentist for malpractice in extracting teeth, evidence held to show that alleged negligence of defendant in giving a hypodermic injection following extraction of teeth, in failing to sterilize the hypodermic needle and using impure water in the morphine solution, was the proximate cause of resulting infection throughout plaintiff's arm.

3. Physicians and surgeons ⇨18(5)—In action against dentist for malpractice, pleading held to cover allegations that water and utensils used were unsterilized.

In an action against a dentist for malpractice in use of hypodermic injection, given after extraction of teeth, allegations in the plaintiffs' pleading that the solution injected was prepared from water which was "highly septic and contaminated with germs or bacteria" held sufficiently broad to permit testimony that the defendant used an unsterilized glass, unsterilized spoon, and unsterilized water.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Jesse Olney, Judge.

Action by George M. Dimock and wife against Goodman A. Miller. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed. Superseding opinion in District Court of Appeal. 256 P. 236.

Swing & Wilson, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Earle M. Daniels and Julius V. Patrosso, both of Los Angeles, Grant Holcomb, of San Bernardino, and C. C. Mishler, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. Plaintiffs sued as husband and wife to recover damages alleged to have been caused by the negligent treatment of the wife by the defendant, who was a practicing dentist. The cause was tried before a jury, which rendered a general verdict in the sum of $6,000, and, from the judgment following the verdict, the defendant has appealed.

The charge of negligence is based upon the claim that, in giving to his patient a hypodermic injection following the extraction of two of her teeth, the defendant failed to sterilize the hypodermic needle and used impure water in the morphine solution.

The facts of the case are that Mrs. Dimock had been suffering for a number of years from imperfect teeth, and that on January 23, 1923, defendant, at her request, performed an operation, extracting two teeth which were imbedded and one of which was badly infected. On the evening of the same day, defendant called at the home of his patient and cleansed the cavities, thereafter administering a hypodermic injection to ease the pain from which she was suffering. This was repeated on the following morning and again on the following afternoon. The manner of administering this hypodermic injection on the afternoon of January 24th is the basis of plaintiff's charge of negligence. It is claimed that the defendant used an ordinary bulb syringe to cleanse the cavities from which the teeth had been extracted, previously having mixed in a glass a solution of warm water and salt; that after he had used the syringe in cleansing one of the cavities he immersed the syringe in the water again and cleansed the other cavity, and thereafter called for a spoon, with which he dipped a small portion of the water from the glass, using this to dissolve the morphine tablet. The hypodermic needle was then filled with this solution and injected into the right forearm of the patient.

A small red blot soon appeared at the point of injection, and this continued to increase in size until it was found that the patient was suffering from infection throughout the arm, and incisions were made and drains inserted for the purpose of eliminating the toxins.

[1] There is conflict in the testimony as to whether or not defendant inserted the syringe in the glass after having used it in the infected cavities of Mrs. Dimock's mouth, but we must accept the testimony which supports the verdict, and the record contains testimony from which the jury was justified in finding that the defendant had been negligent.

[2] The main contention of appellant is that, even though negligence is shown against the defendant, nevertheless there is no evidence to establish this asserted negligence as the proximate cause of the injury. It is true that several of the expert witnesses, while admitting the improper preparation of the hypodermic, if prepared in the manner heretofore stated, were unable to state whether the infection was caused by this act or by some other cause, such as being carried in the blood from the infected cavities of the teeth. However, we find the testimony of Dr. Savage appearing in the record as follows:

"That is all I can say. I would assume that hypodermic having been used with the result almost immediate, that the infection was due to the hypodermic injection."

Upon cross-examination, he testified that the infection in the mouth might operate as a predisposing cause of infection if the tissue was subject to any unusual trauma or injury. Dr. Sellew was asked to state his opinion of the cause of the infection in the arm, and stated:

"The introduction of infection into the skin at that point would be the most logical reason. It would be far-fetched to seek for any other source of infection"—and other similar statements.

Dr. Garcelon, testifying for defendant, admitted that it was not possible to determine, absolutely, the source of the infection in a case like the instant one, but that it was "purely and simply a question of weighing probabilities."

The record also contains testimony by plaintiff's nurse that, after plaintiff developed this infection, the defendant said to the nurse, "I wonder if Mrs. Dimock will ever forgive me for wrecking her arm;" and that on another occasion he said, "That looks like bad technic."

If the rule of law is as contended for by defendant and appellant, and it is necessary to demonstrate conclusively and beyond the possibility of a doubt that the negligence resulted in the injury, it would never be possible to recover in a case of negligence in the practice of a profession which is not an exact science.

[3] Appellant also contends that the plaintiff did not plead as negligence the use of an unsterilized glass containing unsterilized water and the use of an unsterilized spoon, and that these matters were asserted by plaintiff's witnesses to be contributing factors in the infection. It would seem that the pleading was broad enough to cover the matter, for it is alleged that the solution injected was prepared from water which was "highly septic and contaminated with germs or bacteria."

We find no merit in the objections urged by appellant to some of the instructions given to the jury. One of the instructions of which complaint is made is, in effect, substantially the same as an instruction given in Scally v. Garratt & Co., 11 Cal. App. 138, 104 P. 325, which was there held not to be error, and is different in language and effect from the instruction criticized in Saylor v. Taylor, 42 Cal. App. 474, 183 P. 843. We are cited to no authority for the objections made to the other instructions, and, if such objections have any merit, in theory, nevertheless the matters complained of could not have been prejudicial to appellant under the facts of this case.

There is no other question raised which merits discussion, and the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⇨193(1)—Defendant, failing to object to sufficiency of complaint in court below, cannot object for first time, on appeal.

Defendant, who made no objection to sufficiency of complaint at any time in court below, but treated complaint as stating good cause of action, cannot, for first time on appeal, complain of insufficiency of complaint to state sufficient facts to constitute cause of action.

2. Pleading ⇨36(3)—Contention of lack of evidence that defendants were associated in business held without merit, in view of admission in answer.

In action for damages as result of operation of plastic surgery performed on plaintiff's face, contention that defendant conducting beauty parlor was not associated with defendant specializing in plastic surgery, and hence latter was not bound by representations made by former, is without merit, in view of admission in answer that defendants were engaged in business of beauty culture and plastic surgery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action by Bertha Say against Bessie L. Barber and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John F. Imel, of Los Angeles, and Neal E. Dow, of Long Beach, for appellants.

Arthur C. Webb, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. [1] Plaintiff recovered a judgment against defendants as damages sustained by plaintiff as a result of an operation alleged to have been negligently performed on plaintiff's face by the defendant Dr. Foster M. Hull. Defendants ask a reversal of the judgment on the ground that the complaint fails to state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action for malpractice, and that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. In support of the first ground defendants claim that the complaint states no specific facts showing the negligence complained of or that contributed to the injury of plaintiff. It is alleged in the complaint that defendants performed the operation, and in doing so "neglected to use proper care and skill in the performance of said operation, and performed said operation in a careless and negligent manner, and as a proximate consequence and cause thereof the plaintiff" sustained the damage complained thereof. No objection was made to the complaint at or prior to the trial, or at any time in the court below. On the other hand, it was treated by all parties as stating a good cause of action against the defendants for negligence. Such an objection comes too late if made for the first time on appeal. McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. 154, 160, 64 P. 278; Parke & Lacy Co. v. Inter Nos Oil & Development Co., 147 Cal. 490, 493, 82 P. 51. However, a complaint in many of its essential features like the one in the present action was approved by this court in the recent case of Hall v. Steele, 193 Cal. 602, 605, 226 P. 854.

[2, 3] The second ground upon which defendants rest their claim for a reversal of the judgment is that the findings are not supported by the evidence. It is first contended that Dr. Hull was not bound by certain statements and representations made by the defendant Barber, in the absence of any evidence that the two defendants, one of whom was conducting a beauty parlor and the other a physician specializing in plastic surgery, were associated together in carrying on a joint business. There is no merit in this contention, in view of the admissions in their answer that "defendants are engaged in the business of beauty culture and plastic surgery," and "hold themselves out as being capable of performing this operation with skill." The further claim is made that the evidence does not sustain the finding that the defendants were guilty of negligence in the performance of the operation resulting in the disfigurement of plaintiff's face. A surgeon does not guarantee a good result. His undertaking is to use the skill and learning of the average member of his profession in good standing, to exercise reasonable care, and to exert his best judgment in an effort to bring about a good result. Louden v. Scott, 58 Mont. 645, 194 P. 488, 12 A. L. R. 1491, 1492. The trial court found that the acts of the defendants in performing the operation upon plaintiff did not measure up to this standard. This conclusion finds support in the testimony of the plaintiff and her sister, and that of Dr. Brown, a witness for the plaintiff. The finding, therefore, of negligence on the part of the defendants, is justified by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action by W. D. Haworth against the Southern Counties Gas Company, in which the City of Los Angeles filed a complaint in intervention. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

George L. Greer and Le Roy M. Edwards, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Clement L. Shinn and Walter J. Little, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action for damages arising out of a gas explosion occurring at San Pedro harbor, whereby the plaintiff was injured, which he alleges occurred through the negligence of the appellant, Southern Counties Gas Company. The facts of the case as shown by the evidence, which is not in substantial conflict, are briefly as follows: The appellant, at the time of the explosion in question, and for some time prior thereto, maintained and operated a gas-distributing system in the vicinity of Wilmington and San Pedro, which extended along the water front in that region, and one of the projections of which, in the form of a gas main or pipe, was located along and under the premises where the explosion occurred through which the plaintiff received his injuries. The city of Los Angeles has for some time been engaged in filling in the lands behind the rubble wall in the vicinity of which said pipe line was laid, and in the course of such work had been previously and was at the time of said explosion engaged in operating a locomotive crane, which was used in excavating the sand and soil from the bottom of the channel adjacent thereto and depositing the same on the landward side of said wall. The negligence with which the appellant was charged was that its said pipe underlying the point at which said work was being prosecuted was laid without any sufficient foundation or support under it and was at the joints thereof insufficiently welded, although the appellant knew or should have known that heavy machinery and heavy loads would necessarily be placed upon the surface of the ground under which said gas main was laid, in the course of the operations of said city, which operations were under way at the time said gas pipe was laid. The plaintiff was an employee of said city, engaged in the operation of said locomotive crane, which was stationed immediately above the spot where the gas explosion occurred, which, according to the plaintiff's averments, was due to the insufficient welding and support of its aforesaid pipe. The defendant, in its answer to plaintiff's complaint, denied any negligence upon its part which would constitute a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries. After the filing of said answer, the city of Los Angeles, by leave of the court first had and obtained, filed a complaint in intervention, wherein it also alleged that the defendant, Southern Counties Gas Company, was negligent in the respect already averred by the plaintiff, and that as a result thereof the plaintiff, as its employee, suffered the injuries complained of, and that as a result of such injury the said intervenor had been obliged to expend on account of said injuries to its employee and of its obligation to him under the Workmen's Compensation Act a large sum of money for compensation, and also for hospital fees, nurses, physicians, medical supplies, and medicine, aggregating the sum of $4,775.94, for which it sought a recovery from said defendant. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $21,500, which apparently was intended to cover the outlays of the intervenor; and, from the judgment entered upon said verdict, the defendant has prosecuted this appeal.

The main contention upon which the appellant relies upon this appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict or the judgment entered thereon. We do not deem it necessary to enter upon an elaborate review of the extensive record embracing the evidence educed upon the trial of this cause, since from a careful examination thereof we are satisfied that the evidence was abundantly sufficient to sustain such verdict and judgment.

As to the appellant's further contention that the court was in error in giving certain instructions to the jury, we find that the only instruction which the appellant quotes as subject to its criticism is one which reads as follows:

"The law requires of a gas company that it shall use reasonable and proper care, under all circumstances, in selecting its pipe, in laying its pipe, in taking care of it afterward, looking after it, and this question of reasonable and proper care has reference of course, to the kind of instrumentality that it was dealing with and to the possible or probable consequences of neglect on its part. But the principle by which its conduct is to be regulated is one of reasonable and proper care under the circumstances."

This instruction we find by reference to the original record is but one of a large body of instructions which seem to cover every phase of the issues to be tried and determined by the jury, and, while said instruction standing alone might be subject in some degree to the appellant's criticism of it because of the use therein of the phrase, "possible or probable consequences of neglect on its part," the jury could not have been misled thereby, in view of the facts of the case and of the entire body of instructions which was given to it. The case should not, therefore, be reversed on that ground.

Finding no other error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Action by John Gottstein against W. R. Adams and others. From a judgment for plaintiff defendant Reuben N. Erickson appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

James W. Glassford and H. L. Welch, both of El Centro, for appellant.

Herbert C. Kelly, of San Diego, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. [1] This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant Reuben N. Erickson, in an action to quiet title. The plaintiff based his right of recovery in said action upon a tax deed issued to him in consequence of a tax sale of the premises in question had on the 27th day of June, 1924, wherein the tax collector offered said premises for sale to the highest bidder for the amount of a tax assessed in the year 1918, and which became delinquent and were sold to the state in the month of June, 1919. It was the contention of the defendant upon the trial, and is his contention upon this appeal, that said tax deed was and is void for two reasons: First, for the reason that the procedure provided by the statute for the levy of the assessment and for the sale of whatever interest the appellant had in said premises for and on account of the defendant's delinquency in the payment of the tax levied thereon pursuant to said assessment was not followed; and the second reason is that the lands and premises at the time of the levy of the assessment and of the proceedings had thereon leading up to such tax sale was United States government land, which was in the course of being acquired by the defendant as a homestead and was not subject to state taxation, and hence that the assessment of whatever interest the defendant had therein prior to the issuance of the final certificate and all subsequent proceedings for the collection of a tax thereon imposed by the state, including the issuance of said deed, were void. The facts presented to the court upon this appeal are uncontradicted and consist of documentary evidence and such additional facts thereto as are embraced in the stipulation of the parties. From the record as thus made up it appears that in November, 1915, the defendant Erickson made a homestead entry under the United States land laws providing therefor upon the east $\frac{1}{2}$ of the east $\frac{1}{2}$ of tract 147, township 13 south, range 14 east S. B. M., in Imperial county, Cal. He completed his probationary period of residence and complied with other requirements of the homestead laws, and in May, 1921, became entitled to make his final proof and received his final certificate upon his said homestead entry. In October, 1924, he received his patent for the land. In the meantime, and in the year 1918, the county assessor of Imperial county undertook to assess the "possessory right" of said defendant Erickson in said land at the sum of \$3,200 and his improvements thereon at \$400. This assessment was transferred from the assessment list to the assessment book and a total tax computed thereon at the sum of \$127.80. When the defendant later in that year failed to pay said tax, it was transferred by said official to the delinquent list, and at the time of such transfer the descriptive words "possessory right" as they appeared upon the assessment book were dropped, and the delinquent tax appeared upon the delinquent list as a tax against the land. In June, 1919, the tax collector, following the procedure provided in the Political Code for the sale of delinquent taxes upon real estate, sold the said land and the improvements thereon to the state, and five years thereafter, in June, 1924, the said tax thereon remaining unpaid, the tax collector, still following said procedure, advertised the land for sale to the highest bidder and sold the same to the plaintiff herein for the total amount of the delinquency, with penalties and costs for an amount aggregating \$442, and later and in due course issued a deed therefor to the plaintiff herein. Under the convention by the terms of which California was admitted into the Union, as these appear in the act of admission (U. S. Stats. at Large, vol. 9, p. 452) it was provided that:

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, that the said state of California is admitted into the Union upon the express condition that the people of said state, through their Legislature or otherwise, shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within its limits, and shall pass no law and do no act whereby the title of the United States to, and right to dispose of, the same shall be impaired or questioned; and that they shall never lay any tax or assessment of any description whatsoever upon the public domain of the United States."

Under the terms of this convention it has been universally held that the state possessed no power to levy or collect a tax against the lands of the United States while the title thereto remained in the federal government, and while a homesteader was attempting to acquire such title under the homestead laws, but whose right thereto was so far incomplete and inchoate that no certificate had been issued to him prior to the attempted imposition of said tax. Irwin v. Wright, 258 U. S. 219, 42 S. Ct. 293, 66 L. Ed. 573. Notwithstanding this state of the law, assessors and tax collectors in the state of California have in past years undertaken to levy and collect a tax upon the possessory right of homesteaders upon public land, purporting to act in so doing under the provisions of section 3617 of the Political Code. The subsequent sections of said Code, however, provide the procedure to be followed by assessors and tax collectors in the matter of the assessment and collection of taxes imposed or attempted to be imposed upon the possessory interest of claimants or occupants or land which is in itself exempt from taxation. Section 3820 of the Political Code provides as follows:

"The assessor must collect the taxes on all property, when, in his opinion, said taxes are not a lien upon real property sufficient to secure the payment of the taxes. The taxes on all assessments of possession of, claim to, or right to the possession of land and the taxes on taxable improvements located upon land exempt from taxation, shall be immediately due and payable upon assessment and shall be collected by the assessor as provided in this chapter."

Section 3821 of said Code further provides:

"In the case provided for in the preceding section, at the time of making the assessment, or at any time before the first Monday of August following the assessment, the assessor may collect the taxes by seizure and sale of any personal property owned by the person against whom the tax is assessed, or if no personal property can be found, then the assessor may collect the taxes by seizure and sale of the right to the possession of, claim to, or right to the possession of land."

Section 3824 provides that when after the collection of said tax the tax rate is fixed, and it is then discovered that a sum in excess of said rate has been collected, the said excess collected and paid to the county treasurer shall be repaid to the person from whom such collection has been made; and section 3825 provides that, if the sum so collected is less than the tax thus so made:

"The deficiency must be collected by the tax collector either by a sale of the property on which the same is a lien, if any, in the same manner as other taxes on real and personal property are collected, or by seizure and sale of any personal property owned by the person against whom the tax is assessed, in the same manner provided in sections 3821 and 3822 for the seizure and sale by the assessor."

It is apparent from a reading of these sections of the Political Code that the only method by which an assessment of the possessory interest of one in possession of land which is exempt from taxation may be made is that provided therein. In other words, the mode as therein provided for the collection of an assessment and tax upon the possessory interest of one in possession of land which is itself exempt from taxation is the measure of the power of the state and its officials in the matter of the levy and collection of such tax, assuming for the sake of the argument that they have power to levy and collect the same.

[2] It is clear from the uncontradicted record herein that the method provided by the foregoing sections of the Political Code was not followed in the instant case, but that, instead of so doing, the assessor and tax collector of Imperial county undertook to treat the assessment and tax above referred to as a charge upon the land itself, and proceeded to declare such tax delinquent and to sell said land therefor to the state in 1919 and to the plaintiff herein in 1924, under the other provisions of the Political Code which relate to the sale of lands for a delinquent tax imposed thereon. They had no such power, and it therefore necessarily follows that the sale of the land and premises herein by this latter method was invalid, and hence that the deed of the plaintiff issued to him pursuant thereto was and is wholly void. Having thus determined, it becomes unnecessary to consider the further reasons urged by the appellant, for the invalidity of the proceedings upon which said deed is predicated from their inception, and we therefore do not determine that question, nor do we deem it necessary to consider the other points made by the appellant upon this appeal.

The judgment is reversed with instructions to the trial court to make and enter its findings and judgment in favor of the defendant and appellant Reuben N. Erickson or his successor in interest, if the fact shall so appear.

Action for damages for personal injuries by Nellie A. Lane against Gerald Bing, J. F. West, and others. Judgment for defendant J. F. West, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. See, also, 262 P. 318.

Underwood, Burke & Cree, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Edward Everett, of Los Angeles, for respondent Bing.

Joe Crider, Jr., of Los Angeles, for respondent West.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, made and entered in favor of the defendant J. F. West after the court had granted the said defendant's motion for a nonsuit at the close of the plaintiff's case, in an action for damages brought by the plaintiff against said defendant West and certain other defendants for the recovery of damages alleged to have been sustained as the result of an automobile collision between two automobiles upon the streets of Long Beach upon the evening of May 3, 1924; one of said automobiles at the time of the collision being driven by the defendant Mrs. Dessie Stapp, a stepdaughter of the defendant West, who was not present at the time of the collision.

The motion for nonsuit was based upon two grounds: First, that the plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to show that the defendant West was the owner of the automobile which his stepdaughter was driving at the time of the collision; second, that the evidence was insufficient to establish any liability on the part of the defendant West for the injuries sustained arising out of said collision by showing that the said automobile was being used by said defendant's stepdaughter within the scope of any agency or employment of his stepdaughter by defendant West, or in the course of his business.

The only evidence which the plaintiff produced at the trial for the purpose of fixing responsibility upon the defendant West was that of said defendant himself, and which was elicited from him in the course of presenting the plaintiff's case through his examination as a witness under the provisions of section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure. For the purposes of this decision, it may be conceded that there was sufficient evidence thus elicited to justify a jury in determining that the automobile involved in the accident and driven by Mrs. Dessie Stapp was the property of the defendant West, although the title thereto seems to have stood in the name of his stepdaughter at the time of the accident complained of. If this be conceded, it follows that the only remaining question in the case is as to whether the plaintiff elicited from defendant West upon his examination sufficient evidence to justify the trial court in permitting the case to go to the jury upon the theory that the defendant's stepdaughter, at the time of the collision, was so far the agent of said defendant, or engaged in doing any business for him, as to render said defendant liable for the injuries caused by said collision.

Upon this branch of the case the undisputed evidence shows that prior to and at the time of the accident the defendant West was engaged in conducting a transfer business under the name and style of West Transfer Company, the office of said business being at his home; that his stepdaughter, Mrs. Dessie Stapp, was employed by him and in the course of said business as his bookkeeper, the hours of her employment being between 7 o'clock in the morning until 4 o'clock in the afternoon; that, in order to increase her efficiency as a bookkeeper, the defendant West had arranged for another and more expert accountant to come to his home occasionally in order to teach and assist his stepdaughter in keeping his books. This service, while paid for by him, was rendered to her after the hours of her employment; the said accountant coming from his home some distance away and arriving by train or bus at a point several blocks from defendant West's residence, the defendant being under no compulsion to provide said accountant with the means of getting to or returning from the place of giving such instruction. Upon the evening in question, the said accountant arrived at the home of defendant West after the hours of duty of his stepdaughter were over and found that the latter was dressed to go to a party and hence that his services upon that evening would not be required. The stepdaughter, however, upon her own initiative and without any direction from West offered to drive said accountant back to the station from which he would go by train or bus to his home, and presently undertook to do so, using the said automobile. She delivered the accountant at his station and was going on to her destination when the collision occurred, as the result of which the plaintiff's injuries arose.

The only other evidence in the case upon which the plaintiff could predicate a claim of liability on the part of the defendant West for her injuries arising out of said collision was the fact that, after the accident, the defendant West had gone with his stepdaughter to the hospital to which the plaintiff had been taken, and had there expressed his sympathy for the plaintiff, and had assured her that the insurance company would reimburse her for the expenses incurred in consequence of her said injuries.

The foregoing was the state of the evidence at the time the plaintiff closed her case and defendants' motion for nonsuit was made and granted. It would seem to be clear that upon this state of the evidence the order of the trial court in granting such motion for nonsuit was properly made, since the undisputed evidence thus elicited showed that the defendant's stepdaughter, in undertaking to drive the said accountant to the train or bus on his way to his home, was performing a volunteered function entirely outside the scope of her employment, and for the consequences of which the defendant West was in nowise responsible. The case of Brown v. Chevrolet Motor Co., of California, 39 Cal. App. 738, 179 P. 697, would seem to be entirely in point as to the similarity of its facts and also as to the comment which this court made upon it in denying a petition for a hearing herein. Construing in its most favorable light the evidence elicited by the plaintiff from the defendant West, it amounts to no more than a showing that the stepdaughter of said defendant, in using the automobile, whether her own or the property of said defendant, to drive said accountant to the train or bus station on her way to her destination at the party or dance which she was to attend, was simply doing a favor to the accountant after her regular hours of employment, and which was in no way so connected therewith as to render the defendant West responsible for anything which might happen in the course of her voluntary engagement. The latest decision of this court touching this subject is that of Kish v. California State Automobile Ass'n, 190 Cal. 246, 212 P. 27, the following language of which aptly covers the present case:

"But to recover against an employer upon the theory of respondent superior, it is necessary for the plaintiff to establish the two distinct facts of (1) the status of master and servant, and (2) that the act was done within the scope of the servant's employment. The latter is as important and vital to plaintiff's cause of action as the former. If the same testimony which proved the relationship of master and servant proved that at the time of the act for which it is claimed the master was liable, the servant was not acting within the scope of and in the course of his employment, the prima facie case made by plaintiff is rebutted by the very proof offered to prove the first fact. It is not necessary, therefore, for the defendant to negate the master's liability, inasmuch as the plaintiff has done so herself. The proof at that stage lacks an essential element to support plaintiff's cause of action, and an order granting a nonsuit is therefore proper."

The order granting said defendant's motion for nonsuit herein was proper, and the judgment based thereon is therefore affirmed.

LANE v. BING et al. (L. A. 8909.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 12, 1927.

Parent and child §13(1)—Parents, as matter of law, held not liable for minor son's operation of automobile; no agency or signing license application being shown.

In action for injuries resulting from automobile collision, parents, as matter of law, held not liable for negligence of minor son who was driving their automobile, in absence of showing of agency or that son was to parents' knowledge an incompetent driver, or that either of them had signed application for issuance of operator's license to son.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action for damages for personal injuries by Nellie A. Lane against Dana G. Bing, Anna H. Bing, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants named appeal. Reversed.

See, also, 262 P. 317.

Edward Everett, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Underwood, Burke & Cree, of Long Beach, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal by the defendants Dana G. Bing and Anna H. Bing from a judgment rendered against them and each of them and also against their minor son, Gerald Bing, in plaintiff's favor, in an action instituted by the latter to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained as the result of a collision between two automobiles, one of which was being driven by said minor son of the appellants herein, neither of whom was present at the time of the collision.

The chief error of which the appellants complain is that committed by the trial court in denying their motion for a nonsuit at the close of the plaintiff's case, which motion was made upon the ground that there was no sufficient evidence in the case tending to show that their said minor son, in the operation and use of said automobile at and immediately prior to the time of said collision, was acting as the agent of them or either of them, or that at the time of the collision he was engaged in doing any act for the consequences of which they were as a matter of law responsible.

The evidence in the case upon which said motion was predicated was briefly as follows: The automobile in question was the community property of the parents of said Gerald Bing, but was registered in the name of the father, Dana G. Bing. Gerald Bing was, at the time of said accident, between 16 and 17 years of age. He had driven the automobile of his parents previously upon occasions, although he had no general permission so to do; his use and operation of the automobile being that of driving his father to and from his office frequently. No license to operate automobiles had ever been issued to him, nor had any application for such right ever been made. On the evening in question, and during the absence of his parents from their home, Gerald Bing undertook to drive his sister and several of her boy and girl friends to a party, and, having done so, to convey another boy friend of himself to a theater which they were to attend. It was while thus engaged that the collision between the automobile of the Bings and an automobile of their codefendant West occurred, as a result of which the plaintiff, who was standing on the sidewalk and in no way connected as a passenger or otherwise with either of the automobiles, received her injuries.

At the close of the plaintiff's case, wherein the foregoing facts had been shown, a motion for nonsuit was made on behalf of said defendants, appellants herein, Dana G. and Anna H. Bing, upon the ground hereinbefore stated, which motion the trial court denied, and thereafter proceeded to give to the jury certain instructions of which the appellants herein also complain. Upon the submission of the cause to the jury, a verdict in the sum of $5,000 damages was rendered against the appellants herein and also against their minor son, Gerald Bing. It is the contention of the appellants that their motion for nonsuit should have been granted. The only brief on file herein is the opening brief of the appellants; the respondent having filed no answer thereto, but on the trial having stipulated that the cause might be submitted upon the appellants' brief on file.

There would seem to be no escape from the conclusion that the trial court was in error in denying the appellants' motion for nonsuit in the light of the decision of this court upon an almost identical state of facts in the recent case of Perry v. Simeone, 197 Cal. 132, 239 P. 1056, and also of the conclusion arrived at by this court in the case of Idemoto v. Scheidecker, 193 Cal. 653, 226 P. 922, in each of which cases the situation of the appellants as to their liability for the act of their minor child is practically identical with the situation of the appellants in the instant case. In the absence of any showing that the appellants herein, or either of them, had signed an application to the state motor vehicle department for the issuance of an operator's license to their minor son, and in the absence of any showing that their minor son was either in fact or to their knowledge a careless or incompetent driver, and in the absence of any evidence that he was engaged in any business or affair on behalf of his parents at the time the plaintiff suffered the injuries complained of, it would seem to be clear that upon the foregoing authorities the appellants herein could not be held responsible for the plaintiff's said injuries, and it follows necessarily that the trial court was in error in its denial of the appellants' motion for a nonsuit at the close of the plaintiff's case. This conclusion renders it unnecessary for us to consider the alleged errors of the trial court in its instructions to the jury.

The judgment is reversed.

HARRIS v. CASSELLS et al. (L. A. 8832.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1927.

Trusts $\S$ 81(4)—Plaintiff, whose deceased son had purchased property in his name with money furnished by plaintiff, could have trust declared (Civ. Code, $\S$ 853).

Where plaintiff's deceased son had purchased property for home for himself and other members of plaintiff's family with plaintiff's money and had taken title in his own name, plaintiff was entitled to have trust declared and her title to property quieted under Civ. Code, $\S$ 853, providing that when transfer of real property is made to one and consideration therefor is paid by another, trust is presumed to result in favor of person by whom payment is made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Action to declare trust in real property and to quiet title by Louisa F. Harris against Ella L. Cassells, individually and as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of William H. Dillard, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. C. Jennings, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Kemp, Partridge & Kemp, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action to have it declared that certain real property, title to which stands in the name of decedent, was held by him in trust for plaintiff and to have her title thereto quieted.

The sole ground of appeal is that the complaint fails to state a cause of action. In addition to other allegations not necessary to be mentioned, the complaint alleges that the decedent was the son of the plaintiff; that in July, 1923, she sold property belonging to her in the state of Kansas and handed over the proceeds to the decedent for the purpose of purchasing a home for himself and other members of her family; that decedent purchased the property in question taking title in his own name; that the son invested no money of his own in the property; and that he held the title thereto in trust for plaintiff. Appropriate prayer for relief followed.

We think the complaint states a cause of action to enforce a trust declared by section 853 of the Civil Code, which provides that when a transfer of real property is made to one and the consideration therefor is paid by another, a trust is presumed to result in favor of the person by whom the payment is made. On the record presented here, we find no merit in the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

TROUT v. SIEGEL et al. (L. A. 8858.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1927.

1. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 5—Mechanics' lien statutes are to be liberally construed (St. 1911, p. 1319, $\S$ 14).

Under St. 1911, p. 1319, $\S$ 14, statutes giving to mechanics and others liens upon real property for work done or materials furnished in the construction of buildings or other structures are to be liberally construed.

2. Mechanics' liens $\S$ 134—Notice of claim of lien definite enough to enable owner to ascertain extent and nature of lienor's claim held sufficient (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187).

Notice of claim of mechanic's lien, expressly stating contract price, amount paid thereon, and amount due, and that contract was for erection of building on a lot described in notice, sufficiently complied with Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187, since it enabled owner and all persons claiming under him to ascertain extent and nature of lienor's claim.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; F. O. Drumm, Judge.

Action by George E. Trout against Joe Siegel and others and the State Mutual Building & Loan Association to foreclose a mechanic's lien. From a judgment in favor of the association against the plaintiff, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Leonard Evans, of Anaheim, for appellant.
Ames & McFadden, of Anaheim, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. Action brought to foreclose a mechanic's lien. The plaintiff and defendant Joe Siegel entered into a contract whereby plaintiff was to construct a frame dwelling house and garage upon a certain lot owned by defendant Siegel, situated in the city of Orange, and for which said defendant agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $2,850, $1,000 of which sum was paid. Work under this contract was commenced on May 16, 1923, and the contract was completed about July 28, 1923, and on August 6, 1923, plaintiff filed for record his claim of lien against said real property. In the meantime, however, the defendant Siegel had borrowed of the defendant the State Mutual Building & Loan Association the sum of $2,800, evidenced by a promissory note in said amount, which note was secured by a trust deed to said real property, executed by defendant Siegel and wife in favor of the Title Insurance & Trust Company of Los Angeles, as trustee. This trust deed was delivered and recorded five days after plaintiff commenced work under his contract to construct said house. The interest on said promissory note not having been paid when due, the trustee advertised and sold said real property according to the terms of said trust deed to satisfy the indebtedness evidenced by said promissory note, and at said sale the defendant the State Mutual Building & Loan Association became the purchaser of said real property and thereby became the owner of the legal title to the same. At the trial of said action, the court sustained an objection to the introduction of said claim of lien upon the ground that by its terms it failed to meet the requirements of section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that claims of lien shall contain, among other things, "a general statement of the kind of work done or materials furnished by him, or both." Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant State Mutual Building & Loan Association and against plaintiff. From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed, and the sole point involved in this appeal is the sufficiency of the statement in said claim of lien "of the kind of work done or materials furnished" by plaintiff under his said contract. Plaintiff's claim of lien was as follows:

"Notice of Contractor's Claim of Lien.

"Notice is hereby given that on or about the 16th day of May, 1923, George E. Trout entered into a contract with Joe Siegel, for the construction and erection of a certain building on the premises, situated in the city of Anaheim, county of Orange, state of California, described as follows, to wit: Lot 3 of the Scenic tract according to a map thereof recorded in the office of the county recorder of Orange county, Cal.

"That the name of the owner or reputed owner of said premises is Joe Siegel, and the name of the contractor who engaged with the said Joe Siegel to erect said building is George E. Trout, the undersigned.

"That no notice of completion of said building has been filed as required by law.

"That the said contractor agreed to erect the building above indicated, and to furnish the materials to be used in the building and construction thereof, excepting the paint and painting, upon the terms, at the times given, and upon the conditions as follows, to wit: Full contract price to be paid to the said contractor when the building was completed and all bills against the same shown to have been paid by the undersigned, which building was to have been completed 45 days from and after the commencement of work, but after the date of said contract the same was amended so as to provide for greater dimensions and to include the building of a garage on said premises by the undersigned.

"That said contract has been fully performed on the part of said George E. Trout that all of said materials furnished were actually used in the construction of said building that said building was finished on the 28th day of July, 1923.

"That the amount of contract price for said building furnished as aforesaid is $3,050 in current lawful money of the United States, specified in the contract, but, after the execution of said contract, it was understood and agreed between the said owner and said contractor that the same should be reduced $200, and the said contractor released from the obligation of painting said building, which undertaking the said owner took upon himself on account of said reduction in contract price, that the sum of $1,000 has been paid on account of said contract price, and that the sum of $1,850 is still due and owing thereon to said contractor, George E. Trout, after deducting all just credits and offsets.

"Wherefore the said George E. Trout claims a lien upon the above described premises for the amount of said contract price still unpaid.
"Geo. E. Trout."

It will be observed that this notice of lien states that the contract is "for the construction and erection of a certain building on the premises," describing them, that the contractor (plaintiff) agreed to erect said building and "to furnish the materials to be used in the building and construction thereof, excepting the paint and painting," and that said contract has been fully performed, and "all of said materials furnished were actually used in the construction of said building that said building was finished on the 28th day of July, 1923."

[1, 2] The statutes of this state giving to mechanics and others liens upon real property for work done or materials furnished in the construction of buildings or other structures are to be liberally construed. Section 14, c. 681. Stats. 1911, p. 1319; Continental

Building & Loan Ass'n v. Hutton, 144 Cal. 609, 78 P. 21; Corbett v. Chambers, 109 Cal. 184, 41 P. 875. The court, in Corbett v. Chambers, supra, states the rule as follows:

"The statute is a remedial statute, adopted in obedience to the requirements of the Constitution, * * * and is to be liberally construed in furtherance of the purposes for which it was authorized. The persons for whose benefit the statute is enacted are not presumed to be versed in the niceties of pleading, and the notices, which under its provisions they are authorized to give, have regard to substance rather than form."

In the case of Wagner v. Hansen, 103 Cal. 104, 107, 37 P. 195, this court said, speaking of a notice of claim of lien:

"The purpose of the record and statement must be to inform the owner, in case of a contractor and laborers rendering service under such contract, as to the extent and nature of a lienor's claim, to facilitate investigation as to its merits."

Was the notice of claim of lien as recorded by plaintiff sufficient to satisfy the purpose of the statute as defined by this court in the decision just quoted? There is no question that the owner and all persons claiming under him could ascertain from this notice the extent and nature of plaintiff's claim. The notice expressly states the contract price, the amount paid thereon, and the amount due. It further states that the contract was for the erection of a building upon the lot described therein. In this connection we might refer to the findings of the court in this action that the contract was for the construction of "a certain building, to wit, a dwelling house including an outbuilding for a garage," that "plaintiff has fully performed each and every of the terms of said contract," and that all of said lands above described are necessary for the convenient use and occupation of said building. From these findings we may conclude that the building, including the garage, was the only structure upon said lot. This being the case, the owner would have no difficulty, from the description of the building in the notice of lien and from an inspection of the premises upon which it was constructed, in investigating the merits of lienholder's claim. In this particular case he would have been in no better position had the notice of lien set out a minute description of the kind and character of the building, with full detail as to the materials used and the labor performed in its erection. There may be cases where a description more complete and comprehensive than that contained in the notice of lien in the present action may be required in order to properly protect the rights of the owner and those claiming under him. But, under the facts as found by the court in the action before us, we are satisfied that no possible injury could result or did result to the owner or the respondent herein by the general statement of the work done and materials furnished, contained in appellant's notice of lien.

The court erred to the serious prejudice of appellant in sustaining respondent's objection to the introduction of said claim of lien.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

GRIDLEY v. TILSON. (L. A. 8856.) *

Rehearing Denied Jan. 19, 1928.

1. Evidence ⇨434(11)—Maker of notes for stock could not rely on agent's statement, contrary to written notice of limitation of agent's authority (Civ. Code, § 1625).

Under Civ. Code, § 1625, maker of notes given for stock may not defend against collection of notes on ground of false representations of agent selling stock contrary to limitations on his authority in written contract of sale, regardless of claim that defendant did not have glasses with him and could not read subscription contract, without showing agent's fraud prevented reading contract or otherwise tricked him into signing notes.

2. Evidence ⇨434(8)—Fraud in Inducement of written contract may be shown by parol testimony, regardless of statute (Civ. Code, § 1625).

Although Civ. Code, § 1625, provides that written contract supersedes all negotiations and stipulations concerning matter between parties, fraud in inducement of contract may be shown by parol testimony.

3. Evidence ⇨434(8)—Principal is bound only by representations in written contract, provisions of which notify prospective purchaser that agent's authority goes no further (Civ. Code, § 1625).

Although fraud in inducement of contract may be shown by parol testimony, regardless of Civ. Code, § 1625, principal is bound only by representations embodied in written contract, whose provisions notify prospective purchaser that agent's authority goes no further.

4. Licenses ⇨39—Evidence held not to support finding that copy of permit to sell stock, printed on back of agreement, was not exhibited and delivered to purchaser.

In action on notes given for stock, evidence that copy of permit to sell corporation's stock was printed on back of subscription contract held to render finding erroneous that true copy of permit was not exhibited and delivered to purchaser of stock.

5. Licenses ⇨39—Recovery may not be had on notes given for stock, sold under permit to sell it for cash.

Where permit by state corporation commissioner to sell stock was to sell it for cash, recovery cannot be had by corporation's trustee in bankruptcy against maker on notes given therefor.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; William H. Ellis, Judge.

Action by the Manker Shoe Company against W. N. Tilson on notes. On the adjudication of bankruptcy of plaintiff, E. C. Gridley, trustee in bankruptcy, was substituted as plaintiff. From a judgment for defendant, the substituted plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

N. C. Peters, of San Bernardino, and Miguel Estudillo, of Riverside, for appellant.

Walter S. Clayson, of Corona, and H. K. Lockwood, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, for respondent.

SHENK, J. [1] This is an appeal from a judgment for defendant in an action brought by the Manker Shoe Company, plaintiff's bankrupt, on three promissory notes of the defendant, dated September 19, 1922; the principal sums aggregating $5,000. Defendant's answer admitted the execution and delivery of the notes, but, as affirmative defenses, alleged that the notes were given for 5,000 shares of the Manker Shoe Company in reliance on certain false and fraudulent statements and representations made by agents of the Manker Shoe Company, and alleged that the contract for the sale of said stock was void, in that it was executed contrary to the provisions of the permit issued by the commissioner of corporations. He prayed that the plaintiff take nothing. In a cross-complaint defendant also alleged "that plaintiff * * * agreed to cancel said notes and return them to defendant, but has failed and neglected to do so." He also alleged that, "at the time said statements and representations were made, and at all times since said date, the stock of the Manker Shoe Company has been worthless, and without any value whatever; that no stock in said company was ever issued to defendant; that defendant has never received any consideration whatever for said promissory notes." While the action was pending, Manker Shoe Company was adjudicated a bankrupt, and E. C. Gridley, trustee in bankruptcy, was substituted as party plaintiff. At the trial testimony as to the false statements and representations made to defendant by agents of the Manker Shoe Company was admitted over the objection of plaintiff. Plaintiff offered, and there was admitted in evidence, the contract signed by the defendant, dated September 19, 1922, wherein he subscribed for 5,000 shares of the stock of Manker Shoe Company at $1 each. This subscription contract among other things, provided:

"It is understood and agreed by me that this agreement contains the entire contract between myself and the Manker Shoe Company, Inc. I have read the copy of the permit which is printed on the back of this application. It is understood that no representative has any power to change, modify, or make any other terms or representations whatsoever than those herein stated, and that the representative is acting as special agent, and all representations not herein set out are by me deemed waived. It is hereby specially agreed that no stock is to be issued until the full amount of this subscription and notes given therefor are paid in full in cash."

There was printed on the back of the subscription contract a copy of the permit issued by the state corporation commissioner, pursuant to which the stock of the Manker Shoe Company was to be sold for cash at $1 per share. The permit included the following condition:

"(b) That a true copy of this permit be exhibited and delivered to each prospective subscriber for, or purchaser of, said securities before his subscription therefor shall be taken or any sale thereof made to him."

The permit also provided that the company was authorized to sell and issue its shares at par for cash. One of the alleged and proved false representations was that the Manker Shoe Company had obtained a permit to sell the stock at $1.50 a share, and that the stock subsequently would be sold for that price. Defendant testified that a few weeks after he signed the contract and gave the notes he went to Mr. Manker, president of the Manker Shoe Company, and told him the circumstances, and repeated the statement which the agent had made that the company had been granted a permit to sell the stock for $1.50 a share; that Mr. Manker stated that there was not a word of truth in it, and the agent had no right to make such a statement, and that he would see that Mr. Tilson's notes were returned to him. Mr. Manker then wrote and delivered to defendant the following on the letterhead of the Manker Shoe Company:

"In view of the fact that the notes aggregating five thousand dollars which you gave to Overgaard et al. in favor of the Manker Shoe Company were obtained by evident misrepresentation and in view of the fact that you came to us before any commission was paid and before the notes were returned to us by the salesman and told us of such misrepresentation, I shall see that these notes are returned to you as soon as I can get the salesmen to relinquish their right in the notes and the State Corporation Commission to O. K. same. Trusting this will be satisfactory I am, Very truly yours, Manker Shoe Company, Inc., C. Manker, Pres."

The trial court found all of the issues in favor of defendant, and rendered judgment accordingly:

[2, 3] It is contended by the plaintiff that the quoted provision of the subscription contract limited the authority of the agents to make only the representations set out in the contract; that the defendant had notice of the limitation; and that evidence of any other representations made by the agents should not have been received. This contention must be sustained. While the Civil Code, § 1625, provides that a written contract supersedes all negotiations and stipulations concerning the matter between the parties, it has always been the law that fraud in the inducement of a contract may be shown. A well-settled exception, however, is the case where the party seeking to rely on fraudulent representations of an agent had notice of the limitation on the agent's authority to make representations. Therefore a principal is bound only by the representations embodied in the written contract, where a provision in the contract notified the prospective purchaser that the agent's authority went no further. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Fresno Flume & Irrigation Co., 161 Cal. 466, 119 P. 646, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 322; Pease v. Fitzgerald, 31 Cal. App. 727, 161 P. 506; Tockstein v. Pacific Kiesel Kar Branch, 33 Cal. App. 262, 164 P. 906; Munn v. Earl C. Anthony, Inc., 36 Cal. App. 312, 171 P. 1082; Schuster v. North American Hotel Co., 106 Neb. 672, 184 N. W. 136, 186 N. W. 87; Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Building Ass'n, 183 U. S. 308, 22 S. Ct. 133, 46 L. Ed. 213. In the case of Pease v. Fitzgerald, supra, the rule was applied under circumstances almost identical with the circumstances in the present case. Defendant, however, attempts to escape the effect of the settled rule of these cases by testifying that he did not have his glasses with him at the time he signed the subscription contract and gave the notes, and therefore he did not read the contract nor the provision referred to. But this cannot afford him an excuse, in the absence of a showing that he was prevented by the agent from reading the limiting clause, or was otherwise tricked into signing the document without reading it. He made no request to have the contract read to him. In addition, it was in evidence that he had previously signed similar contracts with the same company in subscribing for 3,000 shares of its stock.

[4] The plaintiff contends that the finding of the court that a true copy of the permit was not exhibited and delivered to defendant is without support in the evidence. There was no issue in the pleadings on this point, and, as a copy of the permit was printed on the back of the subscription contract, the finding of the court appears to be unsupported.

[5] The respondent contends that the agreement for the purchase and sale of the stock was contrary to the authority granted by the permit of the commissioner of corporations and was therefore void under the statute. The provision of the permit relied upon is that which authorized the Manker Shoe Company to sell and issue the stock "at par, for cash, lawful money of the United States." It is accordingly insisted that, as promissory notes were issued to represent the purchase price of the stock, this condition of the permit was violated. The defendant relies on the case of Domenigoni v. Imperial Live Stock & Mortgage Co., 189 Cal. 467, 209 P. 36. We find no reasonable ground for distinguishing that case in principle from the case at bar. An inspection of the record in that case discloses that the defendant company was authorized by the permit of the commissioner of corporations "to sell and issue" its capital stock "upon subscription agreements providing for payment of 25 per cent. of the subscription price in cash and the execution of promissory notes bearing interest at 6 per cent. by the subscriber for the balance." The defendant company sold to the plaintiff 2,000 shares of its stock, and took therefor three promissory notes aggregating 75 per cent. of the purchase price, and a fourth promissory note for the remaining 25 per cent. The plaintiff in that action sued to compel the surrender and cancellation of said notes on the ground that the sale was contrary to the permit, and therefore void as in violation of the law of the state. This court declared the transaction void, and, although the relief sought by plaintiff was denied for the reason that the parties to the contract appeared to be in pari delicto, the effect of the litigation was to render the promissory notes worthless in the hands of the defendant company. The plaintiff herein contends that that case is not in point, for the reason, so it is claimed, "that the permit in that case was nothing like the one in the case at bar." It is also insisted that the permit here involved does not prevent what is termed an executory contract of sale. It is pointed out that the subscription agreement in the present case provides that:

"It is hereby specially agreed that no stock is to be issued until the full amount of this subscription and notes given therefor are paid in full in cash."

But we find in the Domenigoni Case an almost identical provision in the subscription contract, as follows:

"It is hereby expressly agreed that no stock is to be issued until the amount of this subscription and note given therefor are paid in full, in cash."

We think the facts in the present case are stronger in favor of the defendant herein than were the facts in favor of the plaintiff in the Domenigoni Case. In that case a subscription agreement was specifically authorized upon condition that 25 per cent. of the purchase price be paid in cash. Promissory notes for the balance were also authorized. The promissory notes representing 75 per cent. were therefore taken in direct conformity with the conditions of the permit. It was the promissory note for the remaining 25 per cent. that voided the transaction. In the present case no subscription agreements were authorized, and no promissory notes were authorized. On the contrary, the whole purchase price was required to be paid in cash. Notwithstanding this requirement of the permit, the whole purchase price was represented by promissory notes. If a promissory note for 25 per cent. was sufficient to avoid the transaction in that case, it would follow beyond question that promissory notes for the whole purchase price, when none was permitted, would likewise void this transaction. Furthermore, the contract in that case, in its executory features as to the 25 per cent., was the same in effect as the contract in the present case. The finding and conclusion of the trial court that the transaction here involved was void as in violation of the permit and the declared policy of the state was therefore well supported.

Our conclusion on the point just discussed renders it unnecessary to consider the alleged lack of authority of Mr. Manker in his endeavor to bring about a mutual rescission of the contract. Nor is it necessary to discuss other points made.

The judgment is affirmed.

HOMAN v. BOARD OF DENTAL EXAMINERS OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 12483.)★

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 12, 1928.

1. Certiorari ⇐4—Certiorari cannot be used to correct errors or defects in pleading not affecting jurisdiction of inferior tribunals (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1068, 1074).

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1068, 1074, providing that writ of certiorari may be had where there is no appeal, or no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, and that its function cannot be further extended, certiorari cannot be used to correct errors, or as demurrer against pleading on ground of uncertainty or defects not affecting question of jurisdiction.

2. Certiorari ⇐64(2)—On certiorari, in determining sufficiency of complaint to give jurisdiction, greatest liberality in construction will be indulged.

On certiorari, in determining whether complaint was sufficient to have given the lower tribunal jurisdiction, the greatest liberality of construction must be indulged, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1068, 1074.

3. Certiorari ⇐64(2)—On certiorari, complaint stating facts giving inferior tribunal jurisdiction will be held sufficient, notwithstanding other irrelevant or immaterial facts are stated, or law violated is inaccurately cited.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1068, 1074, on certiorari, a complaint stating facts which gave the inferior tribunal jurisdiction will be held sufficient, notwithstanding the law violated by the alleged acts is inaccurately stated, or other facts are stated which are immaterial, and an allegation that the acts violate an inapplicable law will be disregarded.

4. Physicians and surgeons § 11(3)—Evidence held to sustain finding that dentist aided and abetted unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully (Dental Law).

On appeal from judgment denying certiorari to review an order of the board of dental examiners revoking petitioner's dental license, evidence held to sustain finding that petitioner aided and abetted unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully, contrary to provisions of Dental Law (St. 1915, p. 698).

5. Physicians and surgeons § 11(3)—Accusation charging dentist with unprofessional conduct, in that he bartered for license to protect illegal practitioner, held sufficient, in absence of demurrer, to give board of dental examiners jurisdiction (Dental Law, § 12, and § 13, subd. 3).

Accusation charging petitioner with unprofessional conduct as defined in section 12 of the Dental Law (St. 1915, p. 698), and specifying as the basis of such charge that he bartered for the license of another dentist to protect an illegal practitioner in his office, held sufficient, in absence of demurrer, to give board of dental examiners jurisdiction, even if facts alleged constituted violation of section 13, subd. 3, and not of section 12.

6. Physicians and surgeons § 11(3)—Board of dental examiners will take judicial notice of records to ascertain whether person employed had license.

Board of dental examiners will take judicial notice of its records, to ascertain whether a person alleged to have been wrongfully employed had a license.

Certiorari by W. W. Homan to review an order of the Board of Dental Examiners of California and others. On hearing in Supreme Court, after judgment in District Court of Appeals. 254 P. 907. Trial court's judgment, denying certiorari, affirmed.

Rehearing denied; LANGDON, J., dissenting.

Paul F. Fratessa and Stanislaus A. Riley, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Frank J. Burke, of Petaluma, and Jesse W. Carter, of Redding, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. The license of petitioner, Dr. W. W. Homan, a duly licensed dentist under the laws of this state and engaged in the practice of dentistry in the city and county of San Francisco during the year 1924, was on December 4, 1925, by an order made by the board of dental examiners of this state, revoked. The revocation was placed upon the ground that petitioner was "guilty of the acts charged in the accusation." The accusation was sworn to by W. B. Luckenback, and charged the petitioner with "unprofessional conduct," as the same is defined in section 12 of the act, regulating the practice

"That on or about the 26th day of September, 1924, said W. W. Homan did in writing barter for the license of one Frank J. Ryan, of Chicago, Illinois, said license to be used by Homan for the purpose of protecting an illegal practitioner in his office, or, in other words, to be used as evidence of the holder's qualification to practice dentistry; that by said acts and conduct of W. W. Homan, as herein set out, said W. W. Homan did barter for the license of F. J. Ryan, a legal practitioner; that all the acts as above set out are contrary to the provisions of said Dental Law."

Upon the foregoing accusations the accused was cited to appear before the board of dental examiners and answer said accusations. The citation referred to the accusations as "charging the said W. W. Homan with unprofessional conduct as the same is specified in section 12, subdivision —, thereof, of the Dental Law of said state, which said accusation sets forth the facts supporting said charge; and whereas, said verified accusation has been presented to this board for its consideration, which this board deems sufficient, * * * the said W. W. Homan is required to appear and answer the said accusation," etc. The petitioner appeared at the time appointed by the board of dental examiners, was informed of his right to counsel, and replied that he did not desire the aid of counsel, whereupon witnesses were sworn and testified, and documentary evidence was received in the proceeding, and the board, upon a consideration of the evidence, found the accused "guilty of the acts charged in the accusation," whereupon it made the order revoking the license of petitioner to practice dentistry in this state.

A writ of review was granted by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco upon the application of petitioner, and upon a hearing said court gave judgment affirming the proceedings below. Upon an appeal taken from said judgment to the District Court of Appeal, the judgment of the trial court was reversed, with a direction to said trial court to enter a judgment granting the writ as prayed for.

[1] Objection is taken to the sufficiency of the accusation. It is well settled that the function of the writ of review is to determine whether an inferior tribunal, board, or officer exercising judicial functions has exceeded the jurisdiction of said tribunal, board, or officer where there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy (Code Civ. Proc. § 1068), and its function cannot be further extended (Code Civ. Proc. § 1074). Its function is not to correct errors, nor is its office that of a demurrer, to be employed against a pleading by reason of uncertainty or mere defects not affecting the question of jurisdiction. 4 Cal. Jur. 1022 et seq.

charge alleged in a complaint, the greatest liberality of construction must be indulged; if the complaint states facts which constitute a crime, it will not be held insufficient because other facts are stated which are irrelevant or immaterial, or because the law violated by the alleged acts is inaccurately stated. An allegation in a complaint that the acts in question are a violation of another and different law may be disregarded as immaterial, for it does not alter the nature of the acts charged, nor prevent them from constituting a violation of the law. In re Culver, 187 Cal. 437, 202 P. 661.

[4] The admissions of petitioner at the hearing and his letters to Dr. F. J. Ryan in negotiating for the use of the latter's license disclose as forcibly as words can express meaning the illegal intent to commit the acts charged against petitioner. The letters and the testimony of the defendant cannot be otherwise construed than as an admission of the acts charged in the accusation. Dr. F. J. Ryan was a friend of petitioner, who had come to San Francisco from Chicago to engage in the practice of dentistry. After pursuing his profession in San Francisco for a time, he returned to Chicago, where he resumed the practice of dentistry, with no intent of ever returning to San Francisco. Dr. Homan thereafter by correspondence solicited Dr. Ryan to lease to him his California dental license for the express purpose of being used by Dr. Homan in this state. He contracted to pay Dr. F. J. Ryan $25 per month for the use of said license. Upon the receipt of Dr. Ryan's license he kept the same in his office and paid the agreed monthly sum of $25. He had in his employ a person whose surname was claimed to be Rhyner. He said that he did not know Rhyner's Christian name, nor his initials, but that he was an assistant laboratory man, and he believed that he was formerly a bartender.

At the time the inspector visited Dr. Homan's office upon an investigation as to whether he had any one in his employ practicing dentistry without a license, he found Rhyner alone in the office attired in the garb of a dentist. He inquired for Dr. Homan, and was told that he was not in. He asked Rhyner if he was the dentist in charge, and was informed that he was. He inquired his name, and was told that it was F. J. Ryan. Dr. Homan early in the transaction insisted that he had no one in his employ. The inspector had reason to believe that Dr. Homan had the license of Dr. F. J. Ryan in his office, and he demanded the same. Dr. Homan for a time denied possession of Dr. F. J. Ryan's license. The inspector procured a search warrant and instituted search of his office for the license, but was unable to find it. A police officer was shortly brought into the case. Homan told the officer that he would not find the license in his office.

Later the license was delivered to the police station. Dr. Homan had it all the while concealed in his safe and finally produced it. The letters of Dr. Homan to Dr. Ryan and of Dr. Ryan to Dr. Homan are highly incriminatory. No other rational inference can be drawn from them and the circumstances of the case than that Dr. Homan planned to use the license as a shield to ineligible persons whom he intended to, and no doubt did, employ to practice dentistry.

It is a convincing case upon the facts of unlawful bartering for a license, to the end that a person not entitled to practice dentistry might impersonate a duly licensed dentist. Clearly the evidence in the case sustains the finding that Dr. Homan aided and abetted an unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully. He had an unlicensed person in his office, who had the manner and appearance of the dentist in charge, which he represented himself to be. He gave the name of the dentist whose license Dr. Homan had obtained to protect himself and said person, or any other persons he might employ to engage in an unlawful employment. In short, by his acts he not only aided and abetted one unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully, but he had put himself in a position to evade the provisions of the law absolutely. No other construction can be placed upon the conduct of appellant, under the circumstances of the instant case, than that he obtained and used said license for the purpose of aiding and abetting an unlicensed person in the practice of dentistry. It would serve no purpose to reproduce Dr. Homan's letters. The inferences to be drawn therefrom are irresistible.

[5] The accusation, which was not demurred to, undoubtedly states facts which gave the board jurisdiction. It does not matter whether the acts set out were alleged to come within section 12 or section 13 of said act. The question is: Did the facts alleged come within any section of the act? If they did, the numerical order is immaterial. Section 12 of the act regulating the practice of dentistry in this state (Stats. 1915, p. 693) provides that it is a misdemeanor for any person to purchase or procure by barter any diploma, certificate, or transcript with intent that the same shall be used as evidence of the holder's qualification to practice dentistry, or in fraud of the laws regulating the practice of dentistry. Section 13, subdivision 1, provides for the revocation of the license of any dentist upon his conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, in which case the record of conviction, or a certified copy thereof, shall be conclusive evidence of the fact; subdivision 3 thereof defines several acts which are declared to constitute unprofessional conduct, viz. aiding or abetting an unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully, the use of any false, assumed or fictitious name, or any name other than the name under which he is licensed.

[6] The point that it was not shown that Rhyner was not a licensed dentist is answered by Anderson v. Board of Dental Examiners, 27 Cal. App. 336, 149 P. 1006, wherein it is held that the board will take judicial notice of its records, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not a dental license was ever issued to the person alleged to have been wrongfully employed. That Rhyner was employed and was in the occupancy of the office is an admitted fact. That he was not again seen or found, and no effort was made by Homan to produce Rhyner at the investigation, has its significance. The legal inferences drawn by the board of dental examiners from the evidence support the findings.

The judgment of the trial court affirming the order of said board of dental examiners is affirmed.

YOUNG v. VALLEJO ELECTRIC LIGHT & POWER CO. (Sac. 3809.)★

Rehearing Denied Jan. 12, 1928.

1. Electricity ☞ 19(5)—In action for destruction of house by fire caused by electric wires, evidence held to sustain finding of defendant's negligence and plaintiff's lack of contributory negligence.

In action against electric light company for destruction of house by fire caused by current carried through wires on roof of house, evidence held to sustain finding that defendant was negligent in transmitting electricity through wires after actual notice that they were resting on roof of house, and that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence in erecting house in such manner that it came in contact with wires.

2. Appeal and error ☞ 1064(1)—Errors in instruction as to contributory negligence were without prejudice on total failure of proof of contributory negligence.

Where, in action for destruction of house by fire caused by electric wires, there was total failure on part of defendant to show existence of contributory negligence of plaintiff, whatever alleged errors trial court may have made in instructions to jury in regard to contributory negligence were errors without prejudice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County: W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action by Carrie S. Young, widow of William S. S. Young, deceased, substituted for Carrie S. Young, as executrix of the last will and testament of William S. S. Young, against the Vallejo Electric Light & Power Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal (259 P. 973).

Rehearing denied; LANGDON, J., dissenting.

Frank E. Powers, of San Francisco, and Joseph M. Raines, of Fairfield, for appellant.

Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, and Francis C. McInnis, of Fairfield, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment of the superior court in and for the county of Solano, based upon the verdict of the jury in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $2,000 and costs, in an action brought by the plaintiff to recover damages from the defendant resulting from the destruction of a dwelling house of the plaintiff through a fire which was alleged to have been caused by contact with the electrically charged wires of the defendant which it was alleged to have negligently maintained in such a position as to permit them to rest upon the roof of the plaintiff's said dwelling, after being notified to remove the same therefrom. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff's predecessor, William S. S. Young, had, on or about the 30th day of April, 1919, entered into a written agreement for the purchase of a certain vacant lot in a tract known as "Vallejo Heights," located near the city of Vallejo, from William D. Pennycook and his wife, the then owners thereof, whereby they had given to said Young the right to take and hold possession of said property, and to occupy and improve the same. At the time of making said agreement, and for some time prior thereto, there was extended and maintained over and across said lot from a service pole of the defendant located on one of the streets of said tract two live electric wires for the purpose of supplying a house which adjoined said vacant lot with electricity. The complaint further alleged that the defendant had so constructed and extended said wires across said vacant lot while the same was owned by said Pennycook without his consent or knowledge, and had thereafter maintained the same across said premises without the permission or consent of the owner thereof. The complaint further alleged that, immediately after entering into the said contract for the purchase and sale of said lot, Young entered upon the same, and commenced the construction thereon of a one-story wooden dwelling house at such a position upon the lot that it was located immediately beneath the said electric wires, and that said Young continued the construction of said dwelling house to completion, so that, when the same was erected, said live electric wires rested upon its roof; that, during the course of the construction of said house, Young notified the appellant to remove said wires, but that it failed and neglected so to do, but continued to carelessly and negligently maintain said wires upon and across said lot and in immediate contact with the roof of the said dwelling which Young had thus erected. Shortly after the completion of said building Young apparently undertook to diminish the danger resulting from the contact of said live wires with the roof of his dwelling by inclosing the same, at their place of contact, with a piece of rubber hose about three feet long and three and a quarter inches in circumference, but, notwithstanding this action on his part, the roof of said house took fire at or about the place where said wires crossed and came in contact with the roof of said house, with the result that the house with its contents were entirely destroyed by said fire, to the damage of said Young in the amount for which said suit was brought. The answer of the defendant denied all the material allegations of the complaint with reference to these imputed negligences, and alleged contributory negligence on the part of the owner of said dwelling in erecting the same, so that its roof came in contact with the defendant's wires, and also in attempting to inclose said wires within said piece of rubber hose, which directly and proximately caused or contributed to the destruction of said house by said fire. The issues in the case were submitted to a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the aforesaid sum. From the judgment rendered thereon the defendant has prosecuted this appeal.

[1] The evidence in the case was contradicted in so far as it related to the location of said wires, and that they had been so placed and maintained without the consent of the owner of the premises, and, since there was no evidence introduced which showed that the defendant was maintaining its wires and electric service across said lot under any acquired right so to do from the previous owner thereof, it must be assumed in support of the verdict that the jury found the defendant to have been a trespasser on said property in so doing, and that, being such trespasser, it had no right to maintain said wires in their then position to the exclusion of any building which the owner of the lot might see fit to erect thereon, and that it therefore became the duty of the defendant, upon notice of the proposed and proceeding construction of the building in question, to so remove its wires or change the location thereof as not to interfere with or endanger said building. The evidence sufficiently showed that, while said building was in course of construction, the builder thereof, Young, had notified the defendant's officials to so remove the wires that they would not come in contact with said building. It was the defendant itself which offered such evidence, for the purpose of showing that said Young had notice and knowledge of the position of the wires and of the resultant danger therefrom before he had so far completed the building as to bring the same in contact with the defendant's wires. But it does not follow from this fact that said Young was chargeable with negligence in constructing his dwelling so that the same would come into dangerous proximity to said wires, for the reason that he would be entitled to rely upon the defendant's seasonable compliance with his request for the removal of the wires before the same became a menace to his building. The evidence in the case further shows it to be a fact that said Young, after he realized the danger from the wires, undertook to minimize the same by the placing of a piece of rubber hose around the same at the point where they came in contact with the roof of his dwelling. The defendant alleged that his act in so doing was negligence, but the record contains no evidence in support of such allegation, but, on the contrary, shows that the placing of said rubber hose around the wires in the manner in which it was placed would lessen the danger from fire.

Upon the question as to whether the defendant was a trespasser upon the premises, the verdict of the jury must be assumed to have upheld the plaintiff's averment in that regard. The evidence in the case would thus seem to have been sufficient to sustain the allegations of the complaint to the effect that the defendant was grossly negligent in transmitting electricity through its said wires upon and across said premises during the time when it had actual notice that said wires were resting upon the roof of said house, and that neither Young nor the plaintiff, his successor in interest, was guilty of contributory negligence in the erection of said dwelling in such a manner that the same came in contact with the defendant's wires, and which it was the plain duty of the defendant to remove, and over the removal of which it had at all times full control.

[2] The question of contributory negligence of said Young or of the plaintiff was removed from the consideration of the jury by the total failure on the part of the defendant to show the existence of such negligence, and, this being so, whatever alleged errors the trial court may have made in its instructions to the jury in that regard were rendered harmless, and could not, therefore, be made the basis of a reversal of this cause upon appeal. The only rational conclusion to be drawn from the evidence was that of the defendant's negligence in the maintenance of its wires upon and across the plaintiff's dwelling, and which, as the jury probably found, was the sole proximate cause of the fire. It is, however, earnestly contended by the appellant that in several of its instructions upon the subject of contributory negligence the court stated that contributory negligence was a defense only "as against any ordinary negligence of the defendant." This the appellant insists was error, under the authority of Tucker v. United Railroads, 171 Cal. 702, 704, 154 P. 835; and it may be conceded that the appellant's contention in that regard is correct in the light of said case; but since, as we have seen, there was no showing of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, or her predecessor, the error was without prejudice. We find no error in the other instructions of which the appellant complains.

We are of the opinion that the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint was properly overruled, and also that the court properly denied defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

The judgment is affirmed.

WYMAN et al. v. SECURITY INS. CO. OF CALIFORNIA. (L. A. 8882.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1927.

1. Insurance ☞282(13)—Verbal agreement to sell truck, reserving title but delivering possession, held not to preclude recovery under fire policy containing unconditional ownership clause.

Truck owner is not precluded from recovering, under fire insurance policy containing an unconditional ownership clause, merely by reason of verbal agreement entered into by him prior to issuance of policy to sell truck to another, reserving title in himself, but delivering possession of truck.

2. Insurance ☞280—Replacing original motor block with another having different motor number held not to preclude recovery under fire policy.

That original motor block of insured truck was removed and another bearing a different motor number substituted, while original was being repaired, did not preclude recovery on destruction of truck by fire, since motor number given in policy is merely for purpose of identifying truck, and any warranty that might be implied therefrom was not a material warranty, a breach of which would void policy.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by O. J. Wyman and another against the Security Insurance Company of California. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, with directions to enter judgment in favor of plaintiffs.

H. J. Bischoff, of San Diego, for appellants.

W. I. Gilbert and Heskett & Weinberger, of San Diego, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. Action by plaintiffs to recover for loss by fire of an automobile truck under a policy of insurance issued by the defendant. The court found that the plaintiff Union National Bank of San Diego was the owner of a chattel mortgage on said truck, given to secure the payment of a promissory note for $1,500 and interest, executed by the plaintiff O. J. Wyman. It further found that the defendant on April 8, 1924, had issued its policy of insurance, insuring said truck against loss by fire for the period of one year from said date in consideration of the payment by plaintiff Wyman to defendant of the regular premium of $124.24; that said truck had been destroyed by fire on April 23, 1924; and that its value was $2,500 at the time it was destroyed. It further found that Wyman on January 1, 1924, had entered into a verbal agreement to sell said truck for the sum of $3,000 to J. R. Davee, who had paid to Wyman the sum of $100 and had agreed to assume or pay the chattel mortgage thereon. By the terms of this agreement of sale Wyman retained the title to said truck until final payment of the purchase price, but Davee was given the possession thereof, and was in possession of said truck at the time it was destroyed. The court also found that the original motor number of said truck was 8863, and that said truck was described in said policy by said number, but that prior to the date of said policy and in the month of September, 1923, Wyman had removed the motor block bearing said number from said truck and substituted a motor block with the No. 88191; that said motor No. 8863 was removed in order that it might be repaired, and the motor No. 88191 was substituted to be used until the repair of the original motor block; that it remained in said truck from the date of its substitution until the truck was destroyed by fire; that the substitution of said number by Wyman was not made for the purpose of deceiving or defrauding defendant, nor was the No. 8863 given by Wyman to the insurance company at the time of the issuance of said policy given for the purpose of deceiving or defrauding said insurance company.

From the findings of fact the plaintiffs are entitled to a judgment in their favor, unless the facts found by the court relative to the ownership of said truck at the time of the issuance of said policy of insurance, or the facts found regarding the substitution of the No. 88191 for the No. 8863 on the motor block of the engine of said truck are sufficient to defeat a recovery on their part.

[1] The policy provided that:

It shall be void, "if the interest of the assured in the subject of this insurance be other than unconditional and sole ownership."

Respondent relies upon this provision of the policy when applied to the finding of the court that at the time the policy was issued Wyman had agreed verbally to sell the machine to Davee, reserving title to the truck in himself, but delivering possession of the truck to Davee. It has been held in this state that, under such a contract and in case of the loss or destruction of the property involved, the loss falls upon the vendor. Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, 156 Cal. 322, 334, 104 P. 432, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609; Waltz v. Silveria, 25 Cal. App. 717, 719, 145 P. 169. "The interest of the insured is sufficient when the whole loss will fall upon him in case of the destruction of the insured property." 14 Cal. Jur. 499; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Hilliard, 59 Fla. 590, 52 So. 799, 138 Am. St. Rep. 171; Burson v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 136 Pa. 267, 20 A. 401, 20 Am. St. Rep. 919. Under these authorities we are of the opinion that plaintiffs were not precluded from recovery upon the insurance policy merely by reason of the verbal agreement entered into by Wyman prior to the issuance of the policy to sell the truck to Davee upon the terms and conditions of such agreement.

[2] The original motor number of said truck was 8863 and the policy of insurance so described the truck. As we have already seen, the motor block bearing this number had been removed prior to the issuance of the policy of insurance for the purpose of repairing said motor block and a motor block bearing the No. 88191 substituted in the place of the original block, and that this substituted block remained in the truck up to the time of its destruction by fire. Respondent contends that these facts are a bar to any recovery on the policy by plaintiffs. The principal authority relied upon by respondent in support of this contention is the case of Solomon v. Federal Ins. Co., 176 Cal. 133, 167 P. 859. In that case it was held that describing an automobile as having been made in 1909 when in fact it was made in 1907 was such a material misdescription as to constitute a breach of an express warranty provided by section 2607 of the Civil Code and avoided a policy of insurance. It was pointed out in the opinion in that case that the value of a used automobile is governed largely by the year of its manufacture, and that a car made in 1907 is of much less value than a car made in 1909, and that the insurable value is also much less. It was accordingly held that a warranty as to the year a car is made was a material warranty and a breach of such warranty in a policy of insurance voided the policy. This same rule, however, does not apply as to a misdescription of an automobile in a policy of insurance as to its number. White v. Home Mut. Ins. Ass'n, 189 Iowa, 1051, 179 N. W. 315; Caldwell v. City of New York Ins. Co. (Mo. App.) 245 S. W. 602; Tomato Products Co. v. Manufacturers' Liability Ins. Co. of New Jersey, 203 App. Div. 678, 197 N. Y. S. 497; Douglas v. Insurance Co. of North America, 215 Mich. 529, 184 N. W. 539; Moore v. North River Ins. Co., 111 Kan. 420, 207 P. 760; Giles v. Citizens' Ins. Co. of Missouri, 32 Ga. App. 207, 122 S. E. 890. In the case of White v. Home Mut. Ins. Ass'n, supra, the court said:

"The number of the automobile was inserted merely for the purpose of identification. The insurance is intended to be and was on the automobile; not the number plate. It was the car insured quite as certainly, if fully identified, without resort to the number. There was such identification, for the evidence, without conflict, shows that the automobile burned met the description contained in the policy in all other respects, was the only automobile owned by the insured, and was the one intended to be covered by the policy."

The truck here in question was described in the policy of insurance as a 1921 G. M. C. 3½-ton truck, motor No. 8863. There was no question but that the truck destroyed by the fire was the truck which the defendant insured. The motor number given in the policy of insurance was merely for the purpose of identifying the truck, and as the truck could be and was positively identified without resort to this number, this portion of the description became immaterial, and any warranty that might be implied therefrom was not a material warranty, a breach of which would void the policy of insurance.

In our opinion, the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment upon the findings. Judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of plaintiffs upon the facts already found by the court.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1260-1262, wife while living with husband may declare homestead on appropriate property to value of $5,000, when husband has not made selection.

2. Homestead ⇨57(3)—Evidence held to support finding that homestead declared by wife covered certain lot.

In action to quiet title, evidence including wife's declaration of homestead held sufficient to support finding, that certain lot was included in homestead declared by wife.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨3(2)—Homestead ⇨150(1)—On husband's death, title to homestead declared by wife in community property vested in surviving wife without order setting it apart and without administration.

On death of husband, title to homestead previously declared in community property by wife vested immediately in her as survivor without order setting it apart and without necessity of administration.

4. Executors and administrators ⇨3(2)—Title to homestead declared by wife prior to husband's death vesting in her held subject to administration through probate of her will without requiring administration of husband's estate.

On husband's death, title to homestead in community property previously declared by wife vested in her and was subject to administration in her estate by proceedings culminating in admission to probate of her will, precluding necessity of propriety in subsequent proceedings to administer estate of husband for purpose of disposition of homestead.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Action by Mary E. Spencer, administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of William Hobbs, deceased, against Thomas M. Stewart and another, executors of the last will and testament of Anna Hobbs, deceased, to quiet title. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Will D. Gould, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Stewart & Stewart, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendants in an action to quiet title to real property. The complaint was filed in December, 1924, by plaintiff as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of William Hobbs, deceased, against the defendants, as executors of the last will and testament of Anna Hobbs, deceased, to determine which of the two estates has legal title to the real property in question. A sale of the property to one Boshyshell for the sum of $7,650 had been confirmed by the probate court in the matter of the estate of William Hobbs, when a formal transfer was delayed by reason of what was claimed by the prospective buyer to be a defect in or a cloud on the title occasioned by an unrevoked declaration of homestead filed by Anna Hobbs in 1877, when she and William Hobbs were husband and wife and were residing on lots 1, 2, and 7 in block 3 of the Sanchez tract, in the city of Los Angeles. The property was community property and was declared to be of the value of $5,000. The declaration recited that the husband "has not made any declaration of homestead." In January, 1880, William Hobbs, the husband, died, leaving a will wherein he devised and bequeathed all of his property to his wife, Anna Hobbs. Thereafter Anna Hobbs lived on the property, paid all taxes, etc., and at the time of her death in January, 1911, was still possessed of lot 7, which is the subject of the controversy. Anna Hobbs' will left possession of all of her property to Mary E. Spencer, a granddaughter of William and Anna Hobbs, until the property should be sold, when the proceeds were to be divided one-fourth to her and the balance to other heirs as provided in the will. Anna Hobbs' will, appointing Stewart and Adams the executors thereof, was admitted to probate on July 19, 1911, and the will of William Hobbs, who had died in 1880, was admitted to probate on January 11, 1912. Mary E. Spencer enjoyed possession of the property and received the rents therefrom from 1911 to the time when this action was brought, and so far as the record shows nothing further was done in either of these estates until about that time. The trial court found in favor of the defendants, adjudged the declaration of homestead to be valid and subsisting at the time of the death of William Hobbs, and quieted the title to the property in the estate of Anna Hobbs.

[1] Appellant's first contention is that the declaration is invalid on its face. It is claimed that the law did not and does not allow the wife, while living with her husband, to declare a homestead on a dwelling in excess of $1,000 in value. This contention of appellant is without merit inasmuch as the provisions of the Civil Code (sections 1260-1262) have been construed to accord to the wife the right to declare a homestead on appropriate property to the value of $5,000 when the husband has not made the selection (MacLeod v. Moran, 11 Cal. App. 622, 105 P. 932; 13 Cal. Jur. 444).

[2] The next contention is that the court on the evidence should have found that the homestead did not cover lot 7. The declaration included this lot, but it is insisted that it was improperly included. Plaintiff attempted to prove by the oral testimony of old residents in the neighborhood that William and Anna Hobbs lived in the dwelling on lots 1 and 2, but did not live on lot 7. All those lots were adjoining, and the oral evidence was too indefinite and uncertain to overthrow the solemn statement of the ancient declaration. In view of this uncertainty on the part of plaintiff's testimony, the declaration itself was sufficient evidence upon which the trial court could make its finding that lot 7 was included in the homestead.

[3] Upon the death of William Hobbs in January, 1880, the title to the homestead vested immediately in Anna Hobbs, the surviving wife, without any order setting apart the homestead and without the necessity of administration. Estate of Shirey, 167 Cal. 193, 195, 138 P. 994; Williams v. Williams, 170 Cal. 625, 628, 151 P. 10; 11 Cal. Jur. 567 et seq.; 13 Cal. Jur. 526 et seq.

[4] The title to lot 7, being so vested, remained in the surviving spouse until her death in January, 1911, and was subject to administration in her estate by proceedings culminating in the admission to probate of her will in July, 1911. There was therefore no necessity or propriety in subsequent proceedings to administer the estate of William Hobbs for the purpose of the disposition of the homestead. Whatever appropriate method might otherwise have been taken to show of record the death of William Hobbs and thus permit the certification of the title to the homestead in Anna Hobbs or her estate need not be discussed. It is enough here to say that the issues framed in this proceeding to quiet title, wherein affirmative relief was sought on behalf of the estate of Anna Hobbs, were sufficient upon which to establish that record.

No other point involved in the appeal requires specific notice.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHIBLEY v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 12627.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1927.

1. Contempt ☞23—Party present when court indicated certain order would be made but outside state when it was made may be held in contempt for violation thereof.

Where defendant in action for separate maintenance was in court when court indicated intention to make certain order, he may be held in contempt for violation of such order, notwithstanding that he was outside state when it was made.

2. Contempt ☞23—Defendant, with knowledge of contents of order, may be put in contempt for violation without service of copy.

Service of copy of order on defendant in action for separate maintenance held not required, in order to put him in contempt for violation of its provision nor to lay foundation for issuance of order to show cause why he should not be punished for such contempt, where such defendant was shown by undisputed record to have knowledge of such order.

3. Contempt ☞23—Service on attorney of order to show cause why defendant should not be punished for civil contempt held proper.

Where defendant, in action for separate maintenance, was present in court when court indicated that certain order would be made, and knew contents of such order, but subsequently left state, service of order requiring him to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt for violating such order, contempt being civil, held properly served on his attorney.

In Bank.

Application of Kenneth Shibley for a writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Walter Perry Johnson, Judge, to restrain further consideration of a contempt proceeding. Writ dismissed.

Milton T. U'Ren, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Livingston & Livingston, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner applied for a writ of prohibition whereby he sought to have the respondents, the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the judge thereof, required to refrain and desist from further considering a contempt proceeding instituted in said court in an action for separate maintenance pending in said court, wherein the petitioner is the defendant and his wife, Marion Shibley, is the plaintiff. The plaintiff commenced her said action on November 17, 1926. The defendant having appeared therein, the plaintiff, on March 11, 1927, presented a motion for an order allowing her temporary maintenance pending said action. The defendant appeared on said day in response to said motion and testified in his own behalf. At the conclusion of the hearing, the court indicated that it would make the order sought; and it did in fact then make an order directing the payment of $250, in addition to other payments which had already been made by the defendant applicable to the month of March, and also ordered the payment of a fixed sum on account of counsel fees and costs. The court continued the further hearing as to the definite allowance to be made for the plaintiff's temporary maintenance until March 18, 1927. The foregoing orders were made in court in the presence of the defendant and his counsel. On March 18 the hearing upon said matter being concluded, counsel for both parties being present, at which time the court directed the entry of an order for a monthly allowance to plaintiff of $600 and for an additional allowance of $100 for the month of March. The written order embodying the foregoing allowances was signed and filed on March 21, 1927. In the meantime, and on March 14, 1927, the defendant Shibley had left California and gone to Seattle, Wash., where for some years he had been engaged in business, although he had always maintained a home in Berkeley, Cal., where his family had resided. During the month of April, 1927, under compulsion of a contempt proceeding, the defendant paid the April installment as provided in the foregoing order. Early in May he paid the sum of $250, which was credited on account of the May installment. He also served and filed a motion to reduce the amount of the allowance made by the order of March 21 to the sum of $200 a month, and in support thereof filed, on May 16, 1927, an affidavit, verified by him at Seattle, Wash., on May 12, 1927, wherein he deposed that on March 21, 1927, the judge of said court had made the order of said date, describing with particularity the contents of said order, and asserting his compliance with it for the months of March and April. The defendant's said motion was not prosecuted and was eventually dropped from the calendar. The defendant was in San Francisco during the month of April, leaving that city on April 29 for Seattle, since which time he has not returned to California.

The contempt proceeding which he now seeks to have said court restrained from further prosecuting, was instituted by the plaintiff on May 13, 1927. In support thereof, the plaintiff filed her affidavit alleging that her temporary maintenance for the month of May had not been paid pursuant to the order of March 21, 1927, and that by reason thereof said defendant was in contempt of said order. She also deposed that said defendant was not within the state of California, and that it was therefore impossible to obtain personal service of an order to show cause upon him, and she, therefore, prayed for an order permitting service upon his attorney of record in his place and stead. The court issued its order to show cause and also its order for the service thereof accordingly, making the same returnable on May 20, 1927. On said day said defendant's attorney of record appeared for said defendant, specially to make a motion to quash said order for substituted service, which motion the court denied on June 8, 1927. Thereafter, and on June 13, 1927, the order to show cause was taken under submission by said court. Thereafter and on July 28, 1927, the defendant instituted in this court the present proceeding.

[1, 2] The foregoing facts were conceded to be true upon the hearing hereon, at which time the petitioner presented and now urges two main contentions why the permanent writ should issue herein. The first of these contentions is that, the defendant being outside of the state of California at the time said order of March 21 was made and never having been served with a copy of said order, he cannot now be held in contempt for a violation of said order; second, that, the defendant being outside of the state of California when the order to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt issued May 13, 1927, was made, and that not having been served personally with said order, the court has acquired no jurisdiction to proceed thereunder, and in that behalf the petitioner urges that the substituted service of said order upon his attorney of record was and is void, and that the court obtained no jurisdiction over the person of the petitioner thereby.

As to the first of the foregoing grounds for the issuance of a permanent writ herein, we find the same to be without merit, in view of the undisputed facts showing that the defendant and petitioner herein was present in court when the proceedings of March 13, 1927, which preceded the making of said order on March 21, 1927, were held, and during which the court indicated its intention to make said order. The fact that the defendant left the state of California between said dates did not in any way affect the jurisdiction of the court to make and enter the same; nor did the fact that the defendant was absent from the state of California militate against the power of the court to enforce said order against the defendant having knowledge of the content of said order and with such knowledge failing or refusing to comply with the terms and requirements thereof. That the defendant had such knowledge sufficiently appears from the undisputed record herein, showing not only that he yielded reluctant compliance during the months of March and April with the terms of said order, but that early he sought a modification thereof and accompanied his motion for such modification with his own affidavit, wherein he not only referred specifically to the existence of such order, but even undertook to set forth the substance and somewhat of the details thereof. Under such circumstances service of a copy of said order would not be required in order to put the defendant in contempt for a violation of its provisions nor to lay the foundation for the issuance by the trial court of the subsequent order to show cause why the defendant should not be cited and punished for such contempt. Golden Gate Mining Co. v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. 187, 3 P. 628; Romine v. Cralle, 83 Cal. 432, 23 P. 525; Mitchell v. Superior Court, 163 Cal. 423, 125 P.

1061. The case of Johnson v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 578, upon which the petitioner relies in support of his contention in the foregoing regard is not in point, for the reason that the trial court in that case had never gained that jurisdiction over the person of the defendant which was a prerequisite to the making of any order having the effect of a personal judgment for the payment of money.

[3] The petitioner herein being thus in contempt for his disobedience of the order of March 21, 1927, of the contents of which he had knowledge, we are to consider his second contention as to the sufficiency of the service of the order of the trial court, made and entered on May 13, 1927, requiring the defendant to show cause on May 20, 1927, why he should not be punished for his said contempt. At the time of the making and entry of its said order it was made to appear to the court and the judge thereof that the defendant was absent from the state and was therefore without the reach of a personal service of whatever order the court might make in the premises. It was also made to appear to said court from its own records not only that the defendant had his residence in California, but that he was represented in this very action by an attorney of record who had but recently filed upon his behalf and was then prosecuting a motion to set aside or modify the very order of which said defendant was then in contempt. These facts having been shown to the trial court, it proceeded to add to its said order of May 13, 1927, the provision directing service thereof to be made upon the defendant's attorney of record in due time before the return day thereon. That the trial court had jurisdiction to make such order for substituted service upon the defendant's then existing and then acting attorney of record in a proceeding for a civil contempt such as this proceeding we entertain no doubt. The distinction between civil and criminal contempts in the foregoing regard was clearly pointed out by Mr. Chief Justice Myers in the Matter of Morris, 194 Cal. 63, 227 P. 914. In the early case of Eureka Lake, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 66 Cal. 311, 5 P. 490, it was decided that an order to show cause why a corporation should not be punished for contempt might be served upon the attorney for the corporation when its managing agents were shown to be concealing themselves for the purpose of avoiding such service. No difference can be discerned between the case of a defendant who, being within the state, by concealment avoids process of this character, and a defendant who, being in contempt and being willfully without the state, cannot be personally served. The effect in each case is the same, and hence the power of the court to enforce its lawful orders should be the same. A like ruling was made in the case of Foley v. Foley, 120 Cal. 33, 52 P. 122, 65 Am. St. Rep. 147, upon the authority of the earlier case. We find nothing in the cases relied upon by the petitioner which contravenes this salutary rule as applicable to cases wherein it appears, as it does in this case, that the defendant had full knowledge of the contents of the order which he was charged with having violated, and whose violation was willful, and who absents himself from the state, and from that point of vantage undertakes by motion and special appearances made through his attorney of record to obstruct the court in the enforcement of its lawful orders in a proceeding still pending before it.

We find no merit in either of the petitioner's contentions herein.

It is therefore ordered that his petition for a writ herein be, and the same is hereby, dismissed.

ATLAS MIXED MORTAR CO. v. CITY OF BURBANK et al. (L. A. 8956.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 16, 1927.

1. Municipal corporations $\S$ 592(1)—Motor Vehicle Act does not violate Constitution placing certain regulations not conflicting with general laws in cities' control (Motor Vehicle Act, as amended in 1923; Const. art. 11, § 11).

Motor Vehicle Act, as amended in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 517), regulating motor vehicle traffic, does not violate Const. art. 11, § 11, vesting certain regulations not in conflict with general laws in cities, towns, etc., since regulation and control of travel and traffic along public roads, streets, and highways of state is not matter of local concern.

2. Municipal corporations $\S$ 592(1)—Whenever state assumes to regulate traffic on highways, entire control vests in state.

Whenever state sees fit to adopt general scheme for regulation and control of motor vehicles on public highways of state, entire control of whatever phases of the subject are covered by state legislation ceases in so far as municipal or local regulation is concerned.

3. Pleading $\S$ 214(1)—Allegations of amended complaint are taken as true on demurrer.

Allegations of plaintiff's amended complaint are taken as true for purposes of demurrer.

4. Municipal corporations $\S$ 592(1)—Ordinance regulating weight of vehicles traveling on "improved public highway" held void as conflicting with Motor Vehicle Act (Motor Vehicle Act, as amended in 1923, §§ 21, 85, 86, 88).

Ordinance of city of sixth class, organized under general law attempting to regulate weight of vehicles traveling on "improved public highway," within meaning of term as defined by Motor Vehicle Act, as amended in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 517), § 88, held void as in violation of sections 21, 85, 86, and 88, wherein regulation of such vehicles as used in travel or traffic along improved public highway, whether within or without cities, was completely covered.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Action by the Atlas Mixed Mortar Company against the City of Burbank to enjoin enforcement of certain ordinances regulating the use of commercial vehicles. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

E. R. Young, of Los Angeles, and E. L. Searle, for appellant.

George D. Blair, of Los Angeles, E. E. Kirk, of Burbank, and James H. Mitchell, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles directing a dismissal of this action after an order of the court sustaining the demurrer of the defendants to the plaintiff's amended complaint. The action was instituted by the plaintiff for the purpose of obtaining an injunction restraining the respondent, city of Burbank, a municipal corporation, and also its codefendants, its board of trustees, and other officers of said city, from the enforcement of certain ordinances enacted by said city through its said officials, regulating the use of commercial vehicles upon certain streets and highways within the corporate limits of said city, and to have said ordinances declared illegal and void. The facts out of which said action arose are briefly these: The plaintiff and appellant is a corporation which has for many years been engaged in the business of mixing and manufacturing mortar, plaster, cement, and kindred products, and of supplying its customers with such products, and also of furnishing to them, sand, gravel, and crushed rock from its quarries. For these purposes plaintiff maintains a mixing and manufacturing plant in the city of Los Angeles, and it also owns and operates certain quarries upon a leasehold interest in certain lands located in Stough Canyon, which lies to the eastward and contiguous to the city of Burbank. The appellant's quarries thus located are surrounded by steep hills; the only road leading to and from the same traversing said Stough Canyon, and at the mouth thereof entering the limits of the city of Burbank on its northeasterly side. At the point of its said entry into the city of Burbank said roadway connects with, and merges into, a certain street or highway in said city officially named as Eleventh street, but sometimes known as Sunset Canyon drive, which street or drive leads into certain other streets within said city, including a street or avenue known as Cypress avenue, which extends from Sunset Canyon drive to the San Fernando road within said city. The plaintiff alleges that its only means of ingress to and egress from its said quarries, and its only means of travel therefrom, whereby its trucks, drays, or other vehicles can convey the sand, gravel, and crushed rock, the products of its said quarries to its customers or to its mixing plant in the city of Los Angeles, is on and along the aforesaid streets, highways, and avenues of the city of Burbank in order to reach said San Fernando road. Plaintiff further alleges that, commencing with August 21, 1923, and continuing at intervals thereafter down to April 7, 1925, the city of Burbank proceeded to enact a series of ordinances undertaking to regulate the weight and travel of commercial vehicles upon and along certain of its streets, and among these the streets or avenues above named, the effect of which ordinances, if valid, was to render unlawful the use and travel of commercial vehicles carrying such products or loads as the plaintiff produces at his quarries, in excess of the weight, in some instances, of 6,000 pounds, and in others of 8,000 pounds, upon or along said designated streets. It further alleges that the city of Burbank is proceeding to enforce said ordinances through the arrest, or threatened arrest, of its agents and employees when engaged in transporting its said products in its trucks, drays, or other vehicles carrying loads in excess of the weights described in said ordinances, and that, unless the city of Burbank and its officials are restrained from so doing, the plaintiff will be forced to abandon and discontinue the use of its property and equipment located in Stough Canyon and its quarries and the transportation of the products thereof by its only means of ingress to and egress from its said properties. The plaintiff avers that said ordinances of the city of Burbank are void as in violation of the provisions of that certain act of the Legislature known as the Motor Vehicle Act, as amended in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 517). The trial court sustained a general demurrer interposed by the defendants to the plaintiff's amended complaint, and, upon the latter's failure to amend within the time allowed, made and entered its order and judgment dismissing said action.

[1, 2] The sole question presented upon this appeal is as to the validity of the aforesaid ordinances of the city of Burbank, in view of the action of the Legislature in the adoption of the Motor Vehicle Act and of the content of said act, in so far as it relates to the weight of motor vehicles in the course of their use and transport upon and along streets and highways within the limits of municipal corporations. It is the contention of the respondents that, in so far as the state Legislature has attempted, by means of said Motor Vehicle Act, to prohibit municipalities from the passage of laws regulating the weight of motor vehicles in the course of their use and transport upon and along the streets and highways of such municipalities, other than strictly state highways, the provisions of said act are unconstitutional as in violation of the provisions of article 11, section 11, of the state Constitution. The theory of the respondents in making this contention is that the control of streets and highways for the purpose of regulating traffic thereon is a municipal affair. That this contention is without merit has been made clear by this court and also by the appellate court of this state in recent decisions, wherein it has been held that the regulation and control of travel and traffic along the public roads, streets, and highways of the state of California, if it ever was such, has ceased to be a matter of local concern. The leading recent case upon this subject is Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A. L. R. 1172, which decision has been generally followed by the appellate tribunals of this state since its pronouncement in 1920, in their interpretation of the Motor Vehicle Act and its several amendments adopted since that date. The most recent decision of this court touching this subject is to be found in the case of In re Murphy, 190 Cal. 286, 212 P. 30, wherein the rule laid down in Ex parte Daniels, supra, was given application to chartered cities whenever the ordinances of such cities in attempted regulation of traffic and travel upon or along their streets, highways, or avenues were found to be in conflict with the Motor Vehicle Act. For a better reason, the rule thus declared would have application to municipalities formed under general laws, of which the city of Burbank is one, being a municipality of the sixth class. The effect of these several decisions is to declare that, whenever the state of California sees fit to adopt a general scheme for the regulation and control of motor vehicles upon the public highways of the state, the entire control over whatever phases of the subject are covered by state legislation ceases in so far as municipal or local regulation is concerned.

Having in view the state of the law as declared by these recent decisions, we are brought to a consideration of the terms of the Motor Vehicle Act as amended in 1923, in so far as the provisions of the act relate to the weight of motor vehicles when in use upon the public streets or highways of the state of California, in and out of cities. Section 21 of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1923, pp. 519, 520) defines public highways, as that term is employed in the provisions of said act, to include "every highway, road, street, alley, lane, court, place, trail, drive, bridge, viaduct or trestle laid out or erected as such by the public or dedicated or abandoned to the public, or intended or used by or for the general public, except such portions thereof as are used or prepared for use, by pedestrians as sidewalks," the only limitation upon this definition of a public highway being that it shall not be deemed to include private driveways, roads, or places used by the owner or by his guests or those having business with him, and not intended to be otherwise used by the general public. Sections 85, 86, and 88 of said act proceed to deal with the gross weight of vehicles or loads which shall be operated or moved upon any public highway. Without going into detail as to the somewhat involved provisions of these several sections of the act, it may be generally stated that they permit the operation of such vehicles, whether loaded or unloaded, having a minimum weight of 22,000 pounds and a maximum weight of 34,000 pounds, depending upon the number and kind of wheels with which such vehicles are equipped. The provisions of section 88 of the act refer to the authority which is thereby given to local governmental bodies with regard to the limitation of the weight limit specified in the immediately preceding sections of the act. Its provisions read as follows:

"The legislative body of any county or city shall have power by ordinance to permit the operation and moving of vehicles and loads upon public highways and streets under their respective jurisdictions other than upon state highways of a maximum gross weight in excess of the maximum gross weight of vehicles and loads specified in section eighty-five of this act but shall have no power to require lighter loads than specified in this act on any improved public highway as such highway is defined herein, except as in this section otherwise provided."

In a succeeding paragraph of said section 88 the term "improved public highway" is thus defined:

"For the purposes of this act an improved highway is hereby defined to be a highway paved with cement concrete or asphaltic concrete, or a highway having a hard surface and distinct roadway not less than four inches thick made up of a mixture of rock, sand, or gravel bound together by an artificial binder other than natural soil."

[3, 4] The plaintiff in its amended complaint alleged that Cypress avenue, within said city of Burbank, was an "improved public highway" within the meaning of said term as defined in the aforesaid provisions of section 88 of the Motor Vehicle Act, and was such at the time of the arrest, or threatened arrest, of plaintiff's agents and employees thereon for the alleged violation of the aforesaid ordinances of said city, attempting to regulate the weight of motor vehicles used in commercial transportation upon and along the streets of said city. The allegations of plaintiff's amended complaint being taken to be true for the purposes of demurrer, it would seem irresistibly to follow that the provisions of the ordinances of said city which purport to limit the operation of such vehicles upon and along its said street, having a gross weight in excess of 6,000 or 8,000 pounds, are void as in violation of the aforesaid provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act wherein the regulation of the weight of such vehicles when used in travel or traffic along improved public highways, whether in or out of cities, is completely covered. We can perceive no difference in principle between the questions presented to this court in the case of Ex parte Daniels, supra, and In re Murphy, supra, and those presented upon this appeal.

It follows that the judgment of the trial court in dismissing this action must be, and the same is, reversed, and said court is directed to enter an order overruling the defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint.

FERGUSON v. FONNER et al. (Civ. 6030.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 15, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⇨345(1)—Notice of intention to move for new trial, filed in time, is as regards time for appeal, "commencement of new proceeding," which remains pending until disposed of (Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

Filing of notice of intention to move for a new trial in time is commencement of new proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 939, which remains pending, for purposes of fixing time for appeal, until disposed of by the court or by operation of law.

2. Appeal and error ⇨345(1)—Notice of appeal, filed within 30 days after denial of new trial, based on notice of intention, held timely, notwithstanding failure to bring motion to hearing within 60 days after notice of judgment entry (Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

Notice of appeal, filed within 30 days after denial of motion for new trial, held timely, where notice of intention to move for new trial was filed in time, though no steps were taken to bring motion to hearing within 60 days after service of notice of entry of judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 939.

3. Limitation of actions ⇨146(1)—Requirement that promise to pay outlawed debt must be in writing and signed establishes rule of evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 360).

Code Civ. Proc. § 360, providing no acknowledgment or promise to pay is sufficient evidence of new or continuing contract, taking case out of operation of statute of limitations unless in writing, signed by party to be charged, relates to kind of evidence by which promise shall be proved and not to character of promise or acknowledgment.

4. Limitation of actions ⇨196(2)—Payment accompanied by writing, signed by debtor, which recognizes outlawed debt, is admissible to show acknowledgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 360).

While part payment alone is insufficient as an acknowledgment of a debt barred by limitations under rule established by Code Civ. Proc. § 360, payment accompanied by writing signed by debtor, which recognizes debt as subsisting, is relevant evidence on question of debtor's willingness to pay.

5. Limitation of actions ⇨196(2)—Letter signed by debtor, inclosing payment "to help out" on outlawed note, held admissible to establish acknowledgment of debt (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1, and § 360).

In action on note claimed to be barred by statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1), signed letter from defendant, written after expiration of statutory period, inclosing payment, and reciting that money was to help out until the debtor could get hold of G., who was other party liable on note, held admissible under section 360, to show new promise or acknowledgment taking debt out of statute.

6. Limitation of actions ⇨145(5)—Promise to pay debt after expiration of statutory period is supported by sufficient consideration.

New promise of debtor to pay debt, made after expiration of statutory period, is sufficient consideration to take debt out of statute.

7. Limitation of actions ⇨148(1)—Debtor's promise to pay obligation, barred by statute, held not limited by subsequent letter in which debtor promised payments from surplus earnings (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1).

Debtor's promise to pay, made after expiration of limitation period under Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1, held not limited by subsequent letter in which debtor stated that he did not recall promising to pay specified installments on obligation and promised to pay only from surplus earnings.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by Mrs. A. Ferguson against John F. Fonner and another. From an adverse judgment, defendant named appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied, and judgment affirmed.

Henry L. Corson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. W. Henderson, of San Jose, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from a judgment entered against appellant, Fonner, in an action to recover a debt.

Respondent moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the notice of appeal was not filed within the time prescribed by statute.

The judgment appealed from was entered on June 12, 1925, and on June 15, 1925, a notice of its entry was served on appellant. On June 25, 1925, a notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed, the notice stating that the motion would be presented on the minutes of the court and by affidavits. The motion was not presented until August 24, 1925, on which date it was denied for lack of jurisdiction, and the notice of appeal was filed on the same day. Respondent contends that, no steps having been taken to bring the motion to a hearing within 60 days after the service of the notice of entry of judgment, there was no proceeding for a new trial pending within the provisions of section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which would extend the time for an appeal from the judgment, and that the notice of appeal was filed too late.

[1, 2] As held in the matter of the Estate of Bergland, 177 Cal. 227, 170 P. 400, the filing of a notice of intention to move for a new trial in time is the commencement of a new proceeding, which remains pending until disposed of by the court or by operation of law. The facts of the present case were similar to those of the case cited, and, the notice of appeal having been filed within 30 days after the termination by operation of law of the proceeding for a new trial, the motion to dismiss the appeal should be denied.

A promissory note for $2,296.18, payable to respondent 30 days after date, was executed by appellant and James W. Gough on April 26, 1917. Payments were made thereon aggregating the sum of $662.80, the last payment being made on October 23, 1922. The complaint, which was filed on March 19, 1924, alleged that appellant, on various dates before and after May 21, 1921, acknowledged his indebtedness on the note and promised to pay the same. These allegations were denied by appellant, who also pleaded by his demurrer and answer to the complaint as a bar to the action the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The note matured on May 26, 1917, and the record contains no evidence that a written acknowledgment of the debt was made during the four-year period following the date of maturity. Subsequent to the expiration of that period, however, certain payments on the debt were made by appellant, each payment being accompanied by a letter signed by him and addressed to respondent. The letters with their respective dates were as follows:

November 7, 1921: "Inclosed find ten ($10) dollars to help out until I can get hold of Gough."

March 22, 1922: "Inclosed find ten ($10) dollars."

August 29, 1922: "Your letter of the 27th at hand. As you say that I made the statement that I would pay you ten dollars per month I don't remember of ever promising to do that, but nevertheless I will try and do that if I can. And as far as making trouble for me and yourself, it would be worthless for you to start anything, for if you did I would file one of those things in court that pays everything off as I have nothing only what I earn every day, and after living there is very little left. I shall try and help you until I can get hold of him and that is the best I can do under the circumstances. Inclosed find ten dollars ($10), as he has got all the money I had besides what I have spent since he disappeared trying to get him."

December 8, 1922: "Inclosed find ten ($10) dollars."

[3] As provided by statute, no acknowledgment or promise to pay is sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract by which to take the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations unless the same be contained in some writing signed by the party to be charged thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 360; it being the purpose of the section to establish a rule, not with respect to the character of the promise or acknowledgment from which a promise may be inferred, but with respect to the kind of evidence by which the promise or acknowledgment shall be proved. Biddel v. Brizzolara, 56 Cal. 374.

With respect to the sufficiency of the writing, it was held in Concannon v. Smith, 134 Cal. 14, 66 P. 40, that the statute does not prescribe any form in which the new promise shall be made; it being sufficient if the writing shows that the writer regards or treats the indebtedness as subsisting, and from the acknowledgment of a subsisting indebtedness the law implies a promise to pay; and in Searles v. Gonzalez, 191 Cal. 426, 216 P. 1003, 28 A. L. R. 78, that the writing must contain some reference to the debt which, either of itself or with the aid of competent evidence of extraneous facts in explanation, amounts to an admission that there is a debt existing to the creditor to whom the writing is sent for which the debtor is liable and which he is willing to pay.

It is not contended that a debt other than that represented by the note executed by appellant and his codefendant Gough existed; and it was admitted by the former that the several sums referred to in the letters were paid thereon. None of the letters, however, directly referred to the debt; but in that of November 7, 1921, appellant states that the remittance inclosed is "to help out until I can get hold of Gough." The reference therein to Gough, taken with the circumstances shown by the testimony, clearly indicated that the amount was paid on the debt in question which, as the letter sufficiently shows, the writer regarded as a subsisting obligation.

[4, 5] While part payment alone has been held insufficient as an acknowledgment within the above rule (Clunin v. First Federal Trust Co., 189 Cal. 248, 253, 207 P. 1009), such payment, nevertheless, when accompanied by a writing signed by the debtor and which recognizes the debt as subsisting, is relevant on the question of the writer's willingness to pay, and the above facts sufficiently supported the conclusion of the trial court in that respect.

[6, 7] In his letter of August 29, 1922, appellant attempts to qualify the promise implied from the transaction of November 7, 1921, and to limit his obligation to such monthly payments as he might be able to make from his surplus earnings. The new promise, however, was supported by a sufficient consideration (Concannon v. Smith, supra), and the subsequent letter was insufficient to limit the obligation of appellant thereunder.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied, and the judgment is affirmed.

DALE v. DALE. (Civ. 6059.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 8, 1927.

1. Husband and wife $\S$ 266—Husband's conveyance to wife with intention to make it her separate property, though purchased from community funds, makes it wife's "separate property" (Civ. Code, $\S$ 164).

Where property is conveyed from husband to wife with intent to make it her separate property, even though it were purchased from community funds, conveyance operates as gift from husband, and wife takes it as "separate property," under Civ. Code, $\S$ 164.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Separate Property.]

2. Husband and wife $\S$ 266—Whether husband intended to make property conveyed to wife her separate property must be determined from language of instrument and from circumstances.

Whether husband, conveying property purchased from community funds to wife, intended to make it her separate property, must be determined from language of instrument, together with all facts, circumstances, and declaration of parties disclosed by evidence as occurring at time of transaction.

3. Husband and wife $\S$ 262(1)—Recital in deed to wife that land is conveyed as wife's separate property creates presumption of husband's intention to relinquish claim of community property, which can be contradicted only by evidence of fraud, mistake, or undue influence.

Where deed from husband to wife contains specific declaration that land is conveyed as her separate property, this recital is strong evidence of his intention to relinquish his claim on it as community property, and this presumption can only be rebutted by satisfactory evidence that this form of conveyance was procured by fraud, mistake, or undue influence.

4. Husband and wife $\S$ 266—Where one spouse obtains advantage over the other, transaction is presumed to have been without adequate consideration (Civ. Code, $\S$ 158).

Under Civ. Code, $\S$ 158, relating to contracts between husband and wife, their relationship is in fact presumed to be confidential, and, where either obtains an advantage over the other, transaction is presumed to have been without adequate consideration, and to have been secured through undue influence, and burden is then cast on him who has advantage to show that it was fair and free from fraud or undue influence.

5. Deeds $\S$ 17(3)—Husband and wife $\S$ 266—Conveyance from husband to wife as inducement for reconciliation and resumption of marital relations was based on sufficient consideration.

Deed and bill of sale of property from husband to wife, executed and delivered to wife as an inducement for reconciliation, restoration of harmony, and resumption of marital relations, were based on sufficient consideration.

6. Deeds $\S$ 69, 70(1)—Where husband conveyed property to wife as inducement for reconciliation, that wife afterwards failed to fulfill agreement was insufficient to set aside deed on ground of fraud or mistake.

Where husband executed deed and bill of sale of property to wife as an inducement for reconciliation, restoration of harmony, and resumption of marital relations, both parties entering into negotiations in good faith, fact that wife afterwards failed to fulfill her agreement was an insufficient showing on which to set aside deed upon ground of fraud or mistake.

7. Deeds $\S$ 19—Deed without fraud in its inception conveys title, and is not void on account of failure of consideration.

A deed without fraud in its inception conveys title, and is not void on account of failure of consideration, either in whole or in part, and, inasmuch as acts done subsequent to execution of deed cannot affect its integrity, subsequent failure of consideration or breach of personal covenant not amounting to a condition will not avoid deed.

8. Divorce $\S$ 286—Where plaintiff did not deny testimony, court must assume that record was undisputed that plaintiff instructed attorney regarding drawing conveyances as attorney testified.

In divorce action, where plaintiff testified that attorney drawing conveyances for him to his wife did not read or explain conveyances to him, but failed to deny that he had told his attorney what attorney had testified regarding his intention and purpose in making conveyances to wife, appellate court must assume that record was undisputed that plaintiff instructed his attorney to draw conveyances, so that wife could handle it exactly as her own, without necessity of his signature, and so that she could not demand of him future support after he had left her, as attorney had testified.

9. Divorce $\S$ 253—In divorce action, evidence did not support findings that plaintiff was ignorant of terms of conveyances to wife, and that clause "as and for her separate property" was inserted through inadvertence.

In divorce action, evidence held insufficient to support findings to effect that plaintiff, who had executed deed and bill of sale of property to wife as an inducement for reconciliation and resumption of marital relations, was ignorant of terms of instruments, and that clause "as and for her separate property" was inserted in them through inadvertence or mistake.

10. Reformation of instruments *§*45(1)—In action to reform instrument on ground of fraud or mistake, evidence must be convincing.

In action to reform instrument on ground of fraud or mistake, evidence must be clear and convincing, and not merely equivocal or contradictory, leaving question of fraud or mistake in doubt.

11. Attorney and client *§*81—Husband could not complain because he failed to understand terms of instruments conveying property to wife, where he employed attorney to draw documents.

Husband could not complain in divorce action that he failed to read or understand terms of instruments he had executed, conveying property to wife as an inducement for reconciliation and resumption of marital relations, where he employed attorney to draw documents, since this duty was imposed on his attorney.

12. Deeds *§*68(1)—Grantor, executing deed, ordinarily will not be relieved from effect of clear terms because he neglected to read it.

A grantor, who executes a deed of conveyance, in absence of showing of fraud or mistake, will not be relieved from effect of clear terms of instrument merely because he neglected to read it, or even if he is unable to read or understand it, since reasonable prudence requires one to either read document he proposes to execute, or, if he is unable to do so, to procure assistance of some one who can read and explain its terms.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Denver Sevier, Judge.

Action for divorce by Otto A. Dale against Ida Dale. From a portion of an interlocutory judgment regarding property, defendant appeals. Reversed in part, and in part affirmed.

H. C. Nelson and J. F. Coonan, both of Eureka, for appellant.

Metzler & Mitchell, of Eureka, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from that portion of an interlocutory judgment of divorce, which holds that 60 acres of land in Humboldt county, and certain personal property, which was conveyed from a husband to his wife "as her separate property," was in fact community property.

Appellant and respondent intermarried at Eureka September 8, 1904, and lived together as husband and wife until April, 1924. The respondent, on October 23, 1918, executed and delivered to appellant a deed of conveyance of 60 acres of land, and a bill of sale of certain personal property, which are involved in this appeal. The habendum clause of this deed recited that said land was conveyed "unto the party of the second part, and her heirs and assigns forever, as and for her separate property." A similar phrase was incorporated in the bill of sale. Domestic trouble arose between the parties. April 29, 1924, respondent commenced an action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, and alleged that said land was conveyed to appellant to be held by her in trust as community property, that she had made false and unjust accusations against respondent, and that she feared he might dispose of their property to her detriment. It was then alleged that these conveyances of property were made to appellant to induce her to refrain from such treatment and false accusations, and to assure her that the property would not be disposed of without her knowledge and signature. In an amended complaint the respondent further alleged that he was unable to speak or understand the English language well, that neither the deed nor the bill of sale were read or explained to respondent, and that he did not know that either of the instruments purported to convey to the appellant the absolute title as her separate property. An answer was filed, specifically denying all of the allegations of the complaint, and affirmatively alleging that the land and personal property involved were conveyed to appellant as her separate property, and that the action, so far as it related to the real property, was barred by the provisions of section 318, Code of Civil Procedure, and by the provisions of sections 337, 338 and 343, Code of Civil Procedure. A cross-complaint was also filed in behalf of appellant.

Upon respondent's motion, after the case had been tried and submitted for decision, the submission was set aside, and the respondent was permitted to file an amended complaint, which added little of importance, except the allegation that "the said parties did not know that the phrase 'as and for her separate property' had been written into the deed and bill of sale, by the scrivener, together with the further allegation that neither the deed nor the bill of sale had been read to the parties, or explained, before their execution." Further evidence was then adduced, and subsequently the court rendered an interlocutory judgment of divorce in favor of respondent, on the ground of extreme cruelty and awarded him the custody of the two minor children. It was also decreed that all of the real and personal property in question was community property, and reformation of both instruments was ordered by eliminating therefrom the clause "as and for her separate property," and a division of all this property between the respective parties was decreed, share and share alike.

clusively presumed to be her separate property; (2) that the action to recover the real property was barred by the statute of limitations; (3) that the findings of court, to the effect that the real and personal property described in the deed and bill of sale were community property, is not supported by the evidence; and (4) that the court abused its discretion in permitting the amendment of the complaint, after the case was submitted for decision.

[1-3] Where property is conveyed from a husband to his wife, with intent to make it her separate property, even though it were purchased from the community funds, the conveyance operates as a gift from the husband, and the wife takes it as her separate property. Civ. Code, § 164; 13 Cal. Jur. 752, § 50; 5 R. C. L. 846, § 26; Alferitz v. Arrivillaga, 143 Cal. 646, 77 P. 657. The intention with which the conveyance is made must be determined from the language of the instrument, together with all the facts, circumstances, and declaration of the parties disclosed by the evidence as occurring at the time of the transaction. Gilmour v. N. Pasadena L. Co., 178 Cal. 6, 171 P. 1066; Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 P. 308; Cohn v. Smith, 37 Cal. App. 764, 174 P. 682. Where a deed is executed from a husband to his wife, and it contains the specific declaration that the land is conveyed as her separate property, this recital is strong evidence of his intention to relinquish his claim upon it as community property, and this presumption can only be rebutted by satisfactory evidence that this form of conveyance was procured by fraud, mistake or undue influence. 13 Cal. Jur. 855, § 50; Miller v. Brode, 186 Cal. 409, 199 P. 531; Estate of McCauley, 138 Cal. 546, 71 P. 458; Swain v. Duane, 48 Cal. 358. In the case of Miller v. Brode, supra, it is said:

"* * * Although the property is purchased with community funds, and is conveyed to the wife with the husband's consent by a deed expressly describing it as her separate estate, it is as if the husband himself had conveyed community property to her by deed expressing that she took it as her separate estate. Such a conveyance would be nothing more nor less than an express gift by the husband to the wife of community property. Swain v. Duane, 48 Cal. 358; Shanahan v. Crampton, 92 Cal. 9 [28 P. 50]. There is no impediment to a husband making such a gift if he desires, and if he does it the property at once becomes the wife's separate property, and the effect of the conveyance in this respect cannot be avoided, except by avoiding the conveyance itself. This, of course, cannot be done, except for fraud, mistake, or some similar ground. In the absence of some such ground for setting aside the transaction, it is wholly immaterial that the property was community property before the husband conveyed it to the wife, or in case it were conveyed to her by a third person that the consideration given for it was community property. Its character is changed at once by the conveyance to the wife as her separate property, either by the husband directly or by a third person with his consent."

[4] In transactions between a husband and wife, the rule with respect to confidential relations obtains (Civ. Code, § 158), and precludes either from obtaining an unfair advantage of the other through fraud, mistake or undue influence. Such transactions are considered subject to the rules which affect the relationship between a trustee and beneficiary; their relationship is in fact presumed to be confidential (13 Cal. Jur. 860, § 54; Estate of Cover, 188 Cal. 133, 143, 204 P. 583), and, where either obtains an advantage over the other, the transaction is presumed to have been without adequate consideration, and to have been secured through undue influence, and the burden is then cast upon him who has the advantage to show that it was fair and free from fraud or undue influence. 13 Cal. Jur. 860, §§ 54-56; Locke Paddon v. Locke Paddon, 194 Cal. 73, 80, 227 P. 715; Fenley v. Bursell, 61 Cal. App. 511, 516, 215 P. 114; Williamson v. Williamson, 41 Cal. App. 721, 183 P. 301. But where dissension exists between a husband and wife, and they have become estranged on that account, the execution of a conveyance of property from the husband to the wife, which is free from fraud or undue influence, made as an inducement for reconciliation, harmony, and the renewal of marital relations, constitutes a sufficient consideration for the execution of the instrument. Williamson v. Williamson, supra; Tillaux v. Tillaux, 115 Cal. 663, 47 P. 691.

[5] The evidence in the instant case is without substantial conflict, to the effect that the deed and bill of sale were executed and delivered from respondent to appellant as an inducement for reconciliation, the restoration of harmony, and resumption of marital relations. The respondent testified that, for several years prior to the execution of the instruments, they had lived in a state of domestic turbulence; quarrels were frequent, and the wife often accused him of abusing her, and of spending his money on other women. Upon inquiry as to the seriousness of their trouble prior to the execution of the instruments, appellant replied: "That is the point; we were going to have some separation." In response to the question as to why he had executed the conveyances, respondent said:

"I thought, if I deeded the place to her, and she was not worrying, * * * it would be better. She was grumbling and growling all the time. I thought to myself, it would be [a] better way, and make a better home, if I deeded the property to her, and lived there just the same. I spoke to her, and asked her if it would be all right, and she said, 'Yes.' I said, 'All right; but you must quit your grumbling, and growling, and [we must] go ahead and live together, if I do it.' And she agreed to it."

[6] It further appears that at the time the deed and bill of sale were executed in the office of Senator Nelson another instrument was executed and delivered to the respective parties, which was subsequently lost, but which apparently provided, in effect, that in the event of future trouble between them, resulting in a separation, this property which had just been conveyed should be in lieu of maintenance. When asked for the contents of this document, appellant replied:

"It was an agreement, if I left him, or either one left the other, each would * * * support ourselves."

After the execution of these instruments, the parties appear to have lived together for several years in comparative harmony, and then hostilities were renewed, and the condition became more intolerable than before, according to respondent's testimony. There was, however, ample evidence to indicate that the trouble was not due entirely to the conduct of appellant; but, accepting it most favorably to respondent, the record is entirely devoid of evidence that the instruments in question were procured by fraud, deceit, or undue influence. They were voluntarily made by the grantor at his own suggestion, for the purpose of reconciling their differences. Evidently this effort was a failure. Respondent then brought this suit for divorce, and sought to set aside these conveyances. This, then, was nothing more than a failure of purpose, or of consideration. Neither the complaint, the findings, nor the evidence warrants a charge of a lack of good faith on the part of appellant. It was not alleged, and is not contended, that she deceived respondent in making this agreement to avoid trouble, or that she procured the conveyances by this means with a previous intention not to fulfill her promise. Nor is it alleged that respondent relied upon any such promises. So far as the record is concerned, both parties entered upon the negotiations in perfect good faith with a view of securing a reconciliation. All that is charged is that she afterwards failed to fulfill her agreement. This is an insufficient showing upon which to set aside a deed upon the ground of fraud or mistake.

The case of Tillaux v. Tillaux, supra, is very similar to the instant case in both facts and issues presented. In that case the parties were husband and wife. Serious domestic trouble existed between them. With the apparent object of reconciliation, the husband voluntarily made a deed of conveyance to certain real property to his wife. At the same time they executed another instrument, which purported to declare their relationship toward each other in the event of a future separation. This agreement contained this statement:

"They do hereby each of them agree not to molest or interfere with one or the other, in or about the business or living of the other."

Thereafter the parties continued to live together for about four years, when domestic trouble again arose. They were separated, and a suit was commenced to set aside the deed upon substantially the same grounds contended for in this case. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and the order was affirmed on appeal. The appellant there contended that the deed was void, because there was no consideration for the deed; that the defendant's promise not to molest or disturb plaintiff did not constitute a consideration, because it was a mere agreement to perform the duties required by law; that the deed was void, because the wife secured advantages through the confidential relationship of husband and wife. To all of which contentions Mr. Justice McFarland replied: "We do not think that these positions are tenable." After reasoning these contentions to a logical conclusion, the able jurist finally holds:

"There is no averment that she had no intention to perform the agreement * * * to live peaceably with appellant in the usual affectionate relation of husband and wife."

[7] This appears to be the precise situation in the instant case. There are neither allegations, proof, nor findings in this case to the effect that appellant did not intend to carry out her agreement to preserve harmony, nor that respondent relied upon her promise, or was deceived thereby. Giving respondent's evidence its full force, it falls far short of proof of fraud, deceit, mistake, or undue influence. 12 Cal. Jur. 812; Lawrence v. Gayetty, 78 Cal. 126, 20 P. 382, 12 Am. St. Rep. 29; Mitchell v. Cal. Pac. T. I. Co. (Cal. App.) 248 P. 1035; James v. James (Cal. App.) 251 P. 666. In the last case above cited the syllabus correctly states the law applicable as follows:

"A deed without fraud in its inception conveys the title, and is not void on account of failure of consideration, either in whole or in part. And inasmuch as acts done subsequent to the execution of a deed cannot affect its integrity, a subsequent failure of consideration, or breach of personal covenant not amounting to a condition, will not avoid the deed."

Appellant challenges the findings of the court to the effect that the phrase "as and for her separate property" was written into the deed and bill of sale by inadvertence and mistake, and that respondent understood and spoke English poorly, and that the instruments in question were neither read nor explained to respondent before he executed them. A careful examination of the record forces us to the conclusion that these findings are not supported by the evidence. Sifted to a final analysis, the bare presumption which accompanies confidential relationship of a husband and wife is about all that is left to support the issue of fraud or mistake. Senator Nelson, one of appellant's attorneys, who drew the deed and bill of sale at the request of respondent, testified that Mr. and Mrs. Dale came to his office October 23, 1918, and that respondent told him he wanted to deed this property to his wife; that he intended to leave her, and he wanted it so arranged that she could not come back on him for support in the future; that he wanted her to be able to collect the money from the creamery and handle the property without his signature, exactly as her own. Mr. Nelson also said that he thereupon drew the deed and bill of sale so as to carry out respondent's desire, incorporating the clause "as and for her separate property" in each document, and explained the instruments to respondent, who said that was exactly what he wanted. These instruments were then delivered to appellant, who was advised to record them, which she subsequently did. At the same time at which these two conveyances were made, the senator also drew up an agreement in duplicate, providing that the property described in the deed and bill of sale in the event of a separation of the parties, was to be in lieu of all future maintenance of appellant, and prohibiting her from coming back upon respondent for further support. This agreement was drawn pursuant to the directions of respondent, and a copy was given to each of the parties. Mr. Nelson was then asked regarding his explanation of these instruments to respondent:

"Q. Did you read the deed and bill of sale to Mr. Dale? A. The language used in the deed was explained to Mr. Dale. * * * I explained to him * * * that it would give her full title and control of the land described and the personal property mentioned, and that was just exactly what he wanted. * * *

"Q. At the time you drew this deed and bill of sale, you were acting as attorney for Mrs. Dale, and not for him? A. No, sir; Mr. Dale was doing the talking, and Mrs. Dale assented to what he had to say. * * * I was acting for both parties."

Respondent substantially admitted that Mr. Nelson was acting as his attorney in preparing the documents. He testified that he voluntarily went to Senator Nelson's office to have them drawn.

"Q. Why did you go back to Mr. Nelson's office? A. Well, I understood that Mr. Nelson would be willing on account of his position (as assistant district attorney) to help a man out for a reasonable fee, for anything like that—of course, he was an attorney, and that is the reason I went there. * * *

[8] Moreover, while respondent did testify, in a very unsatisfactory manner, that Mr. Nelson did not read or explain the deed or bill of sale to him, he failed to deny that he had told his attorney just what Mr. Nelson charged him with saying with relation to his intent and purpose in making the conveyances to his wife, as above related. It must therefore be assumed that the record is undisputed to the effect that respondent instructed his attorney to draw the conveyances to the property in favor of his wife, so that she could handle it exactly as her own without the necessity of his signature, and so that she could not demand of him future support, after he had left her, as he intended to do. This is precisely what Mr. Nelson attempted to do by the terms of these instruments, and it would therefore appear to be true that the purport and effect of the clause "as and for her separate property" was duly authorized by respondent, and hence was not inserted in the documents by inadvertence or mistake.

There is no evidence that respondent was ignorant of the English language. Carefully scrutinizing the lengthy examination of respondent as a witness, this court is satisfied that he possessed a very good knowledge of the English language, and appeared to clearly understand every question, which he invariably answered directly and intelligently. Regarding his opportunity for knowing the terms of the instruments, he testified:

"Q. Did you read the deed and bill of sale? A. I did partly. * * *

"Q. Did Mr. Nelson read them over? A. I can't say whether he did or not. * * *

[9] In view of the positive statements of Mr. Nelson that he drew the instruments according to respondent's directions, and that he explained them to him, that they expressed a reasonable solution of the situation existing between the parties at that time and that respondent failed to deny the statements he was alleged to have made to his lawyer with respect to his intent and purpose in making the conveyances to his wife together with his equivocal replies regarding the reading or explaining of the instruments to him by Mr. Nelson, the record falls far short of supporting the findings to the effect that respondent was ignorant of the terms of the instruments, or that the clause "as and for her separate property" was inserted in them through inadvertence or mistake.

[10] In an action to reform an instrument upon the ground of fraud or mistake, the evidence must be clear and convincing, and not merely equivocal or contradictory, leaving the question of fraud or mistake in doubt. 3 Jones Comm. on Ev. 2784, § 1525; 2 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. (4th Ed.) 1756, § 859; Id. 4740, § 2103; 22 Cal. Jur. 739, § 22; Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 660, 675; Burt v.

L. A. Olive Growers Ass'n, 175 Cal. 668, 675, 166 P. 993. In the last case above cited, the court says:

"Where so solemn an instrument * * * is sought to be reformed for mistake, 'evidence of the mistake must be clear and convincing, and not loose, equivocal, or contradictory leaving the mistake open to doubt.'"

[11, 12] Under the facts of this case the respondent may not complain because he failed to read or understand the terms of the instruments. This duty was imposed upon his attorney whom he employed to draw the documents. A grantor who executes a deed of conveyance, in the absence of a showing of fraud or mistake, will not be relieved from the effect of the clear terms of the instrument, merely because he neglected to read it, or even if he is unable to read or understand it. Reasonable prudence requires one to either read the document he proposes to execute, or, if he is unable to do so, to procure the assistance of some one who can read and explain its terms. Burt v. L. A. Olive Growers Ass'n, supra; Russell v. Riley & Peterson (Cal. App.) 256 P. 557; Hawkins v. Hawkins, 50 Cal. 558. In the last case above cited, it is said:

"The care and diligence of a prudent man in the transaction of his business would demand an examination of the instrument before signing, either by himself or by some one for him in whom he had a right to place confidence. The fact that the plaintiff was illiterate, and could read manuscript only with difficulty, did not render this precaution less necessary."

It is unnecessary to pass upon other points raised by the appellant.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed, so far as it purports to reform the deed and bill of sale involved, by striking therefrom the clause "as and for her separate property," and so far as it purports to distribute the property described in said instrument as community property, to the respective parties, share and share alike. Otherwise, the judgment is affirmed, and will remain in full force and effect.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 21, 1927.

Criminal law — 274—Denial of motion to withdraw plea of guilty of rape held not abuse of discretion.

In prosecution for rape, evidence that defendant did not understand nature of charge to which he was pleading guilty held not sufficient to render denial of motion to withdraw plea of guilty of rape abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Douglas L. Edmonds, Judge.

Albert Pulk was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

George E. Stoddard, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant, by an information in two counts, was charged with the crime of rape of a 12 year old girl. The counts are alike, except that the dates are different. When the case was called for trial the defendant, who was then represented by counsel, pleaded guilty on the first count and the second count was ordered off the calendar. He made an application for probation. While that application was under consideration the defendant gave notice of motion that he be permitted to withdraw the plea of guilty for the purpose of entering another and different plea. The notice did not state upon what ground the motion would be made, and was not supported by any affidavits. However, the court received oral testimony of several witnesses, and from a reading of that testimony it appears that the principal reason relied upon by defendant's counsel in claiming that this motion should be granted was that at the time of entering the defendant's plea of guilty he did not understand that he was pleading guilty to the crime of rape, but thought that he was pleading guilty to the lesser offense of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. The sole ground of appeal now presented is that the denial of defendant's motion was an abuse of discretion.

At the hearing on said motion the defendant was not sworn as a witness but was permitted to state to the court that at the time when his plea was entered he understood that he was pleading guilty "to contributing." He said that he had heard that offense of contributing to delinquency spoken of several times. But on closer examination defendant admitted that he had not heard it "in these proceedings." Mr. Bush, who had been the defendant's attorney when the plea was entered, stated to the court on the hearing of said motion, in substance, that at the time the plea was entered he made it clear to the defendant that it would be advisable for him to enter a plea of guilty to one count of rape, and that the district attorney would allow the other count to go off the calendar. If we disregard these unsworn statements of the defendant and of his former counsel, there remains the fact that in his application for probation the de-defendant stated that he had pleaded guilty to the crime of rape. As against the defendant's statement that he signed that application in blank and had not known how it was filled out, there is the direct testimony of Miss Scott, secretary of defendant's counsel at that time, that she obtained from the defendant the data for filling out said application, and after filling it out she took it back to the defendant and he signed it. There is some evidence tending to prove that on the day in question Miss Scott was given only one pass at the jail to see the defendant, and that it is the custom to have a separate pass for each visit. But this, at most creates only a conflict in the evidence. We think the court was fully justified in its conclusion that the defendant, at the time when he pleaded guilty, clearly understood the nature and effect of his plea, and that he was not misled or caused to act under any misapprehension concerning his situation as the result of such plea.

GRANUCCI v. CLAASEN et al. (Civ. 6062.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 15, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1928.

1. Municipal corporations §808(9)—If owner knew or by exercise of reasonable diligence could have known of dangerous condition of driveway over sidewalk, statutory notice was unnecessary.

Owner and lessee in possession had duty to exercise reasonable care to keep part of sidewalk, over which abutting property owner had driveway in safe condition, and if they knew or by exercise of reasonable diligence should have known of dangerous condition of driveway, statutory notice to them was not required to render them liable to person injured through defect therein.

2. Appeal and error §901—Burden of showing error is on appellant.

Burden is on appellant to show error.

3. Municipal corporations §808(9)—Pedestrian alleging injuries by defect in driveway over sidewalk must show defendants' knowledge indicating lack of ordinary care.

In action against owner and lessee in possession of premises for injury through defect in driveway over defendants' sidewalk, maintained by abutting property owner, appellant from judgment on directed verdict for defendants must, by printing from record, show defendants had such knowledge that defects in driveway could be attributed to their failure to use ordinary care to keep it in safe condition.

4. Pleading §129(2)—Failure of defendants denying ultimate facts to deny specifically allegation that driveway over sidewalk, on which plaintiff fell, required constant attention to keep it safe held not to take place of evidence.

In action against owner and lessee in possession for fall on driveway over sidewalk, in which ultimate facts alleged by plaintiff were denied, failure to deny specifically allegation that condition of driveway was such as to require constant care and attention to keep it safe did not take place of evidence, in determining whether evidence showed knowledge by defendants and lack of care.

5. Municipal corporations §808(9)—Defendants not shown to have notice or knowledge of defects in driveway over sidewalk held not liable for pedestrian's injury.

In action against owner and lessee in possession for injury from fall on driveway built over their cement sidewalk, evidence failing to show either notice or knowledge of defects by defendants held to justify directing verdict for them, regardless of city ordinance requiring nails and spikes in wooden sidewalks to be kept driven down, even if such ordinance were applicable to driveway over cement sidewalk.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Rosa Granucci against Mary J. Claasen and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. Maxwell Peyser and Joseph E. Isaacs, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Andrew F. Burke, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. Defendant Mary J. Claasen was the owner of certain property on Mission street, in San Francisco. Defendant John J. Claasen, Jr., her son, was the lessee in possession of the property. A plank driveway had been maintained for 10 years across the cement sidewalk in front of the premises for the accommodation of defendants' heavy wagons and teams going in and out of the premises. Where the plank driveway intersected the cement sidewalk its woodwork took the place of the cement for the distance of its width, and its surface was level with the surface of the cement sidewalk on either side. Plaintiff in using the sidewalk as a member of the public, and while crossing the driveway, fell and became injured by tripping upon some spikes which had partly worked up from the surface of the planks. This action was for plaintiff's damages thus caused. The court at the conclusion of the evidence directed a verdict in favor of the defendants. From the judgment upon that verdict the plaintiff appeals upon a typewritten record.

The motion for a directed verdict was granted because the court was of the opinion that there was no evidence of either notice or knowledge which would make defendants liable for the plaintiff's injury caused by protruding nails. In granting the motion for a directed verdict, the court said:

"Where is your evidence to show that the defendant knew, or by the use of ordinary diligence should have known? You introduced no testimony on that point at all. That is where your case is lacking."

[1] Upon this appeal it is the contention of respondent that the driveway in question was a part of the sidewalk, and that the property owner is not liable for defects in it except in the same way as for any ordinary sidewalk; that is to say, after certain designated kinds of notification prescribed by street laws and city ordinances. The appellant contends that the defendants are liable for their failure to use ordinary care to keep the driveway, where it coincides with the surface of the sidewalk, in sound and safe condition, upon the authority of Monsch v. Pellissier, 187 Cal. 790, 204 P. 224. That case distinguishes between the property owner's duty and liability in case of the ordinary sidewalk and in a case where the property owner uses the sidewalk area for some private use. It is there said that, in the latter case, the law casts upon the owner a duty, to be discharged with reasonable care, of keeping that part of the sidewalk in proper and safe condition, and that if the property owner knew, or if by the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known, of the dangerous condition of the sidewalk, no statutory notice is required. The sidewalk area here was in part put to the private use of the abutting property owner. The duty of the defendants here is the same as in Monsch v. Pellissier, supra; whether their liability is the same depends upon whether they had certain knowledge or information.

[2, 3] The burden of showing error is on the appellant. She must, by printing from the record, show that the defendants had such knowledge that the defects in the driveway could be attributed to their failure to use ordinary care to keep it in safe condition. Appellant's only attempt to point out evidence of the defendants' knowledge consists of piecing together one admission in the pleading, and one part of the testimony of defendant Mary J. Claasen in the following manner: First, the complaint alleged that:

"By reason of said use of said driveway by said defendants, the said driveway was, * * * being constantly worn, and was in such a condition as to require constant repair and attention in order to keep the same in such a condition as to permit the public to pass safely over and upon said driveway."

This allegation was not specifically denied in defendants' answer. Second, defendant

Mary J. Claasen testified, upon cross-examination, that the driveway had been down for 10 years, and that during that time no repairs whatsoever had been made.

Counsel's statement concerning the designated testimony sounds like 10 years of neglect. The testimony itself is equally consistent with 10 years of vigilance. It follows:

"Q. You say that you examined this runway, and you used to go out there and look at it, and that when you looked at it it was in good condition? A. Exactly.

"Q. Did you ever do anything or order any work to be done on that runway or keep it in repair? A. Well, it was not necessary. It was in first-class condition all the time.

"Q. I ask you did you ever do anything or order any work to be done in that period of 10 years on that runway? A. No; I did not have to.

"Q. All that you did was to go out there and look at it occasionally? A. Exactly."

[4] The specified allegation of the complaint, which is claimed to be admitted by failure to deny, is not material to plaintiff's cause of action. The exact amount of supervision called for by the driveway is a matter of evidence. Where the allegations of ultimate facts are denied as in this case, the failure to deny evidentiary allegations does not take the place of evidence. Canfield v. Tobias, 21 Cal. 349; Siter v. Jewett, 33 Cal. 92, 96; Weinberger v. Weidman, 134 Cal. 599, 66 P. 869.

[5] The evidence wholly failing to show either notice or knowledge on the part of defendants, we need not concern ourselves with determining exactly what kind and what amount of such notice or knowledge is prescribed by law for defendant Mary J. Claasen, as the lessor out of possession, nor for defendant John H. Claasen, Jr., lessee in possession.

Ordinance No. 890 of San Francisco requires all persons owning real property fronting upon any street where wooden sidewalks are laid to keep all nails and spikes driven down. It is a matter of argument between the parties as to whether the violation of such an ordinance would violate a duty owed to the plaintiff. It is doubtful whether a plank driveway laid across or intersecting a cement sidewalk constitutes a wooden sidewalk within the meaning of the ordinance. But if it is to be considered a wooden sidewalk, it would be unreasonable to so construe the ordinance that at the very moment a nail showed its head above the surface of the wood for any cause whatever, the owner then and thereby would be guilty of a misdemeanor and consequently of negligence per se. The owner should have some notice or some knowledge of the defect. At the very least, the owner should have knowledge of some fact, or there must be shown to exist circumstances from which a reasonable person ought to know of the defect, otherwise a misdemeanor or a case of negligence per se is not made out. For this reason the deficiency of evidence pointed out by the trial court justified the directed verdict, even if the ordinance is applicable.

The judgment is affirmed.

DOW v. BANK OF ITALY. (Civ. 5048.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 8, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 6, 1928.

1. Executors and administrators $\S$ 221(5)—Finding that services rendered deceased were fully paid under agreement whereby automobile and home were purchased for claimant held proper under evidence.

In action to recover under claim for services rendered deceased, and for care and board, finding of court that services were fully paid for under agreement whereby deceased purchased automobile and home for joint use of herself and claimant, held proper under the evidence.

2. Executors and administrators $\S$ 449—Evidence of executed agreement to purchase automobile and home for claimant held not variance from issue of validity of claims against estate (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 469).

Under issue raised by pleadings in action against estate for services as to whether or not claims presented represented valid unpaid indebtedness, testimony as to executed agreement to purchase automobile and home for claimant held not fatal variance, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 469.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Suit by Robert H. Dow against the Bank of Italy, as executor of the estate of Elizabeth Scott, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dwight V. Maurice and Charles L. Evans, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Walter E. Burke, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff, the appellant herein, brought this suit in the superior court against the defendant, the respondent herein, as executor of the estate of Elizabeth Scott, deceased, to recover on two claims for services alleged to have been performed for the deceased by himself and his wife, Sophia A. Dow. The trial was before the court sitting without a jury, and the findings are that all of the allegations of the complaint, referring specifically to the basis of the claims, are untrue. There is little, if any, conflict in the evidence, the contest before the trial court and here being on points of pleading and the construction of oral testimony.

One of the claims is for services rendered deceased at her request by plaintiff and his wife for "household work, sewing, nursing, and general care continuously from June 26, 1920, to August 26, 1922," the alleged reasonable value thereof being $3,920; and another is for "board furnished and cooking from June 26, 1920, to August 26, 1922," by plaintiff and his wife at the request of and to the deceased, the alleged reasonable value thereof being $1,300. There is no contention but that the services were rendered and were worth the sums claimed. Defendant, however, denies any liability, upon the ground that the services were included in an agreement upon which full payment has been made.

[1] Mrs. Dow had lived in the house of deceased and her husband, Charles Scott, in Indiana, ten years before her marriage. In March, 1920, she was living in California, and at Scott's request and expense she returned to the Scotts' home, finding Mr. Scott quite ill. Scott said to Mrs. Dow, quoting from the transcript, page 36:

"Well, he said to me, he said he had had a talk with the doctor, and the doctor said he positively could not get well; and he said, 'Sis is blind and not able to do a thing'—that was his wife—and for your coming here and taking care of me—I don't know how long that will be—and taking care of her—I want you to take her out there to California, and she will buy a home and an automobile; and for coming back here and taking care of us, and that you take care of her and keep her nice and clean, you will be well paid for your care.'"

Scott lived but a short time, and Mrs. Dow and Mrs. Scott came to Los Angeles. An automobile was purchased by Mrs. Scott for the use of the Dows and herself, and a home was purchased for $7,000, being taken under a joint tenancy in the names of Mr. and Mrs. Dow and Mrs. Scott; $5,000 of this sum was paid directly from Mrs. Scott's funds, and the other $2,000 was paid by plaintiff, which sum was derived from money Scott had furnished Dow. After Mrs. Scott's death, her joint tenancy was terminated, and the title to the property was held by Mr. and Mrs. Dow.

Several witnesses testified to conversations with Mrs. Scott in the Los Angeles home in which she confirmed in general the conversation above related, and repeated that they (the Dows) would be well paid for what they were doing for her. At the conclusion of the testimony the court, responding to an offer by one of counsel to furnish authorities, remarked:

"No; I don't care for the authority, because I don't think the plaintiff has made out a case. The record shows that, according to the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses, she came out here for the purpose of fulfilling the wishes of her deceased husband; and I am convinced that the testimony of those witnesses, particularly the testimony of Mrs. Daly, that she was to have the home and the automobile in consideration of taking care of the husband during his lifetime, during his illness there, and during the illness of the deceased here."

It needs but a statement of the case to see that the court was within its discretion in arriving at its conclusion.

[2] Plaintiff contends that a fatal variance exists between the proof and the issues as raised by the pleadings, and that stipulations arrived at during the trial defined the issues differently from those found upon by the trial court. We have carefully examined these contentions, and find that the issue fairly tried was whether or not the claims presented were valid unpaid indebtednesses due from the estate to plaintiff, and that the conclusions of the court as quoted herein were based upon testimony within the issues. The findings more formally speak only the conclusion of the court. "No variance between the allegation in a pleading and the proof is to be deemed material, unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits. * * *" Code Civ. Proc. § 469.

Judgment affirmed.

STUART v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 5979.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 14, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1928.

1. Taxation ⇨615—Validity of tax sale must be determined by law at time.

The validity of a tax sale is to be determined by the law as it stood on the date thereof.

2. Taxation ⇨770—Auditor's failure to annex affidavit to book containing assessment on which tax deed was based held cured by statute (Pol. Code, § 3732; Stats. 1915, c. 24).

Auditor's failure to annex his affidavit to book containing assessment on which tax deed was based, as required by Pol. Code, § 3732, was cured by Stats. 1915, c. 24, which imposed no new conditions of redemption, but merely waived irregularity not affecting substantial rights of parties.

3. Taxation ⇨745—Statute curing auditor's failure to annex affidavit to book containing assessment on which tax deed was based held not impliedly repealed by amendment of Code section violated (Stats. 1915, c. 24; Act June 4, 1915, amending Pol. Code, § 3732).

Stats. 1915, c. 24, curing auditor's failure to annex affidavit to book containing assessment on which tax deed was based, was not impliedly repealed by Act June 4, 1915, amending Pol. Code, § 3732, requiring such affidavit.

4. Statutes ⇨159—Inconsistency must be such that both statutes cannot be given effect to work repeal by implication, which is not favored.

Inconsistency between two acts must be of such degree that both cannot be given force and effect before there is a repeal by implication, which is not favored.

5. Taxation ⇨319(2)—Proof that public officials performed duties mentioned in statute, curing auditor's failure to annex affidavit to book, containing assessment on which tax deed was based, is unnecessary (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15; Stats. 1915, c. 24).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15, proof that public officials performed duties mentioned in first sentence of Stats. 1915, c. 24, curing auditor's failure to annex affidavit to book containing assessment on which tax deed was based, is not necessary.

6. Taxation ⇨630—Delinquent notice, first inserted on June 5th before tax sale on July 2d, held timely (Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3766, 3767).

Delinquent notice, inserted on June 5th, 12th, and 19th, before tax sale on July 2d, was given within time required by Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3766, 3767, which do not require that all insertions be made prior to June 5th.

7. Taxation ⇨793—Holder of tax deed held not estopped to sue to quiet title by asking quitclaim deed.

Holder of tax deed held not estopped to bring action to quiet title by asking former owner to sign a quitclaim deed.

8. Taxation ⇨734(7)—Tax deed held not void because tax collector did not file copy of publication of delinquent list (Pol. Code, §§ 3769, 3787).

Tax deed held not void because of tax collector's failure to file copy of publication of delinquent list in county clerk's office, as provided by Pol. Code, § 3769, in view of section 3787, declaring deed conclusive evidence that copy was filed.

9. Taxation ⇨734(7)—Invalidity of tax sale for failure of delinquent list publication to state penalties due held not shown, where record did not disclose whether document omitting such statement was part of tax record of 1913-1914 or 1918-1919 (Pol. Code, § 3764).

Invalidity of tax sale for failure of publication of delinquent list to set forth amount due for penalties, as required by Pol. Code, § 3764, held not shown, where record did not disclose whether document omitting such statement was part of tax record of 1913-1914 or of 1918-1919.

10. Taxation ⇨630—Omission of statement that tax sale was for penalties, in document constituting only part of publication of delinquent list, held not fatal (Pol. Code, § 3764).

That document, constituting part of publication of delinquent tax list and attached to notice of sale, omitted statement that sale would be for penalties, as well as taxes and costs, as provided by Pol. Code, § 3764, was not fatal, as one is bound to read entire publication.

11. Taxation $\hookrightarrow$ 810(1)—It must be assumed, contrary not appearing, that part of sum paid by tax purchaser to acquire state's title was for subsequent delinquent taxes, and that property theretofore sold to state was designated on delinquent list (Pol. Code, § 3764).

Nothing to contrary appearing, it must be assumed that at least part of sum paid by tax purchaser "in pursuit of state's title" was for unpaid taxes for subsequent year, that such taxes became delinquent, that property was on delinquent list for latter year, and that such list was so arranged as to designate in particular manner property theretofore sold to state, as required by Pol. Code, § 3764.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by James H. Stuart against Harold R. Smith and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Charles Lantz, Winslow P. Hyatt, Frederick C. Huber, and Samuel M. Garroway, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John F. Poole, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. Action to quiet title. If the tax deed held by the plaintiff is invalid by reason of any of the irregularities mentioned by the defendant, the judgment should be reversed, otherwise it should be affirmed.

[1, 2] 1. The defendant calls to our attention the fact that the auditor did not annex his affidavit to the assessment book of 1913 which contained the assessment on which the tax deed was based. He claims that the omission was fatal, and he cites Political Code, § 3732, and Moyer v. Wilson, 166 Cal. 261, 135 P. 1125. The sale involved in this action took place July 2, 1914. The validity of the sale is to be determined by the law, as it stood on the latter date. Teralta Land, etc., Co. v. Shaffer, 116 Cal. 518, 48 P. 613, 58 Am. St. Rep. 194. At that time the curative act, chapter 24 of the Statutes of 1915, was in force. If the alleged defect existed, it was cured by the express terms of that statute if the statute did not "apply new and more onerous conditions to the right to redeem than those which existed when the sale was made." Teralta Land, etc., Co. v. Shaffer, supra. A most careful reading of the act of 1915 does not disclose that it imposed any "new conditions." It merely waived an irregularity that did not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 560, 567, 89 P. 352.

[3-5] Nor may it correctly be said that when on June 4, 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1170), the Legislature amended Political Code, § 3732, it did by implication repeal the above-mentioned curative act. Repeals by implication are not favored. The inconsistency between two acts must be of such a degree that the two cannot be given force and effect before there is a repeal by implication. Bateman v. Colgan, 111 Cal. 580, 586, 44 P. 238. It may not be said, therefore, that the Code section as amended repealed the curative act. The defendant quotes and emphasizes the first sentence of the act in question and argues that the plaintiff should have introduced proof to the effect that the public officials had performed their duties as mentioned in that sentence. The proof was not necessary. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15.

[6] 2. Because all of the insertions of the delinquent notice were not made prior to June 5, 1913, the defendant claims that the notice was not given in time. Pol. Code, §§ 3764, 3766, and 3767. The statute contains no words to that effect, and no reason whatever appears why the statute should be so construed. The notice was inserted on June 5th, 12th and 19th, and the sale was held July 2d. The statute was followed in every respect.

3. Because the auditor did not attach his affidavit to the corrected assessment roll of 1913 the defendant argues that the auditor had no authority to compute the tax, the assessor had no authority to levy the tax, there was no tax to become a lien, there was no sale to the state, the state acquired no title, and the property in question should not have been listed on the delinquent list of 1919. He cites and relies on Leonard v. Jaffray, 175 Cal. 371, 165 P. 956. The case cited is not in point. The value, as a factor in this action, of the failure of the auditor to execute and attach his affidavit, has been considered above.

[7] 4. The plaintiff testified that before he commenced this action he called on Moyer, the grantor of Chapman, and asked him if he would sign a quitclaim deed, and that Moyer replied he could not do so and directed the plaintiff to commence an action to quiet title. The defendant claims that the plaintiff is therefore estopped. The record presents no questions of estoppel.

[8] 5. It is next claimed that the tax deed was void because the tax collector did not file in the office of the county clerk a copy of the publication of the delinquent list. Pol. Code, § 3769. The statute does not say the effect of such omission invalidates the deed. On the other hand, the statute provides that plaintiff's deed is conclusive evidence that a copy of the publication was filed. Pol. Code, § 3787. That such is the meaning of that section was held in Haaren v. High, 97 Cal. 445, 447, 32 P. 518.

[9] 6. The last point presented is that in printing the delinquent list the publication "did not set forth the amount due for penalties," and therefore the sale was void. Bus-senius v. Warden, 71 Cal. App. 717, 722, 236 P. 371. In making the point we do not understand the defendant to claim that the delinquent list should show separately the amount of the delinquent tax, the amount of the cost, the amount of the interest, and the amount of the penalties. But it should show "the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs." Pol. Code, § 3764. The vice in the contention rests in this, the record does not disclose facts on which the defendants can predicate their point of law. The record contains some oral testimony and some deleted written instruments. The oral testimony touching on the subject was given by the witness Pfeiffer, a deputy tax collector. He testified:

"That the delinquent tax list of the county of Los Angeles of taxes delinquent in 1913 was published on June 5, 12, and 19, 1914. The sale for delinquent taxes of 1913 was held July 2, 1914, the date fixed in the notice of delinquent tax sale for that year. The notice of sale does not contain a detailed statement of all delinquent taxes, penalties, costs, interest, and expenses up to the date of such sale, as to lot 9, block F, The Palms, but does state what purports to be an amount as follows."

Then follow the deleted instruments. Of the publications for the year 1913-1914 the record purports to contain (1) the notice of sale (folios 99-103), and (2) the affidavit of the tax collector (folios 104, 105). In so far as the foregoing instruments are concerned, it is not claimed that either of them contained a misstatement. Immediately following the affidavit above mentioned appears an "Addenda Notice" (folios 105-111). That notice does not purport to be of the proceedings of 1914, but does purport to be of the proceedings had in 1919. It contains no false recital. It is signed "W. O. Welch, Tax Collector of Los Angeles County, California." Then follows immediately without any separation the following:

"The property to be sold and the subject of the notice is situated in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, particularly described as follows, to wit:

"No. 2151, The Palms, as per Book 21, p. 43 of Misc. Records, lot 9, block F, assessed to David B. Moyer. Lowest acceptable bid, $2.53.

"Dollars and cents.

"Public notice is hereby given that the figures opposite, following, and last after each description of property in the foregoing list were intended to and do represent, respectively, in dollars and cents, or in dollars and cents, as the case may be, the amount due for taxes and costs in the manner as follows: * * *

"W. O. Welch,

"Tax Collector, Los Angeles County, Cal."

[10] The document just quoted does contain a misstatement, to wit, it recites that the sale will be for "the amount due for taxes and costs," instead of "the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs due. * * *" But the record does not disclose whether the document is a part of the tax record of 1913-1914 or of the tax record of 1918-1919. It does not appear to be a document required by any statute. On its face it appears to be a collateral instrument explaining the abbreviations used in some other instrument—possibly the delinquent list. Assuming that it was a part of the publication of the year 1918-1919, the other papers which went to make up that publication are not set forth, and we are unable to ascertain from the record the entire contents of the publication. We may not assume that the document last mentioned was the entire publication—it does not purport to be the notice of sale or the delinquent list itself. On the other hand, assuming it was a part of the delinquent publication of 1913-1914, then it follows that it was attached to the notice of sale which is printed in the transcript and which was not subject to the attack made by the appellant. Still assuming the document to be a part of the publication of 1913-1914, and that it was attached to the notice of sale, and that it contained a misstatement, to wit, that the sale would be for "taxes and costs," instead of "the amount of taxes, penalties and costs due," the error was not fatal. This is so because one is bound to read the entire publication and may not stop with reading only a portion. In the case of Best v. Wohlford, 153 Cal. 17, 94 P. 98, the court was considering a delinquent notice. One part of the notice was ambiguous, and in a different place the notice on the same subject was quite clear. Speaking for the court, Mr. Justice Angellotti, at p. 22 (94 P. 100), said:

"We do not see how the owner of lot 4 in block 178 of the Rancho Rincon del Diablo could have failed to know therefrom exactly what property was referred to, and if this be true, the description was sufficient. In addition, the notice specified, immediately after the specification of the date upon which the sale would be made, that certain 'abbreviations throughout the advertisement are used as follows: * * * "R. R. del Diablo" for Rancho Rincon del Diablo.' We know of no reason why the taxpayer was not required to observe this part of the notice, which left no room for conjecture or surmise as to the meaning of the abbreviation. The notice sufficiently complied with the law."

Immediately following the document last mentioned the transcript sets forth the testimony of the witness Longworth, a deputy county recorder. That portion of the record contains nothing which tends to change the facts stated above.

[11] The defendants cite and rely on Scott v. Beck (Cal. Sup.) 259 P. 933. A rehearing has been granted in that case. However, the facts are not the same as the facts in this case, and a ruling will be of little help. In the case at bar there was a sale for delinquent taxes for the year 1913. The questions involving that sale have been discussed. Furthermore, the record discloses that other taxes were delinquent and not paid, and that "plaintiff paid taxes, penalties, and costs in pursuit of the state's title" in the sum of $59.-21. Nothing to the contrary appearing, it must be assumed that at least a part of said sum was for the taxes levied for the year 1918-1919, that such taxes became delinquent, that the property was on the delinquent list for the year last named, and that the delinquent list for the year 1918-1919 was by the tax collector and auditor so arranged that "said publication shall designate in some particular manner the property contained in said list which was sold to the state five years previous (that is, in 1914). * * *" Pol. Code, § 3764.

The defendant has not shown that the tax deed which the plaintiff holds is invalid in any particular or for any reason. It follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

CAPITOL WOOLEN CO. v. BERGER et al.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 12, 1927.

1. Judgment ⇨253(1)—Trial court could not give judgment for greater sum than asked for in pleadings.

Where pleadings asked only for amount of trade acceptance, trial court could not give plaintiff judgment for a greater sum.

2. Bills and notes ⇨226—Where indorser signed draft to obtain goods for drawer and goods were not shipped, indorser held not liable.

Where indorser signed draft under agreement with payee's agent, who had apparent authority, to promise further goods and credit to drawer, and goods were not shipped, indorser held not liable to payee.

3. Payment ⇨82(3)—Where corporation accepted money paid by debtor's friend without knowledge of agent's agreement to ship more goods, money held not recoverable on failure to ship especially where friend expected reimbursement from debtor.

Where corporation accepted money paid by friend of debtor who had purchased goods, without knowledge of its agent's agreement that corporation would ship more goods on credit, money held not recoverable by friend from corporation on failure to ship goods ordered, especially where friend had looked to debtor for reimbursement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Benjamin K. Knight, Judge.

Action by the Capitol Woolen Company against J. Berger, doing business under the firm name and style of the Model Cloak Manufacturing Company, and A. D. Hughes, wherein A. D. Hughes filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff as against J. Berger and for A. D. Hughes on cross-complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Judgment under the complaint affirmed and judgment under the cross-complaint reversed.

Isaac Pacht, Clore Warne, and Michael Rudolph, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Daniel Beecher, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PEAIRS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the plaintiff the Capitol Woolen Company, a corporation, of New York, from a judgment in the above-entitled action in which the plaintiff was granted a judgment in its favor against the defendant J. Berger, doing business under the firm name and style of Model Cloak Manufacturing Company, for $346.78, together with costs, and a judgment against them in favor of defendant and cross-complainant A. D. Hughes for the sum of $350. The facts as alleged were that the said Berger, doing business as stated, was indebted to the plaintiff appellant herein, in the sum of $696.78 and that one Bernard Aftergut was the representative of the appellant, taking orders for them, and, upon instructions, collecting money and arranging credits. The plaintiff states that the said Aftergut did not have authority except when special authority was given for making collections, and that his orders were all subject to their approval. When the said Aftergut called upon the defendant J. Berger for payment and for a further order, he stated in the presence of defendant Hughes, respondent herein, that, unless arrangements were made to pay the whole account of $696.78, there would be no credit extended on further orders, but that, if the whole indebtedness were paid or provided for, he would accept his order for jersey cloth to the value of $1,200 or more, and give him 60 days' credit. After considerable discussion in the presence of and with the said A. D. Hughes, respondent, the said Hughes agreed to pay the sum of $350 on account of the past indebtedness of said Berger, to the appellant, and to indorse a trade acceptance to the amount of $346.78, the balance of the former indebtedness of the defendant Berger, provided that the appellant herein would furnish the said defendant Berger with the said jersey cloth to the extent of $1,200 or more and give him 60 days' credit, and upon that understanding and promise of the appellant to furnish the said cloth the said Hughes signed said guaranty and paid to the appellant the sum of $350. The appellant received the check for $350 and gave credit therefor and acknowledged receipt of the order for cloth as follows:

"Model Cloak Mfg. Co., Los Angeles, Cal., Gentlemen: We are in receipt of order from you from our representative, Mr. Aftergut. We were all sold up on this merchandise when your order reached us, but we expect some of these goods in within the next week or ten days and as soon as they come in, we will advise you, and you can then let us know just what you want. Trusting same is satisfactory to you and thanking you for the past favors and continuance of such, we remain, Very truly yours,"

—but never notified the said Berger nor did they ever ship any of the order to defendant Berger. Later, upon the presentation of the draft or trade acceptance to the bank, it was not honored, and the same was protested. Thereafter the appellant brought suit against said Berger for the amount of the trade acceptance and also against the said A. D. Hughes as indorser thereon. The said Berger defaulted, but the said A. D. Hughes, respondent herein, answered, stating three defenses and further filed a cross-complaint for $350, the amount of money paid by him under the agreement with the said Aftergut, agent for the appellant. The court, after considering the evidence offered in the case, rendered judgment as heretofore stated against the said Berger, who defaulted, for $346.78, and costs, but found no judgment against the said A. D. Hughes, and found judgment for the respondent A. D. Hughes in the sum of $350 and for his costs.

The appellant's claim is that the payment of $350 by the respondent was purely voluntary and done out of friendship for the defendant Berger, and appellant's first pleading stated that they had furnished cloth under an agreement with the said Berger and Hughes to the extent of the said $346.78, but later asked leave to amend to show that the draft or acceptance was for the balance of an old account, and that they never had agreed to furnish any cloth to the said defendant Berger through any arrangement made with the respondent Hughes; that they never received any order from the defendant Berger for jersey cloth after the time of the conversation between Aftergut and the said Hughes and that no arrangement had ever been made with the said respondent to furnish anything by reason of his payment of the $350 and indorsement of the draft or trade acceptance. They further alleged and attempted to prove that the said Aftergut had no authority to make any arrangement with the said defendant Berger to furnish him more cloth upon the payment of the said $350 and the guaranty or indorsement of the trade acceptance for $346.78, as aforesaid, and that he had no authority to make such promise either to defendant Berger or to the respondent Hughes. Further, the appellant alleges that the respondent was entirely a stranger to them, and that his indorsement and agreement to pay the amount of $350 was because he expected to go into partnership with the said defendant Berger, and that he made such payment and such indorsement purely for his own business reasons in furtherance of his plan of partnership.

From the evidence in the bill of exceptions in this case, we quote from the deposition of Victor E. Meyer, a witness on behalf of the appellant, in answer to questions propounded by counsel for respondent Hughes, as follows:

"I am manager of the Capitol Woolen Company, plaintiff in this action. Up to November, 1922, I was also the president and treasurer of the company. In such official position my duties were that of supervising all the business of the corporation, including making of contracts on behalf of the company, conducting and signing checks. During the month of October, 1922, I was occupying the same official position with the Capitol Woolen Company. I am familiar with the deals and transactions had with J. Berger, doing business as the Model Cloak Manufacturing Company in Los Angeles. The transactions had between me and the said J. Berger stated in full, and any communications and correspondence received by me from the said J. Berger and copies of any communications sent by me to said J. Berger are as follows: The plaintiff in this case received from the defendant, J. Berger, doing business as the Model Cloak Manufacturing Company, an order through the plaintiff's representative in Los Angeles. This order was for 10 pieces of Jersey at $1.35 per yard, net 60 days. On June 1, 1922, the plaintiff shipped to the said defendant, six pieces of the said Jersey, containing 305½ yards, amounting to $412.42; on June 8, 1922, the plaintiff shipped to the said defendant, three pieces of the said Jersey, containing 158½ yards, amounting to $214.15; on June 12, 1922, the plaintiff shipped to the said defendant, one piece of the said Jersey, containing 52 yards, amounting to $70.20. The total invoice price of these three shipments is $696.78. On October 23, 1922, the plaintiff received from the said defendant a check for $350 on account, which check has been paid and credited to his account. At the same time, the plaintiff received from the said defendant, a trade acceptance dated October 18, 1922, for $346.78, representing the balance of the purchase price of the said Jersey. This trade acceptance was payable in 30 days after date and was indorsed by A. D. Hughes. The action is brought to recover this. When this trade acceptance became due, it was presented for payment and not paid. It was thereupon protested for nonpayment. Thereafter there was some correspondence between the plaintiff and the said defendant J. Berger, and I attach the same hereto. It consists of a letter written by the said defendant to plaintiff dated September 12, 1922; copy of a letter written by the plaintiff to the said defendant, dated September 5, 1922; copy of letter written by plaintiff to said defendant dated September 18, 1922. * * * I knew Bernard Aftergut during his lifetime. He was employed by the plaintiff in this case, the Capitol Woolen Company, as salesman, and his territory as said representative of the plaintiff was Los Angeles and San Francisco, Cal. His duties consisted of soliciting orders for the plaintiff, which orders were subject to the plaintiff's acceptance and approval. He worked on a commission basis. No order for the shipment of any merchandise was received by us from J. Berger subsequent to the receipt of said trade acceptance; the plaintiff received from the said Bernard Aftergut a memorandum of an order which the defendant Berger wished to place with the plaintiff. * * * The plaintiff received check for $350 to be credited on the account of the defendant J. Berger, but I do not remember the details of the said account. * * * The plaintiff received the trade acceptance, dated October 18, 1922, sued on in this action, through Bernard Aftergut. The trade acceptance and check were received in an envelope with just a memorandum written in pencil, 'Inclosed please find check and trade acceptance for the amount of J. Berger & Co.' B. Aftergut took up the collection of accounts and claims for the plaintiff when specifically requested to do so and not otherwise. His employment by the plaintiff consisted of the solicitation of orders subject to the acceptance and approval of the plaintiff and not otherwise."

From the testimony of Mr. Hughes we quote the following:

"Mr. Aftergut had taken an order for merchandise, and at the same time he took an order for certain amount of merchandise, he took the check and trade acceptance and went out with them with the understanding that Berger was to get merchandise. * * * An order was given at the time by Mr. Berger to Mr. Aftergut for the shipment of twenty pieces of merchandise, a variety of cloths. The understanding was that the merchandise would be shipped at once. Of course, it was on the receipt of that merchandise that the whole thing hinged. With reference to the payment of that new order of merchandise, it was said that Berger was to have regular terms on it—60 days to pay for it. I have stated in substance all the conversation that took place at that time. I had no business relations whatever with Berger at this time. * * * I was at his place of business on the 18th day of October when Mr. Aftergut came in. I was there before he came in. On this particular day I just dropped in there as I had before to see what was going on. I don't recall any particular appointment to meet Mr. Aftergut and Mr. Berger. After I was there, I agreed to pay the $350 and to guarantee the trade acceptance which was executed at that time. Before I paid this $350, nothing was said by me with reference to completing any association with Mr. Berger. * * * It is not correct that I was going into business with him and that part of the consideration of allowing me to get in on it was the paying off of these obligations. Nothing to that effect, or in substance, was ever discussed by us at any time. There was no other agreement or arrangement of any kind between us with reference to the payment of the $350 except just the fact that I thought he would pay it back to me. I never wrote to Capitol Woolen Company or communicated with them in any way demanding that this merchandise be shipped."

From the evidence quoted it is clear that there had been an arrangement between A. D. Hughes, respondent, and Bernard Aftergut. It is also clear that Mr. Aftergut was in the employ of the appellant and that at the time the $350 was paid by respondent, there was an order given to Mr. Aftergut which was received by the appellant at the same time that they received the check for $350 and trade acceptance for $346.78. The letter of the appellant acknowledging the receipt of the order from the Model Cloak Company, through their representative, Mr. Aftergut, is set out herein, and it is not denied that it was written by the appellant. Whatever the understanding may have been between the respondent and Mr. Aftergut, it certainly could not have been that the appellant did not intend to sell any further goods to the defendant Berger. Had the respondent advanced $350 in cash and indorsed an acceptance or draft for the amount stated, the same to be credited on a new order, if the order were never shipped the respondent certainly would have been entitled to his money back. The argument by appellant outside of that concerning the reasons for payment on the part of the respondent is that there was no privity between respondent and appellant arising out of the contract or otherwise by reason of which he would have a right to recover the $350 paid for defendant Berger, and that their representative, Mr. Aftergut, had no authority to make any settlement or arrangement with either defendant Berger or respondent Hughes, but the appellant accepted the money paid under his arrangement with the respondent and defendant Berger and acknowledged the receipt of an order through Mr. Aftergut, their representative.

[1, 2] The trial court found judgment as stated heretofore for the respondent in the sum of $350 and gave judgment to the appellant against defendant Berger in the sum of $346.78 and costs. Under the pleadings, the appellant only sued for the sum of $346.78, and in conformity with their action the trial court could not allow them judgment for any greater sum, and, further, the appellant not having furnished any goods in accordance with its agreement with respondent when he paid them the $350 and indorsed the acceptance or draft, could not expect respondent to honor the draft which he had indorsed for the purpose of obtaining further goods for the defendant Berger and 60 days' credit allowance.

In San Francisco Gas Co. v. San Francisco, 9 Cal. 462, it is said:

"Mr. Justice Hosmer observes, in the same case: 'More than a century ago, the case of Rex v. Biggs, 3 P. Wms., 419, went the full length of deciding that, as against a corporation, an authority to its agents different from the prescriptions of its charter might be implied. * * * 'I consider it undoubted law,' continues Mr. Justice Hosmer, in the same case, 'that a corporation may incur a liability different from the prescriptions of its charter. Like individuals, it is responsible in the manner in which it permits its agents to hold it out to the world. The corporation should disavow the practice or usage of its agents in the transaction of business, or they shall be presumed to have its sanction. * * * It may be implied, from the acquiescence in the usual mode of transacting the business of the corporation, and expressing no objection to it. * * *' The rule in regard to estoppel is thus correctly laid down by Judge Parsons, in his work on Contracts vol. 1, p. 118: 'In general, if a person not duly authorized make a contract on behalf of a corporation, and the corporation take and hold the benefit derived from such contract, it is estopped from denying the authority of the agent.' In Selma & Tenn. R. R. Co. v. Tipton, 5 Ala. 808 [39 Am. Dec. 344], it is held that 'not only estoppels, technically so called, but estoppels in pais, operate both for and against corporations.' * * * 'Matter in pais, as I understand the phrase, is where some admission has been made—or some act done or acquiesced in, or some party has permitted an act to be done for his benefit, knowing the fact, without objection—or has failed to speak out when he ought to have done so, and by reason of the same another party has been induced to part with some advantage, or, in some respect, to change his position.'"

In Davis v. Pacific Studios Corporation (Cal. App.) 258 P. 440, it is said:

"It is the policy of the law and the endeavor of the courts to hold corporations as well as natural persons to their contracts. Such defense introduced against a contract which has been executed in whole or in part by the corporation is looked upon with disfavor. * * * Authority of the corporation may be shown by evidence that the person does business for the corporation and on its behalf as agent with the knowledge and acquiescence of its directors or by their direction. The corporation in such case is bound by his acts and declarations within the scope of the business intrusted to him. * * * Eells v. Gray Bros., etc., Co., 13 Cal. App. 33, 108 P. 735, holds that, if a corporation clothes its officer or agent with apparent authority to act for it in a particular matter, it will be estopped to deny such authority as against persons dealing with such officer or agent in good faith and in ignorance of any limitations on his authority. See, also, Fowler Gas Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 180 Cal. 471 181 P. 663. * * *"

[3] The judgment against the appellant in favor of respondent A. D. Hughes was given on the cross-complaint of the said Hughes, and it is from this portion of the judgment that the appellant seeks relief. The opinion of the court thus far would indicate an affirmation of the judgment of the trial court, but we have been unable to find anywhere in the evidence that there was brought home to the appellant, at the time that they accepted the check of respondent for $350, any knowledge of the fact that the check was paid upon the promise of their agent Aftergut, or that they had any reason to believe that the check was anything other than one which had been paid for defendant Berger by some one owing him, or who was willing to pay Berger's debts and look to him for payment. The mere fact that they had received the check and an indorsed acceptance which wiped out the former indebtedness of the Model Clothing Company was only in accordance with the instruction which they had given their agent and does not in itself prove that the agent Aftergut had any authority to make any promise or arrangement with any one outside of a customer of the appellant, the Model Clothing Company, as represented by Mr. Berger—in fact, the respondent in his own testimony volunteered the statement as follows:

"No arrangement was made between me and Berger whereby he was to repay that amount to me that I advanced at that time. Nothing was said at that time about me getting my money back, no more than I felt quite sure Mr. Berger, if he got on his feet, would reimburse me for what I had paid out to help him get his merchandise. * * * I got pretty well acquainted with Berger, and I knew that if he got on his feet—if he got this merchandise, it would put him on his feet and he would take care of me. * * *"

It would therefore appear that the respondent, in addition to not bringing home to the appellant the understanding under which he advanced the $350, shows by his own testimony that he was looking to defendant Berger for reimbursement, and therefore he should not have had judgment in his favor in that regard.

We coincide with the lower court in its judgment rendered under the complaint, and the same is affirmed, but, in view of the above statement, the judgment under the cross-complaint is reversed.

FIRST TRUST & SAVINGS BANK OF PASADENA v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY. ★
(Civ. 5039.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 13, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1928.

1. Taxation §47(1)—Double taxation is never favored unless clearly required by statute.

Double taxation is never favored unless clearly required by statute of the particular state which claims that right.

2. Taxation §98—Right to corporate stock held in trust in Wisconsin, returnable to executor upon trustor's death, was not "solvent credit" taxable in California March 1, where trustor died prior thereto but executor was subsequently appointed (Pol. Code §§ 3617, 3628, 3629).

The right of a trustor's executor in California to corporate stock held by a trustee in Wisconsin under provision that the trustee was to convey the trust fund and undistributed income to the executor after the trustor's death held not a solvent credit within Pol. Code, § 3617, so as to be assessable for taxation in California on March 1, under Pol. Code, §§ 3628, 3629; executor being appointed March 7, and trustor having died the preceding January 30.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Solvent Credits.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by the First Trust & Savings Bank of Pasadena against the County of Los Angeles. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward T. Bishop, Co. Counsel, and Woodward M. Taylor, W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., and J. A. Tucker, Deputy Co. Counsels, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. W. Morin, of Pasadena, and James S. Bennett, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This action was brought to recover taxes paid under protest, levied upon solvent credits of the estate of Caroline Frances Dillingham. The "solvent" credits thus assessed and claimed to exist are said to arise out of the following situation: During the lifetime of Caroline Frances Dillingham she entered into a written agreement with the First Wisconsin Trust Company of Milwaukee, Wis., whereby she transferred 900 shares of the preferred and 2 shares of the common capital stock of the Dillingham Manufacturing Company of Sheboygan, Wis., to the trust company, in trust, with the power in the trustee to hold the stock, to collect the dividends, to receive and collect moneys available for the retirement and redemption of the preferred stock, to invest and reinvest the proceeds of the trust other than the net income which was to be remitted to the trustor, to sell or exchange the stock and reinvest the proceeds, and to vote the stock at corporate meetings. The trustor reserved the right to revoke the trust upon giving to the trustee written notice thereof and a reasonable time to it to render an accounting and to reconvey. It is expressly stated, however, that during the existence of the trust "the only right, title or interest of the donor in the property, the subject-matter of this trust, is the right to receive such net income as shall be derived therefrom and a right to an accounting from time to time from the trustee." The agreement also contained the following stipulation:

"Upon the death of the donor the trust hereby created and defined shall terminate and be closed. The trustee shall distribute and convey the trust fund and any undistributed income thereof after its deductions, to the executor or administrator of the said donor, appointed and duly qualified."

Caroline Frances Dillingham died January 30, 1922. Her will was admitted to probate and the respondent was appointed executor thereof on March 7, 1922. The trustee subsequently sold the capital stock and remitted the proceeds to the executor. The first Monday in March of the year 1922 fell on the 6th, the day before the executor was appointed. Some time thereafter the assessment was levied.

Section 3617 of the Political Code says:

"Whenever the terms mentioned in this section are employed in this act, they are employed in the senses hereafter affixed to them:

"First. 'Property.'—The term 'property' includes moneys, credits, bonds (except railroad or quasi-public corporations), stocks, dues, franchises, and all other matters and things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership. * * *

"Sixth. 'Credits.'—The term 'credits' means those solvent debts, not secured by mortgage or trust deed, owing to the person, firm, corporation, or association assessed. The term 'debt' means those unsecured liabilities owing by the person, firm, corporation, or association assessed to bona fide residents of this state, or firms, associations or corporations doing business therein. * * *

The pertinent portion of section 3628 of the Political Code provides:

"Except as otherwise provided in the Constitution of this state, all taxable property shall be assessed in the county, city, and county, town, township, or district in which it is situated. * * * The assessor must, between the first Mondays in March and July of each year, ascertain the names of all taxable inhabitants, and all the property in his county subject to taxation, except such as is required to be assessed by the state board of equalization and must assess such property to the persons by whom it was owned or claimed, or in whose possession or control it was, at twelve o'clock meridian of the first Monday in March next preceding. * * * In assessing solvent credits, not secured by mortgage or trust deed on real estate, a deduction therefrom shall be made of debts due to bona fide residents of this state."

Subdivision 6 of section 3629 of the Political Code provides, with respect to the assessor exacting from each person a statement under oath, that it shall include:

"All solvent credits, unsecured by deed of trust, mortgage, or other lien on real or personal property, due or owing to such person, * * * deducting from the sum total of such credits such debts only, unsecured by trust deed, mortgage, or other lien on real or personal property, as may be owing by such person, firm, or corporation to bona fide residents of this state. * * *"

[1, 2] The first question to be determined is whether there were solvent credits of the estate taxable in California. In this connection it is asserted by respondent that the authority of Lowry v. County of Los Angeles, 38 Cal. App. 158, 175 P. 702, is conclusive. In that case William Morgan, a resident of this county, established a trust with three trustees resident in Illinois, giving to his trustees the power of management and to collect the dividends accruing on capital stock, constituting the corpus of the trust, paying the net income to himself or other beneficiaries, with the further proviso that if the stock were sold with the joint consent of the trustees and owners of the beneficial interest, the trust should cease. The action was one to recover taxes levied against the capital stock thus held by the trustees and paid under protest by the executor of the last will of William Morgan. It was there held that the situs of the capital stock was at the domicile of the trustees who held the legal title and that the stock was not taxable in California, the court saying:

"It seems very clear to us that the stock in the hands of the trustees is within the jurisdiction of the taxing power of the state of Illinois. And to hold that it may be assessed in California also, would be to subject it to double taxation, which is never favored unless clearly required by the statute of the particular state which claims that right."

So far as the tax upon the capital stock is involved it is disposed of succinctly and lucidly by this opinion, and the principle of this case was reaffirmed in the authority of Westinghouse Co. v. Los Angeles, 188 Cal. 491, 205 P. 1076, wherein the court refused to sustain taxes upon solvent credits within the state of a foreign corporation maintaining a sales agency in this state, where the business transacted here was "through and for and under the immediate control and management of the home office at Pittsburgh." However, the court with apparent care in the Lowry Case made use of this sentence:

"It is clearly expressed by the complaint that the assessment made was upon the whole value of the full number of shares, and was not an assessment upon dividends or upon any contingent or equitable interest of the testator."

In the instant case it is very clearly alleged that the assessment was upon solvent credits in the sum of $45,100. Undoubtedly this was upon the theory that the estate, through the executor, had the right on the first Monday in March, 1922, to demand and receive of the trustee the full number of shares of the capital stock or its equivalent in money and was not an assessment upon any contingent or equitable interest of the estate. The trial court found that the interest of the estate was not a solvent credit and with this conclusion we are bound to agree. It will be remembered that in case of a revocation of the trust by the trustor, the trustee was allowed a reasonable time within which to account and reconvey and that in the clauses providing that the trust should terminate upon the death of the trustor it is stated:

"The trustee shall distribute and convey the trust fund and any undistributed income thereof after its deductions, to the executor, or administrator of the said donor, appointed and duly qualified."

Construing these provisions of the agreement, we are compelled to the conclusion that it was intended that the trustee should retain the management and control and the legal title to the corpus of the trust for a reasonable time after notice of termination and at least until in the words of the agreement the "executor" was "appointed and duly qualified." Viewing this intent with the definition of credits as heretofore quoted from section 3617 of the Political Code, further explained by the quotation from section 3629 of the Political Code, we cannot escape the determination that there was no solvent credit to be taxed. Two of the definitions, found in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, of credits, are as follows:

"A debt due in consequence of a contract of hire or borrowing of money." "That which is due to a merchant, as distinguished from debit, that which is due by him."

In People v. Eastman, 25 Cal. 601-603, in discussing a tax upon a judgment, the court said:

"The property to be assessed in such cases is money at interest, or debts. The money at interest, debt or obligation, is the principal thing, and the mortgage is only a security—a mere incident to the debt or obligation."

In this case it cannot be gainsaid that on March 6, 1922, the trustee was in no way indebted to the estate of Dillingham, and until after the appointment and qualification of the executor its relation thereto was not different from its relation to the trustor.

This conclusion is further strengthened by the fact that inasmuch as the legal title to the corpus of the trust was in the trustee until after March 7th, the stock was taxable in the state of Wisconsin. Therefore the remarks of the court in the Lowry Case, heretofore quoted, are very pertinent.

Counsel rely upon the authority of City of St. Albans v. Avery, 95 Vt. 249, 114 A. 31, and strenuously urge its application to the facts of the instant case. Without in any way attempting to deny the force of that opinion it cannot avail the appellant here, for the very patent reason that the court there determined that the beneficial interest in the cestui que trust is a property interest "which the Legislature may subject to taxation." As already observed, the assessment here did not purport to be and was not an assessment levied upon the beneficial interest, but upon the supposed right of the estate on the 6th day of March to demand the return of the entire body of the trust.

Judgment affirmed.

OHLSON v. CALLENDER. (Civ. 4681.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 8, 1927.

1. Municipal corporations ☞705(2)—Pedestrian and automobile driver must exercise due care at intersection.

Pedestrians and automobile drivers are both required to exercise due care in crossing a street at an intersection.

2. Municipal corporations ☞706(7)—Court sitting without jury should consider all circumstances in passing on question of contributory negligence of pedestrian struck by automobile at intersection.

Where plaintiff was struck by automobile while crossing street at intersection, in broad daylight, when view was unobstructed, in passing on question of contributory negligence court sitting without jury should consider surrounding circumstances and situation generally as disclosed by all the testimony.

3. Appeal and error ☞1010(1)—Unless court sitting without jury abused discretion in trying automobile negligence case, its judgment will not be disturbed where supported by any evidence.

Unless court sitting without jury abused its discretion in trying automobile negligence case, appellate court will not interfere, if any evidence, on a reasonable view thereof, supports the findings and the judgment.

4. Municipal corporations ☞706(7)—Contributory negligence of pedestrian injured by automobile at intersection held question of fact.

In suit to recover damage for injuries sustained by being struck by defendant's automobile at street intersection, tried before court without jury, evidence held sufficient to make contributory negligence a question of fact, and denial of defendant's motion for nonsuit was not abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by John Ohlson against R. F. Callender. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jennings & Belcher, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. C. Verge, O. V. Willson, and J. B. Joujon-Roche, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PEAIRS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal on the part of the defendant from a judgment rendered by the court sitting without a jury, under a complaint concerning an accident which occurred on the 9th day of July, 1920, at or about 9 o'clock a. m. on Eleventh street at the easterly side of Los Angeles street, where the plaintiff was struck by the defendant while the plaintiff was crossing Eleventh street from south to north, in line with the general direction north and south of the easterly sidewalk of Los Angeles street. The evidence shows that plaintiff had looked in both directions before starting across Eleventh street and that at that time plaintiff saw no automobile approaching nor in the intersection, and plaintiff states that when near the center of Eleventh street, where there is a manhole, he was struck by the defendant's automobile, but says that he did not see the automobile approaching, nor did he even remember just when or where it hit him, except that he had a dim recollection of being placed in an automobile and taken, as he afterwards learned, to the Emergency Hospital. The defendant also states that he did not see the plaintiff until just before he struck him and that he was so close to the plaintiff at that time that he could not see plaintiff's feet. That the plaintiff was badly injured there is no dispute and that there was negligence on the part of the defendant seems to be conceded by counsel, leaving, therefore, the one main issue of contributory negligence.

[1, 2] The appellant argues the question of contributory negligence as a matter of law, saying that, as the plaintiff did not observe the approach of defendant's automobile in broad daylight when the view was unobstructed, that fact was in itself evidence of contributory negligence, and the same argument goes to the question of error on the part of the court in denying defendant's motion for a nonsuit on the ground of contributory negligence, and of error in failing to find on the issue of contributory negligence. The argument concerning contributory negligence, of course, must take into consideration the surrounding circumstances and the situation generally. Four other parties who testified in this case saw the accident, and the testimony of each of these witnesses was that the defendant was driving approximately at the rate of 30 miles per hour or more, and approaching on Eleventh street from the west, and that at the time the plaintiff started to cross Eleventh street on the east side of Los Angeles street, the defendant was some distance to the west of Los Angeles street, driving at about 10 feet from the southerly curb of Eleventh street, directly across Los Angeles street; that he did not noticeably slacken his speed until just at the time he struck the plaintiff, at which time he, according to the skid marks of his car, applied his brakes and his car skidded a little to the north, struck the plaintiff, and carried him on the bumper of the car for a distance measured at 58 feet and some inches. The manhole, according to the testimony, was in the middle of Eleventh street and about on a line with the sidewalk if extended across Eleventh street, north and south. One of these witnesses stood at the southeast corner in front of an oil service station and observed the defendant from the time he was at least 16 feet west of Los Angeles street. Two of the other witnesses were crossing Los Angeles street to the east side, south of Eleventh street, and testified that they observed the automobile, their attention being called to it because of defendant's great speed. Another witness was approaching Los Angeles street from the east on Eleventh street near the center of the street on a motorcycle. It appears that just before the plaintiff was struck he was looking to the east and that at that time the defendant was looking down or back into his car.

While the plaintiff and defendant are each required to exercise due care in crossing the street at an intersection, it was, nevertheless, the court's duty to pass upon the question of negligence and contributory negligence, in view of all the testimony.

In regard to error on the part of the court alleged as having occurred by reason of its denial of defendant's motion for a nonsuit, if there is sufficient undisputed evidence to warrant its denial of the motion such action would not be error.

Concerning the contention that the court erred in failing to find on the issue of contributory negligence, it will be noted in the findings of fact by the court that it found the allegations contained in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the complaint were true, and in paragraph 3 of the complaint it says:

"That said plaintiff was proceeding, at said time and place, with due care and caution, and that when the plaintiff was about midway of the distance across said East Eleventh street the said defendant at said time and place, carelessly, recklessly, and negligently, and at a high and excessive rate of speed, drove and operated and propelled a certain automobile, to wit, a Buick touring car, so as to cause the same to strike and collide with the plaintiff with great force and violence."

The entire argument of appellant set forth in his brief revolves around the point that, if other observers could see defendant's car, the respondent should also have seen it. In order that we may more clearly discuss this question, we will include, from time to time, quotations from the testimony. The evidence would indicate that, when the respondent looked to the west just as he stepped from the curb on to Eleventh street, about four seconds before he was struck, the appellant's car was about 200 feet at least west of respondent on Eleventh street and was being driven at a speed of from 30 to 35 miles or more per hour or at least 10 or 12 times as fast as respondent was walking. At that time appellant was, to quote his own words, "just a reasonable distance away from cars parked on Eleventh street west of Los Angeles street. My car was not at any time out as far as the manhole or in the center of the street." Witness Aselin says: "There were no cars on Los Angeles street which were traveling at that time. I do not recall any cars parked on Eleventh street—there was one or two I believe over by the laundry if I recall right." Taking these two portions of evidence together, it would seem quite possible that respondent, when on the curb or on the south edge of Eleventh street, could not see appellant's car because of the cars on Eleventh street mentioned by appellant. Drawing a line from respondent's position to a point 200 feet west, 6 or 8 feet cut from the south curb of Eleventh street. It would probably pass through the position of the cars parked on Eleventh street, and from the testimony of Crawford, appellant's car was crossing Main street, about 375 feet west of respondent, at that time. The fact that Crawford could see the appellant's car, being farther south and west of the respondent, would indicate that the cars parked on Eleventh street were near the southwest corner of Los Angeles and Eleventh streets. Witness Aselin did not see appellant's car until near the fire plug on the southwest corner of the intersection, at which time respondent was going across Eleventh street, which indicates that Aselin did not see the car until it came out from behind the cars parked on Eleventh street.

It must be taken into consideration that the burden was with the appellant as to contributory negligence and if these parked cars did not interfere with the view of respondent, the appellant, defendant below, should have proven it by showing size, height, and position relatively. Aselin testifies that at that time the appellant's car was going around 30 miles per hour. He also testifies that the skid marks made after the brakes were set on appellant's car were over 58 feet long, indicating even greater speed than 30 miles per hour, especially when it is remembered that the body of respondent was being dragged in front under the bumper. Witness Bodey, who was looking directly west and nearer to the respondent than appellant was, did not see the car until it was coming into Los Angeles street. Crawford, who saw appellant's car when it was passing out of Main street nearly 400 feet away did not see the motorcycle coming from the east nor 100 feet away from him. Crawford estimated the speed of the appellant's car at from 30 to 35 miles per hour, and on redirect examination when asked what had called his attention to the car replied: "On account of the terrific speed." The witness Denu used the term "excessive speed" and stated that he first saw the car within 10 feet of the fire plug. Both Crawford and Denu were experienced drivers, as was also Aselin. These three men were in fact all professional drivers. The fact that none of the witnesses, except Crawford, saw appellant's car until it was in the vicinity of the fire plug at the southwest corner of the intersection, does not discredit their testimony, and up to that time it should not discredit the testimony of the respondent. In approximately one second after that time respondent was hit and rendered unconscious.

[3, 4] It is not the intention of this court to discuss the facts of this case, further than to show that the parked cars, the excessive speed of appellant's car, the severe injury to the respondent, and his lapses of memory caused thereby, as evidenced by the testimony, and other facts therein, all go to show that this was a case for determination of the facts as to contributory negligence rather than for any determination of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

We would call attention to those decisions in steam and electric railroad cases, which refer to looking and failing to see, for there is a distinction between such cases and cases like the one at issue—it is held that the tracks themselves in those cases are notice of danger.

The respondent was crossing the street at a point and in a manner approved by the law and, as found by the court, with due care and caution when he was struck by the car driven by the appellant at a high and excessive rate of speed.

There is no question left, except the one as to whether the respondent is to be found guilty of contributory negligence under the law for the reason that after so terrible an injury he testifies that he looked in all directions and did not at the time of the trial recollect having seen the automobile of the appellant approaching. It is to be observed that in addition to the evidence of the respondent there was the testimony of other witnesses and other evidence which tended to show that the respondent may not have seen the car at all, and in this connection we refer to the matter of Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 586, 82 P. 253, a portion of which reads as follows:

"Every favorable inference fairly deducible and every favorable presumption fairly arising from the evidence produced must be considered as facts proved in favor of the [plaintiff]. Where evidence is fairly susceptible of two constructions, or if either of several inferences may reasonably be made, the court must take the view most favorable to the [plaintiff]. * * * If contradictory evidence has been given it must be disregarded."

"A failure to hear or see the car is not, per se, proof of negligence in all cases. Whether such exercise of the faculties as, under all the circumstances of the case, was reasonable, would have averted the injury is a question of fact." Hamlin v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 781-789, 89 P. 1111.

"Unless the court having the duty of trying the case has violated its discretion, this court will not interfere if any of the evidence, upon a reasonable view thereof, supports the findings and judgment." Davis v. Breuner Co., 167 Cal. 685, 140 P. 587.

"There is no positive duty to stop, look, and listen when a pedestrian is about to cross a city street. * * * Blackwell v. Renwick, 21 Cal. App. 131, 131 P. 94; * * * Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 275, 55 P. 908. Compare, also, Scott v. San Bernardino Valley Traction Co., 152 Cal. 604, 610, 93 P. 677. The question of negligence, under the usual rule of ordinary care that devolves upon foot travelers, must be examined in the light of all the attendant circumstances. * * * Mann v. Scott, 180 Cal. 554, 182 P. 282.

"The plaintiff was crossing Hill street from east to west on the north side of Sixth street. When she had reached a point on the north-bound tracks on Hill street she was struck by defendant's automobile, which was going north on Hill street. The court found that the plaintiff exercised ordinary and proper care for her own safety, and that the negligent acts of the defendant were the direct and proximate cause of the accident. These findings are supported by plaintiff's testimony that, when near the curb on the east side of Hill street, she looked up and down the street and saw no vehicles whatever coming; that she looked ahead at the street car coming to a stop on the tracks on the west side of Hill street, 'except I looked both ways as I stepped from the curb and there were no vehicles whatever within my sight.'" Fisk v. Poplin, 46 Cal. App. 588, 189 P. 723.

"At any rate, the trial court so concluded, and we are unable to say from the state of this record that its judgment in so doing constituted such a breach of discretion as would compel a reversal of this case. The rule has been laid down, both in the Supreme Court and in this court, that the ruling of a trial court as to whether a given state of facts presented before it does or does not amount to negligence as a matter of law will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a clear showing of an abuse of discretion." Spring v. Tawa, 49 Cal. App. 100, 192 P. 1051.

"The law imposes upon a trial judge the duty to make findings upon all material issues as to which evidence has been introduced. On the other hand, it is well settled that, where the evidence heard does not support the plea of contributory negligence, a finding upon the issue is not necessary to be made." Arnaz v. Forbes, 51 Cal. App. 666, 197 P. 364.

"The question of whether or not the pedestrian is negligent in crossing a street is one which, in the absence of express statutes regulating his conduct, must ordinarily be left to the jury, for the conduct of an ordinarily prudent person under such circumstances must be largely determined by the condition of the traffic at the particular time and place in question." Burgesser v. Bullocks, 190 Cal. 677, 214 P. 651.

"The case is closely allied in facts to that of Haines v. Fewkes, 190 Cal. 477, 213 P. 490, the only difference being that in that case the pedestrian had crossed the street car tracks and had taken a position which she assumed to be a place of safety to await the passage of an automobile approaching from the south, when she was suddenly struck by another automobile coming from the same direction; while in this case the respondent carefully looked in the direction of approaching traffic before she left her place of safety on the curb and took a position which she assumed to be a place of safety for the purpose of boarding the street car, when she was struck by an automobile which had swerved in front of the street car and approached her unawares. In the Haines Case the Supreme Court held that it was not contributory negligence as a matter of law. * * * In support of the appeal the appellant insists that 'the conclusion is irresistible that respondent, had she looked, could have seen and avoided the danger, and it is the sole purpose of this brief to show that it was her duty as a matter of law to look.' More than this is necessary to support a plea of contributory negligence. Mr. Justice Myers, in Gett v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 192 Cal. 621 [631], 221 P. 376, 380, in discussing the plea of contributory negligence, said: 'In this defense the burden is upon the defendant to prove two things: (1) That the plaintiff was negligent; (2) that such negligence was a proximate cause of the injuries complained of. If he fails to prove either of these things this entire defense falls.' " Bolles v. Boone, 66 Cal. App. 240, 225 P. 775.

"All of the authorities agree on two principles: First, the pedestrian and the driver of a vehicle have equal and reciprocal rights in the use of the highway; and this rule goes so far as to hold that in the absence of statutory or local regulation this right extends to all sections of the highway, whether at established places of crossing or elsewhere thereon. When we speak of a person having a right, we must necessarily refer to a civil right as distinguished from the elemental idea of rights absolute. We must have in mind a right given and protected by law, and a person's enjoyment thereof is regulated entirely by the law which creates it. If we were to consider these rights as absolute, nothing but chaos could result, and instead of each enjoying the right both would be deprived of its enjoyment. Therefore the rights of pedestrian and auto driver are conceded to be relative to the extent that each must so restrict and use his right as to permit the other the full benefit of what is his. The second principle upon which all agree is that the facts and circumstances of each case control the amount of care required on the part of both pedestrians and drivers of vehicles. Nothing approaching a rule can be formulated other than the basic principle of ordinary care under the circumstances." Nickell v. Rosenfield (Cal. App.) 255 P. 760.

"Ordinary care is all that is required of a pedestrian in crossing a street. The question of the exercise of ordinary care is largely a question of fact to be determined by the jury from all the circumstances surrounding the particular case under consideration. In determining whether a pedestrian used such due care as is commensurate with apparent present dangers, the jury should consider the location involved, the existing state of the traffic, the opportunity for obtaining a clear view of the street from every direction whence approaching vehicles might endanger an attempt to cross the street, the presence of obstructions to the view such as buildings, passing cars, driving storms, clouds of dust, or darkness, and, from these and all other facts and circumstances present, determine whether the particular pedestrian used that degree of care which would be required of an ordinarily prudent person under like circumstances." Kinnear v. Martinelli (Cal. App.) 258 P. 686.

In the case of Katz v. T. I. Butler Co. (Cal. App.) 254 P. 679, it is said:

"The test is, not whether the plaintiff did all that was possible for him to do, such as seeing everything that was possible to see that could be a source of danger to him, but whether he acted with ordinary care and prudence under all the facts and circumstances."

In the case of Marini v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. Sup.) 257 P. 74, it is also said:

"It has often been said by this court that it is very rare that a set of circumstances is presented which enables a court to say, as a matter of law, that negligence has been shown. As a general rule, it is a question of fact for the jury, an inference to be deduced from the circumstances of each particular case, and it is only where the deduction to be drawn is inevitably that of negligence that the court is authorized to withdraw the question from the jury." Hoff v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 158 Cal. 596, 112 P. 53, supra, quoting from Seller v. Market St. Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 72 P. 1006."

The foregoing cases discuss very completely the duty of the pedestrian and set out definitely that the facts are for the jury or for the court, sitting without a jury, and further emphasize the duty of the trial judge, and the rule that, unless the court trying the case has violated its discretion, this court will not interfere, if any of the evidence upon a reasonable view thereof, supports the findings and judgment.

Summarizing the conduct of respondent, we find that he looked in both directions before stepping into Eleventh street; that he continued straight across the street until the time of the accident; that the intersection was clear when he started; that he was near the center of the street when hit; that he was then looking east; that he had no reasonable expectation that any one would so violate the speed regulations as to reach him from the west while he was crossing; that he apparently conducted himself as a reasonably prudent person would under like circumstances and surroundings. The words of the witness Aselin when he said, "I would not have hollered at him if I hadn't noticed that the man that was driving the automobile had his head turned," are significant as indicating that Aselin did not believe the respondent in danger until that time, and then only because of the inattention and speed of appellant.

After a careful consideration of the law of this state as cited, and of the testimony as given in the transcript, we do not find any abuse of discretion, nor prejudicial error on the part of the trial court.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. JONES. (Cr. 1486.)★

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1928.

1. Criminal law §137(2)—One indicted for larceny and embezzlement, who, at trial, contended alleged offense was embezzlement, not larceny, held not precluded, on appeal, from contending offense was larceny.

One indicted for both larceny and embezzlement of oil well pipe, who, upon hearing in the trial court, contended that if he had committed a crime it was not larceny, but embezzlement, whereupon the larceny charge was dismissed on motion of the state, held not precluded, on appeal, from contending that the offense, if any, was not embezzlement, but larceny.

2. Embezzlement §47—Whether defendant was intrusted with oil well casing so as to be guilty of embezzlement upon sale thereof held for jury.

Where defendant had taken an assignment of a contract permitting the original party thereto to take oil from a certain lease and had possession of certain of the oil company's personal property, although such original contract was by its terms not assignable, held, in trial of such assignee for embezzlement of oil well casing, that the question whether he was so intrusted with the casing as to make him guilty of embezzlement upon its appropriation and sale was for the jury.

3. Assignments §58—Provisions forbidding assignment of contract without consent may be waived (Civ. Code, §§ 3268, 3513).

Provisions in a contract forbidding assignment thereof without consent may, under Civ.

Code, §§ 3268, 3513, be waived by the party whose consent is required; such provisions being for his benefit.

4. Assignments §58—Party having right to declare forfeiture for breach because of other party's assigning without permission may waive breach and hold assignee (Civ. Code, §§ 3268, 3513).

Where one party to a contract has the right under the terms thereof to declare a forfeiture for breach in assigning contract without permission, he may waive such breach, under Civ. Code, §§ 3268, 3513, and hold the assignee under the terms of the assignment and contract.

5. Embezzlement §23—Defendant assuming to act as bailee of oil casing under contract assignment held estopped to deny he was intrusted with property.

Where defendant had taken an assignment of a contract which permitted the assignor to have possession of certain oil company property and work a certain lease, although the contract was by its terms nonassignable, and assumed to act as bailee of oil well casing under such assignment, held, in prosecution for embezzlement of the casing, that such assignee was estopped to deny that he was intrusted with the property.

6. Embezzlement §11(1)—One assuming to act as agent or bailee, who feloniously converts personalty intrusted to him, is guilty of embezzlement.

Where a person assumes to act as agent or bailee of another, and in such assumed capacity is intrusted with and receives into his custody property for the use of such other, and thereafter fraudulently and feloniously appropriates it, or any part of it, to his own use, or to any use not in the due and lawful execution of his trust, he is guilty of embezzlement.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Embezzle—Embezzlement.]

7. Embezzlement §44(1)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of embezzlement of oil well casing.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of embezzlement of oil well casing.

8. Criminal law §511(2)—Evidence corroborating that of accomplice must be more than mere suspicion and must tend to implicate defendant, but need not establish offense (Pen. Code, § 1111).

Under Pen. Code, § 1111, evidence corroborating that of an accomplice must, to be sufficient to establish guilt of the defendant, be more than mere suspicion and must tend to implicate the defendant, but it need not be strong evidence nor establish actual commission of offense.

9. Criminal law §511(3)—Accomplice testimony need not be corroborated by direct evidence (Pen. Code, § 1111).

It is not necessary to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice by direct evidence, under Pen. Code, § 1111, but if the connection of the accused with the alleged crime may be inferred from the corroborative evidence in the case it is sufficient.

10. Criminal law §511(1)—Evidence corroborating that of accomplice held sufficient to sustain conviction (Pen. Code, § 1111).

In prosecution of defendant for having embezzled oil well casing, evidence corroborating that of an accomplice held sufficient, under Pen. Code, § 1111, to sustain conviction.

11. Criminal law §757(4)—Instruction that accomplice testimony should be viewed with distrust and acted on with great caution held properly refused as being charge on matter of fact (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 4; Const. art. 6, § 19).

An instruction to the effect that testimony of an accomplice should be viewed with distrust and acted upon with great caution held properly refused, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 4, and Const. art. 6, § 19, as being a charge upon a matter of fact.

12. Criminal law §1173(1)—Case will not be reversed for refusing instruction unless it was court's duty to instruct exactly as requested.

A case will not be reversed for the refusal of an instruction unless it was the duty of the trial court to give the instruction exactly as requested.

13. Criminal law §1170(1)—Refusal to permit testimony as to amount of defendant's bank deposit on date alleged embezzled casing was sold to show absence of fraudulent intent held not reversible error, in view of other evidence.

In prosecution for embezzling oil well casing, court's refusal to permit defendant to testify as to the amount of money he had on deposit in a certain bank on the date casing was sold, offered on issue of fraudulent intent, held not reversible error, in view of the other evidence which would have made the evidence immaterial, even if introduced.

14. Embezzlement §42—Evidence of dishonor of defendant's checks held admissible as tending to show indebtedness to accomplice was satisfied by proceeds of embezzled property.

Where, in trial of defendant for embezzling oil well casing, evidence was admitted relative to the dishonor of defendant's checks, given to alleged accomplice, such evidence held proper as tending to show the defendant was indebted to accomplice, and that such indebtedness was subsequently partially satisfied by the proceeds of the embezzled property.

15. Criminal law §982—Refusal to permit filing of application for probation solely because defendant had not pleaded guilty held error (Pen. Code, § 1203).

Court's refusal to permit a defendant to file an application for probation solely because he had not pleaded guilty of the charge of embezzlement, but had stood trial and been convicted, held error, under Pen. Code, § 1203.

16. Criminal law §1023(1)—Order made before judgment denying motion for leave to file application for probation held not appealable (Pen. Code, § 1237).

Where, after verdict of guilty of embezzlement but before judgment, an order was made by the trial court denying defendant's motion to be permitted to file an application for probation, such order was not appealable, under Pen. Code, § 1237.

17. Criminal law §1147—On appeal from embezzlement conviction, appellate court could consider abuse of discretion in trial court's refusal to permit filing of probation application (Pen. Code, § 1259).

On appeal from a judgment of conviction of embezzlement of oil well casing, held, that under Pen. Code, § 1259, the reviewing court could consider whether the trial court had abused its discretion in its refusal to permit the filing of a probation application.

18. Criminal law §982—Discretion permitted court in referring probation request to probation officer is impartial discretion controlled by fixed legal principles (Pen. Code, § 1203).

The discretion permitted a trial court in referring a matter of request for probation to a probation officer, under Pen. Code, § 1203, is an impartial discretion, controlled by fixed legal principles, and not an arbitrary or capricious discretion.

19. Criminal law §1147—When trial court, after considering merits of probation application denies probation, its discretion is not reviewable on appeal.

When a trial court gives consideration to the merits of an application for probation and from such consideration determines that probation ought not to be granted, its discretion is not controlled by fixed legal principles and rules, and hence is not reviewable on appeal.

20. Criminal law §1144(17)—Record on appeal being silent as to grounds for denying probation application, presumption is denial was founded upon consideration of merits.

Where the record on an appeal is silent as to the court's grounds for its ruling in denying a probation application, the presumption is that the denial was founded upon consideration of the merits of the application.

21. Criminal law §982, 1147—Decision as to whether particular case or defendant is within probation law if departing from correct rule is abuse of discretion and reviewable.

When the court undertakes to deal with the question whether a particular case or a particular defendant is within the scope of the probation law, then it is dealing with fixed legal principles, and a departure from those principles is an abuse of discretion and raises a question of law which may be reviewed on appeal.

22. Criminal law §1134(10)—Order refusing leave to apply for probation after conviction solely for failing to plead guilty held reviewable on appeal from judgment (Pen. Code, §§ 1203, 1259).

An order refusing a defendant, convicted of embezzlement after trial, leave to apply for probation solely because he did not plead guilty, and without considering the merits, held reviewable on an appeal from the judgment, under Pen. Code, §§ 1203, 1259, as affecting defendant's substantial rights.

23. Criminal law ⇨982—Application for probation can be considered only before judgment.

An application for probation can be considered only before judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

J. Russell Jones was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals from the judgment, from an order denying his motion for a new trial, and from an order denying permission to apply for probation. Judgment reversed, with directions, order denying new trial affirmed, and appeal from order denying permission to apply for probation dismissed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; WASTE, C. J., and LANGDON, J., voting for a hearing.

Leon R. Yankwich and MacDonald & Thompson, all of Los Angeles (Thomas C. Ridgway, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel B. Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, Justice pro tem. Appellant was tried on an information charging him with larceny and embezzlement of certain pipe belonging to Russell Oil Company, a common-law trust, and after dismissal of the larceny count was found guilty of embezzlement.

The Russell Oil Company had an oil lease on certain land of one Carter, at Santa Fé Springs, Cal., hereinafter referred to as the Carter lease. On this lease were three oil wells equipped with casing and other appurtenances, all of which were owned by said Russell Oil Company. The wells being out of production, Russell Oil Company, on September 8, 1925, made a contract with M. H. Murray, by which it granted to him the sole and exclusive right to operate these wells at his own expense, for doing which he was to have 50 per cent. of the oil and gas produced, but no property interest in the equipment, and reserved the right to dispose of all equipment not actually being used by Murray. Claiming to act under this contract, appellant went into possession of the Carter lease in January, 1926, and attempted to operate the wells. During his operations some 4,500 feet of 6¼-inch casing was pulled from one of the wells, designated as No. 1, and was placed on racks. This work was done under the direction of Orville Pfeiffer, who was appellant's superintendent on the lease, and was completed about June 22, 1926. On June 25, 1926, 771 feet of this casing was sold by Pfeiffer to Commercial Supply House, a dealer in such commodities at Long Beach, for $501. In this transaction Pfeiffer used the fictitious name of C. E. Williams and, by indorsing that name on a check, got the money. He deposited $450 of this amount in the Bank of Norwalk, which is near the Carter lease, in an account which he then opened in his own name. In the latter part of August, 1926, Russell L. Williams, who was acting for Russell Oil Company, learned that some pipe had been taken away from the Carter lease, and early in September he demanded of appellant and of Pfeiffer that it be returned or the value of it paid. He also told appellant that he would take the matter up with the authorities. A few days later, on Monday, September 13th, all but a few feet of the pipe were returned to the Carter lease. This was done by the procurement of Pfeiffer, who gave to Commercial Supply House a forged order in the name of Marland Oil Company for delivery of the pipe to a well at Huntington Beach, then had it hauled by a truck to an abandoned well at Downey, and from there hauled by another truck to the Carter lease.

This transaction is the basis of the charge against appellant. Pfeiffer, who was also under a like charge, was a witness for the prosecution. He admitted upon the stand his above-mentioned acts, gave the details of his conduct in the matter, and testified that it was all done at the direction and under the orders of appellant; that he gave appellant $50 of the money received from the pipe in cash; and that appellant received the benefit of the remainder of it either as a credit on account of his indebtedness to Pfeiffer or as payment of bills for work done on the lease which were settled by Pfeiffer.

[1] Appellant's first contention is that if he was guilty of any offense it was larceny and not embezzlement. At the trial he made the contrary contention in moving for the dismissal of the larceny charge. However, that charge was dismissed on the motion of the district attorney, and there is no legal barrier to the assumption of such inconsistent positions by appellant. The theory of his argument here is that he was not intrusted by Russell Oil Company with the casing in question, but came wrongfully into its possession. The above-mentioned contract made by Russell Oil Company with Murray contained a clause that it should not be assignable without its consent. Appellant obtained assignments of this contract, but did not procure any express consent thereto by Russell Oil Company, and apparently made no effort so to do. However, he took possession of the lease and operated the wells, or at least attempted to put them into condition to operate, and expended money for that purpose, claiming the right to do this under the Murray contract and not otherwise. Russell L. Williams, who represented Russell Oil Company, testified that at the time the pipe was taken away they did not recognize the contract as a valid existing contract; that they never recognized appellant at any time; and that appellant was not the agent or servant of Russell Oil Company, but that "the whole property was intrusted to M. H. Murray and any one he might employ or have there"; that Murray had a right to use the equipment in the operation of the property; and that neither Murray, nor appellant, nor Pfeiffer had any authority to sell any property of Russell Oil Company. It was shown that appellant's claim of right and his acts and expenditure of money on the lease were known to Russell Oil Company, and with such knowledge they suffered him to remain in possession of the lease and continue his operations thereon, without taking any steps to put him off until after the occurrences which gave rise to this case.

[2-4] From these facts the jury might properly find that appellant was entrusted with the property of Russell Oil Company, including the casing in question. Under the circumstances, that company might well have been estopped from insisting upon that clause of the Murray contract which forbade assignments without their consent, or be held to have waived it. Such provisions are inserted in contracts for the benefit of the party whose consent is required, and, like all provisions of that kind, may be waived by such party. Civ. Code, §§ 3268, 3513; 3 Cal. Jur. 240; 25 Cal. Jur. 929; Schnittger v. Rose, 139 Cal. 656, 661, 73 P. 449; Frank v. New Amsterdam C. Co., 175 Cal. 293, 165 P. 927. The contract in question is analogous to a lease, an assignment of which in violation of a covenant against assignments without the lessor's consent is not void but carries the term. 15 Cal. Jur. 763; Schnittger v. Rose, supra; Potts Drug Co v. Benedict, 156 Cal. 322, 327, 104 P. 432, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609. In such a case the lessor has a remedy by declaring and enforcing a forfeiture for the breach, but he may waive the forfeiture and allow the assignee to remain in possession, in which case the assignee holds under the lease and the assignment. The same rule must be applied to this contract. This disposes of appellant's contention that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction:

"You are instructed that, when a contract carries a clause forbidding assignment without written consent, an attempted assignment does not transfer any rights or liabilities unless it is accompanied by said written consent."

This is obviously erroneous.

[5, 6] Moreover, appellant assumed and claimed to be acting in a capacity which would make him a bailee for Russell Oil Company of all their casing and other equipment on the Carter lease. Having so acted and obtained possession of the property on that assumption, and Russell Oil Company having at least tacitly acquiesced in his conduct, he is now estopped to deny, even in this criminal prosecution, that he was intrusted with the property in question by or for Russell Oil Company. Ex parte Hedley, 31 Cal. 108; People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. 226, 10 P. 502; People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 466, 35 P. 80; People v. Leonard, 106 Cal. 302, 39 P. 617; People v. McLean, 135 Cal. 306, 67 P. 770; People v. Robertson, 6 Cal. App. 514, 92 P. 498; People v. Steffner, 67 Cal. App. 23, 227 P. 699. Hence the court did not err in refusing certain instructions requested by appellant in which a contrary statement of the law was made, and for the same reasons instruction No. 18, of which appellant complains, was correct. It reads as follows:

"The court instructs you that if any person assumes to act as the agent or bailee of another, and in such assumed capacity he is intrusted with, and receives into his care and custody, the property of another, for the use of such other person, and thereafter fraudulently and feloniously appropriates and converts such property or any part of the same to his own use, or to any use or purpose not in the due and lawful execution of his trust, he is guilty of embezzlement."

[7] Pfeiffer's testimony, taken with the other facts above stated, was sufficient to show appellant's guilt of the crime of which he was convicted. It is obvious, however, that Pfeiffer, according to his own testimony, was an accomplice of appellant, and the prosecution stipulated at the trial that this was the fact. The question therefore arises whether there was sufficient corroboration of Pfeiffer's testimony, and appellant forcibly contends that there was not.

[8] Section 1111 of the Penal Code provides as follows, regarding the corroboration of accomplices:

"A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice unless it be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof."

[9] The construction which has been placed on this provision is succinctly stated as follows, in 8 Cal. Jur. 178-180:

"Evidence to corroborate an accomplice need not be sufficient to establish the guilt of the defendant, and it need not establish the actual commission of the offense. Nor need it extend to every fact and detail covered by the statements of the accomplice, or to all the elements of the offense, or prove that the accomplice has told the truth. However, the corroborative evidence must tend in some slight degree, at least, to implicate the defendant. While it need not be strong, more is required by way of corroboration than to raise a mere suspicion. It is sufficient if the corroborating evidence tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense, though if it stood alone it would be entitled to little weight.

"It is not necessary to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice by direct evidence. If the connection of the accused with the alleged crime may be inferred from the corroborative evidence in the case, it is sufficient. While the testimony of one accomplice cannot be corroborated by that of another accomplice in the crime charged, the necessary corroboration may be furnished by the defendant's own testimony, or by admissions or confessions made by him. But under the express provision of the Code mere evidence of the corpus delicti is not sufficient corroboration."

In People v. Hendricks, 71 Cal. App. 730, 236 P. 214, the court, after referring to section 1111, said:

"If the defendant told the officers that he knew nothing about the stolen articles, then his statement was false, because he testified that he saw the sun visor in the garage on the 12th of August. If he refused to make any reply when he was asked about the incriminating evidence against him, then his silence was in the nature of an admission of guilt. 'Misrepresentations, contradictions, or silence of defendant when accusing statements are made usually will have the same effect as a confession or admission as corroborative of the accomplice.' 16 C. J. 707; Holt v. State, 28 Ga. App. 758 (113 S. E. 49); Ettinger v. Commonwealth, 98 Pa. 338."

A similar holding was made in People v. Kelly, 69 Cal. App. 558, 231 P. 767, where many of the authorities are reviewed, and in People v. Taylor, 70 Cal. App. 239, 232 P. 998.

[10] Under the rules established by the foregoing authorities, we think the corroborating evidence must be held sufficient. A detailed statement of it here would unduly prolong this opinion. There was testimony given by others than Pfeiffer, from which the jury might have found participation by appellant in the proceeds of the sale of the casing, his desire to raise money by sale thereof, false statements by him as to his knowledge of the pipe having been taken away, silence when accusatory statements were made to him, apparent knowledge of facts for which no other explanation appeared than his participation in the crime, apparent foreknowledge of the time when the casing would return, testimony by him falsely denying various incriminating facts, and inconsistent statements regarding the matter.

Appellant also requested the following instruction, which was refused:

"The testimony of an accomplice should be viewed with distrust and acted upon with great caution and is never of itself sufficient in law to establish a crime. If the evidence introduced for the purpose of corroborating an accomplice merely raises a suspicion of the guilt of the defendant, this is not sufficient to constitute corroboration, and in such event it is the duty of the jury to find the defendant not guilty."

[11, 12] The statement that the testimony of an accomplice should be viewed with distrust and acted upon with great caution is a charge upon a matter of fact and was properly refused. It goes beyond the instruction provided for in subdivision 4 of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the rule is now well established that even that instruction is an instruction on a matter of fact and should not be given, the Code provision referred to being in violation of article 6, § 19, of the Constitution. Hirshfeld v. Dana, 193 Cal. 142, 160, 223 P. 451; People v. Blanchard, 71 Cal. App. 402, 235 P. 467; People v. Hendricks, 71 Cal. App. 730, 734, 236 P. 214. The second sentence of the requested instruction appears to be correct, but a case will not be reversed for the refusal of an instruction unless it was the duty of the trial court to give the instruction exactly as requested. People v. Davis, 64 Cal. 440, 1 P. 889; People v. Brown, 62 Cal. App. 96, 104, 216 P. 411.

Appellant makes some other points as to instructions given and refused, but after careful consideration we find no merit in them, and do not regard them as of sufficient importance to justify a detailed discussion here.

[13] Another point made by appellant is that the court erred in refusing to allow him to testify as to the amount of money he had on deposit in a certain bank at El Segundo on the date when the casing was sold. There are authorities holding both ways as to the admissibility of such testimony, but the question need not now be determined. Authorities cited in favor of its admission declare that it is proper because relevant to the question of fraudulent intent. Conceding for the purpose of this discussion that the evidence was admissible for this reason, we think its rejection was not prejudicial under the circumstances. The accomplice, Pfeiffer, had testified to a state of facts which, if true, left no doubt as to appellant's fraudulent intent. Appellant's contrary showing, as made by his testimony, was that he did not take the property and had no connection with its taking by Pfeiffer. If the jury had believed this testimony, they must have acquitted him; but if they believed that of Pfeiffer—and their verdict shows that they did—no amount of evidence as to defendant's means or resources could have raised any doubt as to his fraudulent intent in taking the property. Moreover, appellant testified, without objection, that at the time the casing was sold he had sufficient money to pay all bills upon the lease on deposit in his bank accounts at El Segundo and San Diego; that about the time the shortage was discovered he had plenty of money in his account; that during his operations on the lease he had plenty of money or could get it to pay the men; and that between June 26 and July 12 he had $3,000 in his account and spent $1,650 for expenses. It does not appear that he could have made any better showing, had he been allowed to answer the question under consideration.

[14] Another point made is that the court erred in admitting evidence of the dishonor of three checks which appellant gave Pfeiffer on a bank in Texas. Evidence was offered by the prosecution and received showing that on the day after the sale of the casing appellant filled out three checks, aggregating about $68, on the account in which Pfeiffer had deposited the proceeds of the sale, and at appellant's request Pfeiffer signed them. These checks were drawn in favor of workmen upon the lease, and were delivered to them in payment of wages due them from appellant. To negative the inference that he had knowingly received a part of the proceeds of the embezzlement, which might be drawn from this evidence, appellant testified that he had previously paid out $92 in behalf of Pfeiffer to release the latter's automobile from attachment, and that the above-mentioned checks for $68 were in partial satisfaction of this advance. Thereupon, the prosecution was allowed to prove that shortly before this $92 payment, and before the sale of the casing, appellant had given Pfeiffer three checks on a bank in Texas for the aggregate amount of $605, which were deposited by Pfeiffer in an account he had in the Norwalk bank, but not the same account in which the proceeds of the sale of the casing were later deposited; that Pfeiffer then gave appellant a check for $150 on this account, on which appellant got the cash; and that these Texas checks later came back dishonored. Pfeiffer testified that appellant gave him a check to cover these checks, and his statement could be construed to refer to this $92 payment. We see no error in this ruling. It was proper for the prosecution to show that appellant received part of the proceeds of the embezzlement, as tending to connect him with the commission of the offense; and in response to his testimony that the $68 checks produced by the prosecution for that purpose were a payment on indebtedness of Pfeiffer to appellant, it was competent for the prosecution to show that in fact the indebtedness was the other way, and such was the tendency of the evidence complained of.

Appellant's final point is that the court erred in refusing him leave to apply for probation, his claim being that such leave was refused for the sole reason that he had pleaded not guilty and had been convicted by a jury, instead of pleading guilty. The record sustains his claim as to the reason for which his request was refused. After a motion for a new trial had been argued, and the court had indicated its intention to deny it, appellant's counsel said:

"I would like permission to present an application for probation to the court, and present this man's past life for some 30 years; * * * I feel that I can make a very satisfactory showing to your honor as to what sort of life this man has led prior to this time."

Thereupon the court denied the motion for a new trial, and appellant's counsel further said:

"I request permission of the court to present officially to the court through its regular probation officer the facts and circumstances which I believe will warrant the court in granting leniency to this man."

To which the court replied:

"Well, the court will not allow you to do that, Mr. Thompson. I feel that he has had a fair and impartial trial. He has submitted the issues in this case to a jury of his own selection, and he will have to abide by the judgment of that jury from the facts in the case. When a defendant walks into my court and pleads guilty and submits the facts to me, why, then, it is time to determine whether he shall have probation or have punishment in prison, but in a case of this kind I feel, the jury having given its judgment, that the court should not take any time to review those facts or to investigate further, or to take into consideration anything at all in the matter. I believe that that should not be done."

To this appellant's counsel said:

"I am only making this request, not with the idea of your honor reviewing the facts before you now, but assuming that the verdict of the jury is correct."

And after further discussion between him and the court, he said:

"However, your honor must bear in mind that the probation law is for the guilty."

To this the court replied:

"Yes; primarily it is for those who admit their guilt; not, in my judgment, for those who say they are not guilty. I think the whole theory of the probation law is to grant its benefit to those who admit their guilt and who offer mitigating circumstances, and not for those who still say, 'I am innocent.' I think for the man who is innocent, after a conviction and judgment of the court, his appeal is to be made to the Governor and not to the judge under the probation law. I think it would rather tend to stultify the system. I think it is too dangerous a proposition and would involve the courts in too much labor, to give a man two trials. For these reasons that I have averted to, I will not permit an application for probation to be filed."

[15] A reading of the probation law (Pen. Code, § 1203) at once discloses that it does not support the view thus announced by the trial court as to its scope. The opening provision of section 1203 is, omitting words immaterial here:

"After the conviction by plea or verdict of guilty of a public offense, * * * the court * * * before judgment and sentence * * * may upon oral suggestion of either party or of its own motion when it appears that there are circumstances which may properly be taken into view either in aggravation or mitigation of the punishment, may in its discretion refer the same to the probation officer directing said probation officer to investigate and to report, recommending either for or against release upon probation at a specified time, and the court shall hear the same summarily at that specified time and upon such notice to the adverse party as it may direct."

This section further provides in subdivision (e) that when a defendant has fulfilled the conditions of his probation or has been discharged from probation "if he has been convicted after a plea of not guilty, the court shall set aside the verdict of guilty." Words could scarcely be used which would express more clearly the intention of the Legislature to extend the benefits of the probation law to defendants who deny their guilt and upon trial are convicted. In the exercise of its discretion the court passing on applications for probation is expected to select only the deserving cases for the bestowal of clemency, but this cannot be done if the court arbitrarily refuses to hear or consider their applications. In the present case, the court entirely departed from the letter and the spirit of the probation law in refusing to entertain appellant's application merely because he had not pleaded guilty.

[16, 17] Is the court's error in this respect reviewable on appeal? Appellant has given notice of an appeal from the order denying his motion for permission to file an application for probation. This order was made before judgment and is not an appealable order. Pen. Code, § 1237. The attempted appeal from it must therefore be dismissed. But section 1259 of the Penal Code provides:

"Upon an appeal taken by the defendant in open court the appellate court may, without exception having been taken in the trial court, review any question of law involved in any ruling, order, instruction, or thing whatsoever said or done at the trial or prior to or after judgment, which thing was said or done after objection made in and considered by the lower court, and which affected the substantial rights of the defendant. The appellate court may also review any instruction given, refused or modified, even though no objection was made thereto in the lower court, if the substantial rights of the defendant were affected thereby."

Under this provision, five conditions must be complied with in order that the appellate court may review a ruling of the trial court: (1) An appeal taken in open court; (2) a question of law involved in the ruling; (3) a ruling at the trial or prior to or after judgment (not including orders which are directly appealable); (4) objection made in and considered by the lower court before the ruling (except in case of an instruction); (5) a ruling or order which affected the substantial rights of the defendant. In this case, the record clearly shows that conditions 1, 3, and 4 have been met.

[18] We think there is also a question of law involved, under the circumstances of this case. It is true, section 1203 provides that the court may "in its discretion" refer the matter to the probation officer for a report and thereafter "in its discretion" place the defendant on probation, and no doubt, in the ordinary case, the exercise of this discretion would not be reviewed on appeal. But we are satisfied that the same general rule applies to the discretion conferred by this section as to the numerous other cases of discretionary power conferred upon the courts, concerning which the Supreme Court said in an early case:

"The discretion intended, however, is not a capricious or arbitrary discretion, but an impartial discretion, guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles. It is not a mental discretion, to be exercised ex gratia, but a legal discretion, to be exercised in conformity with the spirit of the law, and in a manner to subserve and not to impede or defeat the ends of substantial justice." Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 423, 424.

Citations might be multiplied almost without number showing that the rule stated in Bailey v. Taaffe has been followed and applied to the discretion conferred upon the court in a great variety of cases. With an exception to be noticed presently, we think this rule is applicable to the discretion exercised by the court in passing on an application for probation. Suppose the court should in response to a defendant's application for probation say to him:

"I do not like the color of your hair, or you are of the black race, and for that reason I will not hear your application."

Would the defendant be obliged to submit to such conduct without remedy? Such a ruling would clearly be an abuse of discretion because not guided or controlled by principles established by law therefor, but made with reference to some criterion not provided for or countenanced by law. The same is true of the ruling here complained of. It is based on a ground flatly contrary to the provisions of the Code. Such action cannot be regarded as other than an abuse of discretion, under any accepted definition of that term. When such an abuse of discretion occurs a question of law is presented. In order to review the action of the trial court here this court needs but to answer the question, "Was the order based on any ground which the law sanctions?" and, the answer being "No," a reversal of that action is not an interference with any discretion vested by law in the trial court.

[19-21] Herein the case differs from the ordinary one where the court has considered a defendant's application for probation on its merits and either refused to entertain the application or refused to grant it when heard, and this brings us to the point above referred to, in which we think the rule declared in

Bailey v. Taaffe is not fully applicable to the discretion of the court in probation matters. When the court gives consideration to the merits of the application and from them determines that probation ought not to be granted—which it may do either at the preliminary stage where defendant suggests that there are matters in mitigation of punishment and requests a reference to the probation officer; i. e., in the language customarily used but not found in the Code, asks permission to file an application for probation, or later at a summary hearing on the probation officer's report—the discretion of the court is not and cannot be controlled by any fixed legal rules. It must be guided by considerations pertaining to psychology, sociology, and penology, or, in the words of the Code, to "the ends of justice"; by general rules of policy which have not been and in the nature of the case should not be crystallized into positive or definite rules of law. Since action based on a consideration of such matters does not involve any question of law, to this extent, the rule of Bailey v. Taaffe cannot be applied to the discretion vested in the court in probation matters, and its exercise of that discretion cannot be reviewed on appeal. If the record is silent as to the grounds of the ruling, the presumption would be, under the general rule as to presumptions on appeal, that it was founded upon a consideration of the merits of defendant's application, but here there is an affirmative showing to the contrary. When the court undertakes to deal with the question whether a particular case or a particular defendant is within the scope of the probation law, then it is dealing with fixed legal principles, and a departure from those principles is an abuse of discretion and raises a question of law which may be reviewed on appeal.

[22] There remains for consideration the question whether the order complained of affected the substantial rights of the appellant. We have no doubt that it did. Had the court considered his application on its merits, it might, of course, have found that he was not a proper subject for the benefits of the probation law and, as we have just said, we could not review such a finding, whether expressly appearing or presumed from the silence of the record, but the court might also conceivably have found to the contrary and have determined to place him on probation. On reaching the latter conclusion, it might have suspended either the imposing or the execution of the sentence; and in either case, on appellant's complying with the terms of his probation for the entire period thereof, the court must have set aside the verdict of guilty and dismissed the information, and appellant would have been thereafter released from all penalties and disabilities resulting from the offense. Pen. Code, § 1203, subds. (a) and (e). A ruling which deprives a party of the opportunity to apply for and perchance to obtain such benefits unquestionably affects his substantial rights.

For the reasons stated, we think the order complained of may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. We are not unmindful of the fact that in People v. Dunlop, 27 Cal. App. 460, 470, 150 P. 389, and People v. Laborwits, 74 Cal. App. 401, 240 P. 802, a contrary rule was declared. Apparently neither of those cases presented such a situation as we have before us. In the Dunlop Case the court said:

"The action of the court in refusing to entertain an application by the defendant for probation after his conviction or of taking testimony or the report of the probation officer of the court with a view to admitting the accused to probation cannot be reviewed. The matter of admitting a person convicted of crime to probation rests entirely in the discretion of the trial court, as does likewise the question whether any proceedings shall be entertained by the court to that end. Pen. Code, § 1203. Indeed, as we understand said section, the only question which may arise thereunder can never be as to the action of the court in refusing to admit a convicted person to probation, but must always be, if any reviewable question may arise thereunder at all, whether the court abused its discretion in granting probation."

The case seems to have been one where the action of the lower court was based on a consideration of the merits of the defendant's proposed application. In such a case we agree to the doctrine that the discretion of the court cannot be reviewed on appeal, but for the reasons already stated we think the reason given for the decision is too broad and should be so limited as not to apply to a case like that now before us. Such a case the court manifestly did not have in mind when writing the opinion in the Dunlop Case. In the Laborwits Case, which was decided by this court on the authority of the Dunlop Case, no brief was filed, there was no reporter's transcript in the record, and the record disclosed nothing as to the reason for the action of the trial court. Under such circumstances, manifestly its action could not be reviewed on appeal, but we think the doctrine of the case should be limited as already stated.

[23] Our conclusion on this point necessitates a reversal of the judgment, by reason of the fact that an application for probation can be considered only before judgment. Beggs v. Superior Court, 179 Cal. 130, 175 P. 642. However, as we find no error affecting the verdict of conviction, no new trial is necessary, but the case may be simply remanded for further proceedings on the conviction. The situation is similar to that existing in People v. Johnson, 71 Cal. 384, 388, 12 P. 261, People v. Mendosa, 178 Cal. 509, 173 P. 998, and People v. Gonzales, 36 Cal. App. 782, 173 P. 407, where orders of that character were made.

The appeal from the order denying defendant's motion for permission to file an application for probation is dismissed, the order denying a new trial is affirmed, and the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to arraign the defendant again for judgment and thereupon to hear and determine on its merits the defendant's motion for permission to file an application for probation and thereafter to proceed with the matter of judgment in such manner as may be in accordance with law and in conformity to its decision on the matter of probation.

PEOPLE v. BROCK. (Cr. No. 1004.)★

Rehearing Denied With Modifications Jan. 14, 1928.

1. Criminal law § 576(2)—Under circumstances of disqualification of district attorney and the sending of judge to other counties, held, there was good cause shown for not bringing defendant to second trial within 60 days after remittitur went down (Const. art. 1, § 13; Pen. Code, § 1382).

Even if, in view of Const. art. 1, § 13, guaranteeing to every defendant a speedy trial, Pen. Code, § 1382, requiring the court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, to order the prosecution to be dismissed, if without application by defendant for postponement he is not brought to trial within 60 days "after the finding of indictment or filing of information," applies to a second trial, after reversal, and, in absence of showing of good cause to the contrary, limits time for bringing defendant to such trial to 60 days after the going down of the remittitur, held, that it could not be said there was an abuse of discretion in holding that good cause had been shown for the delay of 5 days after expiration of the 60-day period in bringing defendant to trial, in view of the county attorney being disqualified, and time being necessary to obtain an attorney to act as special prosecutor, and in view of the judge of the county being sent during such period to hold court in other counties, and judges of other counties being sent to such county for a limited period to attend to routine matters.

2. Robbery § 24(1)—Evidence held sufficient to warrant conviction of defendant as one of participants in a robbery.

Evidence consisting of circumstances and admissions held sufficient to warrant conviction of defendant as one of the five persons engaged in the perpetration of a robbery.

3. Criminal law § 1186(4)—Any error in admission of evidence of defendant's statement that he would plead guilty of burglary, but not of robbery, held harmless, in view of other evidence (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Admission of evidence that defendant said he would plead guilty of burglary, but not of robbery, in view of evidence of participation in robbery, held harmless, and so to be disregarded, under Const. art. 6, § 4½.

4. Criminal law § 721(5)—Counsel's statement that facts were undenied held not a comment on defendant's failure to take witness stand.

Statement of prosecuting attorney in argument that facts enumerated were undenied is not within the prohibition of the statute that the fact that a defendant does not take the witness stand shall not be considered a circumstance against him; it not being a comment on defendant's failure to take the witness stand.

5. Criminal law § 564(1)—Venue in robbery case held sufficiently proven.

Evidence in prosecution for robbery committed in a certain house held to sufficiently prove venue.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Edward Brock was convicted of burglary and robbery, and was denied a new trial, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur C. Huston, Jr., and Percy Napton, both of Woodland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J. The defendant was tried and convicted upon an information charging, in one count, that on or about the 28th day of February, 1926, the said defendant did burglariously, etc., enter a certain dwelling house belonging to and occupied by one W. A. Lillard, in the county of Yolo, state of California; and in a second count, charging that the defendant, at the same time and place and in the same residence, in the immediate presence of W. A. Lillard and others, did commit the crime of robbery, in that the said defendant did unlawfully, forcibly, etc., take from the person, possession, and immediate presence of the said W. A. Lillard and others, certain personal property consisting of lawful money of the United States, firearms, and jewelry, all of the value of about $100, lawful money of the United States. The information was sufficient in form and substance to charge the defendant with the crime of burglary and also with the crime of robbery. The defendant's motion for a new trial being denied, an appeal is prosecuted therefrom, and from the judgment of conviction entered upon the verdict of the jury.

This is the second trial of the defendant upon the information referred to; both trials resulting in conviction. The first trial resulted in a reversal upon appeal because this defendant and other parties charged with the same offense in a separate and distinct information were tried at the same time. See People v. O'Connor, et al. (Cal. App.) 254 P. 630. Upon reversal of the cause as just referred to, the remittitur therein went down from this court and was filed in the office of the clerk of the trial court in Yolo county on the 2d day of May, 1927. The trial which resulted in the second conviction of the defendant and on account of which this appeal is prosecuted took place on the 6th day of July, 1927. Three principal reasons are urged as counts for reversal, to wit: That the defendant's motion to dismiss for want of prosecution within 60 days should have been granted; second, that the evidence did not warrant the conviction of the defendant; and, third, that the court erred in the admission of testimony. Two minor reasons for reversal are also set forth: That the court erred in its instructions to the jury; and that the attorney for the people was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in his argument to the jury.

[1] Section 13 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state of California, guaranteeing to every defendant a speedy trial, and section 1382 of the Penal Code, defining the time within which a trial must be had after the finding of an indictment or the filing of an information, are relied upon as necessitating a reversal of the judgment and the dismissal of the defendant. Section 1382 of the Penal Code, so far as involved herein, reads:

"The court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, must order the prosecution to be dismissed in the following cases: * * * If a defendant, whose trial has not been postponed upon his application, is not brought to trial within sixty days after the finding of the indictment, or filing of the information."

In support of the ruling of the trial court denying the motion of the defendant for dismissal because the action was not tried within 60 days after the filing of the remittitur, it is urged by the people, first, that the section applies only as to the time within which a trial must be had after the finding of an indictment or the filing of an information, and has no relevancy to cases being brought to trial within 60 days after the going down of a remittitur; that the section not referring to a trial where reversal has been had upon appeal by a defendant, and not mentioning the filing of a remittitur or the time within which a trial must be had after the filing of a remittitur, there should not be imported into the section language which the Legislature has not incorporated therein; and, second, that good cause has been shown in this case for not bringing the defendant to trial within 60 days after the filing of a remittitur. Section 13 of article 1 of the Constitution entitles the defendant to a speedy trial, and section 1382 of the Penal Code, in furtherance of the constitutional provision, explicitly provides for the time within which a trial is to be had after the finding of an indictment or the filing of an information. Section 1382 of the Penal Code, however, contains another provision which controls the application of subdivisions 1 and 2 of the section, and particularly subdivision 2, which is involved herein. If good cause for the delay is shown, 60 days is held not to be the limit of the period of time within which a speedy trial may be had. In other words, the term "speedy trial" is to be read and interpreted in the light of all the circumstances. In the case at bar, if good cause has been shown why the defendant was not brought to trial until the 6th day of July, 1927, which was 5 days after the expiration of the 60-day period, then it becomes wholly immaterial whether section 1382 of the Penal Code refers only to indictments or informations, or whether the constitutional provision to which we have referred and the section of the Code should be read together and the term 60 days accepted as the limit of the period within which a defendant may be brought to trial after the remittitur has been filed in the event of a reversal of the cause upon appeal. With this in view, we have carefully examined the transcript in this case and find that it discloses the following:

Upon the first trial of this cause, wherein the defendant was tried with others and charged with the same offense, one Neal Chalmers appeared as one of the attorneys for this defendant and the other defendants tried with him in the trial just referred to and conducted the defense in the trial court and successfully prosecuted the defendant's appeal in this court. The trial just referred to was had on or about the 2d day of June, 1926. Later, in the year 1926, to wit, at the general election held in November, 1926, the said Neal Chalmers was elected district attorney of the county of Yolo, and assumed his duties as such on or about the first Monday of January, 1927, and therefore was disqualified to act as the prosecuting officer in this case during the entire period of time from the 2d day of May, 1927, to and including the 6th day of July, 1927. That after the going down and filing of the remittitur in this cause, the said Neal Chalmers communicated with Hon. U. S. Webb, the Attorney General of the state, setting forth his disqualification by reason of his having been counsel for the defendant upon his first trial, and asking that some other counsel be designated by him according to the provisions of section 472 of the Political Code. Several letters passed between the Attorney General and Mr. Chalmers relative to the latter's disqualification, and this was followed by inquiry as to some suitable attorney, member of the bar of Yolo county, whose services might be obtained to act as special counsel for the people by reason of the disqualification of the district attorney of said county. After some inquiry and correspondence, the Attorney General secured the services of Arthur B. Eddy, an attorney at law and member of the bar of the county of Yolo and a resident of Woodland, in that county, to act as special prosecutor and represent the people in this cause.

It appears that one of the letters addressed by the Attorney General to Mr. Arthur B. Eddy at his office in Woodland remained unanswered for the period of about 8 days, due to the fact that Mr. Eddy was away from his office and the city of Woodland during that period of time. After Mr. Eddy had received the request from the Attorney General that he act as special counsel in this case, Mr. Eddy took a few days within which to inquire into the case and acquaint himself somewhat with the duties to be performed in order to properly represent the people therein. After making such investigation, Mr. Eddy accepted the appointment as special counsel to represent the people in this cause, and took upon himself such duties. The record likewise shows that Hon. W. A. Anderson, the duly qualified and acting judge of the superior court of Yolo county, was, by order of the Chief Justice of the state of California and chairman of the judicial council of the state of California, designated and appointed to preside in the superior court of the counties of San Diego and Los Angeles in one of the departments thereof, from the period of time beginning on the 3d day of May, 1927, to and including the 18th day of June, 1927. Thus during said period of time the trial judge of said county and the one elected to preside in the superior court of said county was necessarily absent therefrom for a period of at least 48 days, assuming that it required one day to reach Los Angeles from the city of Woodland and one day to return therefrom, which probably is somewhat less than the actual time required.

The record also shows that Hon. Ernest Weyand, judge of the superior court of the county of Colusa, was, by the same authority, designated and appointed to hold court in the county of Yolo from the 9th day of May to and including the 11th day of June, 1927. The record further shows that for a short period of time, to wit, on May 23, 1927, Hon. Malcolm Glenn, a judge of the superior court of Sacramento county, was designated and appointed to hold court in the county of Yolo. The record likewise shows that Hon. W. A. Anderson was, by the same authority, designated and required to hold court in the superior court of the county of Sacramento for the period beginning on the 28th day of June and ending on the 30th day of June, 1927. The time which Hon. W. A. Anderson was required to hold court in the county of Los Angeles was set forth and prescribed in several orders which we have considered and given as including the whole time. The record further shows that the former district attorney of Yolo county, Mr. Kern, who appeared as prosecutor upon the first trial of the defendant, declined the request of the Attorney General to appear and prosecute this action as special counsel. The record further shows that it was not until the 28th day of June, 1927, that Arthur B. Eddy finished his investigation of the facts and circumstances connected with this action and accepted the appointment from the Attorney General as special counsel to appear in behalf of the people upon the trial of this cause. It thus appears that within 8 days after the people, through the Attorney General of the state, had secured qualified counsel to represent them in this action, the trial of this defendant was begun.

An examination of the record in this cause discloses that some 88 pages of the transcript are required simply to schedule the various court proceedings which were had in the county of Yolo between the 2d day of May, 1927, and the 6th day of July, 1927. A cursory calculation leads to the conclusion that there were between 340 and 350 different proceedings, including motions, demurrers, probate proceedings, naturalization hearings, and trials. This record shows that the judges who came from the counties of Colusa and Sacramento to preside in the superior court of Yolo county were reasonably busy during said period of time, and this conclusion is further strengthened by the fact that the judges referred to had their own duties to perform in their local courts. The record shows that there were several days intervening between some of the proceedings conducted by Hon. Ernest Weyand, sitting as judge of the trial court in the county of Yolo, but at the same time it is made clear that the people had no one to represent them in this action until the 28th day of June, 1927, which was after Judge Weyand had ceased to act as presiding judge of the superior court of Yolo county. The record shows that the defendant, when this action was called and set for trial for July 6, 1927, interposed an objection thereto on the ground that it was being set at a period more than 60 days after the filing of the remittitur herein, and upon defendant's motion to dismiss, which was heard on the 6th day of July, 1927, all of the facts which we have hereinbefore set forth were submitted to the trial court for it to determine whether good cause was or was not shown for not bringing the defendant to trial until 5 days after the expiration of the 60-day period. Under these circumstances, as stated in the case of People v. Farrington, 140 Cal. 656, 74 P. 288, the trial court was called upon to exercise its discretion as to whether good cause had or had not been shown for the delay of 5 days after the 60-day period had expired, in bringing the defendant to trial, and, as stated in the case just cited, some discretion must be given to the trial court in its decision relative to the motion to dismiss. This discretion, however, cannot be exercised arbitrarily, but is to be based upon all the circumstances and facts presented to the court to account for the few days' delay. In the recent case of Ex parte Alpine (Cal. App.)

259 P. 457, the cause of delay was through lack of knowledge on the part of the district attorney that the remittitur from the District Court of Appeal had been sent down and filed. The court there said:

"In the case at bar so far as appears, the failure to bring the action before the court to be set for trial until 3 days later than the expiration of 60 days from the filing of the remittitur may have been nothing more than the result of inadvertence in not immediately discovering that the remittitur had been filed."

It is also stated in the opinion that, in the absence of any showing of notice to the district attorney that the appeal had been terminated, it would be unreasonable to permit a defendant to take advantage of mere inadvertence and so escape prosecution upon a criminal charge. In the case of Murphy v. Superior Court, 53 Cal. App. 6, 200 P. 483, it was held that a defendant is not entitled to have a criminal action dismissed on the ground that he was not brought to trial within 60 days after the finding of an indictment, where the court was engaged practically all of such 60-day period in the trial of other cases. In that case, as here, the record disclosed the number of proceedings in the superior court during the 60-day period, and established the fact that the court was engaged during practically all of such period. Likewise, in the case of People v. Benc, 130 Cal. 159, 62 P. 404, it is held that good cause is shown where it appears that the court was engaged in the trial of other cases. In 8 Cal. Jur. p. 204, § 278, we find the following, which we think a correct statement of the rule that should be applied:

"What is good cause for delay, within the meaning of section 1382 of the Penal Code, may be difficult to define with precision, since it must, in a great measure, be determined by reference to the particular circumstances appearing in each case. The matter rests largely in the discretion of the trial court. However, this discretion is not arbitrary, but should proceed upon such knowledge or information as will enable the court to determine for itself whether public justice requires further detention of the prisoner, notwithstanding delay on the part of the prosecution."

Examples are then given of what has been held to show good cause for the delay.

In the case at bar, under the recent constitutional amendment and the acts of the Legislature passed in pursuance thereof, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, as chairman of the judicial council, is vested with a large discretion in directing trial judges to leave their own counties and proceed to some other county, and there hold court, where the calendars are more congested.

The record in this case shows that the trial judge, under this constitutional provision, was taken from the county of Yolo and sent to the counties of San Diego and Los Angeles, there to hold court for such a period of time as to practically take him away from his own county and courtroom for the period of approximately 50 days during the 60-day period immediately following the filing of the remittitur in this cause; that during said period of time trial judges were sent to the county of Yolo from adjoining counties for a limited period of time to attend to the routine business of the court that required immediate consideration; and the transcript shows that said judges not only attended to routine matters, but also tried several cases. The transcript further shows that there was no district attorney of the county of Yolo qualified to represent the people in the trial of the defendant in this action between the 2d day of May, 1927, and the 6th day of July, 1927; that it was necessary for the Attorney General to secure the services of some attorney at law, sufficiently able and willing to undertake the prosecution of this action; that such attorney was not secured until on or about the 28th day of June, 1927.

The record further shows that a delay of only 5 days occurred after the expiration of the 60-day period before the trial of this defendant was begun. In view of all of these facts, if good cause is not shown for the delay, we do not really see how those words in the statute would ever find application. And in view of the fact that it has been found necessary for the chairman of the judicial council of this state to direct judges of smaller counties to go to larger counties and there assist in the clearing of the court calendars, it would be unreasonable to hold that if, in so doing, a delay of 5 days has been occasioned over the 60-day period, necessitates the discharge of a defendant in a criminal action. Especially would this be true in view of all the circumstances disclosed by the record in this cause. We think that the circumstances of this case disclose that an appellate court should not hold that the discretion of the trial court in denying the defendant's motion to dismiss has been either improperly or arbitrarily exercised.

[2] That there is little merit in the defendant's contention that there was insufficient testimony to warrant conviction will appear from a brief recital of the facts set forth in the record. It appears in the evidence that on the 28th day of February, 1926, five men were seen in and about the dwelling house occupied by W. A. Lillard in the county of Yolo. The residence of W. A. Lillard is situate on what is known as the Davis highway in said county. At about midnight on the 28th day of February, 1926, according to the testimony of one witness, four men entered the residence of said Lillard and proceeded to ransack the house. Another witness who was in a different room in said residence saw only three in the house. Of the three, one wore a mask or bandage over his face. The other two had no covering over their faces. These two were observed and identified by two witnesses. There were at the time in the Lillard house, and as a part of the Lillard family, W. A. Lillard, Mrs. Laura E. Lillard, and Tom Lillard. The men who entered the Lillard house were armed and the Lillards were commanded to keep quiet. The record sets forth fully how the Lillards were intimidated by the threatening attitude of the armed men, which need not be set forth herein, further than to say that the men secured a number of articles such as money, jewelry, revolvers, pearl beads, and the like from the Lillard home. While the robbery was being perpetrated, a man by the name of J. A. Nunes, an employee of the Lillards, and who resided in a small house in the Lillard ranch not far from the Lillard residence, had returned by automobile from Capay Valley. The testimony of Nunes is to the effect that he returned to the Lillard ranch shortly before 12 o'clock; that as he turned off the highway toward the house which he occupied on the Lillard ranch he noticed a "Hudson" open car standing alongside the Davis highway, which we have heretofore mentioned (which, by the way, is an improved state highway), and that at that time one man was sitting behind the steering wheel of the automobile, parked, as just stated, and a second man was walking around or standing in front of the automobile; that on his way to the Lillard ranch he passed this automobile, and as he passed the parked "Hudson" automobile the persons referred to were in the positions which we have just stated. Mr. Nunes testified further that after he had put his car in the garage he noticed a light in the Lillard residence; that just after he had gone into his own house to go to bed he was called by Tom Lillard; that he got up and went to the Lillard house, and there he found that the premises had been robbed; that the Lillards had been tied up, etc.

The record further shows that immediately after the robbery the persons engaged therein drove away from the Lillard residence on the Davis highway in a westerly direction; that at a place about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the Lillard residence the "Hudson" automobile was overturned and five persons who had been riding therein were discovered a few minutes thereafter, one of whom was dead, killed by the overturning of the "Hudson" automobile, and the others more or less injured; that the defendant, Brock, was seriously injured. One of the persons engaged in the robbery named John Franks, pleaded guilty; three of the persons alleged to have been engaged in the robbery, to wit, Herbert Fitzgibbons, James O'Connor, and this defendant, Edward Brock, were tried and found guilty, as heretofore stated, and secured a reversal upon appeal to this court. The record shows that many of the articles taken from the Lillard home were found scattered about the wrecked automobile. The watch taken from the Lillard home was found on the person of the man who was killed. The pearl beads were taken off the person of the defendant, Brock. The testimony in this particular shows that the defendant, Brock, who was seriously wounded, was taken to the Woodland Sanitarium, and the testimony as to the pearl beads is as follows:

"Q. Here are some pearl beads; do you know anything about these? A. Yes; those were taken off Mr. Brock in the sanitarium at the Woodland Sanitarium—out of his pocket."

The testimony of the witness Howard is to the effect that at about 12:30 o'clock on the night of February 28, 1927, he was driving along the Davis highway, and at a turn therein, about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the Lillard home, he discovered the wrecked automobile and the wounded man to whom we have just referred; that the automobile was turned over; was bottom side up; that the lights were still burning; that he noticed a number of persons there, and that the defendant, Brock, was pinned under the car under the back seat; that he assisted in taking the wounded men to a place where they could be cared for.

The record further discloses that the defendant, Brock, stated to the witness Grove and other persons that he was riding in the back seat of the automobile. As before stated, the testimony shows that among the articles taken from the Lillard home was a string of pearl beads. This recital may be summarized as follows: Three men entered one room of the Lillard residence. According to another witness, four men entered another room. Two of the men referred to were identified while they were in the Lillard house. Two men were seen at the "Hudson" automobile, one sitting behind the wheel, the other in front of the machine. We know by common experience that such persons are called "lookouts." The robbery occurred a few minutes after 12 o'clock. At 12:30 that same night the automobile in which the five men were riding was found wrecked $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the Lillard residence, the defendant, one of the number, stating that he had been riding with other of the defendants, whom he named, in the rear seat of the automobile; that after the defendant was taken to the sanitarium a string of pearl beads, like those taken from the Lillard home, was found in his pockets. It also appears from the record that the defendant stated he was willing to plead guilty of burglary, but not of robbery. With these facts in the record we do not see how it can be seriously contended that there was not sufficient evidence to submit this cause to the jury and warrant the jury finding the defendant guilty as charged. It is true that no one identified the defendant, Brock, at the Lillard residence; that no one saw him enter the residence; nor does it appear that the witness Nunes identified the two persons whom he saw with the "Hudson" automobile; but the circumstances and admissions which we have set forth lead inevitably to the conclusion that the defendant was one of the five persons engaged in the robbery.

The objection to the admission of the testimony relating to the robbery, the articles taken from the Lillard home, the articles found at the scene of the wrecked car, and where the different articles were found, is so utterly without merit that we will take no time in the discussion thereof, further than to say that the finding of the wrecked automobile, the parties who were riding therein, and the taking from the persons of the different defendants, including the pearls taken from the person of the defendant, all tended to show who were engaged in the perpetration of the robbery.

[3] It is further objected that the court erred in admitting testimony to the effect that the defendant stated to Dr. Stanley and the witness Grove that he would plead guilty to the crime of burglary, but not to robbery. This statement of the defendant appears to have been made in response to a statement made to him by Dr. Stanley, and also by the witness Grove, that, if he would come through and plead guilty and go to San Quentin, he would receive better medical care than they were able to give him at the Woodland Sanitarium. It does not appear that any promise was made to the defendant, or that any hope of a lighter penalty would be imposed by reason of anything which was said to him by either Dr. Stanley or the witness Grove, and nothing that the defendant said could be held to be a confession. But whether the court erred in this particular or not, we think that, under the facts which we have set forth, no prejudicial error was committed, and that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution applies.

[4] The alleged misconduct of the special prosecutor for the people refers to what was said by counsel during the argument of the cause to the jury. In setting forth all the facts and circumstances pertaining to the case, counsel stated frequently that such facts were undenied. The point is made that, as the defendant did not take the witness stand or make any denial, such argument came within the prohibition of the statute where it is provided that the fact that a defendant does not take the witness stand shall not be considered as a circumstance against him. However, there is no merit in this objection. See 8 Cal. Jur. p. 269, § 330, where it is said:

"It is not improper, however, for a district attorney to state that certain evidence of the prosecution is uncontradicted, or to point out that incriminating circumstances have not been explained by any sworn testimony."

This is not commenting upon the failure of the defendant to take the witness stand, but a simple statement of the fact that the evidence against the defendant stands uncontradicted by any testimony. The text above quoted is amply supported. We do not need to cite authorities that a conspiracy to commit a crime may be established by proofs of acts and conduct; that it was not necessary to show an express agreement between the parties; that, if all the facts and circumstances taken together show that certain persons took part in the carrying out or perpetration of any crime, such as acting as lookouts, standing guard at an automobile, or sitting in an automobile ready to drive away at a moment's notice, while other persons enter a nearby residence and there perpetrate the robbery; that all the persons thereafter make their escape from the scene of the robbery and are found a few minutes later in the wrecked car, including all the circumstances which we have detailed in this opinion, the conclusion that all the persons referred to were conspirators is unescapable. No other testimony is needed.

It is finally urged that the court erred in instructing the jury in relation to the inferences to be drawn from the unexplained possession of stolen property shortly after the time of the robbery. This objection is based upon the erroneous allegation that none of the stolen property was found upon the person of the defendant, Brock. The incident of the pearl beads appears to have been entirely forgotten. The instructions on the subject of possession of stolen property given by the court are but a repetition of instructions which have been approved times without number, and do not need to be set forth herein.

[5] The objection that the venue was not proven is likewise without merit. The testimony of the witness W. H. Lillard is to the effect that on the 28th day of February, 1926, he was living at what is known as the Lillard residence; that he resided in Yolo county; that the residence was in Yolo county between Davis and Winters. The testimony of Thomas W. Lillard is to the same effect. The residence referred to was then described as the residence robbed on the night of February 28, 1926, as hereinbefore set forth in this opinion. That this sufficiently shows the venue, we need only cite one case, People v. McGregor, 88 Cal. 144, 26 P. 97.

The verdict of the jury and the judgment of the court in this case being just, and we think amply supported by the law and the evidence, the order and judgment of the trial court are affirmed.

MANCINI v. PATRIZI. (Civ. 5716.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 10, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 9, 1928.

1. Corporations ⇨182—"Capital stock," which statute prohibits directors from paying to stockholders, means assets with which corporation carries on business (Civ. Code, § 309, as amended by St. 1905, p. 558, § 4, and St. 1917, p. 657).

Under Civ. Code, § 309, as amended by St. 1905, p. 558, § 4, and St. 1917, p. 657, prohibiting directors from dividing, withdrawing, or paying to stockholders any of corporation's "capital stock," except that remaining after payment of all its debts on dissolution or expiration of its term of existence "capital stock" means assets with which corporation carries on its corporate business.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Capital Stock.]

2. Corporations ⇨182—Statutory inhibition against payment of capital stock to stockholders runs against them as well as directors (Civ. Code, § 309, as amended by St. 1905, p. 558, § 4, and St. 1917, p. 657).

Inhibition in Civ. Code, § 309, as amended by St. 1905, p. 558, § 4, and St. 1917, p. 657, against payment of capital stock by corporation directors to stockholders except as provided therein, runs against stockholders as well as directors.

3. Corporations ⇨376—Corporation cannot purchase its own stock, except as provided by statute, unless necessary to save itself from loss (Civ. Code, § 309, as amended by St. 1905, p. 558, § 4, and St. 1917, p. 657).

In California, a corporation is not authorized to purchase its own stock, except as provided by Civ. Code, § 309, as amended by St. 1905, p. 558, § 4, and St. 1917, p. 657, unless necessary to save itself from loss, as by taking such stock in satisfaction of loan, since result would be illegally to withdraw and pay to shareholder a part of such stock.

4. Corporations ⇨133—Failure to first offer stock for sale to corporation, as required by by-law, held no defense to action for liquidated damages for refusal to transfer shares to purchaser on books (Civ. Code, § 324; § 309, as amended by St. 1905, p. 558, § 4, and St. 1917, p. 657).

In absence of pleading or evidence that purchaser of corporate stock was unfriendly to corporation and its officers or a business rival, failure to first offer stock for sale to corporation, as required by by-law, was no defense to purchaser's action under Civ. Code, § 324, for liquidated damages for refusal to transfer shares on corporation's books, as effect of purchase thereof by corporation would have been to pay stockholder part of corporation's assets or capital stock, in violation of section 309, as amended by St. 1905, p. 558, § 4, and St. 1917, p. 657, without being necessary to save corporation from loss.

5. Corporations ⇨55—Corporation's by-laws must not be unreasonable in practical application (Civ. Code, § 354, subd. 6).

The power of a corporation under Civ. Code, § 354, subd. 6, to make by-laws, is subject to condition that they must not be unreasonable in their practical application.

6. Corporations ⇨113—By-law requiring offer by holder to sell stock to corporation before transfer thereof on its books is unreasonable and invalid (Civ. Code, § 309, as amended by St. 1905, p. 558, § 4, and St. 1917, p. 657).

As law neither does nor requires idle acts, a by-law prescribing as condition to right to transfer stock on corporation's books that holder first offer shares for sale to corporation, which is forbidden to accept such offer by Civ. Code, § 309, as amended by St. 1905, p. 558, § 4, and St. 1917, p. 657, is unreasonable, and hence invalid.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Gaetano Mancini against Ettore Patrizi. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. J. Dunne, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from a judgment entered against defendant in an action for the recovery of liquidated damages as provided by section 324 of the Civil Code.

The facts shown by the record are that on February 11, 1925, the defendant was the president of L'Italia Press Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of California, with a capital stock of $100,000 divided into 4,000 shares of the par value of $25 each; that on or about August 1, 1908, Emilio Chirone was the holder and owner of 8 shares of the capital stock of the corporation, which stock was represented by certificate No. 19; that thereafter Chirone sold the stock and indorsed the certificate to Buffalo Brewing Company, a corporation; that the shares were sold by the latter and the certificate indorsed to one Savio, who in the year 1912 sold the same and by indorsement transferred the certificate to the plaintiff, who has ever since been the owner and holder thereof.

The plaintiff, on or about February 11, 1925, presented the certificate to the defendant as president of L'Italia Press Company, and demanded that the shares represented thereby be transferred on the books of the corporation and a certificate therefore be issued to the plaintiff, which demand was refused.

It is claimed by the defendant that the refusal to make the transfer was excused by the failure to comply with a certain by-law adopted by the corporation on October 14, 1909, which reads as follows:

"No share of stock of this corporation is transferable without the holder thereof first presenting the same to the office of the corporation and offering the same for sale to said corporation."

The defendant offered to prove that the by-law was adopted with the knowledge and consent of Chirone, and that the corporation was ready, willing, and able to purchase the stock at its par value. Plaintiff admits that no offer to sell the stock to the corporation was made by Chirone or by any one of those to whom the certificate was indorsed, but contends that the indorsees were not charged with notice of the by-law, and further that the same was invalid.

As contended by the plaintiff, similar by-laws have been sustained in other jurisdictions as being reasonably necessary for the protection of the corporation and its stockholders against rivals in business or others who might purchase its shares for the purpose of acquiring information which might thereafter be used against the interests of the company; and, as provided by section 354 of the Civil Code:

"Every corporation as such has power: * * * (6) to make by-laws, not inconsistent with any existing law, for the management of its property, the regulation of its affairs, and for the transfer of its stock."

[1-3] At the time the by-law was adopted the directors of corporations were prohibited by statute except as specially provided from dividing, withdrawing or paying to the stockholders or any of them any part of the capital stock of the corporation except such part as remained after payment of all its debts upon its dissolution or the expiration of its term of existence (Civ. Code, § 309; Stats. 1905, p. 558); and by the amendment to the section adopted in 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 657) the inhibition was continued unless permission should be first obtained from the commissioner of corporations. Under this section capital stock means the assets with which the corporation carries on its corporate business (Tapscott v. Mexican-Colorado, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 667, 96 P. 271; Burne v. Lee, 156 Cal. 222, 104 P. 438), and the inhibition contained therein runs not only against the directors but against the stockholders as well (Kohl v. Lilienthal, 81 Cal. 387, 20 P. 401, 22 P. 689, 6 L. R. A. 520; Vercoutere v. Golden State Land Co., 116 Cal. 410, 48 P. 375). It is the rule in California that a corporation is not authorized to purchase its own stock except as provided by statute unless the transaction be necessary to save itself from loss as by taking the same in satisfaction of a loan (Ralston v. Bank of California, 112 Cal. 208, 44 P. 476), since the result would be to illegally withdraw and pay to a shareholder a part of the capital stock (Bank v. Wickersham, 99 Cal. 655, 34 P. 444; Schulte v. Boulevard, etc., Land Co., 164 Cal. 464, 129 P. 582, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1013; Poultry Producers, etc., v. Barlow, 189 Cal. 278, 208 P. 93). It has also been held that a by-law assuming to give a stockholder the right upon notice to withdraw from a corporation and receive upon the surrender of his stock the amount paid is invalid for the same reason (Vercoutere v. Golden State Land Co., supra); and also that a clause in a subscription agreement purporting to give a corporation the right at its option to purchase its shares from its stockholders, is illegal (Poultry Producers, etc., v. Barlow, supra). Likewise, in Chilberg v. Cross Land Co., 55 Cal. App. 678, 204 P. 28, an agreement by a corporation to refund to a stockholder the amount paid for shares of its capital stock from moneys to be received from the sale of corporate assets was held to be void under the section mentioned.

It was held in Stewart et al. v. Stewart Hotel Co., 33 Cal. App. 167, 164 P. 620, that, under the circumstances there shown, a transfer to a corporation of the shares therein held by certain of its stockholders, instead of diminishing, had the effect of increasing to the extent of the value of the shares the assets or capital stock of the corporation. The court in its opinion referred to the general rule above and to the exception thereto found in Ralston v. Bank of California and Schulte v. Boulevard, etc., Gardens Co., supra, as follows:

"We feel authorized to assume that the court meant to say that circumstances might arise other than such as appear in those two cases where the corporation would be justified in taking over the shares of one of its stockholders, and that each case must be governed by its own peculiar facts; that the general rule, though well settled in this state, is not inflexible and unyielding."

[4] It is urged by defendant that the plaintiff was unfriendly to the corporation and its officers, and that the present case is therefore within the exception. It does not appear, however, from the pleadings, the offer of proof nor from any evidence in the case that such was the fact, nor is it contended that the plaintiff was a rival in business whose ownership of the stock might prove detrimental to the interests of the company.

It is manifest that the effect of the purchase by the corporation would have been to divide, withdraw and pay to the holder of the certificate a part of the assets or capital stock of the corporation, and that such purchase was not necessary within the rule stated in the above decisions, in order to save the corporation from loss.

[5, 6] The cases cited clearly show that, except under well-defined conditions, such purchases are not authorized, and that a by-law which requires or purports to authorize the officers of a corporation to make purchases of its own capital stock except under those conditions is inconsistent with the provisions of the statute and void. Moreover, the power to make by-laws is subject to the condition that they must not be unreasonable in their practical application; and, as the law neither does nor requires idle acts, a by-law which prescribes, as a condition to the right to transfer stock, that an offer be made the acceptance of which is forbidden is manifestly unreasonable and consequently invalid.

In view of the foregoing, it will be unnecessary to consider the further questions whether the indorsees of a certificate would be charged with notice of a by-law, adopted after the certificate was issued, restricting the right to transfer the stock on the books of the company.

The judgment is affirmed.

GREEN et ux. v. GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION. (Civ. 5946.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 8, 1927. As Modified Jan. 4, 1928.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 6, 1928.

Adjoining landowners ☞— Property owner held not entitled to recover for having oil and mud thrown on premises by explosion of oil well, in absence of negligence.

Where oil well was drilled with proper precautions to prevent explosion of gas and without negligence in any other respect, neighboring property owner was not entitled to recover for having mud and oil thrown on premises by explosion in nature of accident.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Horace W. Green and wife against the General Petroleum Corporation. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed with directions.

A. L. Weil and Forrest A. Cobb, both of San Francisco (Harris F. Shaw, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Swaffield & Swaffield, of Long Beach, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. Defendant drilled an oil well upon land adjacent to the plaintiffs' residence. After the hole had reached a certain depth, the well suddenly and violently erupted, showering plaintiff's home and garden, as well as the surrounding neighborhood, with mud and oil. The judgment appealed from gave damages for the injury caused plaintiffs thereby.

The district in which the well was drilled is now known as the Signal Hill Oil Field. In 1920 it was a residence district. Oil was discovered in the neighborhood in June, 1921. Plaintiffs, their neighbors, and the owners of the surrounding area leased or agreed to lease their lots to various oil companies for oil development. The blow-out occurred January 21, 1922. Although wells in the vicinity had previously blown out at greater depth and with less pressure, the gas pressure in this well was encountered not only sooner than expected, but was of unprecedented strength and violence, lifting a 1700-foot column of mud and breaking a heavy iron Oklahoma valve installed for the purpose of checking gas pressure. It is said that no such violent pressure had been encountered in this district previously, nor since.

This complaint contained two distinct causes of action. One was based upon the theory of negligence, and the other upon the theory of liability without fault, or, at least, liability without negligence. The trial court very distinctly found that the defendant had in no way been guilty of negligence, but upon the other cause of action awarded damages to the plaintiff, notwithstanding the absence of negligence on the part of defendant. Because of the court's finding of no negligence it is unnecessary to recite in detail the care exercised and the precautions taken by the defendant to guard against the blow-out which occurred.

Respondents defend the judgment given on the second count upon the authority of Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1 Ex. 265, 3 Eng. & Ir. App. 330, insist that the doctrine of that case has been adopted in this state, and rely upon Colton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 155, 10 P. 395, 58 Am. Rep. 556; Parker v. Larsen, 86 Cal. 236, 24 P. 989, 21 Am. St. Rep. 30; Galbreath v. Hopkins, 159 Cal. 297, 113 P. 174; Kall v. Carruthers, 59 Cal. App. 555, 211 P. 43; Stoops v. Pistachio, 70 Cal. App. 772, 234 P. 423. Appellant asserts that the doctrine of Fletcher v. Rylands, in so far as it may be said to declare for liability without fault, has never been adopted in California.

Counsel for appellant has reviewed all of the California authorities cited by respondent and also a great many others, both from this and from other jurisdictions. So far as the California cases sustain liability under comparable facts, they appear to rest upon one or more of three reasons, to wit: (1) The act complained of naturally and proximately tended to inflict the damage, and, therefore, was a direct and positive wrong like a deliberate and intentional assault or trespass. (2) The act complained of amounted to a nuisance and was, therefore, a continuous wrongful invasion of another's property rights. (3) The act complained of, though otherwise lawful, was done in a negligent manner. This is substantially the classification of responsibility for tortious acts made by Professor John J. Wigmore, 7 Harvard Law Review, p. 455. Without attempting to confine all liability of this nature to any rigid classification, it is at least true that the California cases relied upon by respondent fall into one or more of the divisions so classified and are for that reason distinguishable from the instant case.

It is not our province to enter into a philosophical discussion of the doctrine or doctrines of Fletcher v. Rylands. Discussion of the doctrine's origin, development, and the difficulties of defining the limits of its application belong more properly to the research of law reviews. See University of Pa. Law Review, 59 American Law Register, pp. 298 and 423, Prof. Francis H. Bohlen. It will suffice for this opinion to state that the case, in so far as it may be said to sanction liability without fault, has never been approved in this state. On the contrary, our Supreme Court has refused to follow that doctrine in Sutcliffe v. Sweetwater Water Co., 182 Cal. 34, 186 P. 766, and in Kleebauer v. Western Fuse Co., 138 Cal. 497, 71 P. 617, 60 L. R. A. 377, 94 Am. St. Rep. 62. In Sutcliffe v. Sweetwater Water Co., supra, the Fletcher v. Rylands Case is stated to be no authority for liability for escaping water in the absence of negligence. The opinion points out that liability in cases of escaping water in this state has been based either upon negligence or upon the proposition that the water or reservoir, in the very manner of its maintenance, was an invasion of the plaintiff's property. The commissioner's opinion in Kleebauer v. Western Fuse Co., 6 Cal. Unrep. 933, 69 P. 246, 60 L. R. A. 377, held the storage of gunpowder to be a nuisance per se and held the defendant liable for damage as an insurer under the authority of Fletcher v. Rylands. The Supreme Court's opinion in bank, however, held the defendant not liable because the keeping of gunpowder in the place and under the circumstances was held not to constitute a nuisance. If the defendant, Western Fuse Company, was liable for all perils upon the theory as literally expressed in Fletcher v. Rylands in the excerpt from that case quoted in Sutcliffe v. Sweetwater, then the defendant would have been liable regardless of whether the stored powder was a nuisance or not. The English precedent has not met with favor in the United States; has often been directly repudiated; and where it has been cited and apparently followed, it has usually been upon the assumption that it did not uphold the theory of liability without fault.

A large part of respondents' argument is summarized in this excerpt from their brief:

"When a person meddles with the forces of nature which are hidden away and securely locked below the surface of the earth, especially when he knows they may be there but cannot know their intensity or violence, he does so at his own risk and ought not to be heard to say that he committed no act of negligence, and therefore should escape liability. Nature put the gas under safe lock. * * * Had this gas been left where it had been placed, no mischief would have occurred to any one, but when disturbed, it ran amuck."

In carrying on many useful industries man constantly "meddles with the forces of nature." The same argument could be made against many activities which are lawful and beneficial. The use of fire is one such, of electricity another, steam another, explosives, chemicals, and numberless other forces. The lawful use of many forces of nature is attended with some risk. The amount of risk may determine the degree of care required, but there is no more reason for declaring that one may not interfere with the forces of nature except at his risk and peril as an insurer, than there is for making one liable for any other act, however innocent, which might happen to be a link in a chain of causation causing harm to another.

Respondents upon oral argument defend the judgment upon the claim that the blow-out must be considered the direct, proximate, natural, and foreseeable result of defendant's drilling through the solid strata of earth by which nature had safely imprisoned the violent gases below. This might be true if the contemplated method of mining was first to allow the oil to shoot into the air and then to recapture it as it returned to the ground. It might also be true if the violent blow-out was surely bound to occur upon the discovery of the gas and oil under pressure. But here the mining was done in the usual customary method and in a careful cautious manner, which, under ordinary circumstances, portended no harm to the plaintiffs.

The drilling of the oil well here was a lawful use of defendant's property. It was not a nuisance in that neighborhood. It was not a direct invasion of plaintiffs' property rights. Considering the unforeseeable and unprecedented violence of the blow-out, it was in the nature of an accident. Under such circumstances there is no liability without negligence.

The judgment is reversed. The trial court is directed to enter judgment in favor of the defendants.

ANWAY v. LOMBARDI BROS. et al.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 20, 1927.

Highways  184(2)—Evidence held to make prima facie case of compliance with Motor Vehicle Act by hearse driver in signaling intent to make left turn (St. 1923, p. 517, as amended by St. 1925, p. 398).

Where driver of plaintiff's hearse illustrated to court manner in which he gave signal of intent to turn to left into cemetery driveway, and there was evidence that driver of defendant's truck approaching from opposite direction admitted immediately after collision with hearse that he saw signal, plaintiff made out prima facie case of compliance with Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517, as amended by St. 1925, p. 398) as against objection that evidence showed that signal was given with hand only, instead of hand and arm.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by W. J. Anway against Lombardi Bros. and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. N. Foley, of San Francisco, and C. J. Cregan, of San Mateo, for appellants.

Louis Oneal and S. F. Holstein, both of San Jose, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action for damages for the negligent operation of an automobile.

The complaint alleges, in substance, that on or about the 21st day of May, 1926, plaintiff, through his agent, was driving a funeral hearse in a northerly direction on the public highway known as the San Francisco highway, in the county of San Mateo, and was driving and operating said hearse across the highway and entering into the driveway of the Masonic Cemetery on the west side of said highway; that at the same time and place defendants were driving their automobile truck in a southerly direction; and the same was operated in such a careless, negligent, and reckless manner as to cause it to collide with the automobile hearse of plaintiff, thereby damaging and injuring the hearse in the sum of $343.95; that by reason of such negligence plaintiff was compelled to place said hearse in a shop for repair and was deprived of the use of the same for 28 days, to his further damage in the sum of $92.50. Judgment was prayed for in these amounts. Defendant denied the allegations of the complaint and for a second defense pleaded contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff's driver. The case went to trial on these pleadings without a jury. The trial court found in favor of plaintiff and against the defendants upon both issues and gave judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $436.35 principal and $27.50 costs. From this judgment and from an order denying a new trial this appeal is taken.

In support thereof defendants raise two questions, viz.: (1) That the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision of the court, and (2) that the decision is against law. There is no merit in either contention. In conformity with the evidence the trial court found that on the day in question plaintiff's hearse was being driven in a northerly direction on the right side of the highway and when at a point near the entrance to the Masonic Cemetery, located on the west side of said highway, plaintiff's driver gave a signal with his left hand, indicating that he intended to turn, which signal was according to law and was plainly visible to the drivers of other vehicles upon said highway; that after said signal was given, the hearse driver in a careful and prudent manner turned the said hearse to the left and drove the same across the highway and commenced to enter into the driveway of the cemetery; that defendant at that time and place was operating an automobile truck, belonging to defendants, in a southerly direction on said highway at a point where plaintiff's hearse was commencing to enter the driveway of the cemetery on the west side of the highway; that defendants so carelessly, negligently, and recklessly drove their automobile as to cause the same to collide with the hearse belonging to plaintiff to his damage as alleged; and that as a result thereof plaintiff was compelled to place the same in a shop for repairs, where it remained for a period of 6 weeks, causing damage to plaintiff in the further sum of $92.50 by reason of the deprivation of its use. It further found against defendants upon their separate defense of contributory negligence.

Upon the claim of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the judgment appellants argue that plaintiff failed to make out a prima facie case in that he failed to show affirmatively that his driver had complied with certain requirements of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517, as amended by St. 1925, p. 398), and particularly with the requirement as to how and in what manner a signal should be given. It is insisted that the evidence shows that the signal was given by the driver of the hearse with his hand and not with his hand and arm as provided for in the act. This objection is hypercritical. There is abundance of evidence in the record to show that plaintiff's driver gave the requisite signal. It is true that the testimony shows that his signal was given with his hand, but the record also shows that the manner in which it was given was illustrated by the driver to the court, and it was found that the signal as given was according to law. Moreover, there is testimony to show that defendants' driver admitted immediately after the collision that he had seen the signal. Under these circumstances it is manifest there is no merit in this objection. This conclusion renders unnecessary a discussion of the further objection that plaintiff's driver did not maintain his signal for a sufficient distance. Further discussion of the evidence would answer no useful purpose. It is amply sufficient to support the findings of the trial court that defendants' driver negligently operated his truck, and supports plaintiff's theory that the collision was caused by defendants' driver attempting to cut in ahead of the hearse when it had commenced to enter the cemetery.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BEERS v. CALIFORNIA STATE LIFE
INS. CO. (Civ. 3250.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 10, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 6, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1002—Whether insured took poison by mistake, or deliberately, held on conflicting evidence for jury, not appellate court, in action on life policy.

Whether insured took poison by mistake, or with deliberate design to commit suicide, held for jury, not appellate court, on conflicting evidence in action on life policy limiting recovery in case of suicide.

2. Insurance ⇨646(7)—Insurer had burden of overthrowing presumption that insured was sane, and did not commit suicide (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 28).

In action on life insurance policy limiting recovery in case of suicide, burden was on defendant, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 28, to overthrow presumption that deceased was sane, and died from natural cause, or to support affirmative defense of suicide by preponderance of clear and satisfactory evidence, direct or circumstantial.

3. Appeal and error ⇨996—Appellate court cannot interfere with jury's conclusion that presumption against insured's suicide was not overcome, unless no other inference may reasonably be drawn from evidence.

Appellate court cannot interfere with jury's conclusion that insurer failed to introduce sufficient satisfactory proof to overcome presumption against, or sustain defense of, suicide, in action on life policy limiting recovery in such case, unless evidence on its face is obviously such as to compel court to hold that no other inference than suicide may reasonably be drawn.

4. Insurance ⇨659(2)—Presence or absence of motive is relevant to issue of insured's suicide, though proof of motive is not indispensable.

While proof of motive is not indispensable to establish defense of suicide, in action on life insurance policy, presence or absence of motive is a circumstance going to question of quality of act under inquiry.

5. Evidence ⇨53—Disputable presumptions are evidence, which will stand until overcome by clear and satisfactory evidence (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1957-1961, and § 2061, subd. 2).

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1957-1961, and section 2061, subd. 2, disputable presumptions, while weakest and least satisfactory of evidence, and of no weight as against proved or admitted facts, are evidence, which will stand for facts represented until overcome or dispelled in jury's minds by clear and satisfactory evidence.

6. Insurance ⇨646(7)—Suicide is affirmative defense, which must be supported by preponderance of evidence to overcome presumption that insured took poison by mistake or accident.

Defense of suicide, in action on life insurance policy, is an affirmative one, which must be supported by preponderance of evidence to destroy evidentiary force of presumption that insured's death occurred according to ordinary course of nature, or, if caused by poison, that it was taken by mistake or accident.

7. Witnesses ⇨380(5)—Refusal to permit counsel to refresh witness' memory from transcript of his testimony at coroner's inquest as attempt to impeach defendant's own witness held erroneous.

Refusal to permit counsel for defendant, in action on life insurance policy, to refresh witness' memory from transcript of his testimony at coroner's inquest into cause of insured's death, on ground that such examination involved attempt to impeach defendant's own witness, held erroneous.

8. Witnesses ⇨255(9)—Witness may refresh memory from memorandum of his previous testimony.

A witness may, for purpose of refreshing his memory, resort to memorandum of testimony, previously given by him regarding particular matter under inquiry, in subsequent proceeding or trial involving same issue.

9. Appeal and error ⇨1048(4)—Refusal to permit counsel to refresh witness' memory from transcript of his testimony at coroner's inquest held harmless error.

In action on life insurance policy limiting recovery in case of suicide, refusal to permit defendant's counsel to refresh witness' memory from transcript of his testimony at coroner's inquest into cause of insured's death held harmless error, where counsel for both parties went into same matters with marked detail in questioning such witness, and defendant's counsel, on several other occasions, refreshed witness' memory from such transcript.

10. Trial ⇨260(1)—Refusal of instruction that each juror was entitled to make up his own mind, without regard to other jurors' opinions, held not error, in view of instruction given.

Refusal of instruction that each juror was entitled to make up his own mind, without regard to opinion of other jurors, and could not conscientiously compromise or surrender his conviction to reach a verdict or please other jurors, held not error, in view of instruction that each juror had right to form his own opinion or verdict, though qualified by statement that they should try to get together on verdict, and that any juror, persuaded by other jurors' arguments that he was wrong, had a right to, and should, change his verdict.

11. Trial ⚡234(7)—Evidence as to suicide or accidental death of insured held to warrant instruction that jury could decide in conformity with presumption.

Evidence, on question of suicidal or accidental death, in action on life insurance policy, held to warrant instruction that jury had right to decide in conformity with presumption, if convinced that it outweighed and overcame other positive testimony against it.

12. Evidence ⚡53—"Presumption" is legal deduction from particular facts.

A "presumption" is a deduction, which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Presumption.]

13. Evidence ⚡84—There is disputable legal presumption that things have happened according to ordinary course of nature and habits of life.

There is a presumption of law that things have happened according to ordinary course of nature and ordinary habits of life, which is disputable, and may be controverted by other evidence, direct or circumstantial.

14. Insurance ⚡665(6)—Every other reasonable hypothesis should be excluded before concluding that insured's death was suicidal.

In action on life insurance policy limiting recovery in case of suicide, every reasonable hypothesis for accounting for death, other than suicide, should be excluded before concluding that it was suicide, and then only from evidence warranting such conclusion.

15. Insurance ⚡669(11)—Evidence held to warrant instructions that things are presumed to have happened in ordinary course of nature, and that every other reasonable hypothesis should be excluded before concluding that insured's death was suicidal.

In action on life insurance policy, evidence on issue whether insured's death was suicidal or accidental held to warrant instructions that presumption is legal deduction from particular facts, that there is disputable presumption that things happened according to ordinary course of nature and habits of life, and that every reasonable hypothesis other than suicide should be excluded before concluding that death was suicidal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by Lillie B. Beers against the California State Life Insurance Company.

Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; all concur except PRESTON, J., disqualified.

O. E. McLaughlin and McLaughlin & McLaughlin, all of Sacramento, and Jerome D. Peters, of Chico, for appellant.

Ware & Ware, of Chico, for respondent.

HART, Acting P. J. This action was instituted by the plaintiff to recover on a life insurance policy for $1,000, issued by defendant to Nellie L. Beers, daughter of the plaintiff, and in which policy the latter was the named beneficiary.

The cause was tried before a jury, and a verdict returned in favor of plaintiff. Judgment was entered accordingly, from which the defendant prosecutes this appeal in conformity with the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

While complaint is made of certain rulings, involving the question whether certain evidence was or was not admissible, and also the legal integrity of the action of the court in allowing and disallowing certain proffered instructions to the jury is challenged, the point the most vigorously urged is that for the verdict and the judgment no claim can justly be made that they derive substantial support from the evidence.

It appears that on the 3d day of November, 1925, the defendant issued a policy of insurance on the life of Nellie L. Beers in and for the sum of $1,000 to run for a period of 20 years, in consideration of the annual payment by said Nellie L. Beers (to be referred to hereinafter as Miss Beers or "the deceased") of a premium of $46.66; that, upon the issuance of said policy, Miss Beers paid to the defendant said sum; that, as above stated, Miss Beers was the daughter of plaintiff, and the latter was made by her (Miss Beers) the beneficiary of said policy, to be paid upon the death of the insured within the term during which the policy was to run; that on the 5th day of March, 1926, and "while said policy of life insurance was in full force and effect," said Miss Beers died, at Chico, Butte county; that, thereafter, and prior to the commencement of this action, the plaintiff duly provided the defendant with proofs of the death of her said daughter, but the defendant, for reasons to be later explained, refused to pay the plaintiff the said sum of $1,000. These facts are, in appropriate language, alleged in the complaint.

The answer, by way of a plea of confession and avoidance, admits the salient averments of the complaint, and then alleges:

"That the said policy of life insurance No. 45285, executed and delivered by defendant to Nellie L. Beers as set forth in the complaint herein, contained a clause reading as follows:

"In case of suicide of the holder, committed while sane or insane, within one year from the date hereof, the limit of recovery hereunder shall be the total amount of the deposit paid,' and defendant further alleges that said policy of life insurance was executed and delivered by defendant to said Nellie L. Beers on the 3rd day of November, 1925, and that on the 5th day of March, 1926, at Chico, Butte county, Cal., the said Nellie L. Beers ended her life by taking and swallowing strychnine, with the intent and purpose then and there to commit, and she did then and there commit suicide. That defendant hereby, in accordance with the terms of said policy of life insurance, offers to pay, and tenders to plaintiff, the sum of $46.66, in full satisfaction of the obligation of defendant, under the terms of said life insurance policy."

The foregoing involves a statement of the ground upon which the defendant resists payment to the plaintiff of the sum which the policy issued to the deceased provided for, and constitutes the important point of this controversy.

It is admitted that the policy of insurance contains the provision that the self-inflicted death of the deceased within one year from the date of the issuance of the policy, whether committed while the insured was sane or insane, would operate to vitiate the force of the policy.

It is further admitted that, after the due proof of the death of insured had been submitted to, and filed with, the defendant by the plaintiff, and demand by the latter was made upon the former for payment of the policy, the defendant tendered to plaintiff a check for $46.66, representing the amount of the premium paid to the defendant by the deceased upon the issuance and delivery by it of the policy to her, but that plaintiff refused to accept the check.

[1] The testimony affords no reasonable ground for doubting that the deceased died from the effects of strychnine poisoning. Indeed, there was not at the trial any controversy upon that proposition. The single question submitted to the jury for decision was whether the poison was self-administered, with a suicidal intent, and, the jury having arrived at and returned a verdict negating the suicide theory, the question as to that issue which is submitted for decision here is whether this court is required to hold, as a matter of law, that the result thus reached by the jury is devoid of sufficient support in the evidence. The evidence upon that question consists entirely of circumstances, certain of which, it must in frankness be conceded, with more or less directness lend color to the defendant's theory of suicide, and yet, when those same circumstances are viewed in the light of certain other evidentiary considerations, disclosed by the evidence, it becomes, from the standpoint of a reviewing court, a problem, not free from difficulty, to account for the fact of the death of the deceased upon the theory that it was purposely self-imposed. The situation so presented, therefore, seems to lead to the conclusion that the case, as to the evidence, is one in which a court of review is required to accept the conclusion arrived at by the jury. To be more explicit, upon the question whether Miss Beers took the poison by mistake or with the deliberate purpose of destroying her life, the evidence, taken as a whole, is of a character, as to its evidentiary significance and effect, that renders the deductions to be drawn therefrom necessarily, peculiarly, and entirely subject to the interpretative function and discretion of the jury.

The general facts may and will be narratively stated herein; specific reference being given to such portions of the testimony as are deemed of special importance in their effect upon the conclusion herein arrived at.

At the time of her death Nellie L. Beers was between 19 and 20 years of age. Her mother resided about two miles from the city of Chico. The deceased, however, had been for some time prior to her death residing at 434 Olive street, Chico, with Mr. and Mrs. Ed Miller, the latter being her sister. Although devoid of preliminary educational training, she conceived an ambition to become a stenographer, and concluded to attend part-time school at the Chico high school, taking special training in stenography, and took up her residence with her brother-in-law and sister, above named, because it was more convenient to the school. It appears that the Millers had been residing for some time in a rented house, but had in process of construction a home of their own at 1230 South Broadway, Chico. It further appears that the contractors engaged in constructing the house were slow in completing it, and it was not ready for occupancy for some time after the date on which the Millers contemplated removing thereto. On the 27th day of February, 1926, the deceased called at the drug store at which she and the Millers had been accustomed to making purchases, and purchased a bottle containing one-half ounce of strychnine sulphates. She directed the druggist to charge the strychnine to her personal account. It appears that she was at liberty to buy such articles as she might want and as are found in a drug store, and charge the same to her brother-in-law and sister, although the druggist stated that occasionally she would have some of her purchases charged to herself personally. She signed her own name to the written order required as a prerequisite to sales of poison. She stated to the druggist, when purchasing the poison that she wanted it for the purpose of destroying rats with which, she stated, the basement of the house in which they were then residing was infested. Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Miller knew of this purchase.

A few days thereafter, although the new house of the Millers was not completed, the latter nevertheless, removed thereto. The deceased at the time of the removal was not at home, and, although she expected that the removal might take place at any time, she was not aware of the fact that it had taken place until she returned from school in the afternoon. At this juncture it is well to say that several weeks prior to the death of Miss Beers she and her sister, Mrs. Miller, went to San Francisco and purchased furniture to be installed in the new home of the Millers. The deceased bought a bedroom set for herself, and also purchased a typewriter. On the evening of March 4, 1926, the deceased, accompanied by Joe Magill, David Boyd, and a Mrs. Charlotte Hill, attended a moving picture show in Chico. It seems that there was also to take place that evening at the home of some friends of the Millers a social gathering of friends. The Millers and a Miss Opal Faulkner, who was temporarily stopping with the deceased at the Millers, decided to attend the party, while the deceased expressed a preference to attend the theater party above mentioned. The deceased left her home for the theater about 8 o'clock p. m. After leaving the theater, the party went to a tamale parlor to partake of refreshments. Each of the party, excepting Magill, among other things, ate an enchilada. While there they joined in singing several songs, one of which is entitled, "You Will Be Sorry Because You Cheated on Me," and another, in the singing of which they all joined, is entitled "A Bicycle Built for Two." During the evening Magill and Boyd spoke of engagements which would take them away from Chico; Boyd saying that some employment at Redding would take him away. The deceased thereupon said that she, too, intended going some place that the rest of the party "did not know." The witnesses Boyd and Magill testified that while the talk was going on about "going away" the deceased was "jolly" and good natured. Magill positively testified that no intoxicating liquors were used by any of the party at the tamale parlor, and further that, not only on that occasion he saw no intoxicating liquor, but on no other occasion when he was with the deceased did he ever see intoxicating liquor around, or see the deceased use intoxicating liquor of any character or in any form. Leaving the tamale parlor, they drove about town for a short period in the automobile of Boyd, who did the driving. Between 11:30 and 12 o'clock they reached the home of the Millers. Magill got out of the automobile, assisted the deceased out, and accompanied her to the door, and bade her "good night," and the deceased thereupon entered the house. Magill returned to the auto, and was driven to his home, and Boyd and Mrs. Hill left for their respective places of residence. Between the hours of 12 and 1 o'clock of the morning of the 5th day of March, the Millers and Miss Faulkner returned from the party above spoken of, and entered the house. It appears that the interior of the house not then being entirely completed, the Millers and the deceased and Miss Faulkner occupied the same room; there being two beds therein. On going into the room they found the deceased in bed. They engaged in a general conversation, in the course of which the deceased asked the Millers and Miss Faulkner some questions regarding the party which they had attended, and also whether or not they had had an enjoyable time. In turn, the deceased was asked by the Millers and Miss Faulkner whether or not she had had a pleasant evening, to which the deceased replied that she "had a wonderful time." It was shown that on the right-hand side of, and very near, the bed occupied by the deceased and Miss Faulkner, there was a table upon which Miss Faulkner noticed a glass containing water. The glass was almost full. The deceased slept on the right-hand side of the bed, and near and convenient to the table and the water. A short time after they had all retired, the deceased exclaimed in a loud voice, addressing her sister, Mrs. Miller, "Teddy, dear," and Mrs. Miller, being aroused, asked her what she wanted. The deceased said, "I am awful sick." And Mrs. Miller continued to testify:

"I asked her what was the matter, and she did not answer me. She hesitated, and I said, 'What is the matter, Nellie,' and she didn't answer me, and I jumped out of bed, and Ed (her husband) jumped out of bed, and we all jumped out of bed, and I grabbed her, and I think she had gone into a convulsion. I said, 'What is the matter, Nellie,' and she said, 'I am awful sick; I can't live very long'; and I said, 'What is the matter with you,' and she said, 'I don't know.' I said, 'What makes you feel that way,' and she said 'I don't know—I just feel like I am not going to live very long.' I asked her if she had taken any laxative or anything, because that is all I had in the house to take; I had no medicine there, except hair tonics. She said, 'No.' I said, 'Have you eaten anything,' and she said, 'No, only an enchilada.' And I told her, I said, 'You are just nervous, Nellie,' and she said, 'Well, I feel awful bad. * * * I feel like I am not going to live very long.' She said to send for mother and Joe."

Dr. Burke, a physician in Chico, was immediately sent for, and soon arrived at the house, it then being about 2:25 a. m. When he entered the room, he noticed that the deceased was in a convulsive condition; she was lying on her abdomen, and her head was thrown back in a spasm. The doctor immediately administered ether to the deceased for the purpose, as he declared, of stopping the convulsions. "Finally," testified the doctor, "that ceased, and she ceased breathing then, and I administered artificial respiration, and as soon as I did that, she started in with another convulsion, and she became quite cyanotic or blue." She had three convulsions while the doctor was with her, and died within ten minutes after his arrival at the Miller home. Dr. Burke stated that the symptoms indicated that strychnine poison was the cause of the young woman's death. At the post mortem examination Dr. Burke conducted an autoptical examination of the body of the deceased. He removed the stomach, and forwarded it to Dr. Ernest Victors, of San Francisco, a specialist in "medical diagnosis and laboratory analysis," which specialty, the doctor stated, embraces the "examination of the contents of the human stomach." Dr. Burke, at the autopsy, made a careful examination of the genitals of the deceased, and found, as he testified, that they were perfectly intact or normal. In other words, his examination of her procreative or generative organs established to his satisfaction that the young woman had been sexually pure or undefiled; that his examination disclosed that she had been "very healthy"—that is, "she was (physically) a robust young girl." Dr. Victors received the stomach, with specific instruction to subject it to a diagnostic analysis with the view of discovering whether it contained strychnine therein. His report was, in substance, that he found "partially purified strychnine" in the stomach, and that his opinion was, from the quantity which he subjected to an analysis, that there was taken into the stomach between one and two grains. He further stated that the stomach "was almost empty. It contained," he continued, "two or three ounces of emulsion"; that it contained no solid matter. The doctor further stated that it "would be (or is) very common" for a person taking strychnine poison without knowing it to say (as deceased said), upon the effect of such poison being felt for the first time by such person, and "before the first spasm": "I feel sick. I feel that I am not going to last very long." In other words, Dr. Victors said that the sensation produced in the system of one taking such poison, even where he did not know that he had taken it, will naturally cause the person to feel as if he was going to die, and so to express himself. Dr. Victors was unable to state definitely, in the absence of a full history of the case, of which he was not in possession, his opinion as to the length of time which probably intervened between the time at which the poison was taken and the time at which death occurred.

Miss Faulkner testified that, on hearing the deceased make the request that her mother and "Joe" be sent for, at the same time saying she "was going to die," she (witness) immediately telephoned to Joe Magill, telling him of the serious condition of Miss Beers. About the same instant of time, Ed Miller, in his automobile, departed in haste for the home of the mother of the deceased for the purpose of conveying her to the bedside of her stricken daughter. Within a few minutes after thus being informed of the serious illness of Miss Beers, Magill appeared at the Miller home, and was followed shortly by the return of Miller with deceased's mother. The witness testified that she and the deceased worked together as waitresses at Richardson's Springs during the preceding fall; that they became fast friends, and, on leaving the springs, she, with deceased, went to the Miller home, where they resided until the death of Miss Beers. She stated that the deceased was a robust, healthy person; that she never knew of her being sick or heard her complain of being sick prior to the time of the illness causing her death; that she and the deceased became and were confidential with each other; that the deceased was, apparently, always happy, and (witness in effect stated) acted like one having no serious or troublesome cares; that deceased was an attractive girl, and was popular with her acquaintances, old and young; that she never, in witness' presence, exhibited by her actions, conduct, or words any evidence of carrying concealed sorrows or disappointments, nor, said the witness, did she ever hear of the deceased having confided to others that she was troubled from any cause, or betrayed in the presence of others heart sorrows or disappointments or discontentment of any nature. Miss Faulkner also testified that, some days prior to the death of the deceased, she (the witness) and Miss Beers had planned to visit, and, in fact, had settled upon visiting, the following week for a brief period some friends of the witness residing at the "Engel Mine"; that deceased seemed to be very happy in contemplating the prospective visit, and with cheerful expectancy spoke of it the day or evening preceding her death.

Joe Magill testified that he became acquainted with the deceased some five or six weeks only prior to her death, and that during that period he had frequently been in her company; that they were not "sweethearts," but merely "good friends." He stated that he had never had any trouble or angry words with the deceased; that there was no quarrel or any exhibition of jealousy by any of the members of the party at the theater or at the tamale parlor. While they (Boyd, Mrs. Hill, the deceased, and the witness) were taking a ride about the city after leaving the tamale parlor, Miss Beers said that she desired to go home, because she had her lessons to study for the following school day. As he was leaving the Miller house, on escorting deceased to the door on the night in question, Magill said he asked deceased whether "we will go to the dance Saturday night?" to which question, in as pleasant a manner as she had always acted, replied: "You better come down tomorrow night." The witness stated, that, after he arrived at the Miller home the morning of the death of Miss Beers, he heard some one in the room suggest that possibly the enchilada she had eaten at the tamale parlor was the cause of her illness; that, acting on that suggestion, and subsequent to the passing of Miss Beers, knowing that Boyd and Mrs. Hill had also eaten enchiladas, he called at their respective homes to ascertain whether they, too, were suffering from an attack similar to that which resulted in the death of Miss Beers, but that he found that they were "all right." It will be remembered that Magill himself did not partake of an enchilada on the occasion referred to.

Mrs. Edna Miller testified that deceased was her favorite sister; that deceased had lived at her (witness') home for about five or six months prior to her death, and during that period was taking a course in stenography. "She was perfectly welcome at our home," said Mrs. Miller (as Mrs. Miller's husband also testified). The deceased had never spoken to the witness about purchasing poison, nor did witness know that the deceased had ever purchased poison. Mrs. Miller stated, however, that the deceased had always been "morbidly afraid of rats," and that she never would go into the rat-infested basement of the house, where their linen and clothes were customarily washed and laundered, to attend to the washing of her own clothes; that, as a result, whenever deceased desired to do any of her own washing, Mr. Miller was required to remove, for the temporary purposes of the deceased, the wash-tub to the kitchen or the floor on which were maintained the living rooms. Mrs. Miller further said that the deceased earned money and saved it; that she was always well provided with clothes; that she was, as to all her activities, social as well as the more serious angles of life which she caused to be of particular concern to her, singularly optimistic and contented—in short, the deceased was, declared Mrs. Miller, always cheerful and happy in all her undertakings; that the deceased attended school "of her own free will"; and that whenever she referred to her school work she expressed herself as being satisfied with the progress she was making in her studies. Proceeding, Mrs. Miller said that the deceased had been tendered two different opportunities to marry young men, both of whom were persons of ample financial means, and that in each of those cases she was offered an opportunity, upon her marriage, to make a tour of Europe; that the young men referred to were members of families of high standing, and were themselves of high personal character; that the deceased refused those matrimonial prospects. "She always said," testified Mrs. Miller, "that she was not ready to marry." The witness further stated:

"It did not occur to me that night (the night or morning of Miss Beers' death) that she might be poisoned. In fact, I thought it was ridiculous when I heard them speaking of poison."

Ed Miller, who, as seen, was the brother-in-law of Miss Beers, corroborated in all substantial particulars his wife's testimony regarding the life and personal characteristics of the deceased. He supported the statement of Mrs. Miller that the deceased was afraid of rats, and that she (deceased) would never, for that reason, go into the basement of the house in which formerly they (the Millers) had resided, and also supported the testimony of Mrs. Miller as to the circumstances occurring the day and evening before and on the morning of her death. He testified that he knew nothing of the purchase of poison by the deceased until after her death. First explaining that he had a farm a short distance from Chico which he himself personally managed, and that it was his custom to arise early every morning and leave his home in the city to go to his farm, he testified that on the evening of the 4th of March, 1927, as he, with his wife and Miss Faulkner, was about to depart for the party which they intended to, and did, attend, the deceased requested him to awaken her before he left for his farm the following morning (the 5th), as she was required to do some studying before going to school. Miller stated that, three or four days before her death, deceased said to him, or in his presence, that, as soon as school was out for the term, she intended, with Miss Faulkner, to visit friends at the Engle Mine, and thence go to Susanville. "In fact," said Miller, "my wife intended to go with them."

George B. Whitney, a brother-in-law of deceased, testified that deceased was an attractive young woman, always popular with her acquaintances, and was of a "sunny, cheerful disposition," and apparently was always happy. Witness knew of no reason why she should not have been happy.

Mrs. James Kelly, of the faculty of the Chico high school, and as such director of part-time education, testified: That she had under her supervision students under compulsory attendance and also special students, over the age of 18 years, engaged in special work; that deceased came within the latter class, and was under her (witness') supervision. She said that she knew deceased; that she first called on the witness, and stated "she felt quite beyond the age of compulsory attendance, but that she was very anxious to become a stenographer." The witness said that, after questioning her regarding any previous general school training she might have had, she (witness) planned a program for Miss Beers which would "fit her for her life's work as a stenographer. She was," continued Mrs. Kelly, "doing very creditable work, excepting in English, and she was making an extra effort to overcome that. * * * Her view of life was very optimistic. She was very happy. I talked to her the day preceding her death. That very day * * * I had sent for her, as I do my students once a week, being allowed two hours to interview different pupils, and I asked how she was getting along in her work, and she said she was getting along fast. I asked her if she was happy, and she said: 'Mrs. Kelly, I never was so happy in my life and I feel I am just getting what I wanted. * * *' That was the last day she was in school. Those are the exact words, because I recalled them the next day. * * * She was very natural (referring to the day preceding her death), and always a happy girl, and always smiling, and a great favorite with her teachers because of her optimistic views and cheerfulness; and she was always ready to meet their requests."

Two young ladies attending the school—Miss Longmire and Miss Mims—testified that they knew deceased, having first met her at school, and that on the day preceding that of the death of the deceased the teacher announced in open school that there was to be a picnic for the students the following day, and requested those who could not or did not intend to attend the festivities to "raise their hands," and that among a number thus indicating their intention not to attend the picnic was the deceased. Miss Longmire said that, although she never had talked to the deceased, from her observations of the latter's mannerisms, she concluded that she (deceased) was very quiet and "distant" in disposition. "I liked her," said the witness, "but she seemed to want to be by herself. * * * She held herself aloof from the other girls." The witness added, though, that the girls that deceased "sat with (in school) she talked with, and I sat on the other side of the room, and I did not have occasion to talk to her. * * * She was very pretty, and a little bit older than the rest of us girls." Miss Longmire said that attendance by the students at the picnic was not compulsory, nor were those not attending under duty to give any reason therefor.

Douglas B. Miller, teacher of English in the Chico high school, testified that the deceased was in two of the classes conducted by him, and had been for about five or six weeks prior to the date of her death. He testified:

That "on the whole, I should say she (deceased) was rather cheerful, but I noticed long before the time that she passed away that she seemed to be a girl of moods—that is, there were times when she seemed to be cheerful and other times when she seemed to have something on her mind, or acted that way. She did not act as cheerful as at other times."

On cross-examination, the witness said:

"It seemed that Nellie had a greater handicap to overcome, due to being out of school, and she had to try harder than the other students, which she did; but I cannot say that her results were as good as the average student."

The witness George B. Whitney, being recalled, testified that on the afternoon of the 5th of March, 1927, upon the request of the chief of police of Chico, he searched the Miller premises (the place where Miss Beers passed away) and, in the backyard of said premises, picked up a bottle containing what on investigation was found and pronounced to be strychnine, "about five or six ordinary steps" from the room in which the deceased died. "The place where I found that bottle," he said, "a person would have to go through the dining room and through the kitchen out the back door." The bottle was standing, "in open sight," in a slightly inclined position against "some little twigs and things that had accumulated under a small tree that was standing there." Whitney also testified that, on the same occasion, he searched the stove in the kitchen of the Miller house, and found therein a piece of blue paper, of the kind commonly used in wrapping small articles.

Floyd S. Bush, pharmacist at the drug store where deceased purchased the strychnine, testified that, on the 27th of February, the deceased visited the store and called for strychnine, saying she desired to use it for killing rats, of which, so she said to the witness, there were many "out to the house." Miss Beers signed (as required by law) a written or the required form of application, whereupon the witness delivered to her in a bottle "one-half ounce strychnine sulphates"; she directing the witness to charge it to her personal account. The bottle bore a label on which were the words, "strychnine sulphates one-eighth ounce," or "strychnine sulphates, sixty grams." The witness issued and delivered a duplicate charge slip to the deceased. This slip the deceased, as she was in the act of leaving the store, rolled and dropped on the floor in front of the wrapping counter. Immediately upon her departure, the witness picked up the slip and threw it into a waste basket. Bush, being shown the piece of blue wrapping paper found by the witness Whitney in the kitchen stove in the Miller house, identified it as the paper with which he wrapped the bottle containing the strychnine powder he sold to the deceased. He stated that the deceased generally directed purchases she made at the store to be made against her brother-in-law, Ed Miller, but that occasionally she directed small purchases to be charged to her personal account. He (the witness) said that the sale of strychnine for the purpose of destroying rats was not an unusual experience in the store or with druggists—that, in fact, the purpose for which such poison was ordinarily purchased was to destroy rats infesting the premises of the purchasers. He had known Miss Beers, he said, for quite a period of time; that she had been in the store, and made purchases "the last six months" prior to her death of tetter than she had previous to that. He had met her socially, and knew her fairly well. The day on which she procured the poison, he stated:

"She seemed to be very light-hearted and gay and walked out, and there was nothing to indicate any reason for her to buy that outside of for rats, as she said."

There was nothing "embarrassed or strained, or unnatural or unusual, about her manner on that occasion." The witness was shown the bottle assumed to have been the one containing the poison sold by him to the deceased, and, upon an inspection of it, said that at least eight grains of the poison had been removed therefrom.

There has now been incorporated herein an accurate synoptical presentation of all the vital testimony received at the trial. In assembling the facts, as thus they were revealed, the transcript has been critically examined from cover to cover. No line or word of the testimony has been overlooked. The probative significance of no circumstance, favorable or unfavorable to the one side or the other of the controversy, has been passed unheeded; nor have the arguments contained in the briefs of counsel for the respective parties been denied scrupulous examination and consideration. After all this, the case, upon the facts, to our minds, still involves a mystery not satisfactorily solved by the evidence before us. We are still under serious doubt with respect to the question whether Miss Beers took the poison with the purpose or intention of causing her death. What is the duty of a reviewing court in such a situation? The answer must be, as it is in other language given above, that it was for the jury, and not for this or any court of appeal, to solve the mystery enshrouding that issue—that is, to determine the question whether the taking of the poison by Miss Beers was by mistake or with the deliberate design on her part to destroy her life.

[2, 3] It must be borne in mind that the defendant entered the trial charged with the burden of overthrowing the presumption that the deceased was sane, and that her death was not suicidal, but from a natural cause. Code of Civil Procedure, § 1963, subd. 28; Jenkins v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 131 Cal. 121, 63 P. 180; Dennis v. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co., 84 Cal. 572, 24 P. 120; 21 Cor. Jur. § 35, p. 95. It rested upon the defendant to overcome said presumption, or, in other words, to support the affirmative defense of suicide "by a preponderance of clear and satisfactory evidence, direct or circumstantial." 37 Cor. Jur. § 443, p. 640, and cases cited in the footnotes and also the above-named cases. And whether the defendant introduced sufficient satisfactory proof to overcome that presumption or to sustain that defense was a question to be solved by the jury, with whose conclusion we are not privileged, legally, to interfere, unless the evidence of suicide is upon its face obviously such as to compel us to hold that no other inference but that of intentional self-destruction may reasonably be drawn. Undoubtedly the circumstances specially stressed by the defendant as involving conclusive proof of suicide are, as before we have said, indicative of a designed self-administered death, and it is to be conceded, as likewise has been stated, would afford sufficient support to the conclusion, had such been the result of the jury's deliberations, that the deceased committed suicide. But it is not true that those circumstances are wholly inconsistent with the theory of the plaintiff that the taking of the poison was due to a mistake or an accident. In other words, the evidence disclosing those circumstances or the circumstances themselves are not upon their face so conclusive as in proof of the suicide theory that a reviewing court is compelled to accept them as constituting the correct solution of the problem presented here for decision as against other circumstances which tend to sustain the presumption that the death of Miss Beers was not intentionally self-inflicted, and which circumstances the jury presumptively determined did satisfactorily support said presumption, or, in other words, were sufficient in probative force to shatter the attempt of the defendant to overcome the effect thereof. These circumstances or the evidence thereof may here well be recapitulated. The evidence that the basement of the house in which the deceased resided at the time she bought the poison was infested with rats is undisputed. The evidence that she was constantly in a state of fear of the rodents stands undisputed. The testimony of the druggist who waited on her when she purchased the poison, that he had known her quite well for six or seven months prior to the date of that purchase, that when she applied for the purchase of the poison she was apparently the happy and contented young woman that she had always appeared to be and as she was described at the trial by her relatives and intimate acquaintances, and that she betrayed absolutely no inner griefs or sorrows or agitation of mind of any character, also stands in the record without contradiction. The testimony of the same witness that the deceased had, in a number of instances prior to her procurement of the poison, directed small purchases of other articles made by her at the drug store to be charged to her personal account also stands unchallenged and uncontradicted in the record. Undisputed also is the testimony of Mrs. Miller that the deceased always had sufficient money to pay for any articles she might need or thought she required. If her purpose in buying the poison was self-destruction, it is highly probable, so the jury could well have concluded, and, it may be assumed, did conclude, that she would have paid for the article, and thus have pursued a course which would have aided her materially in warding off knowledge by her sister and brother-in-law of her purchase of the poison.

Again, and more important than any other consideration, taken alone, is the question of motive. The deceased, between the ages of 19 and 20 years, physically in robust health and attractive, morally clean, with no demoralizing habits, her whole being radiant with the sunshine of the ineffable joys of youth, popular among her acquaintances, possessed of an ample supply of wearing apparel, thus gratifying in full measure the vanity pardonably existent in the majority of her sex, the possessor in her own right of some financial means, enthusiastically ambitious to acquire that proficiency in an art or profession which would enhance her earning capacity or ability, and at the same time enlarge the scope of her usefulness in the world's multifarious activities, prior to and up to the very time of her passing, of her own volition and free will, actually prosecuting efforts to accomplish the ends of that ambition, cheerfully buoyant to the day preceding that of her death with optimism and hope regarding the outcome of her efforts to make of herself a stenographer, according to her nearest relatives and intimate acquaintances, those in daily association with her, without any love entanglements or disappointments or jealousies pulling at her heartstrings—in short, a perennially cheerful, healthy, happy, moral, popular, and attractive girl, with many admiring friends and devoted loving relatives, surrounded by a happy home life, and within her grasp material luxuries which even those better circumstanced financially might envy—there can be suggested no substantial or sound reason why Miss Beers should have desired to have terminated her life by her own deliberate act, while, on the other hand, there appears to have been every reason why she should have desired to live. In addition to the foregoing considerations, we have the uncontradicted testimony of Magill that, after the party had partaken of a meal at the tamale parlor, and were riding about the city, the deceased stated that she desired to return to her home and retire for the reason that she was compelled to arise early the following morning for the purpose of studying her lessons before going to school. There is also the testimony of the deceased's brother-in-law, Ed Miller, to the effect that, just before she left the house to attend the theater, Miss Beers requested him to call her the following morning before he departed for his ranch, to which he was accustomed to going early each morning, as she was required to arise early and devote some time to her school work before going to school, and, further, the testimony of Miss Faulkner and the Millers regarding the contemplated visit, at the end of the school term, by Miss Beers, the witness and Mrs. Miller to the "Engel Mine," and the enthusiastic delight with which the deceased expressed herself the day before her death regarding the prospective visit.

Reverting now to some of the circumstances at least pregnant with suspicion that the death of Miss Beers was suicidal, we may specifically examine a few of them to ascertain whether the jury, in considering them by the light of those circumstances which are indicative of a want of intention to commit suicide, could not reasonably have found, and it may be assumed did find, that they were not inconsistent with the theory that the death of the deceased was the result of an accident or a mistake. The first of these circumstances which may be considered is the fact that the deceased, after calling Mrs. Miller to her bedside, several times declared that she felt that she was going to die. This circumstance is emphasized by defendant as justifying the inference that the deceased knowingly took the poison, and realized that it would produce her death. But the testimony of Dr. Victors, explaining the effect of strychnine poisoning upon the afferent nerve center, and the sensation thus conveyed to the brain, furnished a hypothesis upon which the declaration of deceased that she felt that she was going to die, considered with the other testimony, could as well have been reconciled by the jury with the theory that she did not know or realize that she had taken the deadly drug as with the theory that she knowingly took the poison. The doctor's testimony was: That the effect of strychnine poison upon taking it would be to produce "slight irritability, and, second, an impaired sensitiveness, and frequently an impending feeling that something is going to occur, and then the onset of spasms." Again, he testified that there would be nothing very uncommon under any circumstances for a person whose system had in some way absorbed strychnine, "without knowing that they had strychnine in their system, saying, before the first spasm: 'I feel sick; I feel that I am not going to last very long.'" The fact that deceased, although requesting the immediate presence of her mother and Magill, did not request that a doctor be sent for, is also stressed as a circumstance of potent significance as in support of the theory that she took the poison with suicidal intent. This circumstance, while properly to be considered among those pointing to suicide, the jury could have found reasonably coincided with the presumption that the deceased did not intentionally destroy her life. Or, it may be more accurate to say, the jury could have regarded that circumstance, when considered with others tending to support the presumption, as not militating against the conclusion that the taking of the poison was accidental or by mistake. We need not speculate as to what the jury's reasoning was with reference to that circumstance when deliberating upon their verdict. It is clear, though, that they could well have concluded, without stretching their imagination beyond a reasonable conception of the situation as presented by the evidence, that in her agony of mind and body, suffering, as she must have suffered, excruciating physical pain and the mental anguish thereby superinduced, intensified by her belief that she could survive but a brief period of time, the persons then uppermost in her mind would be her mother and the young man who the evening before her death had been her companion in social diversion, and with whom, for a few weeks previously, she had been keeping company, and that the last person who, under the circumstances, she would ask for would be a doctor, from whose professional services, according to her declarations that her death was inevitable, and only a few minutes away, she could not hope to derive medical relief. In this connection we may call to mind the fact that Magill testified that he and the deceased were not, and had not been, "sweethearts," but merely "good friends," and his testimony in that particular was in nowise contradicted.

The fact that she replied in the negative to her sister's question as to whether she had taken a laxative is not inconsistent with the theory that she did not knowingly take the poison. She no doubt told the truth when she made the answer to her sister, but the jury could have consistently believed that, the cause of her illness having been inquired about by the sister she lived with, and when she believed she was going to die, she would have told her that she had taken the poison, if knowingly she had done so.

It is further argued that the fact that, while in the tamale parlor, and after Boyd and Magill each stated that he would be required within a short time to leave Chico for a few days, the deceased remarked that she, too, was going some place that "you know nothing about," or words to that effect, is, in view of the other circumstances tending to show death by suicide, very strongly indicative of the fact that the deceased then contemplated taking her life. This may be granted, and would perhaps be accepted as a reasonable interpretation of the remark had the jury found in favor of the defendant's affirmative defense. But, having found against the defendant on that defense, this court must assume that the jury attached to the remark no such significance, but believed that the deceased then had in mind her prospective visit to the "Engel Mine" within a few days or weeks, and not any thought of self-destruction. Such conclusion by the jury as to the remark referred to is given some support by the testimony of Joe Magill that, when the remarks about leaving Chico were made, all the parties, including the deceased, were in excellent humor, and very happy, and that the entire conversation relative to leaving Chico, as were all their conversations during that evening, was carried on in a jocose manner and cheery spirit.

The foregoing specific consideration of certain facts and circumstances which defendant well argues tend strongly, when considered with certain other facts and circumstances, to sustain its affirmative defense, is not for the purpose of weighing the testimony, but only to confirm the statement in an earlier part of the discussion that some of the facts and circumstances relied upon by the defendant for the proof of the suicide theory are not wholly inconsistent with the theory adopted by the jury that the taking of the poison by the deceased was not with a suicidal intent. These particular facts and circumstances, which are referable to the conduct, the actions and words of the deceased, aside from the circumstance of the taking of the poison, that of the absence of rats from the new house of the Millers, and the fact of the finding of the bottle containing the remaining portion of the poison in the back yard of the Miller premises, were for the jury to interpret, and so ascertain their evidentiary significance—that is, to determine whether, being obviously consistent with the suicide theory, they were, nevertheless, not inconsistent with the position of the plaintiff that the taking of the poison was by a mistake. The finding implied from the verdict that these particular circumstances were not inconsistent with the theory that deceased took the poison by mistake is, as above declared, a logical deduction.

[4] So the case, as it was submitted to the jury, appears to have developed substantial conflicting evidentiary considerations directly affecting the issue which they were called upon to decide, to wit: On the one hand, circumstances tending to sustain the suicidal theory, while on the other, facts and circumstances tending to negative or explode that theory. The two sets of circumstances stand in resistance to each other, and, as the situation thus presented must be viewed by this court, substantially equal in probative force. Of exceptional importance, therefore, in the determination by the jury of the question whether the affirmative defense of suicide has been sustained by the defendant, and even of greater importance in the disposition of this appeal by this court, was and is the fact that there was an entire absence of motive in the deceased for purposely or intentionally taking her life. As is true in its application to the proof of the commission of crimes, particularly in the proof of the crime of murder, the rule is that, while the proof of motive is not indispensable, yet the presence or absence of motive is a circumstance going to the question of the quality of the act under inquiry. 8 Cal. Jur. § 152. Counsel, however, contend that it fairly appears from the testimony of the witness Miller that the deceased became discouraged and despondent over her failure to make satisfactory progress in her work in school. Miller, it will be remembered, said that, while in school and engaged in her studies, Miss Beers appeared to be a person of moods; that, while cheerful on occasion, she appeared at other times to have on her mind something that seriously bothered her. The significance of that circumstance, if any of importance it had in the one direction or the other, was like that of all the other circumstances, for the jury to determine—that is, it was for the jury to interpret the circumstance as best they could, and so ascertain what was the cause of her “moods,” or whether her actions in that respect had any bearing upon the question whether she took the poison knowingly and with the intent thus to end her life. It may be suggested, however, that it would, indeed, be surprising if the young woman had not now and then exhibited seriousness of thought while attempting to acquire, under the disadvantageous circumstances which have been explained, sufficient familiarity with an art, itself difficult for a person of education to master, to enable her to put it to practical use. But it may be taken as true that the verdict implies, among other things, that the deceased was not discouraged or despondent over the slow progress she was making in her studies, or discouraged or despondent for any reason, on the day before the morning of her death, or at any other time prior thereto, and such finding is amply supported by the testimony of her relatives and intimate acquaintances as to her personal characteristics, her disposition, the life she led, etc., and notably by the testimony of her teacher, Mrs. Kelly, to the effect that the young woman always during her school experience displayed a “sunny” disposition, and likewise appeared to be happy, that she was making a creditable showing in her effort to overcome her deficiency in grammar, and that, on the day immediately preceding her death, having been asked by the witness how she thought she was progressing with her studies and whether she was happy, replied that she was getting along “fast” in her school work, and “was never so happy in her life.”

[5] We have now given an extended consideration, in more or less detail, of the facts and circumstances of this case, not with the view of passing judgment upon the weight or

evidentiary value thereof in their bearing upon the single issue involved in the controversy, but solely for the purpose of showing that the situation presented by the record as to the evidence is of a character which forbids an appeal court from justly declaring, as a matter of law, that the defendant succeeded in overcoming the presumption that the death of the deceased was not purposely self-inflicted. In this connection, it may be observed that a presumption is evidence (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1957–1961), and that, while as against a proved fact, or a fact admitted, a disputable presumption has no weight, yet, where it is sought to prove the fact against the presumption, it still remains with the jury to say whether or not the fact has been proved; and, if they are not satisfied with the proof offered in impeachment of the presumption, they are then at liberty to accept the evidence of the presumption. People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 179, 54 P. 833; Ruth v. Krone, 10 Cal. App. 770, 103 P. 960; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1961 and 2061, subd. 2. Although it has been well said that disputable presumptions, “while evidence, are evidence the weakest and least satisfactory” (Savings & Loan Soc. v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 529, 39 P. 922, 925), it is nevertheless the rule that such presumptions are evidence which will stand for the facts they represent until, in the minds of the jury, they are overcome or dispelled by clear and satisfactory evidence.

[6] It will also be kept in mind that the defense of suicide in a case of this character is an affirmative one which is set up to destroy the presumption that the death of the party occurred according to the ordinary course of nature, or, as in the present case, was occasioned by the taking of the poison by the deceased under a mistake or by accident, and, as stated, that defense, to destroy the evidentiary force of such presumption, must be supported by a preponderance of the evidence. In the case of Savings & Loan Soc. v. Burnett, supra, the evidence both for the plaintiff and the defendant was all one way, and against the presumption—indeed, as the court said in that case, the whole evidence was such as that it amounted to an admission of the fact against which the presumption was attempted to be invoked. The evidence here upon the question whether the death of Miss Beers was suicidal is manifestly conflicting. There was no admission by the deceased that she took the poison with suicidal intent.

[7-9] There are certain exceptions which defendant urges to rulings bearing upon the question of the legal propriety of certain testimony and certain questions propounded to certain witnesses. We have carefully examined those assignments, and thus have assured ourselves that, even if some of the rulings upon which those assignments are founded were erroneous, the defendant suffered no prejudice therefrom. It may be said, however, that the assignment under the present head particularly stressed by the defendant is that the court refused to allow its counsel to refresh the memory of Joe Magill, when testifying as a witness called by the defendant, from the transcript of his testimony given at the coroner's inquest into the cause of the death of the deceased. In one instance the court did stall an attempt by defendant's counsel to examine the witness Magill in the manner explained, basing its action in that particular upon the theory that such examination involved an attempt on the part of counsel to impeach their own witness. The ground of the ruling was not tenable. It is elementary that a witness may, for the purpose of refreshing his memory, resort to testimony previously given by him regarding a particular matter under inquiry in a subsequent proceeding or trial involving the same issue and of which testimony a memorandum had been made. Greenleaf on Evidence (13th Ed.) § 436. It has been held that the testimony of a witness given at a preliminary examination of an accused in a criminal case may be used by him at the trial of the case to refresh his memory. People v. Durant, 116 Cal. 179, 213-214, 48 P. 75. But an examination of the transcript will show, as thus we have learned, that both counsel for defendant and those of the plaintiff, in questioning Magill, with marked detail went into the matters occurring with Magill, Boyd, Mrs. Hill, and deceased, while they were together the evening and night previous to the death of Miss Beers, thus bringing out all that the deceased did and said which could by any possibility throw any light on her attitude of mind or any conduct on her part which might expose, or tend to expose, the specific thoughts then running through or weighing upon her mind, if mentally she was disturbed. Besides, on several occasions other than the one above referred to, counsel for the defendant did refresh Magill's memory from the transcript of his testimony given before the coroner, and thus brought out the important facts as the witness stated them to that officer. As in effect suggested, the other assignments under this head do not merit special notice herein. Assuming that they involved erroneous rulings, the effect thereof was harmless.

[10] Complaint is made that the court erred in its refusal to give instruction No. 6, preferred by the defendant. The instruction, if given, would have told the jury that each juror was entitled to make up his or her own mind, without regard to the judgment or opinion of the other jurors, regarding the weight and effect of the evidence; that, if any juror reached the conviction from a consideration of the evidence that Nellie Beers committed suicide, no such juror "can conscientiously compromise or surrender his or her conviction in order to reach a verdict or to please other jurors, nor allow that belief to be influenced in the slightest degree by pity or sympathy."

In its charge the court did instruct the jury that each individual juror had the right to form his or her own opinion, or form his or her own verdict. The instruction, it is true, contained the qualification that the jurors should consult "harmoniously together as intelligent men and women, and try to get together upon a verdict; and, if any of you have made up your mind to a verdict, and you are persuaded by the arguments of or consultations with the other jurors that you were wrong, you have a right, and should change, if you can do so without shocking your conscience in regard to it—that is, if you are fully convinced that you are wrong, don't hesitate to change your verdict." It is obvious that the qualification (which was not improper) withdrew no force from the initial part of the instruction declaring that each juror was entitled to "form your own opinion and form his or her own verdict." The instruction at the most states mere commonplaces. Every intelligent man and woman must know that each juror of the panel trying a case is entitled to form his own conclusion regarding the weight and effect of the evidence, and that he or she is not compelled to yield any conviction to which he or she has been persuaded after a full and fair consideration of the evidence merely because other jurors have reached an opposite or contrary conclusion. The part of said instruction italicized herein was given by the court in another instruction.

"I instruct you that you are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of a witness or any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction in your minds against a less number or any number or against a presumption or other evidence satisfying your minds. A presumption is regarded as evidence, and it is for you to weigh and determine what all the evidence offered is worth and where the truth lies. It is for you to determine, if you believe under the evidence and these instructions a presumption exists in favor or against an issue involved in the case, whether or not such presumption outweighs positive or other testimony or evidence against it, and, if you are convinced that such presumption outweighs and overcomes the other testimony and evidence, you have the right to decide in conformity with such presumption."

The ground of the objection to the above instruction is, not that it does not abstractly state a sound rule of law, but because, as is the claim, there is no conflict in the evidence, that the evidence is all one way, and supports the suicide theory, and that, consequently, the instruction is inapplicable. We have heretofore expressed the view that there is a conflict in the evidence upon the single question involved in the case. The circumstances and facts tending to support the presumption that deceased's death was not intentionally self-inflicted, and hereinabove given consideration, are in direct conflict with the facts and circumstances tending to show that Miss Beers committed suicide. In fact, the true situation, legally, is that the verdict necessarily implies that the jury did not regard the evidence presented by the defendant to show that Miss Beers committed suicide as being of sufficient force to overthrow the presumption referred to, said presumption, as we have seen, standing for the facts it represents until overcome by clear and satisfactory evidence—that is, clear and satisfactory to the jury.

[12-15] Two other of the given instructions are criticized as not being pertinent to the case as made by the evidence, viz.: (1) "That a presumption is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts," and that "there is a presumption of law that things have happened according to the ordinary course of nature and the ordinary habits of life," which presumption is disputable, "and may be controverted by other evidence, direct or indirect." (2) That "in this class of cases the rule is that every reasonable hypothesis for accounting for death other than by suicide should be excluded from the case before you can conclude that it was suicide, and then only, of course, from evidence warranting that conclusion." These instructions state the law correctly, and were pertinent to the evidentiary features of the case.

There are no other points requiring notice herein.

The judgment is affirmed.

REUSCHE v. BERLING et ux. (Civ. 6063.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 14, 1927.

I. Limitation of actions § 197(2)—Purchaser suing for fraud in sale of real estate, held under evidence to have had notice of fraud more than three years before suit (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 338).

In action for damages for fraud in sale of real estate where question of acreage of tract sold was involved, and it was asserted that tract contained less than represented, evidence was held sufficient to sustain finding that plaintiff had notice of acreage of tract more than three years before action, and hence, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 338, action was barred.

2. Notice § 6—Means of knowledge which, if followed, would lead to knowledge, constitute "actual knowledge" of facts.

Means of knowledge are equivalent to knowledge, and, where it appears notice or information of circumstances which would put one on inquiry, which, if followed, would lead to knowledge, or that facts were presumptively within knowledge, he will be deemed to have had "actual knowledge" of these facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Actual Knowledge.]

3. Notice § 6—Party knowing facts which would reasonably result in inquiry, is charged with discovery of fraud when inquiry would disclose fraud.

Where party has knowledge of facts which would reasonably put him on inquiry, and such inquiry, if pursued, would have led to fraud or other grounds for rescission, he will be charged with having discovered the fraud or other grounds as of the time that he would have discovered it if he had, with reasonable diligence, pursued inquiry when he should have done so.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action by August Reusche, Jr., against Theodore B. Berling and wife for damages for fraud in sale of real property. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. Patterson, of Oakland, for appellant.

L. R. Weinmann, of Alameda (H. E. Linder-smith, of counsel), for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for damages for fraud growing out of the purchase of real property from the defendants. The trial court held that the right of action was barred by the statute of limitations, and gave judgment to the defendants. The plaintiff has appealed on a typewritten transcript.

The sale was made under a written deed of conveyance exercised on June 28, 1919. The deed described the land as containing about 240 acres, which was sold for the lump sum of $10,000, including some personal property situated on the premises. It afterwards developed that the tract owned by the defendants and conveyed to the plaintiff contained but 173.42 acres, and the claim of fraud is based upon the alleged misrepresentations of the defendants as to the acreage. In an effort to avoid a plea of the statute of limitations, the plaintiff alleged that he did not discover these misrepresentations until August 13, 1924, when he had the lands surveyed as a result of a notice which he received from the county tax collector on April 22, 1924, stating the belief of the tax collector that the tract of 66.58 acres belonged to others.

The defendants answered, denying the allegations of misrepresentations, alleging that they had no knowledge of the acreage included in the tract and so informed the plaintiff at the time of the sale; that they had purchased the tract from the former owner through a deed purporting to convey 240 acres, and had paid taxes on that basis for a number of years; that, at the time of the sale, they showed plaintiff the land which they proposed to convey as included within a fence which was pointed out to plaintiff; and that, at the time of the sale, defendants warned plaintiff that the acreage mentioned in the deed was doubtful, that they were conveying what was included within the fence only, and that plaintiff should have the land surveyed to determine the matter of the acreage. It was then alleged that, before the sale was completed, defendants caused an abstract of title to the premises to be delivered to plaintiff and warned him that he should make his own examination of title, that this abstract disclosed the true acreage of the tract conveyed, and that from this and other information plaintiff had knowledge, or the means of knowledge, of the true acreage more than three years prior to the commencement of this action on September 3, 1924. On these facts the defendants then set up the special pleas of the statute of limitations as found in sections 337 and 338, Code of Civil Procedure.

The trial court found that the tract was short in acreage as alleged in the complaint, that there was no actual misrepresentation or fraud committed by the defendants, and that plaintiff knew more than three years prior to the commencement of the action that the 66.58 acres referred to were not owned by defendants, and had the means of knowledge sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the ownership of and title to the land involved. The conclusion of law followed that the cause of action was barred by both sections of the Code pleaded.

[1] The appellant states the issue involved in this appeal to be the question whether the evidence sustains the finding that he knew or should have known, more than three years prior to the commencement of the action, that the land outside the fence line was not included in the sale. The evidence is that the appellant was informed prior to the sale that the respondents had purchased the land from one Wood, who had deeded it to them with the same description used in the deed to appellant; that respondents did not know the true acreage, but had paid taxes on 250; that they had never had the land surveyed, and would not sell on an acreage basis, but would sell the land inclosed by the fence; and that the title could be found in the abstract which was delivered to appellant. The appellant went on the land and satisfied himself without a survey, and continued to live upon the premises for a period of over five years before his action was commenced. About one year after the sale plaintiff was informed by the former owner (respondents' grantor) that the tract did not contain 240 acres. This information he conveyed to the respondents, who again suggested that he have the land surveyed for this purpose. They did nothing until the summer of 1924, when suit had been instituted against them by the adjoining property owners. The appellant was an experienced farmer and a dealer in farm lands, while the respondents had no experience of this kind, but were engaged in the operation of a moving picture theater.

If the repeated warnings of the respondents, the warning of the former owner, the possession of the abstract, and the personal inspection of the land were not sufficient to put appellant on his inquiry and to satisfy him that the tract did not contain the acreage mentioned in the deed, it is difficult to conceive what means of knowledge should be necessary in a case of this kind. If the difference in acreage were slight, it might have escaped notice, but where, as here, the difference is more than one-quarter of the acreage mentioned in the deed, it must have been apparent to an experienced dealer in farm lands, like the appellant, from a mere inspection of the premises.

[2] The trial court merely followed the general rule stated in Lady Washington Cons. Co. v. Wood, 113 Cal. 482, 487, 45 P. 809, 810, that:

"As the means of knowledge are equivalent to knowledge, if it appears that the plaintiff had notice or information of circumstances which would put him on an inquiry which, if followed, would lead to knowledge, or that the facts were presumptively within his knowledge, he will be deemed to have had actual knowledge of these facts."

[3] Another rule, equally applicable to a case of this kind, is that:

"Where a party has knowledge of facts of a character which would reasonably put him upon inquiry, and such inquiry, if pursued, would have led to a discovery of the fraud or other ground for rescission, he will be charged with having discovered the fraud or other ground as of the time he should have discovered it, that is, as of the time when he would have discovered it if he had with reasonable diligence pursued the inquiry when he should have done so." Bancroft v. Woodward, 183 Cal. 99, 108, 190 P. 445, 449.

The appellant does not question the application of these rules of law, but argues that the only facts developed here tending to put him on notice are the delivery of the abstract and the statement of the former owner of the property. These, he argues, were insufficient for that purpose because he did not personally examine the abstract and because the statement of Wood was indefinite. But the appellant engaged another to act as his agent in the examination of the abstract and relied upon the information obtained from him. The respondents are not to be charged with the negligence of this agent. As to Wood's statement, it was sufficient, when taken with the frequent warnings of the respondents, to cause appellant to use reasonable diligence to discover the true facts. The trial court was not, however, limited to a consideration of these facts in making its finding, but it could consider all the facts and circumstances which surrounded the transaction. One circumstance of particular importance was the understanding of the parties at the time of the sale that the property was not being sold according to any specified acreage, but as a whole tract included within a designated fence. It was pointed out to the plaintiff at the time with the express warning by the respondents that they were selling what was bounded by the fence only, and that the true acreage was unknown to them. We are satisfied that all the evidence supports the finding that the means of knowledge were present, and this is sufficient to support the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

GEORGIA CASUALTY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.
(Civ. 5641.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 7, 1927.

1. Master and servant ⇨374—Incision of employee's thumb severing tendon held cause of death from anæsthetic administered to cause relaxation, notwithstanding condition rendering anæsthetic fatal.

In proceedings for workmen's compensation, incision of employee's left thumb, received in course of employment, severing tendon, held continuing operative cause of employee's death resulting from administration of anæsthetic necessary to cause relaxation of tendon, though death occurred on account of persistence of gland in neck, constituting rare condition which made administration of anæsthetic fatal.

2. Master and servant ⇨398—Decision in compensation proceedings should cover whole subject of controversy, including claims of other persons (Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act of 1917, § 17[a], as amended by St. 1919, p. 918, § 6, and § 60[a]).

When claim for benefits under Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act 1917 (St. 1917, p. 846) § 17(a), as amended by St. 1919, p. 918, § 6, has reached point where it is expedient to submit matter to decision of Industrial Accident Commission, the whole controversy, including claims of any and all persons, should be submitted, in view of section 60(a), providing for liberal plan of procedure.

3. Master and servant ⇨398—Application for compensation, made in good faith on behalf of deceased's sister, authorized commission's determination of rights of other dependents, notwithstanding sister's claim was disallowed (Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act of 1917, § 17[a] as amended by St. 1919, p. 918, § 6, and § 60[a]).

Application for compensation, made in good faith in behalf of sister of deceased, under authority of letter in which she stated she hoped applicant "would do all he can to bring about the best result," held sufficient to bring before Industrial Accident Commission entire subject-matter of proceeding and to authorize it to consider rights of other dependents in order to make complete determination of matter, under Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act 1917 (St. 1917, p. 846) § 17(a) as amended by St. 1919, p. 918, § 6, and section 60(a), notwithstanding sister's claim was disallowed.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Whi Rim Lee and others against the Georgia Casualty Company, insurer, for the death of Yili Soo Lee, employee. To review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in claimants' favor, the insurer brings certiorari. Affirmed.

Elber H. Tilson and Joe Crider, Jr., both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

YORK, J. On writ of review of a finding and award by the Industrial Accident Commission, rendered in favor of Whi Rim Lee, Duck Wha Lee, and Chan Hi Lee, applicants, of a death benefit and burial expenses in the total sum of $1,745.25, on account of the death of an employee named Yili Soo Lee, and dismissing the employer from the proceeding, and discharging him from liability therein.

[1] The first objection of petitioners herein is based upon the fact that the death of the employee Yili Soo Lee was not directly caused by the incision of the left thumb which severed a tendon, which incision was received in the course of employment, but was caused solely by reason of the administration of a general anæsthetic, which the doctors testified was necessarily administered to cause a relaxation of the tendon so that the same might be properly stitched together, the undisputed evidence in the case showing that the death of the employee was caused by such anæsthetic by reason of some persistence of a gland in the neck, a gland which is usually present only in infants; a very rare condition to exist in a person of his age, and which condition could not have been discovered before death, and being such a condition as would make the administration of the general anæsthetic necessarily fatal. The general anæsthetic used was nitrous oxide gas, considered to be the safest general anæsthetic. The evidence shows further that the employer and employee consulted the Georgia Casualty Company officials at Los Angeles, and were instructed by their agents and employees to have the employee undergo the treatment at the hands of such surgeons and at the time and place of such treatment, which said treatment resulted in his death. There is no evidence that the administration of the anæsthetic could reasonably have been avoided. Under the circumstances as shown, it appears that the original injury was a continuing operative cause of the employee's death, and that the administration of the anæsthetic was not an independent and separately operating cause of his death.

[2, 3] The application for compensation was filed in the names of the four applicants "by their attorney in fact, D. Chung." The petitioner alleges that the commission was without jurisdiction over the matter in controversy, in this, that no application, for compensation was filed "by any party in interest, his attorney, or other representative authorized in writing," as required by section 17 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act of 1917 (as amended by St. 1919, p. 918). That section provides, in the phraseology last above quoted, for the filing of the application in writing for an award of compensation in the cases covered by the statute. Among other things, it further provides that "there shall be but one cause of action for each transaction coming within the provisions of this act."

"When a claim for any portion of the benefits prescribed by the act has reached the point where it is necessary or expedient to submit the matter to the decision of the Industrial Accident Commission, the whole subject matter of the controversy, including the further claims of the applicant, or of any and all other persons, should be thereby submitted to the jurisdiction of the commission for a complete determination, provided, of course, that all claims relating to the transaction be presented within the life of the continuing jurisdiction of the commission." Great W. P. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 196 Cal. 593, 603, 238 P. 662, 666.

Section 60 (a) of the act provides for a very liberal plan of procedure in matters before the commission, and declares that "no informality in any proceeding * * * shall invalidate any order, decision, award * * * made, approved or confirmed by the commission."

The evidence produced before the commission includes a letter written by Mrs. Shin to D. Chung before he filed the application with the commission, in which letter she refers to her deceased brother and to his dependents apparently including herself, and to the "industrial accident insurance," and states to Chung that she hopes he will do all he can to bring about the best result.

The commission treated this letter as written authority to Chung to file the application on behalf of at least one interested party, namely, the sister of the deceased. Respondent commission contends that the application so made on behalf of the sister was sufficient to bring before the commission the subject-matter of the proceeding, and that under the provisions of the statute it was authorized to consider the rights of the other dependents, inasmuch as it would be necessary to bring them in before a complete determination of the matter could be had. Respondents further contend that, since Mrs. Shin was in good faith claiming to be a dependent of the deceased, the fact that her claim to be such dependent was not allowed does not deprive the commission of the same jurisdiction over the proceeding, with respect to the other claims, that the commission would have had if the claim on behalf of Mrs. Shin that she was a dependent of the deceased had been allowed. We are of the opinion that these contentions of respondent are correct.

The award is affirmed.

ROSENTHAL v. TAYLOR, Constable, et al.
(Civ. 5879.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 9, 1927.

1. Fraudulent conveyances ⚡308(9) — What constitutes delivery and possession, good against creditor of seller, held fact question for trial court.

What constitutes delivery and possession, good against attaching judgment creditor of seller, is fact question, to be determined by trial court, in view of circumstances of each particular case.

2. Fraudulent conveyances ⚡147(1) — Removal of bulky articles from seller's land is not always necessary to make transfer of possession good against judgment creditor of seller (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Where goods are of considerable bulk, their removal from land of seller is not always necessary to constitute change of possession, giving buyer title good against attaching judgment creditor of seller, under Civ. Code, § 3440.

3. Fraudulent Conveyances ⚡299(9) — Evidence of buyer's assembling pumps and carrying some parts away held to show change of possession, good against constable attaching under levy of execution against seller (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Evidence that buyer of pumps took scattered parts lying on seller's land into possession, and assembled them, excepting some valves which he took to his own place of business, and then stored assembled parts in shed belonging to seller, held to show bona fide sale and delivery, making change of possession good within Civ. Code, § 3440, as against constable attaching under levy of execution issued on judgment against seller.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by Louis Rosenthal, doing business under the name of the National Iron & Metal Company, against Walter J. Taylor, Constable of Oakland Township, and others. Judgment for plaintiff against defendant Taylor alone, who appeals. Affirmed.

Myron Harris and Jesse Nichols, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Glickman & Glickman, of Oakland, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for the conversion of two pumps and one cone tank seized by the defendant Taylor, as Constable, under a writ of execution issuing out of the justices' court. Plaintiff had judgment against the defendant Taylor alone for the return of the two pumps or for their value, fixed at $425, and for $100 damages for their conversion. From this judgment this defendant has appealed on a typewritten record.

The pumps were purchased by one Sam Kessler in April, 1925, dismantled, and hauled by truck from Mountain View to the yard of Kessler located in Oakland. They were then sold by Kessler to plaintiff in their dismantled state some time in May of the same year. The purchaser took immediate possession, and, with the aid of two men employed by him, gathered up the parts, which were scattered about Kessler's yard, reassembled the pumps, and stored them in a shed at the rear of the yard for protection against the weather. Some of the valves belonging to the pumps were not assembled, but were taken by the plaintiff to his own place of business, and remained continuously in his possession.

It is the contention of the appellant that findings Nos. 9 and 10, relating to the transfer of possession to, and the continuous exercise of possession by, the respondent, are not supported by the evidence. The appellant argues that the provisions of section 3440 of the Civil Code, which declare that a transfer of personal property shall be conclusively presumed to be fraudulent, unless accompanied by immediate delivery, and followed by a continued change of possession, have not been met, because the respondent left the pumps in the Kessler shed. The respondent answers that the delivery took place when he and his employees actually took into their possession the scattered parts and assembled them into the pumps, and that possession of the assembled articles was not lost by the mere storing of them in the shed for protection against the weather.

[1, 2] The rules of law involved are well settled. What constitutes delivery and possession is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court, in view of the circumstances of each particular case. Dubois v. Spinks, 114 Cal. 289-290, 46 P. 95. All species of property are not capable of the same kind of possession, and, where the goods are of considerable bulk, their removal from the land of the seller is not always necessary. 12 Cal. Jur. 998, 1002. In Sequeira v. Collins, 153 Cal. 426, 431, 95 P. 876, 878, the Supreme Court says:

"Where the goods sold or transferred are bulky, or require further labor to fit them for use, it is not essential to a change of possession that they should be removed from the land of the transferer" (citing cases).

[3] Here the evidence is that the respondent purchased the scattered parts, which he actually took in his possession and assembled. The pumps thus assembled, minus some of the valves which he took to his own place of business, were then stored in a shed belonging to the seller. Upon these facts the trial court found that there was a bona fide sale and delivery, and that the storing of the pumps with the seller did not render the sale fraudulent. The evidence supports the findings, and brings the case within the rule of the Sequeira Case. Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action for money due on sale of personal property by Joseph J. Miles against C. M. Zadow. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed as modified.

N. B. Nelson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Humphrey Marshall, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PEAIRS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant, C. M. Zadow, from a judgment for $575 and costs rendered against him in the superior court of Los Angeles county.

The facts are as follows: In December, 1920, plaintiff, respondent herein, purchased a restaurant from one Bybee through the defendant, appellant herein, as business chance broker, and in the transaction the plaintiff executed a conditional sales agreement as security for the payment of $500 to the defendant; said sum being the unpaid balance of the purchase price of said restaurant.

After about one week's business, the respondent attempted to rescind said purchase on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentations, and filed suit against said Bybee and this defendant. The trial court found there was no fraud, but held that appellant, Zadow, accepted the rescission by taking possession of the restaurant from the respondent and selling it, pursuant to an agreement with the respondent made after the suit was filed. An amended and supplemental complaint, setting out this subsequent agreement, was filed after the trial, and respondent had judgment against defendant, Zadow, for $600. On appeal to this court, the judgment was reversed, for the reason that the facts alleged in the supplemental complaint occurred after the filing of the original complaint and were no part of the original case. See Miles v. Bybee et al., 59 Cal. App. 613, 211 P. 251. Conforming to the decision in that case, the respondent filed this action, alleging the agreement between respondent and appellant, wherein appellant took possession of the restaurant from respondent, and agreed to sell it for respondent and to pay over the proceeds of the sale to respondent, after deducting said sum of $500 belonging to appellant, and secured by said conditional sales agreement.

In April, 1921, the appellant sold the restaurant for the sum of $1,300, but failed to pay anything to respondent. This action was brought to recover the sum of $800 from the appellant, which sum is the balance of the selling price after deducting said sum of $500 belonging to appellant. The trial court allowed the appellant said sum of $500, and also the sum of $225 for his expenses, paid from the time he took the restaurant to the date of sale, and gave respondent judgment for the remainder of the selling price, to wit, $575. Appellant's defense to this action is that there was a default in the payment of the monthly installments provided to be paid in said conditional sales agreement for $500, and that by reason of said default the respondent forfeited all interest in the restaurant, and, when the restaurant was sold, it was wholly the property of appellant, and that respondent had no interest in it; therefore respondent was not entitled to any of the proceeds of the sale.

[1] There are two points in particular to be considered in this case: First, Did appellant agree to sell the property for respondent, which in the light of the evidence of both parties and the two decisions already rendered in connection with this matter, must be answered in the affirmative? and, second, Did the respondent place himself in default or did the purported notice given by appellant put respondent in default or deprive him of his interest?

It is not necessary to discuss the original contract of purchase further than to note that the total balance under the purchase lease was not due for many months after the date of sale of the property in April, 1921, but, if by strict construction it could have been declared due, the default or forfeiture was cured by the new contract to sell, which contract was not limited, and sale thereunder completed.

At the time of the purchase by respondent, on December 13, 1920, he gave the Title Guarantee Sales Company, under which name appellant did business, authority in writing to sell the property here in question for $1,750, and agreed to pay a commission of $100 above $1000, then later, on January 17, 1921, upon promise of appellant to sell the said property for $1,300, turned over a key to the property to Zadow, appellant herein.

The lease and note given thereunder on December 13, 1920, was filed for record by appellant on ——— date and afterwards recorded on February 4, 1921. On January 28, 1921, appellant sent the following communication to respondent:

"Dear Sir: Your first installment on restaurant at 2116A North Broadway is past due, kindly call and make payment at this office, the amount is $50.00 and interest, if not paid in 3 days, the whole amount will become due. Yours truly, Title Guarantee Sales Co., By C. M. Zadow."

This so-called three-day notice is not authorized by the purchase lease or note, and further says nothing about termination of the agency of the appellant. Appellant sent another letter to respondent on February 4, 1921, on the day the original lease was recorded, in which it is said:

"Unless you pay the whole amount of $500.00 dollars and interest within 3 days you will lose your right and title in said restaurant, as I must protect my $500 dollars I loaned on said restaurant. Respectfully yours, [Signed] C. M. Zadow."

These letters were sent by the appellant to respondent, notwithstanding appellant's promise that the respondent should lose nothing and that he would sell for $1,300 and give respondent his money back. While the appellant by his written notices of January 28th and February 4th and his testimony, appears to have attempted to vary the contract entered into in January for the taking over of the property and selling the same and saving the respondent harmless, it seems to this court a futile effort, if it is not entitled to censure, as an attempt to do something which should not be countenanced by the courts.

From a consideration of the entire evidence in this case, there is no question but that there was a mutual rescission evidenced by a new contract in which the appellant agreed to sell the property involved herein for $1,300, and, after having taken possession thereof for that purpose he sold the same in April, 1921, and then failed to pay the balance due to the respondent or any portion thereof.

Counsel for appellant contends that, if the appellant was still the agent at the time the sale of the property in question was made, that all the interest that the respondent had therein was in the equipment of the restaurant; that the new lease which had been negotiated by appellant was his and that it was the main value in the deal; that respondent had failed to pay any further rent or any of the expenses from the time of the taking over of the key by appellant. It seems scarcely necessary for this court to spend a great deal of time in consideration of the discussion and evidence cited by counsel for appellant in this respect. At the time appellant agreed to sell the property and save respondent

Miles free from loss, the appellant knew the value of the equipment of the restaurant and if it had deteriorated to the extent testified it had been only about one month since appellant was the owner. If the equipment had ever been worth $600 or $700 and the lease the other $500 which appellant charged respondent, it was still worth near that amount. The appellant did not put any one in charge after he took the key nor make any attempt to keep the equipment in shape, which indicates that he considered respondent the owner up to the time of the sale in accordance with sales agreement.

Appellant knew that there was no written lease or other than an understanding that the rent was to be $25 and $1 for water. The lease stood until the 1st of March, and appellant better than any one else understood just what would have to be done in regard to leasing—the new lease cost appellant nothing. Moreover, there is evidence in the record to the effect that appellant was to pay to respondent the entire proceeds of the sale, less $500. Appellant also knew the respondent's financial situation and when he took the key it was for the purpose, as stated by appellant himself, of saving the respondent from any loss, knowing that the respondent could not pay rent nor make payments on the $500 note nor keep the place running. Thus appellant agreed to a rescission and entered into an agreement to sell the whole business or the price would not have been $1,300, from which appellant was to get his commission of $100 and save respondent from loss. Rent, cost of cash register, repairs, cleaning, and garbage removal were charged to respondent.

[2] The trial court, hearing the evidence, observing the witnesses, and in the light of all the contracts, writings, and letters, gave judgment for the respondent in the sum of $575, which amount appears to have been arrived at by allowing the appellant the amount of the balance of purchase note in the sum of $500, the rental to the amount of $114, repairs in the sum of $15, the price of a cash register which had been stolen, $80, $11 for cleaning, $5 for removal of garbage, which amounted in all to $225; these amounts having been testified to by appellant, leaving a balance to respondent of $575. The only other amount in dispute was $100 charged for commission, which the lower court held, under the circumstances, was not a proper charge. We are, however, of the opinion that the sales contract did call for a commission of $100, and that the judgment as rendered in the lower court is correct except as to said item.

[3] The trial court had a right to believe any or all of the witnesses or any portion of the testimony which it deemed true, and this court will not comment upon the conflicting nature of the testimony of the appellant.

[4] The contention of counsel for appellant that the decision is against law, in that the court failed to find upon material issues presented by the answer of the appellant seems to be without merit, when the findings are considered in conjunction with the pleadings and the evidence in the case. Under the evidence, the court would have been bound to find against appellant upon the issues in question. Therefore the failure to find upon them is not prejudicial error.

This court will not discuss much of the law cited by counsel, for the reason that it bears upon a view of the case which would hold that there was no agreement on the part of the appellant to sell the property, which agreement for sale the court below found satisfactorily proven, and in which belief this court coincides, after having carefully considered all the evidence before it.

[5] It is contended by the appellant that there was no consideration for the agreement to sell, and in this connection we will quote from the case of Gallagher v. Equitable Gas & Light Co., 141 Cal. 707, 75 P. 331:

"These facts show consideration. There was a mutual exchange of promises—promise for promise—which will support each other unless one or the other is void. Siddall v. Clark, 89 Cal. 321 [26 P. 829]."

In the case of Rogers, etc., Co. v. Southern California Investment Co., 159 Cal. 739, 115 P. 935, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 543, it is said:

"We may concede that defendant was then in default in its payments and that the plaintiff might have declared the defendant's interest forfeited by reason of such default. Such default and forfeiture could be waived by plaintiff. The execution of the contract to buy the interest of defendant for $1,500 was a sufficient waiver of the right of plaintiff to declare the forfeiture. There is no merit in the claim that the contract was without consideration. The defendant was in possession of the greater part of the land, holding under the agreements aforesaid. In consequence of this contract of plaintiff to repurchase, defendant gave the possession to plaintiff, and it has ever since retained possession of all the lands. The yielding of possession constituted a sufficient consideration for the contract. Indeed, the mutual stipulations of the parties (that is, the actual conveyance in escrow by one, and the promise by the other to pay the price), both being valid, constituted a sufficient consideration. Siddall v. Clark, 89 Cal. 321, 26 P. 829."

From the same opinion we also quote the following words as applying to this case:

"The transaction was, in effect, an agreement to rescind the previously executed agreements of sale and to limit and settle the amount to be restored to the defendant as a consequence of such rescission."

In the case of Anderson v. Adler, 42 Cal. App. 779, 184 P. 42, it is said:

"A contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing, or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise.' Civ. Code, § 1698. An executed agreement is one the terms of which have been fully performed. Henehan v. Hart, 127 Cal. 656, 657, 60 P. 426. When, therefore, the trial court, on sufficient evidence, found the existence of an executed oral contract modifying the terms of the original lease as to the rent, and further found that it had been fully performed, it finally settled the issues of this case."
Cal.Rep. 261-263 P.—31

In Miles v. Bybee, 59 Cal. App. 614, 211 P. 251, it is said:

"The case came on for trial in May, 1921. The court made findings that the representations made by defendant Bybee were true, and that the plaintiff was entitled to take nothing from the defendants Bybee or Roddle, but rendered a judgment against Zadow in the sum of $600. From this judgment Zadow appeals. The result at which the court thus arrived is explained as follows: At the trial it was shown in evidence that the restaurant property was held in possession by defendant Bybee under a lease contract from defendant Zadow, under which, upon the completion of certain payments, Zadow agreed to convey the property to Bybee; that after the plaintiff had given his notice of rescission, to wit, about the 1st of January, which was at least 10 days after the commencement of this action, the plaintiff delivered the key of the restaurant premises to Zadow under an arrangement whereby Zadow was to sell the property and out of the proceeds repay to the plaintiff the money which he had paid for the restaurant; that on or about April 20, 1921, Zadow made a sale, and received from the purchaser the sum of $600, together with a note for $700. In view of these facts, the court, at the time of its decision, permitted the plaintiff to file 'an amended and supplemental complaint,' 'to conform to the proof,' in which these subsequent transactions were set forth. Thereupon the court made its findings, in which, after making certain allowances to Zadow, arising out of circumstances which we find it unnecessary to discuss, it determined that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against Zadow for said sum of $600. From the foregoing it is manifest that, although the plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything upon his original cause of action, he obtained judgment against Zadow by substituting him as the principal defendant on a new cause of action arising out of a contract made between him and the plaintiff after the commencement of this action. This is a totally different cause of action from that upon which the case went to trial."

The cause of action mentioned in the closing sentence of the above quotation is the cause of action in this case, and it is upon that same cause of action that the trial court herein gave judgment for $575.

In our opinion the findings of the court below are sufficient to cover the issues upon which any evidence was given, and are warranted by the evidence, except as to the $100 commission; therefore the findings and judgment below are ordered modified to show an allowance for a commission of $100, and judgment therefore entered for $475 and interest and costs.

Judgment, as modified, affirmed.

D. Howard Painter, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

R. W. Richardson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

VALENTINE, Justice pro tem. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover the sum of $3,250 for commissions alleged to be due under a contract by defendants. The evidence shows that in January, 1922, and for some time thereafter, the defendant Lane was the owner of a large apartment house in Hollywood, known as the Hillview Apartments. Through his agent, the defendant Norman, he had contracted an exchange with one J. M. Neeland for orchard property in the Sacramento valley, and for a lot in the Morris Vineyard tract on Hill street, Los Angeles, called the Neeland lot. The transaction between Lane and Neeland was in escrow, but could not be consummated unless Neeland and Lane in some manner raised $30,000. In January, 1922, in personal interviews had between the plaintiff and the defendants, plaintiff's services were enlisted to attempt in some way to raise that sum of money. After negotiations with defendant Lane, the plaintiff found a man by the name of A. Otis Birch, who was willing to exchange a lot that he owned in Los Angeles city at First and Hill streets, called the Birch lot, for the Neeland lot, and advance in the transaction $35,000. Plaintiff had many interviews with the defendant parties in interest, and finally Birch's $35,000 went into escrow, and the transaction was later consummated.

The two questions raised on this appeal are: (1) Whether plaintiff had complied with the requirements of section 20 of the Real Estate Brokers' Act (Statutes of 1919, p. 1252), and whether he was a duly licensed broker at the time his alleged cause of action arose; and (2) whether the defendant Norman was authorized as agent to bind his codefendant Lane, by the agreement which he made with plaintiff for the payment of commissions to the latter.

[1-3] As to the first point, plaintiff was to receive $3,250 through escrow when certain property described in said escrow "is actually received"—i. e., "deeded to C. M. Lane, his representatives or assigns"—unless said escrow failed "for any other reason" and should "not be consummated." Plaintiff's cause of action did not finally "arise" until all of the above conditions had been met. It is virtually conceded that all the conditional matters occurred except the last; i. e., that the escrow should not "fail" and should be "consummated." The trial court found that the cause of action herein arose June 30, possibly basing this finding upon the evidence that on that date, or on June 29, the deeds were recorded. Non constat but that the escrow might still "fail" and not be "consummated." This finding seems erroneous, as being based on a mere conclusion of the escrow clerk.

The mere passing of title by the recording of the deeds was not the only condition, but the payment of the commission was conditioned upon the escrow being actually consummated, and the amount was to be paid only through escrow. Therefore, if the plaintiff had brought his action on the 30th day of June against the defendants for recovery of the commission, it would have been premature.

Some of the checks for disbursements of money were not written up until July 3, and plaintiff testified that he was then told by the escrow clerk that they were waiting to hear from San Bernardino, where one of the properties was situated, and that the escrow was not then ready to close. Further, the money was only to be paid through escrow, and therefore, since no time was specified as to when the escrow holder should disburse money, the escrow holder had a reasonable time within which to make up his accounts, write his checks, and pay it over. So that, without doubt, plaintiff's alleged cause of action did not arise until after June 30. So far as this plaintiff was concerned, undoubtedly on July 3, after the defendants attempted to repudiate their contract and the escrow holder decided to act upon their instructions not to comply with the order for payment of plaintiff's commissions, and notified plaintiff to that effect, the plaintiff had a cause of action. But it was contingent under the terms of the agreement upon the "consummation" of the escrow. The evidence as to the exact date on which the escrow may be deemed to have been consummated is not clear nor conclusive, but it establishes that it was consummated subsequent to July 3, the date on which the plaintiff received his license, and, further, that the escrow did not "fail," and therefore that at the time plaintiff's cause of action arose he was a licensed broker. The amended complaint was verified on July 26, 1923, at which time plaintiff's cause of action had accrued, and he had received his license. Respondents cite Houston v. Williams, 53 Cal. App. 267, 200 P. 55, but, so far as that case applies to the case at bar, it only lays down the doctrine that plaintiff must be a duly licensed broker at the time the alleged cause of action arises.

[4] The other point raised on this appeal is as to defendant Lane's liability under the contract, notwithstanding defendant Norman was not authorized in writing to sign it on Lane's behalf. Among other things, this contract provides "for your [plaintiff's] services rendered in this transaction, I hereby agree, for myself and for C. M. Lane, to pay to you the sum of $3,250, which is to be your fee in full for your services, said commission to be paid through escrow." The evidence establishes that Norman was the agent of Lane:

"Q. He (Norman) acted for you in this escrow transaction, did he not? A. With my approval.

"Q. You mean you gave approval of the instructions given then? A. No; I didn't say that; it was with my approval that he should act as my agent."

The evidence shows that Lane knew that Norman purported to act as his agent in contracting to pay plaintiff a commission; that Lane permitted Norman to act and to hold himself out as his authorized agent in these transactions, and that he knew that plaintiff, on the supposition and in the belief that he was duly authorized, was exerting himself to bring about the consummation of the transaction, and he (Lane) knew at least of some of the services he was rendering to this end; that Lane knew that plaintiff was relying upon Norman's authority to instruct the escrow holder to pay plaintiff's commission, and also that Lane accepted the benefit of these services rendered by plaintiff, and defendant Lane is estopped to deny his authority. Defendant Lane cannot now maintain the unjust and unwarrantable defense, under the statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624), that he did not in writing authorize Norman, his agent, to sign plaintiff's authority.

Respondents attempt to distinguish Blood v. La Serena Land & Water Co., 134 Cal. 361, 66 P. 317, by pointing out that the estoppel there was based upon fraud, which is not an element in the case at bar. It is true that it was not pleaded in the case at bar, but the court says in the cited case (page 362 [66 P. 317]):

"He [plaintiff] successfully makes out a prima facie case, and may, without pleading it, use the evidence in estoppel to prevent the corporation from maintaining what, as against its acts, would be an unjust and unwarranted defense."

The court further says (page 367 [66 P. 319]):

"* * * The law does not allow a corporation to retain the benefits which it has received from the contract, and escape liability upon it."

And it cites authorities upon this proposition, which is elementary.

The judgment is reversed.

JOHNSON et ux. v. GRANT et al.
(Civ. 6055.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 9, 1927.

1. Mortgages ⚡356—Publication of notice of sale under trust deed in newspaper of general circulation in county held sufficient, where no local paper was shown to exist (Code Civ. Proc. § 692).

Publication of notice of sale under trust deed in newspaper of general circulation in county was sufficient, under Code Civ. Proc. § 692, where no paper of general circulation was shown to be published in city and township where property was situated.

2. Mortgages ⚡369(3)—Sale to trust deed beneficiary on purchaser's default in payments for less than due beneficiary on contract held on good consideration.

Where, on a purchaser's default in payments for land bought under contract, the trustee, holding a deed of security for the vendor, sold the land as the contract authorized, and it was purchased by the beneficiary himself, the original vendor, for a sum less than was due such beneficiary on the contract, held, that his purchase was for a good consideration as respects right to set aside trustee's deed.

3. Mortgages ⚡369(7)—That, on trustee's sale on purchaser's default in contract payments, trustor, original vendor, bought through agent, held not evidence of fraud between trustee and trustor.

Where purchaser, under a land contract, defaulted in his payments, and the trustee of such land for the seller, pending completion of payments, sold the land, as provided by contract between vendor and purchaser, the original vendor being the purchaser at such sale, held, that the fact that the purchaser at such sale bought through an agent, and was not personally present, was not evidence of fraud between the trustee and the trustor, the original vendor.

4. Appeal and error ⚡173(2)—That trustee's sale was void because outcry not made in seeking bids, held unavailable on review, where not in issue.

That a land trustee's sale, held because of the purchaser's default in payments on his contract, was void because no outcry was made in the trustee's calling for bids at the sale, held not available on review, where such matter was not put in issue.

5. Appeal and error ⚡694(1)—Reviewing court need not examine findings attacked as unsupported by evidence, where evidence not shown.

The reviewing court is not required to examine findings attacked as not supported by evidence, where such evidence as there was is not set out.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Charles F. Johnson and wife against Margaret Grant and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Harry S. Whitthorne, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Alfred J. Hennessy, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs sued to quiet title and to set aside a trustee's deed on the grounds of fraud. Defendants had judgment, from which the plaintiffs have appealed upon a typewritten transcript.

On March 11, 1918, plaintiffs purchased from defendant Vanoch a piece of property situated in Daly City San Mateo county, the purchase price of which was fixed at $3,000; $100 was paid at the time, and the plaintiffs executed their promissory note, secured by a trust deed for the payment of the balance at the rate of $25 a month and interest upon the deferred payments. This deed named the defendant Grant as trustee and the defendant Vanoch as beneficiary. It was duly recorded and payments made as called for therein until February 9, 1921, at which time the plaintiffs were in default, in principal and interest, in the sum of $150. This amount was paid on March 13, 1921, but, on August 28, 1921, the plaintiffs were again in default, owing $150 on the principal and $89.50 in interest. At this time the defendant Vanoch caused to be recorded in the office of the county recorder a notice of default and election to sell. Notice of sale was given by publication and posting, and a sale of the property was had at public auction on January 14, 1922, from the steps of the city hall at Daly City, at which time, no bidders appearing, the property was sold to defendant Vanoch for the sum of $500. On February 4, 1922, said defendant executed and delivered a deed of gift of the property to the defendant Grant. During all this time the plaintiffs lived on the premises, and, after the transfers above noted, they remained upon the premises, paying to defendant Grant the sum of $25 per month, which she claimed was done in accordance with an arrangement with the plaintiffs that these payments should be accepted as monthly rentals. This arrangement continued until June, 1922, when plaintiffs engaged one Sheehan as their agent for the purpose of making these monthly payments to the defendant Grant, and, in accordance with this arrangement, payments were made by Sheehan monthly from June, 1922, until July, 1923, and in each case receipts were given by Sheehan to plaintiffs acknowledging such payments as rentals and accepted by them without protest. On July 1, 1923, the plaintiffs ceased to make any payments for the use of the premises, and some months thereafter plaintiff Charles F. Johnson took fourteen of these rent receipts to Sheehan, and had him alter them by striking out the word "rent" and inserting the word "payments."

On this appeal the appellants attack the judgment on the ground that this trustee's sale was void because publication thereof was not made in a newspaper published in the township in which Daly City is located; because the sale although purporting to have been made to the beneficiary for the consideration represented by the indebtedness due her, was in effect made to the trustee herself; and because the trustee did not publicly announce the sale and call for bids. In addition to this, appellants assert that fifteen of the trial court's findings are not sustained by the evidence, but none of the evidence is printed, and no argument is made in support of this claim.

The respondents have met each attack made by the appellants, and have argued that, notwithstanding any claim of irregularities in the proceeding leading up to the sale, the appellants are estopped from attacking the title of the respondent Grant by their action in accepting and acknowledging her as the owner of the property from the 1st day of February, 1922; by agreeing to continue to occupy the premises as tenants; and by paying the respondent Grant monthly rentals therefor. The trial court found that the appellants ratified the sale and attorned to respondent Vanoch on February 1, 1922, and did the same in respect to respondent Grant on March 1, 1922, and continued to pay rent either personally or through their agent to respondent Grant until July 1, 1923.

[1] The notice of sale was published in the Redwood City Democrat, a newspaper which the trial court found to be one of general circulation in the county of San Mateo. This was sufficient under section 692, Code of Civil Procedure, unless a newspaper of general circulation was printed and published in the city and township in which the property was situated. There was no showing that any paper was printed or published in that city or township, and the finding of due publication is, therefore, not open to attack.

[2, 3] The trial court found upon competent evidence that the sale was made to the beneficiary for the consideration of $500. As this sum, and much more, was due her under the deed of trust, a good consideration passed, and the fact that the beneficiary was not personally present at the time and place of sale, but was represented by an agent, is not evidence of either fraud or collusion between the trustee and the beneficiary.

[4] Appellants argue that the trustee's sale was void because she did not make public outcry in announcing the sale and calling for bids. This is a matter which was not put in issue; the only claim of invalidity pleaded being the want of proper publication and posting of the notice of sale. Upon the issues raised, the recitals in the deed that the trustee exposed the property for sale at public auction to the highest bidder are sufficient to support the finding that the sale was fairly and legally conducted.

[5] We are not required to examine any of the fifteen findings which are attacked merely by the statement that they are not supported by the evidence. McGee v. Hoffman, 46 Cal. App. 508, 189 P. 298.

We should say, however, that the finding that the appellants ratified the sale and acknowledged respondents' title by accepting them as landlords, and paying them rent for the premises over a period of about two years, is supported by competent evidence, as is the conclusion that the appellants, by their own fraud, practiced upon the court and upon the respondents, are not in equity with clean hands.

Judgment affirmed.

SHELLEY v. BOARD OF TRADE OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 6005.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 8, 1927.

1. Payment ~~§~~82(2)—Payment made under improper demand, without invoking legal remedies, is a "voluntary payment," and cannot be recovered (Civ. Code, § 1040).

One who knowingly submits to a demand by paying that which is demanded instead of invoking legal remedies makes "voluntary payment," and cannot recover money so paid, even though demand may have been improper, under Civ. Code, § 1040.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Voluntary Payment.]

2. Payment ~~§~~87(5)—Payment made under protest to recover property unlawfully taken may be recovered, if legal process to recover property would cause loss.

Where person making unlawful demand obtains possession of another's property, payment made by owner under protest to recover property will be held compulsory, and may be recovered back, notwithstanding general rules as to voluntary payments not being recoverable.

3. Payment ~~§~~82(3)—Partners' delivery to adjustment board of money to cover board's expenses in adjustment of creditors' accounts, held "voluntary payment" and not recoverable, notwithstanding agreement to bear expenses was without valid consideration (Civ. Code, § 1040).

Though it was originally agreed between partners in financial difficulties and their creditors that expenses of adjustment of accounts were to be borne by creditors, partners' delivery to adjustment board of sum of money realized on sale of assets to be distributed to creditors and "to be applied by you in payment of your expenses," under another agreement by which expenses were to be paid by partners, constituted voluntary payment under Civ. Code, § 1040, which partners were not entitled to recover back, notwithstanding their agreement to pay expenses of adjustment was unsupported by valid consideration.

4. Appeal and error ⚡1071(5)—Judgment will not be reversed for findings outside issues if findings within issues support judgment.

If findings of fact within issues presented by the pleadings are sufficient to support the judgment, judgment will not be set aside because there are also findings made outside of issues, and such finding will be disregarded as immaterial.

5. Partnership ⚡216(2), 217(3)—In action to recover deposit for expenses, findings that partners had proceeds of sale paid to adjustment board on basis of statement of creditors' accounts held sustained by evidence and within issues.

In action to recover moneys paid Board of Trade for its expenses in settling accounts of partnership's creditors, findings that Board of Trade made full and complete statement as to amount of claims of creditors and expenses incurred by it, and that payment of moneys realized on transfer of partners' assets was made to Board of Trade with knowledge of situation, held supported by evidence and within scope of issues.

6. Trial ⚡396(1)—Facts found outside issues logically deduced from other facts in issue are authorized.

Facts found by court which are outside of issues framed are nevertheless authorized, where they are deductions from other facts found which are directly in issue.

7. Appeal and error ⚡1071(1)—Inconsistent findings do not warrant reversal unless irreconcilable and material.

Court will not reverse judgment on ground that findings are contradictory or inconsistent, unless it appears that findings cannot be reconciled and that they are so material that it cannot be determined upon which finding court relied for judgment.

8. Partnership ⚡218(4)—Findings as to different agreements for adjustment of creditors' accounts held not irreconcilable, where intermediate finding showed agreement had been modified.

Finding that agreement was made for creditors' payment of expenses for adjustment of partners' accounts held not to conflict with subsequent finding that different agreement was made whereby expenses were to be borne by partners, in view of intermediate finding that first mentioned agreement had been modified.

9. Partnership ⚡218(4)—Finding that partners were to turn over money to creditors held not inconsistent with finding that such deposits covered expenses of adjustment of accounts.

Finding that money received from operation of stores was to be turned over to Board of Trade to pay partnership's creditors 50 per cent. of gross receipts, the remainder to be used for operating expenses and replenishing stock, held not to conflict with finding that all expenses should be paid out of moneys so received, in partners' action to recover moneys paid to Board of Trade for expenses in adjusting accounts of creditors.

10. Trial ⚡398—Trial court's findings should be liberally construed to avoid irreconcilable conflict.

Findings of fact of trial court are to be liberally construed in support of judgment and read and considered together, and, if possible, should be reconciled so as to prevent any conflict on material points.

11. Appeal and error ⚡1071(6)—Absence of finding on material issue warrants reversal only where judgment cannot otherwise be supported or where such finding would require different judgment.

Failure to find on material issues warrants reversal only if judgment cannot be supported without such a finding or such finding if made would be favorable to appellant and require a different judgment.

12. Trial ⚡397(5)—Finding is rendered immaterial, where logical conclusions from other findings determine issue.

Finding which may seem material may be rendered immaterial by other findings which cover the issue by reciting ultimate or probative facts whose logical conclusions determine particular issue involved.

13. Trial ⚡397(5)—Omitted finding on issue as to assignment of claim for recovery of money paid was immaterial, where court found assignee had no claim and that no overpayment had been made.

Omission of finding that partner transferred to associate all claims and demands to recover moneys paid for expenses of adjusting firm accounts was rendered immaterial by finding that plaintiff, to whom assignment was made, had no claim or demand against defendants, that no money was turned over in excess of amount owed, and that defendants did not withdraw or retain any moneys.

14. Trial ⚡397(5)—Omission to find that defendants had not paid moneys owed to plaintiff held immaterial under finding that no money was ever due.

Court's omission to find on issue raised in action to recover money paid as to whether defendants had previously paid plaintiff all amounts owed was rendered immaterial by finding that no money was ever due.

15. Trial ☞397(5)—Finding that partners failed to turn over excess amount on adjustment of partnership debts held to sufficiently cover issue of overpayment under modified agreement to pay expenses.

In action to recover money paid, finding that partners did not turn over to Board of Trade, sued as defendants, any sum in excess of amount owing defendants and creditors, sufficiently covered issue raised that excess payment had been made, where original agreement of plaintiff and copartner for adjustment of accounts by which creditors were to bear expenses was subsequently modified under agreement calling for payment of expenses by debtors.

16. Pleading ☞126—Denial defendants received any sum to use of partners or either of them held not admission that defendants received money from both partners.

In action to recover money paid by partnership on adjustment of firm debts, denial in answer that defendants received sum named "or any other sum or amount" to the use of plaintiff or his partner "or either of them" held not to involve admission that defendants received money from both partners for the use and benefit of defendants.

17. Pleading ☞433(3)—If answer involved negative pregnant as to defendants' receipt of overpayment, defect was cured by finding that defendants were not overpaid.

If defendants' denial in action to recover moneys received for plaintiff's use constituted negative pregnant admitting receipt of money, such objection was removed by finding that no sum in excess of amount due was paid to defendants.

18. Partnership ☞217(3)—Evidence held to sustain finding that plaintiff had no claim against adjustment board for overpayment of money on adjustment of partnership debts.

In action to recover alleged overpayment on adjustment of partnership debts, evidence held to sustain finding that plaintiff was not the owner or holder of any claim or demand against adjustment board.

19. Appeal and error ☞1071(3)—That finding is unsustained by evidence is immaterial, where remaining findings are sustained and support judgment.

Fact that finding is not sustained by evidence is immaterial, where remaining findings are sustained by evidence and are sufficient to support the judgment.

20. Partnership ☞178—Contract for adjustment of partnership debts held fully executed by payment of creditors, reimbursement of adjusting agency and creditors' dismissal of attachment suits, notwithstanding partners failed to receive canceled notes or receipts (Civ. Code, § 1661).

Where agreement to transfer proceeds of sale of business for payment of firm creditors was carried out by payment of proceeds for creditors and reimbursement of adjustment agency and by dismissal of attachment suits, contract was fully executed under Civ. Code, § 1661, and fact that partners had not received canceled notes or receipts was immaterial, especially where notes and canceled checks were not demanded.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Joseph Shelley against the Board of Trade of San Francisco, a co-operative association, and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Cooley, Crowley & Gallagher, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Max Mayer, Joseph Kirk and Jefferson E. Peyser, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. In February, 1922, the appellant, Joseph Shelley, and his brother, Sam Shelley, were copartners and were engaged in operating "army stores" in San Francisco, Fresno, Eureka, Pittsburg, and Stockton, Cal., and at Reno, Nev. They owed large sums of money, and were in financial difficulties, and their creditors were uneasy. Joseph Shelley and his brother, Sam Shelley, feared they would be pressed by their creditors. Accordingly, they conferred with Mr. Elkus, a member of the Board of Trade of San Francisco, about the situation, and Mr. Elkus arranged a meeting of the Board of Trade, which was called for February 18, 1922, and at which time Mr. Elkus submitted a signed statement which he obtained from the Shelleys, showing their assets and liabilities. At a subsequent meeting of the Board of Trade on February 24, 1922, the committee of investigation having reported, it was agreed that an extension of time be granted for the payment of the Shelleys' obligation, payments to be made at the rate of $15,000 per month, the Shelleys to execute interest-bearing notes to the creditors, and it was then agreed that the creditors were to stand all the expenses, and on March 8, 1922, the fact that the creditors were to stand the expenses was stated in a letter written by respondent G. W. Brainard, secretary of the Board of Trade, to the creditors, stating: "The expenses of the adjustment are to be borne by creditors." It was also agreed that all moneys received by the Shelleys in the conduct of their business were to be turned over to the Board of Trade for distribution to the creditors, except that 50 per cent. of the gross receipts should be used for operating expenses and replenishment of the stocks of merchandise, if necessary. It was subsequently learned by written confessions from the managers of the stores on Mission street, San Francisco, and at Stockton, which were given to Adjuster Adelstein of the Board of Trade, that Joseph Shelley had not kept faith with the committee of the Board of Trade and had withheld sums probably amounting to several thousand dollars. At the meeting of the Board of Trade on April 10, 1922, this matter was reported, and a demand was made of Joseph Shelley and Sam Shelley to effect a transfer of all of their assets for the benefit of the creditors or an attachment would be levied. This being refused, an attachment was levied on April 12, 1922, on the San Francisco and Reno stores. Thereafter Sam Shelley, acting for and on behalf of the copartnership, at a meeting of the Board of Trade on April 17, 1922, stated that he had been able to obtain money from one J. Gollober with which to pay the creditors. This was agreeable to the committee, provided all the expenses incurred by the Board of Trade in the administration of the settlement of this matter be paid by the Shelleys. Objection was made by Sam Shelley to standing the expense, but, after discussion, it was agreed between all parties that the regular Board of Trade charges, amounting to 2 per cent., should be borne by the creditors, but that all other expenses should be borne by the Shelleys. Both the Shelley brothers and the creditors proceeded to act upon this agreement, and subsequently, on April 20, 1922, a full written statement of account owing the creditors and containing the expenses referred to and all other matters (Defendants' Exhibit 2) was delivered by the Board of Trade to the attorneys representing and acting for the Shelleys and J. Gollober, to whom the Shelleys were to execute a bill of sale in consideration of his paying the outstanding obligations. After the Shelleys had examined the statement and agreed to its contents on April 24, 1922, Mr. Jaffa, one of the attorneys representing and acting for the Shelleys and Mr. Gollober sent the money advanced by Mr. Gollober to the Board of Trade by letter, stating that the money was to be distributed to the creditors and for expenses as per statement of April 20, 1922, which included the items of expense here in dispute. The letter from Attorney Jaffa, addressed to the Board of Trade, which was admitted in evidence, is as follows:

"I hand you herewith the sum of thirty-six thousand four hundred seventy 85/100 dollars, to hold in escrow upon the following terms and conditions:

"1. No disposition whatever of said sum shall be made nor shall any steps in this transaction be taken until Tuesday, the 25th day of April, 1922, and then only if no creditors of said Joseph Shelley and Samuel Shelley shall appear and contest the sale from said Joseph Shelley and Samuel Shelley to Julius Gollober. Should said contest be made, the said sum is to be returned to the undersigned.

"2. The attachment in the action in the second judicial district court of Nevada, in and for the county of Washoe, entitled G. W. Brainard v. Joseph Shelley and Samuel Shelley, and numbered therein 18110, and the attachment in the action in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, entitled G. W. Brainard v. Shelley Bros. et al., and numbered therein 124984, and each of them, shall be released, and the said actions and each of them shall be dismissed and the said promissory notes upon which the said actions were based shall be marked 'Canceled' and delivered to the said Joseph and Samuel Shelley.

"3. Upon the completion of said acts and each of them, the said sum handed you herewith is to be distributed by you to those creditors listed on your statement of April 19, 1922, and the balance of said sum is to be applied by you in payment of your expenses incurred in connection with the Shelley brothers as indicated on your statement of April 20, 1922, and you are to furnish said Shelley brothers with receipts in full from the said creditors and each of them. Any balance remaining is to be returned to the undersigned."

The third condition in the letter is that:

"Said sum handed you herewith is to be distributed by you to those creditors listed on your statement of April 19, 1922, and the balance of said sum is to be applied by you in payment of your expenses incurred in connection with the Shelley brothers as indicated in your statement of April 20, 1922, and you are to furnish said Shelley brothers with receipts in full from said creditors and each of them. Any balance is to be returned to the undersigned."

Subsequently all of the material conditions set forth in the letter were complied with by the Board of Trade.

This action was brought to recover the sums listed in the statement of April 20, 1922, as costs; it being alleged that $2,977.38 in excess of the amount distributed to the creditors was paid by the Board of Trade. Judgment went for defendants, and from this judgment plaintiff has appealed.

Appellant urges the following points on this appeal: (1) The agreement made by Sam Shelley on April 17, 1922, was void because based on past and gratuitous consideration; (2) findings were made outside the issues; (3) findings were made which are contradictory or inconsistent; (4) failure of the court to find on material issues; (5) findings do not support the judgment; and (6) the evidence does not support the findings.

Appellant in his opening brief has cited cases to support his first contention that the agreement to pay the creditors and the expenses of the Board of Trade, which he admits was in fact executed, was void because based on a past and gratuitous consideration. These cases merely support the point that the promise to pay for past services where the obligation did not previously exist is nudum pactum, and therefore unenforceable. While unquestionably this is sound law, it has no application here. This is not a suit in which the Board of Trade is attempting to enforce a promise on the part of the Shelley brothers to pay for the services rendered or the expenses laid out. The promise to pay in this case is already executed, and the question therefore is: Can plaintiff now recover back the money so paid?

[1-3] The payment made in pursuance of the agreement covering the expenses in question was a voluntary payment, and under the law cannot be recovered. The principle is elementary that, if a person knowingly submits to a demand, however improper, by paying that which is demanded instead of invoking the remedy which the law affords him against such demand, such payment is voluntary, and the recovery thereof cannot be had. McTigue v. Arctic Ice Cream Supply Co., 20 Cal. App. 708, 130 P. 165. The money covering the expenses was not paid under protest, nor are there any circumstances which take the present case out of the general rule stated. The amount in question was paid without any mistake on the part of Shelley brothers, who were fully cognizant of every fact and circumstance preceding the making of the payment, and such payment was freely and voluntarily made and duly authorized by Shelley brothers, being made by their attorney. "A voluntary transfer is an executed contract, subject to all rules of law concerning contracts in general; except that a consideration is not necessary to its validity." Civil Code, § 1040. Here the money was not paid under duress, but willingly and without protest. The general rule that recovery cannot be had of a voluntary payment is of course "subject to the qualification that, in cases where the person making the demand obtains possession of the property of another, without first having had resort to judicial proceedings to test the validity of his demand, payment under protest will be considered compulsory, and the money so paid can be recovered back, if the demand be unlawful; and the delay necessarily incident to the recovery of the property by legal process would result in serious loss to the owner of the property." McTigue v. Arctic Ice Cream Supply Co., supra. In De Graff v. County of Ramsey, 46 Minn. 319, 48 N. W. 1135, in a probate proceeding where the court advised an executor upon filing an inventory and appraisal that under a certain statute it was necessary, before proceeding further in the administration, he should pay into the county treasury $1,000 and file in the probate court a receipt therefor, and thereupon without objection the executor made such payment, the court says:

"The court below held that, as the plaintiff paid the money voluntarily, and without objection, he cannot recover. * * * It may be stated as a general rule that, where an unfounded or illegal demand is made upon a person, and the law furnishes him adequate protection against it, or gives him an adequate remedy, in the premises, if he pay what is demanded, instead of taking the protection the law gives him, or the remedy it furnishes, he is to be deemed to have made the payment voluntarily, and he must abide by it. * * * In the Mearkle Case, which is more nearly like this than any other cited, the circumstances and condition of the estate were such that the court could see great and irreparable injury would accrue to it while the executor was seeking his legal remedy, and the payment was made under protest, so that not only the payor, but the payee also, understood that the former claimed the payment to be involuntary. We do not mean to say that in a clear case of coercion or duress a protest is necessary, or that it would be sufficient without circumstances of coercion; but, if there be doubt, under the circumstances, that the payment is voluntary, it may be taken into account in determining the question that the payor declared as a part of his act that he paid involuntarily."

Here, as has been said, there was no duress. The attachment suits started were upon claims admittedly due, and because of fear that unless the creditors enforced their claims the assets of Shelley brothers might become depleted. The money was paid without protest, being willingly tendered under certain conditions contained in the letter in which the remittance was inclosed, and was, we think, a voluntary payment.

The cases cited by appellant in his reply brief on this question are not in point, as the facts are not analogous to the facts here. In Treat v. Craig, 135 Cal. 91, 67 P. 7, a party secondarily liable sought to recover a sum paid under a judgment from the party primarily liable. This presents a case of subrogation, which is not involved in the present case. In Kaiser v. Barron, 153 Cal. 474, 95 P. 879, the question involved the refusal of the court to recall an execution issued for costs irregularly included in the judgment, and Rowland v. Watson, 4 Cal. App. 476, 88 P. 495, is a case where money was exacted under circumstances which savored of duress, and furthermore the payment was made under protest.

[4-6] In regard to the second point urged, that "findings were made outside the issues," it may be said:

"If the findings of fact that are within the issues presented by the pleadings are sufficient to uphold the judgment, it will not be set aside because there are also findings outside of these issues. These latter findings are to be disregarded as immaterial." Firebaugh v. Burbank, 121 Cal. 186, 188, 53 P. 560.

In Crescent Lumber Co. v. Larson, 166 Cal. 168, 171, 135 P. 502, 503, the court says:

"The rule just stated [referring to the fact that a finding outside the issue must be disregarded] is subject to the qualification that a finding may be considered where the issue, though not formally raised by the pleadings, was tried in the court below without objection."

See, also, McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. 154, 64 P. 278; and in Semple v. Cook, 50 Cal. 26, 29, the court uses this language:

"It is useless to come here to seek a reversal of a judgment upon the findings alone, unless they actually negative all the other facts involved by the pleadings and which might exist consistently with those found, or unless it distinctly and affirmatively appears that the facts as found constitute all the facts found in the case."

Under the authorities cited, findings numbered 13 and 14 and the latter half of finding No. 10, complained of as made outside the issues, are proper findings. Finding 13 is a finding that subsequent to April 17, 1922, and prior to May 24, 1922, a full and complete statement of all moneys received, expenses paid, and disbursements made by the Board of Trade was delivered to J. Gollober and the plaintiff; that, after the receipt of this complete statement and after the transfer to J. Gollober by the Shelley brothers, there was due and owing to the Board of Trade and the creditors $36,470.85, which sum included $1,574.20 expenses incurred by the Board of Trade in the matter. Finding 14 finds that the moneys paid to the Board of Trade were paid by J. Gollober with knowledge of Joseph Shelley and in his presence and after a full and complete statement from the Board of Trade, which included said expenses, and the latter half of finding 10 finds that subsequent to April 17, 1922, Joseph Shelley and Sam Shelley transferred their interest in said business and the property of Shelley brothers and all moneys to which they were entitled from the Board of Trade to J. Gollober.

There is ample evidence in the record received without objection to support these findings. The plaintiff testified that at the time he wrote the letter he had seen a list of the creditors whose claims were filed with the Board of Trade; that he had to have this list to talk to Mr. Gollober; that he had received a statement of the amount of money that the Board of Trade had on hand; that the statement in evidence, Exhibit 2 (statement of account owing creditors and containing expenses), is a statement which was in his possession at the time he made the deal with Mr. Gollober; and that in figuring up with Mr. Gollober and Mr. Jaffa as to the amount of money that would be required to clean up this matter the list of creditors (Exhibit 2) was the basis upon which he acted.

Edward M. Jaffa testified, without objection, that Joseph Shelley and Sam Shelley were at his office on April 24, 1922, at the time this transaction between Shelley brothers, Julius Gollober, and the Board of Trade was completed; that he prepared the necessary documents at that time, including the letter to the Board of Trade, and including a bill of sale and including the letter of April 24, 1922. All of these documents were shown to both Joseph and Samuel Shelley. They both signed the bill of sale. The figure of $36,460.85 was the amount claimed by the Board of Trade. The witness further testified that he told the Shelleys the amount of this figure, and they said, in substance, that Julius Gollober could advance that sum of money upon the terms and conditions mentioned in his (Jaffa's) letter to the Board of Trade. Sam Shelley said that "Julius Gollober could and should advance $36,470.85 to the Board of Trade of San Francisco in accordance with their agreement and in accordance with that letter."

The finding that the Shelleys transferred all their interest in the business and all moneys to Gollober finds support in the bill of sale from Joseph Shelley and Sam Shelley to Gollober (Defendants' Exhibit 4), which recites that, in consideration of $36,345, Joseph Shelley and Samuel Shelley sell, assign, and transfer all of their interest in those certain stores (naming all the stores owned by them) and in and to all moneys which might become due to them from the Board of Trade to Julius Gollober.

The foregoing is sufficient to support the findings complained of as being outside the issues; furthermore, the facts found, if outside the issues framed, are but logical conclusions from other facts found and which were directly in issue and therefore authorized. Hunt v. Davis, 135 Cal. 31, 35, 66 P. 957.

[7-10] There is no merit in the third point that findings were made which are contradictory or inconsistent, for, before the court will reverse a judgment on this ground, it must appear that the findings are absolutely contradictory and cannot be reconciled and that they are so material that it cannot be determined upon which finding the court relied for judgment. In the cases cited by appellant, the findings were absolutely contradictory, inconsistent, and irreconcilable, and further this condition existed with respect to findings which were material to support a judgment.

Appellant contends that findings numbered 4 and 8 are inconsistent, in that finding No. 4 finds that it is true that the agreement set forth in the second cause of action of the complaint was made, but that finding No. 8 finds a different agreement was made. Finding No. 5 finds that the agreement referred to in finding No. 4 was modified, and that it was then agreed by the Shelley brothers that the Board of Trade should retain and be paid all of the expenses of the Board of Trade incurred, and finding No. 8, being subsequent to the findings which found the original agreement and that the original agreement was modified, relates to that second or modified agreement. We do not agree with appellant that there is an irreconcilable conflict between findings numbered 8 and 9. It is clear that finding No. 8 finds that from all money received from the stores there was to be turned over to the Board of Trade, for the purpose of paying off the creditors, at least 50 per cent. of the gross receipts, the remainder to be used for operating expenses and replenishment of the stock, if necessary, while finding No. 9 finds that it was agreed that all expenses incurred and paid in connection with said matter should be paid out of the moneys received by defendants.

In considering the claim that the findings are inconsistent, we adopt the following language from Haight v. Haight, 151 Cal. 90, 92, 90 P. 197, 198:

"We must continually bear in mind the well-settled rule that the findings are to be liberally construed in support of a judgment; that all of the findings are to be read and considered together, and, if possible, are to be reconciled so as to prevent any conflict on the material points; and that, unless the conflict is clear and the findings incapable of being harmoniously construed, a judgment will not be reversed on the ground of a conflict in the findings. See Ames v. City of San Diego, 101 Cal. 390, 395, 35 P. 1005; Murray v. Tulare Irr. Co., 120 Cal. 311, 315, 49 P. 563, 52 P. 586; People's Home Sav. Bank v. Rickard, 139 Cal. 285, 291, 73 P. 858; Mitchell v. Hutchinson, 142 Cal. 404, 409, 76 P. 55; Heaton [Heaton-Hobson Associated Law Offices] v. Arper, 145 Cal. 282, 285, 78 P. 721."

Appellant next contends that the court failed to find on material issues raised by the pleadings, viz.: That Sam Shelley assigned and transferred to plaintiff his claims and demands against defendants; that defendants have not paid said sum of $2,977.38 or any part thereof; that prior to the commencement of this suit the Board of Trade paid to plaintiff Joseph Shelley and his brother Sam Shelley all moneys owing them; and that the Shelley brothers turned over to defendants $2,977.38 in excess of the amount distributed by defendants to the creditors.

[11, 12] The failure to find on material issues is only ground for a reversal, if the judgment cannot be supported without such a finding, or, if such a finding were made, it would be favorable to the appellant and require a different judgment. It is also the rule that a finding which may seem material may be rendered immaterial by other findings which cover the issue, either by recital of an ultimate fact or a finding of probative matter, the logical conclusion of which would be the particular issue claimed to be material. Blochman v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 662, 664, 67 P. 1061, 57 L. R. A. 213; Patterson v. Rubenstein, 6 Cal. App. 440, 92 P. 401; Johnson v. Perry, 53 Cal. 351, 354; Robinson v. Placer-ville & S. R. Co., 65 Cal. 263, 266, 3 P. 878; Merrill v. Merrill, 102 Cal. 317, 319, 36 P. 675; Sewell v. Price, 164 Cal. 265, 271, 128 P. 407.

The issues upon which appellant contends there were no findings and which were material issues are immaterial, in view of the other findings made, and further that they are of such a nature that, conceding that, had findings been made in favor of appellant, it would in no way have affected the judgment, and therefore is not ground for reversal.

[13] As to the first material issue upon which no finding was made that Sam Shelley assigned and transferred to plaintiff all his claims or demands against defendants, it may be said that, had a finding been made and assuming it had been made in favor of appellant, it would not have affected the judgment. However, finding No. 3 covers this issue by finding the ultimate fact that it is not true that the plaintiff, ever since the 4th day of June, 1923, was or is the sole owner or holder of any claim or demand against the defendants or either of them, either in the sum of $2,977.38 or any sum or amount. The ultimate fact is not the assignment but the ownership, the finding as to which was made. Finding No. 6, "that it is not true that the plaintiff and his brother turned over to the defendants the sum of $2,977.38 or any other sum or amount in excess of the amount owing to the said creditors and the defendants," and finding No. 12, "that the said defendants did not, nor did either of them, withdraw or retain any moneys," eliminate the necessity for any such finding contended for by appellant, for, if there was nothing withheld by defendants belonging to plaintiff, it follows there was no obligation for payment on their part, and such finding contended for by appellant therefore falls within the category of the cases cited, in which the issue becomes immaterial because of other findings.

[14] As to the complaint that the court omitted to find on the issue raised in paragraph IV of the answer, that the Board of Trade, "prior to the commencement of the suit, paid to the said plaintiff Joseph Shelley and his brother Sam Shelley all moneys owing to them," it may be said that the allegation did not stop with the quotation given by appellant, but continues: "That they did fully account to said plaintiff and his said brother, Sam Shelley, of and concerning all moneys received." There is sufficient evidence to show an accounting was made both as to expenses and receipts and all matters pertaining to the transaction, and finding No. 13 is to the effect that no money was ever due and therefore it was unnecessary to pay anything, and the allegation that all moneys owing them were paid is merely a general allegation that "if anything were due," which in this case there did not happen to be.

[15] Appellant finally complains under this assignment that the court failed to find on the allegation of the second cause of action that:

"Settlement in full of said accounts was thereafter and in the month of April, 1922, made with said creditors; that plaintiff and his said brother duly performed all the conditions of said agreement on their part and turned over to defendants the sum of $2,977.38 in excess of the amount distributed by defendants to said creditors."

Finding No. 6 is to the effect that it is not true that the plaintiff and his brother turned over to the defendants the sum of $2,977.38 or any other sum or amount in excess of the amount owing to the creditors and the defendants. Appellant contends that finding No. 6 is not a finding on this point, because the agreement set forth in the second cause of action and found by the court to have been made provided only that the money was to be turned over for distribution to the creditors until their accounts were paid. The fact that this agreement was found to have been made does not modify the effect of the second agreement, which was a modification of this first agreement, and which the court found to have been made. It is clear what finding No. 6 means. However, in view of the evidence and the other findings, appellant's contention, if correct, would in no way affect the general judgment.

[16, 17] There is no merit in appellant's assertion that the findings do not support the judgment. Appellant complains under this heading that finding No. 2, based upon the denial to paragraph II of the first cause of action of the complaint, is tantamount to an admission that the defendants received money from both brothers for the use and benefit of both of them. An analysis of this denial seems to negative such contention. The denial reads:

"Denies that the defendants received from the plaintiff or his brother, Sam Shelley, or either of them, the sum of $1,574.20 or any other sum or amount to or for the use of plaintiff or his said brother, Sam Shelley, or either of them."

Certainly such denial is not, as claimed, a negative pregnant and is a good denial, for, if the defendants did not receive $1,574.20 from the plaintiff or his brother, or either of them, or any sum or amount from the plaintiff or his brother, or either of them, it is inconceivable how it was possible to receive any amount from both of them. However, if there be any merit in this contention, it is disposed of by finding No. 6, finding:

"That it is not true that the plaintiff and his brother turned over to the defendants the sum of $2,977.38 or any other sum or amount in excess of the amount owing to the said creditors and the defendants."

[18] Lastly, appellant urges that "the evidence does not support the findings," and directs our attention to several findings, complaining first of finding No. 3, that the plaintiff is not the "owner or holder of any claim or demand against the defendants or either of them." The evidence at the trial was to the effect that the Board of Trade has not retained nor has the plaintiff any claim or demand against the defendants or either of them, and finding No. 6 finds such to be the fact. And, if the fact be true as found, that neither the plaintiff nor his brother turned over to defendants the sum of $2,977.38, or any other sum or amount in excess of the amount owing to the said creditors and the defendants, the finding that the plaintiff is not the owner or holder of any claim or demand against the defendants or either of them would also be true and supported by the evidence.

Next appellant claims that finding No. 5 is not supported by the evidence because the agreement is void for lack of consideration. This objection has been given consideration and determined adversely to appellant's contention.

[19] As to the other findings complained of under this heading and also finding No. 3 just considered, it may be said that, even assuming such findings to be erroneous, it would in no way affect the judgment or be ground for reversal, for the fact that a finding is unsustained by the evidence is immaterial, where the remaining findings are sustained and are sufficient to support the judgment. As was said in Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 436, 51 P. 630, 633:

"It is not necessary to consider whether the objections to these findings are well taken or not, for, however erroneous, the judgment cannot be set aside inasmuch as it may rest upon finding 'F.'"

See, also, Ehat v. Scheidt, 17 Cal. App. 430, 438, 120 P. 49; Lovell v. Frost, 44 Cal. 471, 475.

[20] On the question of the performance of the conditions required, it is sufficient to say that the Board of Trade applied the money received to pay off the creditors and reimburse itself for the expenses it laid out. So far as the application of the money is concerned, it was applied in accordance with the terms of the letter of April 24, 1922. There is not a word of evidence in the record that Shelley brothers at any time demanded of the Board of Trade the canceled notes, nor the receipts from the creditors. This is not a case where Shelley brothers are endeavoring to recover money for the breach of the terms of an escrow nor for the return of any documents. Unquestionably, had Shelley brothers considered the matter of any importance, they would have requested the return of the canceled notes and the delivery to them of the receipts. The delivery of the canceled notes to Shelley brothers and furnishing them with receipts were very inconsequential elements in the adjustment. As provided by section 1661 of the Civil Code, an executed agreement is one, the object of which is fully performed. The main object of the entire arrangement here was to pay off the creditors, dismiss the attachment suits, avoid any contest on the part of the creditors to the sale of the assets of Shelley brothers to J. Gollober, who was to advance the money, and the reimbursement to the Board of Trade for the expenses it had incurred. All of these objects were fully performed and the contract was therefore an executed one. Furthermore, the contract was performed by Shelley brothers and J. Gollober in that they actually paid over the money to the Board of Trade, and the Board of Trade dismissed the attachment suits and paid off the creditors and reimbursed itself for its expenses. If appellant is entitled to the return of the amount paid to the Board of Trade for expenses because of its failure to return the canceled notes and the creditors' receipts, he would for the same reason be entitled to the return of the entire sum of $36,470.85 paid, because if the contract was not executed and each and all of its terms and conditions, important and unimportant, were not complied with, appellant would be entitled to recover the entire fund transmitted, although in the meantime the attachment suits have been dismissed, the stocks of goods in the several stores transferred by bill of sale to J. Gollober, and the creditors' claims outlawed. This appellant is not contending for.

We would not have further lengthened this opinion by noticing this point were it not for the seriousness with which it is urged. We may dispose of it, however, by saying that in our opinion appellant's contention is more serious than sound.

The findings cover all of the material issues in the case, are supported by the evidence, and are sufficient to support the judgment.

We find no error in the record calling for a reversal of the judgment. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

SINGLAUB v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA
et al. (Civ. 5749.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 7, 1927.

1. Master and servant ⚡376(2)—Where death is caused by overexertion during employment, accelerating pre-existing disease, employer is liable.

Where death of employee may be traced to two causes, first, to that of primary disease, and, secondly, to overexertion in work in behalf of his employer in which employee is engaged at time of his death, employer or his insurer is liable.

2. Master and servant ⚡373—Where death is caused solely by disease, though occurring in course of employment, employer is not liable.

Where, notwithstanding fact that in course of his employment death may occur to employee, it appears that it was caused solely by disease with which employee was afflicted, injury sustained by dependents on account of death of employee is not compensable.

3. Master and servant ⚡417(7)—Finding on substantial evidence in workmen's compensation case is conclusive on appeal.

A finding by tribunal having jurisdiction based upon substantial evidence, in workmen's compensation case, is final and conclusive on appeal.

4. Master and servant ⚡403—Applicant for compensation has burden of showing causal connection between death of employee and work.

Applicant for adjustment of compensation has burden of showing causal connection between death of employee and work performed by him.

5. Master and servant ⚡405(4)—Compensation claimant must prove by preponderance of competent evidence that injury arose out of and in course of employment.

Before a claimant can recover compensation, he must prove by preponderance of competent evidence that injury arose out of and in course of employment.

6. Master and servant ⚡417(7)—Commission's finding that death from cerebral hemorrhage was not caused by injury arising out of employment, being sustained by evidence, was conclusive.

Industrial Accident Commission's finding that death of foreman in fish hatchery from cerebral hemorrhage, shortly after he had carried iron key weighing about 21 pounds approximately 300 yards, was not proximately caused by injury arising out of employment, being sustained by evidence, was conclusive.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Adda N. Singlaub for the death of John J. Singlaub, claimant, opposed by the State Fish and Game Commission, employer. The Industrial Accident Commission refused to award compensation, and claimant brings certiorari. Affirmed.

Frank C. Scherrer, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

Frank J. Creede and Henry G. Sanford, both of San Francisco, for respondent Fish and Game Commission.

HOUSER, J. From the evidence submitted to the respondent commission on the hearing of an application before it for adjustment of a claim for compensation arising from the death of an employee named John J. Singlaub, the general finding was made that "the evidence does not establish that the employee's death was proximately caused by an injury arising out of the employment." Based upon such finding, it was ordered that the applicant "take nothing from defendants. * * *

On the ground that in making such finding and award the respondent commission acted without and in excess of its powers, petitioner prays that such finding and award be annulled by this court.

It appears that Mr. Singlaub was employed as a working foreman in a fish hatchery. He died from a cerebral hemorrhage or what is commonly known as a stroke of apoplexy. According to the testimony of the applicant, who was the widow of the employee, at about 3 o'clock p. m. of November 11, 1926, she went to the hatchery where her husband was employed and found that the water used therein was not running properly. Shortly thereafter her husband, "dripping with perspiration and breathing very hard," came into the hatchery. Within a short time following the appearance of Mr. Singlaub at the hatchery, he seemed to be "all right." Prior to that time, with the exception of a cold which he contracted in January or February of the same year, the employee was in a most healthy condition.

The superintendent of the hatchery testified that in the afternoon of November 11, 1926, the employee was engaged in cleaning dams and intake lines which supplied water for the hatchery. In order to do such work properly, the employee should have turned off the hatchery water supply and turned the domestic water supply into the hatchery supply lines. About an hour before the employee had the fatal seizure, he made a mistake in connection with the turning of a valve, with the result that the domestic water supply was also turned off. On noticing that the water supply was cut off, the superintendent sent a man to get a valve key from the employee so that the water might again be turned into the hatchery. At that time the employee was working at a place approximately 250 to 300 yards from the hatchery. The key was about 3½ or 4 feet in length, made of iron, and weighed about 21 pounds. On being informed that the key was wanted at the hatchery, the employee returned thereto, "walking pretty fast." He carried the key with him. Under ordinary circumstances, in returning to the hatchery, instead of walking, he would have driven thereto in an automobile truck which was available to him at the time. On arriving at the hatchery, the employee "appeared to be normal and about the same as usual." The superintendent showed him where he had made the mistake in turning the valve and then turned the water in properly, after which the man who had been sent to get the valve key, the superintendent, and the employee went into the hatchery, watched the water come in, and "stayed there talking perhaps ten minutes," at which time the superintendent noticed that the water "was running a little muddy," and thereupon inquired of the employee the cause thereof, who informed the superintendent that "they had turned it in from the line and had not finished cleaning it up there"; whereupon the superintendent told the employee that "he had better shut the water off." The employee then returned to the intake, carrying the valve key with him. Probably half an hour later the men with whom the employee was working brought him in an automobile back to the hatchery. At that time he sat in the automobile with "a blank stare in his eyes and a kind of grin-like on his face; he said nothing. * * * He had his pipe hanging loose in his mouth, but he did not appear to be making any motion or movement at all."

A doctor testified: That cerebral hemorrhage was the cause of the death of the employee. That a few months prior to his decease the witness had examined him and had found that "the radial arteries were palpable at that time. * * * That not more than 20 or 25 per cent. of the cases of cerebral hemorrhage occur following exertion. Many of these accidents occur during sleep and when the subject is absolutely at rest, so physical exertion is only a factor in the production of these things, caused by disease of the radial arteries. * * * If there had been a bullet fired through this man's brain, you would know it had been the direct cause of his death, but in this case it is impossible to know what was or would have been under other circumstances inside of this man's skull. * * * That he believed that the cerebral hemorrhage suffered by the employee "was caused from the fact that he overexerted himself at that time," however, that "it would only be a guess" whether the cerebral hemorrhage was caused by overexertion, or by anger, or from overeating, or by any one of other numerous causes. That, although if there had been a rupture of a small artery in the brain, the resulting hemorrhage might continue for several hours before the blood clot from the hemorrhage would become large enough to cause a collapse. Because of the fact that the employee died soon after the seizure, the indications were that the rupture was in a fair-sized vessel." That, after the rupture of the artery in the brain and before the collapse would occur, the pressure would have some tendency to render the subject "muddled" or confused.

Another witness testified, in substance, that, after the employee had returned from the hatchery to the intake, he noticed the employee "staggering a little bit, and he staggered there a little while, and he kept getting worse, and he started to fall," but was then supported and cared for by the witness and another man until he was taken by them in an automobile back to the hatchery.

[1] It is unquestioned law that, where the death of an employee may be traced to two causes, first, to that of a primary disease and, secondly, to overexertion in the work in behalf of his employer in which the employee is engaged, at the time of his death, the employer or his insurer is liable. In other words, notwithstanding the previous diseased condition of the employee and in the natural consequence of which the inevitable death of the employee will ensue, if satisfactorily established that the demise of the employee, though primarily caused by his idiopathic condition, nevertheless was superinduced by overexertion of the employee arising out of his employment, the liability of the employer is fixed. As is said in Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 186 Cal. 587, 594, 200 P. 17, 20:

"If the disability, although arising from a chronic heart trouble, was brought on by any strain or excitement incident to the employment, the industrial liability still exists. Acceleration or aggravation of a pre-existing disease is an injury in the occupation causing such acceleration [citing cases]."

In the case of Knock v. Industrial Accident Commission (Cal. Sup.) 253 P. 712, the case of Patrick v. Ham Co., 111 A. 912, is cited with approval. In the latter case it is held that, although, as in the instant case, the employee may have been predisposed to cerebral hemorrhages, and that he might have died therefrom "within a week or a year," nevertheless if the seizure which caused his death occurred while the employee was directly engaged in an overexertion which was required by his employment, the industrial liability of his employer extended.

In the Knock Case (Cal. Sup.) 253 P. 712, the employer was held liable for the death of an employee primarily caused by directing the employee to work at an altitude higher than that to which he had been accustomed in his regular employment.

[2] On the other hand, the principle seems to be firmly established that, notwithstanding the fact that in the course of his employment death may occur to the employee, if it appear that it was caused solely from a disease with which the employee was afflicted, the injury sustained by his dependents on account of the death of the employee is not compensable. In that connection, the language appearing in the case of Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 186 Cal. 587, 594, 200 P. 17, 20, is pertinent. It is as follows:

"Where, however, the proximate and immediate cause of the injury is from disability arising solely from an idiopathic or subjective condition, the weight of authority, including the decisions of this state, are against recovery, though the injury clearly occurs in the course of employment [citing cases]."

The law, then, appears to be well settled. The difficulty encountered in the correct determination of a given case depends primarily upon the facts as determined by the tribunal before which the proceeding is heard. In the instant case, with reference to the cause of death, the finding by the respondent commission was that the evidence does not establish that the employee's death was proximately caused by an injury arising out of the employment. As a somewhat reduced statement of the salient facts adduced on the hearing before the respondent commission, it appears that the only possible "overexertion" of the employee in connection with his work consisted in the walking "pretty fast" and the carrying by him of a 21-pound iron key for a distance of from 250 to 300 yards. That whatever immediate effect was produced by such possibly unusual physical exertion was of no material consequence is manifested by the fact, as testified to by the widow of deceased, that shortly thereafter he appeared to be "all right"; also by the superintendent that, on arriving at the hatchery, the employee "appeared to be normal and about the same as usual." The additional facts that for a space of ten minutes following the incident in question he remained within the hatchery, during which time he watched the operation of the water which had been turned into the hatchery and conversed generally with the superintendent and one of his fellow employees, and, upon being requested to do so by the superintendent, the employee walked the 250 or 300 yards back to his work and there resumed his usual and ordinary labor before any manifestation of the fatal attack was noticeable, would tend to establish the correctness of the conclusion reached by the respondent commission, which is the subject of the petitioner's attack. With the exception of the hardened arteries of the employee, the evidence is replete with testimony of his good health, his former powers of endurance, and his general physical condition. When the well-known fact is considered that an infantryman in the United States Army, on an all-day march in time of war is required to walk rapidly and at the same time to carry as ordinary equipment arms and baggage aggregating 57 pounds, the fact that in the instant case an employee, accustomed to outdoor labor, should be required to carry a 21-pound key for a distance of only 250 to 300 yards would seem negligible as a factor in demonstrating or illustrating any actual "overexertion."

The only evidence before the respondent commission which in any way would authorize a finding to the effect that the death of the employee was proximately caused by an accident arising out of his employment was that contained in the testimony of the physician, who, with some hesitancy and qualification, stated, in substance, that he believed that "this cerebral hemorrhage was caused from the fact that he (the employee) over-exerted himself at that time." The further testimony of the physician shows that from clinical observations it is shown that not more than 20 or 25 per cent. of the cases of cerebral hemorrhage occur following exertion, and that "it would only be a guess" * * * to determine whether a cerebral hemorrhage occurring as in the present instance is caused by overexertion, or any of the numerous causes that might cause high blood pressure."

[3, 4] A rule, which is beyond question either in its soundness or in its legal establishment, is that a finding by any tribunal having jurisdiction, based upon substantial evidence, is final and conclusive. Southern Pacific Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 177 Cal. 378, 380, 170 P. 822; Dearborn v. Ind. Acc. Com., 187 Cal. 591, 594, 203 P. 112; Tartar v. Ind. Acc. Com., 191 Cal. 703, 704, 218 P. 39; Royal Indemnity Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 192 Cal. 675, 678, 221 P. 371; Western Pacific R. R. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 193 Cal. 413, 417, 224 P. 754; Stacey Bros. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 197 Cal. 164, 169, 239 P. 1072; Standard L. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 60 Cal. App. 331, 338, 212 P. 720; Royal Indemnity Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 70 Cal. App. 435, 436, 233 P. 381. It should therefore be remembered that, if the conclusion on the facts rendered by the respondent commission was supported by any competent evidence, this court is powerless to interfere. Considering that immediately following the claimed "overexertion" of the employee, and for some time thereafter, he appeared to be "all right," that he was "normal and about the same as usual," and that he resumed his ordinary labor before the fatal seizure was experienced by him, together with the positive testimony of the physician that not more than 20 to 25 per cent. of cerebral hemorrhages occur following exertion, it is clear that in arriving at the conclusion that the evidence did not establish that the death of the employee was proximately caused by an injury arising out of the employment, the respondent commission was acting in accordance with an inference deducible from the evidence. Although to have decided otherwise the commission would have been obliged to act as against 75 or 80 per cent. of "clinical observations," as testified by the physician, from a legal standpoint it is not impossible that such a conclusion would likewise have found support in the evidence. The authorities are numerous which indicate that the burden of showing causal connection between the death of the employee and the work performed by him rests with the applicant for adjustment of compensation. In 27 Cal. Jur. p. 488, § 156, it is said:

"It devolves upon a claimant seeking compensation to establish the fact that the injury which caused disability or death arose out of and in the course of the injured person's employment, by evidence from which such a conclusion is fairly inferable."

See, also, Casualty Co. of America v. Ind. Acc. Com., 176 Cal. 530, 169 P. 76; Employ- ers' Liability Assurance Corp. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 182 Cal. 612, 187 P. 42; Eastman v. Ind. Acc. Com., 186 Cal. 587, 200 P. 17; Simpson C. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 74 Cal. App. 239, 245, 240 P. 58.

[5] To again use the language of the learned physician witness in the instant case, the most that can be said for the opinion, that the proximate cause of the death of the employee was his "overexertion" in the course of his employment, "would only be a guess." As is aptly stated in the opinion in the case of U. S. Fuel Co. v. Industrial Commission, 310 Ill. 87, 141 N. E. 402:

"* * * Before a claimant can recover compensation he must prove by a preponderance of competent evidence that the injury arose out of and in the course of the employment. Liability under the Compensation Act cannot rest upon imagination, speculation or conjecture—upon a choice between two views equally compatible with the evidence—but must be based upon facts established by a preponderance of the evidence [citing cases]."

And in William Simpson C. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 74 Cal. App. 239, 240 P. 58, it is held that, where the evidence is such that any opinion as to the proximate cause of the death of an employee is a mere surmise and conjecture, and not based upon any foundation sufficient to support a finding of fact, an award in favor of the dependents of the employee must be annulled.

Furthermore, it will be remembered that before the employee carried the 21-pound key for the distance of 250 to 300 yards he had made two mistakes in work in which he was very familiar, to wit, in turning separate water valves; and, when requested to return with the valve key from the intake to the hatchery, instead of using an automobile which was available to him, he had chosen to walk the distance of 250 or 300 yards and to carry the key with him. Such facts, in connection with the testimony of the physician, to the effect that after a rupture of a small artery in the brain the resultant hemorrhage may continue for a period of several hours before the volume of blood becomes large enough to cause a collapse, may have caused the respondent commission to reach the conclusion that the reason for the irregular conduct and mistakes made by the employee before he carried the 21-pound key was that the rupture had already occurred, with the result that his mind was "muddled" and not quite normal.

[6] As a conclusion from the facts and law applicable to the instant case, it is manifest that the evidence adduced before the respondent commission justified the finding of fact of which complaint is made, and that such finding is conclusive in the premises.

The award is affirmed.

REITER v. ANDERSON et al. (Civ. 5781.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 19, 1927.

1. Sales ⇨7—Contract to buy goods to sell on buyer's account constitutes "sale," though called agency by parties.

If one contracts to buy goods to sell on his own account, the transaction constitutes a "sale," though called an agency by the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Sale.]

2. Sales ⇨8—Contract granting exclusive sales agency, in consideration of agreement to purchase minimum number of machines, and order showing agreement to pay for goods at prices specified, held to establish sale, not consignment.

Contract granting exclusive agency to sell sewing machines in certain territory on any terms that buyers chose, at not less than price specified, in consideration of agreement "to purchase" not less than 12 machines per month, and an order showing agreement to pay for goods ordered at prices and on terms specified therein, held to establish a sale, not consignment, of goods delivered.

3. Sales ⇨201(1)—Delivery of possession passes title, in absence of anything indicating contrary intent.

Where there is nothing indicating a contrary intent, delivery of possession of goods sold operates to pass title, and, in ordinary sale on credit, title passes on delivery.

4. Factors ⇨1—Partners, granted exclusive sales agency in consideration of agreement to purchase minimum number of machines, held not factors; title passing on delivery.

Partners, granted exclusive sales agency, in consideration of agreement to purchase minimum number of sewing machines at prices and on terms specified, held not factors, as title to goods does not pass on delivery under such relationship, but remains in consignor.

5. Sales ⇨84—Buyers' notice of termination of contract could not extinguish indebtedness already incurred thereunder.

Buyers' notice of termination of contract to purchase minimum number of sewing machines per month, in manner provided therein, operated to release them from further obligation to purchase goods, but could not extinguish indebtedness incurred under contract before giving notice.

6. Principal and agent ⇨155(1)—Written sale contract held not superseded by agent's unauthorized oral agreement to accept return of machines delivered.

Written contract to purchase minimum number of sewing machines per month held not superseded by oral contract of seller's agent to accept return of machines delivered, where novation was not pleaded, nor any finding made thereon, such agent's authority to make new agreement was not shown, contract and order stipulated that no other promise or agreement was binding on seller, and all offers of settlement on basis of repossessing goods were definitely rejected in seller's letters.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by James E. Reiter against O. B. Anderson and others, individually and as co-partners, doing business as the Anderson Music Company, and such Company. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Edward J. Jose, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Louis Oneal, of San Jose, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover the purchase price of certain sewing machines alleged to have been sold to defendants by plaintiff's assignor, the Standard Sewing Machine Company. The evidence shows without dispute that the machines were ordered and received by defendants, and that they were not paid for. But defendants claimed, and the trial court found, that the machines had been shipped to defendants on consignment under the terms of a written contract of agency which was later terminated by defendant, and the machines stored subject to the company's disposal; that therefore the transaction did not constitute a sale. Judgment was rendered accordingly in defendants' favor, and plaintiff appealed.

The determination of the question as to whether the transaction constituted a sale or a consignment depends principally upon the legal construction which shall be placed upon the contract and the order for the goods given in pursuance of the contract. The essential portions of the contract, which is dated April 16, 1925, were as follows:

"Whereas, party of the second party (defendants herein) is desirous of obtaining the agency of Standard Sewing Machines in the following territory, to wit: Santa Clara county, party of the second part agrees to maintain a store in the above-mentioned territory, and to diligently work in the sale of Standard Sewing machines and Standard products. The party of the second part hereby agrees to purchase from the party of the first part not less than 144 machines per year, or 12 each calendar month, shipments to be made to said party of the second part f. o. b. Cleveland, Ohio, at the regular wholesale price listed at the factory at the time and date of shipment. In case party of the second part orders machines shipped from San Francisco, or any other point other than factory, party of the second part hereby agrees to pay freight and drayage costs incurred by party of the first part. The party of the second part further agrees to sell or resell all sewing machines at the regular retail price established by party of the first part, excepting party of the second part has the privilege of making discounts for cash or short time pay- ments, and has the privilege of making any allowances on machines or other articles traded in. Under no conditions will the party of the second part be allowed to advertise in newspapers, periodicals, magazines, or in any other way advertise anything but the retail list price as aforesaid mentioned."

Then followed a schedule of prices under which the machines were to be sold; the sewing machine company reserving the right to change the same at any time. Continuing, the contract provided:

"No other contract, either verbal or written, other than that which is written or printed herein, will be recognized by the party of the first part, and we hereby agree to all of the conditions as set forth in the above. This agreement shall be in effect from the date first above written until written notice of thirty days shall be given by either party to the other, to terminate same."

The order for the goods bears the same date as the contract, and was apparently executed as part of the same transaction. It was addressed to said company, signed by defendants, and read as follows:

"* * * Please ship at once the following sewing machines, for which we agree to pay according to prices, terms and conditions given herein, subject to your approval. * * * 2% discount 30 days or 60 days net. * * * Upon receipt of freight bill with railroad agent's notation of any damage thereon, you are to replace prepaid and without charge all parts which may become broken in transit. 'Rotary' machines, manufactured under your United States patents, we agree to sell, * * * at retail, to intending users, and according to your schedules and instructions. The above is an exact statement of the terms agreed upon as per order above; and it is fully understood and agreed that no claims or demands on account of any promise, either verbal or written, or any agreement of any kind whatever, outside of this order, will or can be made; the undersigned agreeing to be bound strictly by the terms and conditions above named, and not to countermand this order."

The goods were shipped pursuant to said order to the defendants at San Jose where they were conducting a music store, and they acknowledged receipt of the same. Monthly statements of the account were thereafter sent to them for a period of several months; and during that period of time they ordered and paid for other goods shipped to them under the terms of said contract.

About two months after the shipment of the goods in question said company wrote to defendants calling attention to the maturity of the "invoice dated April 20, 1925, amount $1,452.50, covering sewing machines shipped" from San Francisco pursuant to their order, and, among other things, stated: "The terms on this sale provide for sixty days' trade acceptance," and an early remittance was requested. Under date of July 9, 1925, defendants replied stating:

"We are in receipt of your letter of June 30th, 1925, calling attention to the maturity of your invoice for sewing machines recently purchased by us. Because of the absence of the manager from San Francisco at this time, we are writing to you so that our account will be taken care of directly" —and, after referring to certain suggestions claimed to have been made to them by the company's representative relating to the handling of installment contracts taken by defendants in the disposal of the goods by them, said:

"Will it be satisfactory to make payment as follows: One-third on or before the 25th day of July; one-third in thirty days and one-third in sixty days? Advise us at once if satisfactory."

In response, the company telegraphed from its office in Cleveland, Ohio, to the effect that the terms of payment mentioned were not satisfactory; that the "terms of sale specified for payment sixty days following shipment," and that defendants "should comply strictly with those terms"; that the company would not settle on a basis of installment contracts. After some further correspondence, defendants, under date of August 11, 1925, wrote to said company terminating the contract. In this letter defendants stated:

"After going over the situation carefully, we have decided to discontinue handling sewing machines and wish to cancel at once the contract which we entered into as well as the verbal arrangements made at the same time," —giving as the main reason for the cancellation the unsatisfactory development of the business, and the letter concluded:

"Arrangements for closing up our account will be made when your representative calls."

Replying, the company wrote:

"Replying to yours of the 11th inst., in reference to the past due account with the Standard Sewing Machine Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, amounting to $1,452.50, which was due June 30th, would say that it is not necessary to wait until the arrival of our representative as mentioned in your letter to bring about a settlement of this account,"

—and, after expressing regrets because of the discontinuance of the business, stated that the "contract will be attended to by Mr. Knowlden" on his next visit to San Jose, but that "this arrangement has nothing whatever to do with the collection department; we are supposed and expected to collect all bills at maturity and all we know about the transaction is the order which you signed and is in our possession a copy of which I am herewith inclosing, we ship the goods to you in good faith and expect a prompt payment, but as there has been through Mr.

Knowlden, talked extension of a portion of this bill." Concluding, the letter stated:

"Now gentlemen, if you will remit by return mail $726.26 cash and indorse the inclosed trade acceptance for the same amount falling due in 30 days we will accept same as a matter of accommodating you, therefore, I hope you will immediately attend to this matter that I may square our records with the company."

The foregoing proposition was apparently not acted upon, for on August 22, 1925, defendants again wrote said company as follows:

"Since the writer has returned from a short trip up to the northern part of the state no further delay will be necessary to advise you how we expect to close up your account. The arrangements which we had in mind several weeks ago for payment will have to be changed and we will expect to pay for the machines as contracts are cashed or sales made. This is in accordance with the arrangement originally made that it would not be necessary for this firm to advance any cash for the handling of the sewing machine business. * * * We wish to be advised whether the machines we have on hand can be turned back in case we make arrangements for complete settlement. Would you accept some of the contracts we have on hand as part settlement?" (All italics ours.)

The company replied as follows:

"* * * in reference to your indebtedness to the Standard Sewing Machine Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, would say, I am very much surprised at this late date and under all the circumstances surrounding this transaction that you would hold the idea expressed in your letter. Now gentlemen, we know of no such arrangement as expressed in your letter. The only arrangements that we have accepted are those embodied in the order indorsed by you, upon which we shipped you the goods and extended you the credit. * * * It would be impossible for us to repossess any portion of these sewing machines as a credit to your indebtedness. I am willing at all times to compromise and bring about a settlement, but I cannot go beyond reason. Your account is now over 60 days past due, and the head office has instructed me to proceed to collect this amount without further delay; at the same time, if you care to accept the proposition made you in my last letter, it will hold good, providing same is accepted and reported to this office at once. If you have made agreements aside from the ones mentioned on the order, it is between yourselves and the one you made the agreement with."

The evidence further shows that, some time during the following month, Knowlden conferred with defendants in San Jose, at which time he suggested transferring the agency to other parties and turning back the unsold machines as used ones, at a discount. But nothing resulted from this conference, and defendants afterwards notified said company that the machines they had not disposed of had been stored subject to the company's order; whereupon said company assigned its account to plaintiff, and this action was commenced.

[1] In discussing this same question as to the legal relationship created by the form of contract such as the parties here entered into, Professor Mechem says:

"A qualified form of 'agency' which has grown up in modern times is that which exists when the owner or manufacturer of patented or other proprietary articles grants the privilege of sale or of exclusive territory to one who otherwise might not be at liberty to sell the goods in question. It is entirely consistent with this arrangement that the so-called agent is to buy, of the proprietor or manufacturer, the goods which he is thus authorized to sell, and when this is the fact there is little more of 'agency' in the case than the name itself. It is also entirely consistent with the arrangement that the 'agent' is to sell the goods at a price or upon terms or conditions fixed by the proprietor or manufacturer. A person so situated is often, in popular language, said to have obtained the 'agency' for the goods, when all that is meant is that he has obtained a more or less exclusive right to buy and resell them in a prescribed territory. The transaction is simple enough, but the reports show many cases in which the parties have, perhaps, deceived themselves and have certainly attempted to deceive others by calling that an 'agency' which had no resemblance to agency in fact, but was simply a sale of a proprietary article with a right of resale under terms and conditions fixed by the proprietor." 1 Mechem on Sales, pp. 41, 42.

And in announcing a test to be applied in differentiating between a sale and an agency to sell on consignment, the same author says:

"Sale, further, is to be distinguished from the creation of an agency to sell. The essence of sale is, as has been seen, the transfer of the title to the goods for a price paid or to be paid. Such a transfer puts the transferee, who has procured the goods to sell again, in the attitude of an owner selling his own goods, and makes him liable to the first seller as a debtor for the price, and not, as an agent, for the proceeds of the resale. The essence of the agency to sell is the delivery of the goods to a person who is to sell them, not as his own property but as the property of the principal, who remains the owner of the goods and who therefore has the right to control the sale, to recall the goods and to demand and receive their proceeds when sold, less the agent's commission, but who has no right to a price for them before sale or unless sold by the agent." 1 Mechem on Sales, pp. 40, 41.

In other words, the determinative rule is that, if a person contracts to buy goods from another to sell on his own account, the transaction constitutes a sale, and not an agency, even though it be so called by the parties. Piper v. Oakland Motor Co., 94 Vt. 211, 109 A. 911, and cases therein cited.

[2, 3] We are of the opinion that the contract and the order in the present case, construed together as respondent contends they should be, clearly prove that, although an agency was created conferring upon defendants the exclusive privilege to resell the company's goods at a specific price within certain territory, it was contemplated thereby that the delivery of the goods by the company to defendants should constitute a sale thereof to the latter, and not a consignment. This is made evident, first, by the language of the contract itself, from which it appears that the consideration for the creation of the exclusive agency to sell said goods was that defendants agreed "to purchase" from said company not less than 12 machines every month; and again by the order which shows that defendants agreed "to pay" said company for the goods ordered according to the schedule of prices therein specified upon the following terms: "2% discount 30 days or 60 days net." Furthermore, it is a well-established rule of the law of sales that, where there is nothing indicating a contrary intent, the delivery of the possession of goods operates to pass title; and that in the ordinary sale on credit title to the goods passes on delivery. Phillips v. Stark, 186 Cal. 369, 199 P. 509. Neither of the documents under consideration here indicates that title to the goods should remain in the company after delivery thereof to defendants, nor that defendants had the right after delivery to return the same or any part thereof to said company. For aught said documents show, the goods ordered by defendants were to be paid for in 60 days, whether sold by defendants or not, clearly implying a sale and credit. Moreover, under the terms of the contract, defendants were allowed to sell the goods when and on what terms they chose, provided they maintained the selling price specified in the contract. No accounts of sales were required to be rendered to the company, and, so far as the contract shows, there was to be no privity between the sewing machine company and defendants' customers. If defendants accepted cash for the sale of said goods, they were not required to keep it separate, and, if installment contracts or notes were taken from their customers, it was no concern of said company's; and the context of the contract and of the order evidence the fact that, after delivery of said goods to defendants, absolute control and dominion over the same, except as to the resale price to the trade, was vested in them.

It is evident, we think, from the facts and circumstances above set forth, that the contract and order in question implied a sale, and not a mere agency to sell; that is, that defendants were to purchase the goods from said company to resell on their own account. All of the essential elements of sale are present, including the passing of title and assumption of risk and exclusive control by defendants following delivery. Furthermore, it would appear that defendants themselves regarded the transaction of delivery as a sale, because they proceeded to resell the goods on their own account and on terms of their own choosing. They also acknowledged the debt, and offered to liquidate the same in various ways: First, by making three separate payments; secondly, by turning over the installment contracts which they had taken from their customers or the cash received therefrom as the contracts were paid, and, finally, by returning to the company the unsold machines. For the foregoing reasons we are unable to sustain the trial court's finding that the shipment of said goods to defendants constituted a consignment and not a sale.

The situation is not altered by the fact that the contract employs the word "agency." As stated in the case of Commercial Credit Co. v. Girard Nat. Bank, 246 Pa. 88, 92 A. 44:

"It is true that they are described in the contract as 'agents' and 'sales agents,' but as was said by Lord Justice James in Ex parte White, In re Nevill, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 397, 399: 'There is no magic in the word "agency." It is often used in commercial matters where the real relationship is that of vendor and purchaser.' In the same opinion Lord Justice Mellish said (page 403): 'Persons may suppose that their relationship is that of principal and agent, when in point of law it is not.' In Ex parte Flannagans (U. S. D. Ct. E. D. Va.) 2 Hughes, 264, 268, Fed. Cas. No. 4855, the court quoted with approval the above language, and added: 'If the contract in its terms really constituted them purchasers, the use of words implying that they were agents does not change the fact.'"

[4] Nor can defendants' status be brought within the classification of a factor, as they claim, for the reason that under such relationship title to the goods does not pass with delivery, but remains in the consignor. Cass v. Rochester, 174 Cal. 358, 163 P. 212; 12 Cal. Jur. 411. Here, as pointed out, title passed upon delivery.

[5] Defendants also urge in support of the judgment that, whether the contract be deemed to be one of agency or of sale, plaintiff may not recover, because defendants terminated the contract in the manner therein provided. We find no merit in the point. It is evident that the 30 days' notice of termination given by defendants, dated August 11, 1925, operated to release the defendants from further obligation to purchase goods after the notice became effective; but obviously said notice could not serve to extinguish the indebtedness which defendants had incurred under the contract prior to giving the notice.

[6] Further contention is made by defendants that, as a result of the conference with Knowlden in September, 1925, following the termination of the agency, the written contract in question was superseded by an oral one made by Knowlden whereby he agreed to accept a return of the machines, and that he actually did take one of them with him. Knowlden's testimony was somewhat at variance with the foregoing claim. However, novation of contract was not pleaded as a defense, nor was any finding made on such an issue. There was no evidence offered to prove that Knowlden was authorized to make any substituted or new agreement on behalf of said company; and, moreover, both the contract and the order contained express stipulations that no other contract, promise, or agreement was binding upon said company. On the other hand, definite rejection of all offers of settlement of the debt on the basis of repossessing the goods was declared in the company's letters; it having expressly stated in one of them that Knowlden's contemplated visit to San Jose would have nothing whatever to do with the collection of the account. We therefore find no merit in this final contention.

The evidence, in our opinion, being legally insufficient to support the finding that there was no sale of the goods, the judgment is reversed.

MILTON REALTY CO. v. BUTTERFIELD.
(Civ. 3400.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 23, 1927.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⚡187—Where contract provided for initial payment on certain day, subsequent acceptance of payments by installments waived any requirement of time as essence.

Where contract for purchase of real property provided that initial payment be made on July 1st and payment was in fact made by installments between July 1st and August 4th, held, that, if time was of essence of contract, acceptance of such payments would constitute a waiver of such requirement.

2. Contracts ⚡212(1)—Where time is not of essence of contract, performance within reasonable time constitutes compliance therewith.

Where time is not of the essence of contract, performance within reasonable time would constitute compliance therewith.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⚡123, 341(3)—Finding that vendor was able to convey title at time of performance held not sustained by evidence.

In purchaser's action to rescind contract for the purchase of several lots on ground that vendor was unable at time of performance to convey title to some of lots, and to recover installment of purchase price, evidence held not to support finding that vendor was able to convey title.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⚡112(1), 334(5)—Where vendor is unable to convey title when contract matures, purchaser may rescind and recover payment.

Where vendor, whether with or without fault, is unable to convey title at time contract matures, purchaser may rescind contract and recover purchase money paid by him as part of purchase price.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⚡107—Where vendor conveys title subject to outstanding contracts, vendee cannot rescind.

Where vendor having title conveys property subject to any contracts into which he has entered, then in that case, vendee's rights having been protected, he is not entitled to rescind.

6. Vendor and purchaser ⚡112(1)—Where vendor entitled to receive conveyance receives title after time allowed therefor, vendee is not entitled to rescind.

Where vendor is entitled to receive conveyance, fact that he did not receive title until after time allowed for completion of his purchase will not entitle vendee to rescind.

7. Vendor and purchaser ⚡339—Where vendee made part payment and vendor by his own act is unable to convey title, vendee may recover payment without tendering balance.

Where vendor by his own act has rendered himself unable to convey title, tender of remainder of purchase money is unnecessary, and he may maintain his action to recover portion of purchase money paid without tendering balance and demanding conveyance.

8. Vendor and purchaser ⚡112(1), 334(5)—Purchaser held entitled to rescind and recover payment on vendor's inability to convey part of property because of failure to exercise option to purchase.

Where vendor contracted to convey title to certain lots, including two on which he had option to purchase, which option he failed to exercise before it expired, vendee held entitled to rescind entire contract and recover payment on purchase price.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by the Milton Realty Company against James I. Butterfield to rescind a contract for the purchase of real property. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with direction.

Lorin Andrews, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Spicer, Meacham & Mason, of Long Beach, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Action by plaintiff to rescind a contract for the purchase of four lots situate in the city of Long Beach, on the grounds of fraud, and a second cause of action, with common counts, for the recovery of $15,000 paid as first installment on the purchase price thereof. The defendant had judgment for costs, and the plaintiff appeals.

The record shows: That prior to the 1st day of April, 1923, the plaintiff and the defendant had some negotiations relative to the purchase by the plaintiff from the defendant of lots 14 and 16, in block 93, situate in Long Beach town site, in the city of Long Beach. That during such negotiations the plaintiff informed the defendant that lots 14 and 16 were not of sufficient size to meet the purposes for which the plaintiff desired to purchase said lots, and that the plaintiff would desire lots 10 and 12 in said block. The record shows: That at that time lots 10 and 12 belonged to one Alexander. That thereafter, on or about the 1st day of April, 1923, the defendant entered into a contract with said Alexander for the purchase of lots 10 and 12, upon the following terms, to wit: $5,000 cash; $11,750 on or before 90 days from the 6th day of April, 1923; and further, the assumption of a mortgage on said premises in the sum of $8,250, making the purchase price of said lots 10 and 12 in the aggregate sum of $25,000. After the securing of this contract the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a written contract for the purchase of said lots, in the words and figures following, to wit:

"Long Beach, California, April 14, 1923. Milton Realty Company, Incorporated, 114 Locust Avenue, Long Beach, California—Gentlemen: I, the undersigned, owner of lots 10, 12, 14, and 16 block 93 Long Beach town site, Long Beach, California, offer for sale to your company, and will deliver to your company fee title to, the above-mentioned property upon the following terms, namely: First. I am to receive from your company the sum of seventy-five thousand ($75,000) dollars, in cash, on the following terms: On July 1, 1923, $15,000. On September 1, 1923, $60,000. Second. I am to receive from the holding company, which you will organize to handle the project of building upon the above lots, 750 shares of the capital stock of said holding company at one hundred dollars par value, to be placed in escrow and to remain intact, until all apartments in the apartment building to be erected upon the above-described property have been sold. Third. That the above-mentioned 750 shares of the capital stock are to represent the value of apartments in the building to be erected upon said property, which said apartments are to be selected at random by the undersigned. Fourth. That for and in consideration of services rendered me by architects, Messrs. Davies and Baume, of Long Beach, California, I will retain their services as architects in the construction of the building to be erected upon the foregoing described property. I have, furthermore, agreed to pay said architects five (5) per cent. of the gross cost of the construction of said building for their services. If the foregoing terms are agreeable to your company, I shall appreciate an acknowledgment of this communication. Respectfully yours, James I. Butterfield, 114 Locust Avenue, Long Beach, California.

"April 14, 1923. Mr. James I. Butterfield, Long Beach, California—Dear Sir: We, the undersigned, president and secretary, respectively, of the Milton Realty Company, Incorporated, on behalf of said company agree to the terms herein enumerated, and the company also agrees to assume all indebtedness now outstanding on the property in question. Respectfully yours, Milton Realty Company, Incorporated, by Jack Milton, President, by H. Gooding Field, Secretary. [Seal.]"

The $15,000 specified in said contract to be paid on July 1, 1923, was paid by the plaintiff to the defendant in installments. The last installment, making the full payment of $15,000, was paid by the plaintiff to the defendant on August 4, 1923.

The period mentioned in the option or contract given by Alexander to the defendant to purchase lots 10 and 12, in block 93, was, by said Alexander, extended to August 27, 1923. On August 27, 1923, the defendant, not having paid to Alexander the $11,750 provided to be paid on account of the purchase price of said lots, Alexander canceled the optional contract theretofore given to the said defendant to purchase said lots, and drew down the forfeit money deposited by the defendant at the time of the execution of such contract, and no contract was thereafter given by Alexander to the defendant to purchase said lots 10 and 12. On the 7th day of September 1923, the plaintiff gave notice to the defendant of rescission of the contract hereinbefore set forth, entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant for the purchase of said four lots, and demanded return of the $15,000 paid as aforesaid as the first installment of the purchase price for said lots. The notice of rescission and demand for the return of said money were based upon the alleged ground that the defendant did not have any title to said property at the time of the execution of said contract, and was not, at the time thereof, nor at the time of the notice, able to convey any title thereto.

The trial court found that there was no fraud in the inception of the contract, and that the plaintiff was aware of the title to lots 10 and 12, in block 93, held by the defendant, and of the contract obtained by him for the purchase of said premises, the trial court also, by general language, finding that the allegations of the defendant's answer were true, found that the defendant was able to convey title to lots 10 and 12, in block 93, on the 1st day of September, 1923, and upon the date of the demand for the return of the $15,000, made by the plaintiff, and that defendant was upon the said 1st day of September, 1923, and at all times thereafter up to the institution of suit, able to convey title to said premises. The finding of the court in these particulars is not specific, but is in general language finding allegations of the answer to be true.

Upon this appeal the appellant assigns 80 specifications of error as to the findings of the trial court, and also sets forth 4 alleged errors of the trial court in relation to the conclusions of law drawn from the findings. Only one error as to the findings and conclusions drawn therefrom needs to be considered, and that is the general finding in relation to the capacity of the defendant to convey title to lots 10 and 12. If that finding is unsupported by the evidence, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the return of the sum of $15,000, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 7th day of September, 1923.

[1-3] The contract entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, dated April 4, 1923, does not make time the essence thereof. But if time were of the essence thereof, the acceptance by the defendant of the $15,000 paid in installments, as heretofore stated, between the 1st day of July, 1923, and August 4, 1923, would constitute a waiver thereof. So that, in any event, the contract was in full force and effect on the 1st day of September, 1923. However, time not being of the essence of the contract, the performance, within a reasonable time, would constitute compliance therewith. Was the defendant, on September 1, 1923, able to convey title to lots 10 and 12, in block 93? There is no controversy in the testimony that the contract between Alexander and the defendant expired on the 27th day of August, 1923, and that after that date the defendant had no written agreement enabling him to purchase said premises, or to compel a conveyance of title thereto from Alexander to himself. The testimony of the defendant himself shows that he had no such power. Before quoting the testimony of the defendant, however, we may state that the record shows that the plaintiff had paid to the defendant a sum of money greater in amount than would have been required to be paid by the defendant to Alexander to keep alive his agreement with Alexander for the purchase of said lots 10 and 12. We may also state that there is some testimony in the record to the effect that the defendant had agreed with the plaintiff to use the $15,000 paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, in making payment of the sum of money agreed to be paid by the defendant to Alexander. But this does not affect the legal status of the matter, but is only set forth in order to shed light upon the testimony of the defendant, which is as follows:

"I never made any statement or promise to the Milton Realty Company as to what I would do with the whole or any portion of the $15,000. No representative of the Milton Realty Company ever questioned me as to what I should do or had done with the $15,000. It is true that the testimony of Mrs. Alexander shows that on or about the 27th day of August, 1923, she closed the escrow, and I forfeited $5,000 that I had in that escrow. I did have a conversation with Mrs. Alexander on or about that time in regards to closing this escrow. There was no representative of the plaintiff present when this conversation with Mrs. Alexander, relative to the closing of the escrow took place. On the 7th day of September, 1923, the day upon which I was served with the notice of rescission in this matter by the Milton Realty Company, I was ready, able, and willing to deliver the titles to lots 10, 12, 14, and 16 upon payment of the contract. I knew I could deliver the title to lots 10 and 12 upon the statement of Mrs. Alexander."

The testimony of Mrs. Alexander upon this question is as follows:

"It is a fact that at all times we looked to Butterfield for the money, and no one else. In conversation with Butterfield there was another person with him whom I knew was an officer of the Milton Realty Company; he introduced himself and told us who he was, and he also had the plans of the proposed building with him, and went into detail, telling us what a fine building was going to go up on the property and that it was going to be erected by the Milton Realty Company. The person who was with Butterfield told us who he was, so that was how we knew he was an officer of the Milton Realty Company. It is a fact that some time after the forfeiture of the money by Butterfield and the cancellation of the escrow agreement, Butterfield came to me and asked me to sign certain papers, which I refused to do. I did not see any papers; he merely said he would like me to give him another extension; that was what he wanted us to sign after the forfeiture. I did not see any papers. I stated that the matter was closed, and that we had decided to hold the property."

From this testimony it is evident that the statement of the defendant, Butterfield, that he could convey title to the premises was based simply upon his hope that he might be able to induce the Alexanders to give him an extension of time or another agreement for the purchase of the lots in question. The testimony of Mr. Alexander is of the same effect, that the agreement with Butterfield was canceled on the 27th day of August, 1923, and that he had no further conversations about the lot. From this recital it appears without controversy that the general finding that the defendant on the 1st day of September, 1923, or at any time after the 27th day of August, 1923, was able to convey title to lots 10 and 12, in block 93, is wholly unsupported.

[4] The law appears to be well settled that where a vendor, whether with or without fault, is unable to convey title at the time the contract matures, the purchaser may rescind the contract and recover the purchase money paid by him as a part of the purchase price. In the case of Burks v. Davies, 85 Cal. 110, 24 P. 613, 20 Am. St. Rep. 213, the law in such cases is thus stated (we are quoting from the syllabus):

"If the vendor, though not the absolute owner, has it in his power by the ordinary course of law or equity to make himself such owner, he will be permitted, within a reasonable time, to do so; but if he has no contract for the title, and makes no attempt to obtain it until after the contract of purchase has been rescinded, and he could not have conveyed it during the time within which the contract was to be performed, it is immaterial that he thereafter receives an offer for it on condition that the purchaser is ready to take the property, and the court need not pass upon the question whether the purchaser was then willing or anxious to take it."

In support of its decision, the court cites Sanders v. Lansing, 70 Cal. 429, 11 P. 702, and Marshall v. Caldwell, 41 Cal. 614. In Brimmer v. Salisbury, 167 Cal. 523, 140 P. 30, the rule is thus stated:

"Where a vendee contracts with one having none or an imperfect title, he contracts in the hope or expectation that the vendor may be able to perfect the title. Such is not the case where the vendor has title and thereafter parts with it. Of the essence of the contract is the security to the vendee, in his payments, of the title which the vendor has; and if the vendor parts with that title to the impairment or destruction of that security, the vendee may be heard justly to complain, and it is no answer to say that the vendor thereafter may be able to go into the open market and repurchase the property. Common experience tells us that such an expectation is in its nature but a remote possibility and that such a vendor has not the slightest intention of so doing."

[5] The rule is also stated that if a vendor having title conveys the property subject to any contracts into which he has entered, then and in that case, the vendee's rights having been protected, he is not entitled to rescind. Such, however, is not the case here. The record shows the title possessed by the defendant or the right which the defendant possessed to acquire title to lots 10 and 12, and that he allowed said right to lapse before he was entitled to the second payment under his contract with the plaintiff. Again, as stated in 25 Cal. Juris. 719, § 191:

"A purchaser may rescind, regardless of the motives which prompt such action, if the vendor is unable to furnish a marketable title when the time for performance arrives. But unless he was induced to make the purchase by reason of the representations as to the title, he may not do so merely because the vendor had no title when the contract was entered into or prior to the time of performance. One may contract to sell property which he does not then own, and his want of title is not ground for rescission unless he is unable to perform when performance is due or the defect is such that it cannot be cured by ordinary business negotiations."

[6, 7] Again, under such circumstances, if the vendor is entitled to receive a conveyance, the fact that he did not receive the title until after the time allowed for completion of his purchase, the vendee is not entitled to rescind. In other words, in any case where the vendor has not title to the property which he has contracted to convey, he must possess a legal right which by ordinary procedure may be caused to ripen into a good and sufficient title, and if such right does not exist at the time set for the completion of a contract with his vendee, the vendee may rescind. Or, as stated in the case of Brimmer v. Salisbury, the vendee is not required to wait until his vendor may go into open market and possibly purchase the property or obtain another contract from the owner thereof. The same rule setting forth the right of the vendee to rescind, in the event that his vendor is not able to convey title at the time for performance fixed in the contract, is set forth in 27 R. C. L. 641, § 410. Again, where the vendor by his own act has rendered himself unable to convey title, tender of the remainder of the purchase money by the vendee is unnecessary, and he may maintain his action to recover the portion of the purchase money paid without tendering the balance and demanding conveyance. In the case of Wilhelm v. Fimple, 31 Iowa, 131, 7 Am. Rep. 117, the rule is thus stated:

"Where a vendor of real estate has, by his own act or by operation of law, been rendered unable to perform his contract to convey such real estate to the vendee, the vendee may rescind the contract and recover the purchase money paid, without first tendering to the vendor the purchase money due, and demanding a deed; and the vendee may exercise this right where a vendor has permitted a mortgage executed by him and existing at the time of the purchase, to be foreclosed, and the lands sold thereunder."

Likewise, in the case of Wright v. Dickinson, 67 Mich. 580, 35 N. W. 164, 11 Am. St. Rep. 602, it is held:

"Where the vendee has agreed to purchase and the vendor to convey land in fee, and the latter cannot make title, the former may bring his action to recover the purchase money paid without first tendering a performance."

See, also, the cases cited in the note to Wright v. Dickinson, as reported in 11 Am. St. Rep. 611.

To the same effect is the more recent case of Ihrke v. Continental Life Insurance & Investment Co., 91 Wash. 342, 157 P. 866, L. R. A. 1916F, 430, where the same question was under consideration, and it was there held that one who has entered into an executory contract to purchase real estate may cease his payments and maintain an action to rescind where the vendor has placed himself in a position where he cannot perform on his part. See, also, 25 Cal. Juris. 716, § 188, where authorities are cited supporting this statement:

"Failure or refusal of the vendor to perform the contract on his part, or the fact that he puts it out of his power to perform, is ground for rescission by the purchaser. Accordingly, he may rescind and recover the purchase money paid," etc.

In 27 R. C. L. 653, § 413, we find the law thus stated:

"If the vendor's want of title and consequent inability to convey are admitted, this will dispense with the necessity for an actual tender by the purchaser of the unpaid purchase money; and if the vendor has placed it out of his power to perform, when the time arrives the purchaser may cease performing on his part without affecting his right to rescind. This is true where the vendor, by his own act or omission to act, has placed it out of his power to convey, as where he has permitted the title to pass by him by the foreclosure of a mortgage executed by him and existing at the time of the sale" (citing a number of authorities).

[8] In the case at bar the vendor, by allowing his contract with the Alexanders to lapse, voluntarily placed himself in the position where he was unable, at any time after the 27th day of August, 1923, to convey title, and under the authorities cited, the vendee (the plaintiff in this action) had a right to rescind and demand the return of the $15,000 paid on account of the purchase price thereof. In view of the authorities which we have cited, and the facts which we have set forth herein, and also in consideration that no change in those facts can be made, it necessarily follows that the finding of the trial court, numbered 19, which is to the effect that each and every allegation of the defendant's answer, except as otherwise found in the findings, is true, which finding is the only one which supports the allegation of the answer that the defendant was able to convey title, is contrary to the evidence and must be and is hereby set aside. And in view of section 4¾ of article 6 of the state Constitution, and section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure (as added by St. 1927, p. 583), the following finding is substituted therefor, to wit: It is hereby found that on the 27th day of August, 1923, the defendant voluntarily permitted his contract for the purchase of lots 10 and 12, in block 93, of Long Beach town site, in the city of Long Beach, to lapse, and that since said date the defendant has had, neither in law nor in equity, any title to said lots or any contract or agreement for the purchase thereof. It is further ordered that all portions of the findings of the trial court inconsistent herewith be stricken out. It is further ordered that the conclusions of law drawn by the trial court be stricken out, and the following substituted, to wit: As a conclusion of law from the substituted findings herein and the findings of the trial court as modified by the order above stated, it is concluded that the defendant, J. I. Butterfield, has not, at any time since the 27th day of August, 1923, been able to convey title to said lots 10 and 12 by reason of his voluntarily allowing his contract for the purchase thereof to lapse. Second, as a further conclusion of law from the substituted finding hereinabove set forth, and the order modifying or striking out inconsistent findings of the trial court, the conclusion is drawn that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against the defendant for the sum of $15,000, the amount of the first installment of purchase price paid on account of his contract with the defendant, dated April 14, 1923, and also to interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 7th day of September, 1923.

It is further ordered that the judgment of the trial court be reversed, and the trial court directed to enter judgment for the plaintiff in the said sum of $15,000 and interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 7th day of September, 1923.

AVERDIECK et al. v. BARRIS. (Civ. 6071.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 16, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 13, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 14, 1928.

1. Death ⇨17—Time elapsing between injury and death is not controlling circumstance as to cause of death.

In an action by decedent's widow and children for decedent's death from being struck by defendant's automobile, where it was shown that decedent lived for about 19½ months after the injury and death resulted directly from heart disease, held, that the length of time elapsing between the injury of such decedent and his death did not control as to the proximate cause of death.

2. Death ⇨76—Evidence held to support finding injuries received by automobile were proximate cause of death from heart disease.

In action by decedent's widow and children to recover for his death from being struck by defendant's automobile, evidence held to support the finding that the injuries received in the automobile accident were the proximate cause of decedent's death about 19½ months later from heart disease.

3. Death ⇨99(4)—$4,000 for 63 year old father's death held not excessive, though he had recovered $2,500 (Code Civ. Proc. § 377).

Where, in a suit by widow and children of a 63 year old decedent for his death resulting from being struck by defendant's automobile, a verdict of $4,000 was awarded, such judgment held not excessive, under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, although prior to his death the decedent himself had recovered judgment against the same defendant in the sum of $2,500 for general damage and loss of earning capacity.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Berta Averdick and others against F. L. Barris. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Knight, Boland & Christin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KCFORD, P. J. The plaintiffs, being the surviving widow and children of Richard Averdick, deceased, recovered a judgment of $4,000 for the death of said deceased caused by the negligent operation of an automobile driven by the defendant. The defendant appeals from the judgment upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to prove that the negligence of the defendant resulting in injuries to the deceased was the proximate cause of the death of said deceased, and upon the further ground that the amount of the verdict is excessive.

The accident to the deceased occurred October 13, 1921, and the death occurred on May 27, 1923, about 19½ months later. The deceased was at the time of his death 63 years old, and the cause of his death, according to the testimony and death certificate, was cardiac vascular renal disease.

[1, 2] The appellant's argument is scarcely distinguishable from an argument upon the weight of the evidence. Appellant emphasizes the quality and directness of the expert witnesses called on behalf of the defendant without printing the expert testimony opposed to them. The respondent, in reply, quotes the testimony of a physician who testified as an expert witness on behalf of the plaintiffs. This physician testified in response to hypothetical questions based upon the testimony of members of the deceased's family and other witnesses. The testimony of this physician covers 30 pages of the type-written transcript. It is only necessary to consider as much of it as is relied upon in support of the verdict. This physician first testified that an injury which would cause the deceased to remain in bed in the hospital, in bed and in an armchair at home, and to discontinue his usual activities, would have a degenerative effect upon his heart, and that such degenerative effect on the heart of a man of the age of the deceased, if continued, would result in death. He explained in some detail the reasons for his opinion. It was then stipulated that the injuries received by the deceased resulted in fractures of the collar bone and of the fifth to tenth ribs, inclusive, on the left side. When the serious nature of the injuries was thus made known to this expert witness, he explained the possible and probable results of such injuries, and gave it as his opinion that the heart disease with the involvement of the blood vessels and kidneys resulted from the injuries received by the deceased at the time of the accident. The testimony of the widow of the deceased was to the effect that deceased was well and active until the time he received the injuries and that since that time until his death he had never recovered, but had continually complained of pain in his left side and of difficulty in breathing. We are unable to distinguish in principle the facts of this case from those in Ensign v. Southern Pacific Co., 193 Cal. 311, 223 P. 953, Salmon v. Rathjens, 152 Cal. 290, 92 P. 733, and Moreno v. New Guadalupe Mining Co., 35 Cal. App. 744, 170 P. 1088. The length of time elapsing between the injury and death of deceased is not a controlling circumstance. It makes no difference in principle. We conclude that the testimony is sufficient to support the implied finding of the jury that the injuries received by the decedent were the proximate cause of his subsequent death.

[3] The deceased, in the interim between his injury and death, recovered a judgment on his own behalf in the sum of $2,500. This judgment must be taken to include compensation for all general damage suffered by the deceased himself, including the loss of earning capacity. The judgment in the instant case therefore represents pecuniary compensation for the loss suffered by the plaintiffs, under the provisions of section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which would include the loss of society, comfort, and protection afforded by the deceased to his surviving wife and children, two of the children being minors. It is not claimed that the judgment in this case includes any of the pecuniary loss for which compensation was made by the judgment obtained by the deceased on his own behalf during his lifetime, but this prior judgment is used to argue that the amount of the verdict here is excessive in view of the compensation made to the deceased during his lifetime. The case of Parsons v. Easton, 184 Cal. 764, 195 P. 419, is relied upon to show that the verdict in the instant case is excessive. The opinion in the Parsons Case shows that the damages there held to be excessive were awarded to the father and mother of a deceased son 27 years old, who had scarcely ever contributed anything to the support of his parents, had been a burden and a cause of solicitude and care to them, was physically deformed and mentally inferior and of restless habits. The relations between the deceased and the plaintiffs here are so entirely different from the Parsons Case that there is no comparison whatever. The verdict of $4,000 is not excessive under the facts in this case.

The judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 15, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1928.

Where water from spring above plaintiff's land would naturally flow into creek which ran through plaintiff's lands, plaintiff's rights to spring water were those of a riparian owner.

2. Waters and water courses ⇨101—That riparian owner diverted spring water above his land through pipe and ditches held not to destroy riparian rights.

Fact that riparian owner diverted water from spring above his land and converted it to his land through pipe, flume, and ditches, instead of letting it flow naturally through creek channel, held not to destroy its character as riparian water or his rights as riparian owner.

3. Waters and water courses ⇨101, 117—"Reasonable use" of percolating or surface waters does not mean all that is necessary to any one owner, but only reasonable share.

"Reasonable use" of percolating or surface waters does not mean all the water that may be reasonably beneficial or even necessary to land of one owner, regardless of the needs of others, but only reasonable share thereof, if there is not enough water to supply the needs of all.

4. Waters and water courses ⇨107(1)—In action to enjoin interference with natural flow, fact that drainage was more valuable to defendant than flow of spring was to plaintiff held immaterial.

In action to enjoin interference with natural flow of water, fact that drainage of defendant's mines was more valuable to defendant than flow of spring and creek which such drainage prevented was to plaintiff held immaterial, since private property cannot be taken for private use merely because it is more valuable to taker than to him from whom it is taken.

5. Eminent domain ⇨13—Property cannot be taken for private use because it is more valuable to taker than to him from whom it is taken.

Private property cannot be taken for private use on the ground that it is not as valuable to him from whom it is taken as to him who takes it.

C. Webster, of Sonora, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff brought this action to enjoin the interference by defendant with the natural flow of water from a certain spring and for damages caused by past interference therewith. The facts hereinafter stated appear from the findings.

The plaintiff is the owner of 87½ acres of land, through which Mormon creek flows, all of such lands being riparian to the stream. The defendant is the owner of a tract of land adjoining plaintiff's land on the north and containing approximately 1,000 acres. Patents were issued by the United States more than 50 years ago for all of said lands of both parties. Mormon creek is a small stream, and "in dry seasons there is little or no water in this creek as it passes through" plaintiff's land. About "one quarter of a mile above plaintiff's lands and on the bank of said creek is a spring of water * * * known as Fales spring, which spring is an opening in the crevice in limestone formation and has a normal flow of water of 24 inches of water, which waters for more than 50 years prior to the commencement of this action have been conveyed by means of a pipe, flume, and ditches to plaintiff's said lands and there used for irrigation, domestic, and household purposes. * * *

For more than 8 years last past the defendant has been continuously engaged in operating upon said lands for the purpose of discovering and extracting therefrom the gold contained therein, and never acquired said land for any other purpose, and has never used said lands for any other purpose, and has never sunk any shafts or run any tunnels or drifts therein for or with any other purpose, object, or design, other than to take and remove from said lands the gold contained therein, estimated to be in large and paying quantities." A large part of defendant's land lies at an elevation about 180 feet above the surface of plaintiff's land and "upon a plateau or table mountain at the base of a slope. Easterly and somewhat northeasterly from this tract there are higher altitudes. Immediately east and northeast is a flat area of limestone formation. Further east it is mountainous. Across defendant's land, running northerly and southerly and almost at right angles to Mormon creek, is a reef of rock slate varying in width from 100 to 600 feet. The depth of this reef of slate is not known further than that it extends below the strata of gold-bearing gravel underlying defendant's land, where its underground mining operations are carried on. * * *

On the east side of the slate the soil, composed largely of limestone and gravel, is saturated with water to such an extent that the water constantly seeps into defendant's underground workings and shafts." These shafts range in depth from 242 feet to 265 feet.

The defendant undertook, without success, to drain the mine by means of large pumps. During the operation of the pumps the flow of water in Mormon creek and from the spring was greatly diminished. Thereafter the defendant "began the construction of a drain tunnel * * * about 1 mile west of the mine within the lower boundaries of the defendant's land at an elevation lower than the bottom of its mining shafts, and where the water when discharged through the same would flow into Mormon creek at a point below the lands of the plaintiff. Defendant expended on the construction of this tunnel over a half million dollars, and was engaged in the work of construction for more than 5 years." When completed, "the tunnel drew the percolating water from the saturated soil east of the slate reef. Within a few hours after the water began flowing through the tunnel, the spring on plaintiff's land and Mormon creek where it passes through his lands ceased to flow. * * * Great quantities of water in rain and snow fall upon the hills and mountains east of this property. Much of this sinks into the ground and works its way westward in its general course toward the sea through the porous soil and gravel and through crevices and interstices until it reaches the slate reef. This being impervious to water, the further flow westward is obstructed, and the water level of this underground water is raised in such soil as is pervious to water until it finds some means of outlet along the hillside and elsewhere. Thus, through some unknown seam or crevice in the rocks, some of the water when at a high level on defendant's land finds its way to plaintiff's spring and to Mormon creek. * * * Most of this water percolates through rock and gravel that has filled an old surface stream. The bed of this stream, if such it can be called, is some 250 feet below the surface of defendant's land at its highest point, and about 60 feet lower than the surface of plaintiff's lands. Plaintiff's lands are not riparian to this underground channel. * * * The water now saturating the soil where the old channel seems once to have been is diffused in many directions. * * * Much more water is now passing through the tunnel than heretofore rose to the surface in the vicinity of plaintiff's property. * * * Of the water underlying defendant's land, much of it has hitherto escaped from the soil lying east of the reef of slate in other ways than by arising on lands of plaintiff into Mormon creek and into the springs. * * * The water saturating the soil east of the slate reef on defendant's land and now being drawn through the tunnel, and a part of which heretofore found its way into plaintiff's spring and into Mormon creek, * * * is percolating water. * * * The lands of plaintiff are not underlain with the same character of soil that underlies the lands of defendant. There is no general connected stratum of soil underlying the lands of plaintiff and defendant, through which the same waters are percolating, and in which the plaintiff and defendant would have common and correlative rights, and the waters some distance below the surface of plaintiff's lands are not so connected with the water in defendant's land as that the draining of defendant's land through the tunnel will lower the water to the level in plaintiff's land to which it is lowered in defendant's land."

The defendant paid $145,605 as the purchase price of its lands and has expended thereon an additional sum of more than $730,000. It cannot "carry on its mining operations or remove any gold therefrom unless it be permitted to continue to keep said waters drained from all of its said lands by means of said tunnel, * * * and defendant never at any time from the time it was incorporated to the present date offered for sale or distribution to any person any of the waters it has encountered, * * * and the method of operating its mines by means of draining the same with said tunnel is a reasonable and proper means of mining on said lands. * * * Plaintiff has suffered damages by reason of the drying of the said Fales spring," and, for want of water therefrom, during the years 1921 and 1922, his fruit crop and his alfalfa did not mature.

Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, denying plaintiff the relief prayed for in the complaint, but providing that if the defendant shall at any time "for a period of 90 days discontinue or cease mining operations on its said land," it shall, "at its own expense and cost, place in said tunnel * * * a concrete bulkhead which will permanently prevent any water from passing beyond said bulkhead," and further requiring the defendant to give a bond in the penal sum of $1,000, "conditioned for the erection of said bulkhead within 90 days after the discontinuance of mining of its said lands." The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment, and the defendant has appealed from the part thereof containing the aforesaid provisions and conditions. Both appeals are on the judgment roll alone. From a stipulation filed herein, signed by the attorneys for the respective parties in this and two other actions against the defendant, E. G. Fisher, as guardian, being the plaintiff in one and Lillian Engler in the other, it appears that the three actions "were tried in superior court at the same time and upon the same testimony"; that the plaintiffs and the defendant "in each and all of said actions" have appealed; and that the decision on appeal "as entered in the one case * * * shall be considered as given, made, and decided in each of the other two cases." In the defendant's opening brief it is said:

"Similar averments of the ownership of certain lands and of the existence of springs thereon and the ownership and use of the waters thereof are alleged in the complaints in each of the other two actions against this defendant."

It clearly appears from the findings that the waters underlying defendant's lands are percolating waters, not, as the defendant seems to contend, mere "vagrant, wandering drops moving by gravity in any and every direction along the line of least resistance," but "a vast mass of water confined in a basin filled with detritus, always slowly moving downward to the outlet" or outlets. City of Los Angeles v. Hunter, 156 Cal. 603, 607, 105 P. 755.

[1, 2] The court found that these percolating waters naturally supply the plaintiff's spring and Mormon creek, that his land is riparian to Mormon creek, and that the spring in question is "on the bank of said creek." It follows that the natural flow of the water from the spring is down and through the creek, and that the plaintiff's rights therein are those of a riparian owner. The fact that he diverts the water from the spring and conveys it to his land through "a pipe, flume, and ditches," instead of letting it flow naturally through the channel of the creek, does not destroy its character as riparian water or his rights therein as a riparian owner. Turner v. James Canal Co., 155 Cal. 82, 92, 99 P. 520, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 401, 132 Am. St. Rep. 59, 17 Ann. Cas. 823; Miller & Lux v. Enterprise Canal & Land Co., 169 Cal. 415, 436, 147 P. 567; Holmes v. Nay, 186 Cal. 231, 240, 199 P. 325. The following language of the court in Hudson v. Dailey, 156 Cal. 617, 628, 105 P. 748, 753, is applicable to the facts found by the trial court in this case:

"Undoubtedly the water in the lands of many of the defendants would be of the class ordinarily designated as percolating water. It is therefore important to determine the relative rights of the owner of the nonriparian land containing percolating water, which feeds a surface stream, and those who have acquired riparian or prescriptive rights in said stream, where the pumping of such percolating water and its use on the land in which it is found will diminish the surface stream, to the injury of those having such riparian or prescriptive rights therein.

"The owner of land has a natural right to the reasonable use of the waters percolating therein, although it may be moving through his land into the land of his neighbor, and, although his use may prevent it from entering his neighbor's land or draw it therefrom. This right arises from the fact that the water is then in his land so that he may take it without trespassing upon his neighbor. His ownership of the land carries with it all the natural advantages of its situation, and the right to a reasonable use of the land and everything it contains, limited only by the operation of the maxim 'Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lœdas.' It is upon this principle that the law of riparian rights is founded, giving to each owner the right to use the waters of the stream upon his riparian land, but limiting him to a reasonable share thereof, as against other riparian owners thereon. We think the same application of the principle should be made to the case of percolating waters feeding the stream and necessary to its continued flow. There is no rational ground for any distinction between such percolating waters and the waters in the gravels immediately beneath and directly supporting the surface flow, and no reason for applying a different rule to the two classes, with respect to such rights, if indeed, the two classes can be distinguished at all. Such waters, together with the surface stream supplied by them, should be considered a common supply, in which all who by their natural situation have access to it have a common right, and of which they may each make a reasonable use upon the land so situated, taking it either from the surface flow, or directly from the percolations beneath their lands. The natural rights of these defendants and the plaintiff in this common supply of water would therefore be coequal, except as to quantity, and correlative."

See, also, City of San Bernardino v. City of Riverside, 186 Cal. 7, 14, 198 P. 784; City of Los Angeles v. Hunter, 156 Cal. 603, 608, 105 P. 755; McClintock v. Hudson, 141 Cal. 275, 281, 74 P. 849.

[3] It is clear from the foregoing quotation, as well as from other authorities, that in this state the term "reasonable use," as employed therein, does not mean that one of two or more persons having correlative rights in a common supply of water may take all that is reasonably beneficial to his land, regardless of the needs of the others, as the defendant contends, but only his reasonable share thereof, if there is not enough to supply the needs of all. "Necessity is not the sole measure of right in such cases." Verdugo Cañon Water Co. v. Verdugo, 152 Cal. 655, 667, 93 P. 1021, 1027. "There is a distinction between the English rule as modified by the modern American rule of reasonable use and the rule of correlative rights. Under the rule of reasonable use some of the authorities hold that a land owner has a right to make such a beneficial use of the water found percolating through his land to the extent that may be necessary for the improvement of his land, so long as it is used thereon, although in so doing he may drain the lands of his neighbors. Upon the other hand, the rule of correlative rights to these owners is the rule which abrogates the English rule as to these waters and holds that the rights of all land owners over a common basin, saturated strata, or underground reservoir, are coequal or correlative, and that one land owner can not extract more than his share of the water even for use on his own lands, where the rights of others are injured thereby." Kinney on Irrigation and Water Rights (2d Ed.) § 1192. "It is a question of reasonable use, and that applies both to the land of the person disturbing the percolation and to adjoining land." Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 143, 70 P. 663, 666 (64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35).

[4, 5] It may be that the defendant would derive a greater benefit from the drainage of its mine than the plaintiff receives from the use of the water flowing from the spring, but that fact is wholly immaterial. The value of a flow of 24 inches of water is in no sense unsubstantial or negligible, and it is elementary that private property cannot be taken for private use upon the ground that it is more valuable to the taker than to him from whom it is taken. Scott v. Fruit Growers' Supply Co. (Cal. Sup.) 253 P. 1095. Since both parties have correlative rights in the waters in question, however, the situation may be such as, under appropriate issues, to warrant a conditional injunction only, restraining the defendant from diverting the flow of water from plaintiff's spring except during such times as it shall restore to the plaintiff's land an equal quantity of water of like quality as that which naturally flows from the spring, or such part thereof as constitutes the plaintiff's reasonable share of the common supply. Gould v. Eaton, 117 Cal. 539, 543, 49 P. 577, 38 L. R. A. 181; Montecito Valley Water Co. v. Santa Barbara, 144 Cal. 578, 602, 77 P. 1113; Newport v. Temescal Water Co., 149 Cal. 531, 539, 87 P. 372, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1098; Huffner v. Sawday, 153 Cal. 86, 94, 94 P. 424. The facts found by the court show that the plaintiff is also entitled to damages caused by the defendant's wrongful diversion of the water from his spring. It is clear that the plaintiff is not estopped to maintain the action. Verdugo Cañon Water Co. v. Verdugo, 152 Cal. 655, 684, 93 P. 1021.

The judgment is reversed, the plaintiff to recover his costs of appeal.

PEOPLE v. CAMPRIDON. (Cr. 1395.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 9, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 6, 1928.

1. Highways ⇨186—Evidence held sufficient to support conviction of violating Motor Vehicle Act by not stopping after accident (Motor Vehicle Act, § 141).

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction of automobile driver, under Motor Vehicle Act, § 141 (St. 1923, p. 562), providing that driver of any vehicle striking person shall stop, give his name, address, and the registration number of his vehicle, and render necessary aid.

2. Criminal law ⇨1160—Jury's verdict approved by trial court is conclusive, unless entirely unsupported by evidence.

Before jury's verdict in criminal case which has been approved by trial court can be set aside for insufficiency of evidence, it must clearly appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there substantial evidence sufficient to support the trial court's conclusion.

3. Highways ⇨186—Extent of injuries to prosecuting witness held admissible in prosecution for violating Motor Vehicle Act by failing to stop after accident (Motor Vehicle Act, § 141).

In prosecution for violating Motor Vehicle Act, § 141 (St. 1923, p. 562), requiring that where automobile driver strikes a person he should stop, give name and address, and render any necessary assistance, nature and extent of injuries to prosecuting witness held admissible.

4. Criminal law ⇨1156(1)—Trial court's refusal of new trial will not be disturbed, unless clear abuse of discretion is shown.

Trial court's refusal to grant new trial after conviction for crime will not be disturbed on appeal, in the absence of a showing of manifest abuse of discretion.

5. Criminal law ⇨938(1)—Refusal to grant new trial for new evidence held not abuse of discretion, where evidence was cumulative, and inability to procure new witnesses' attendance at trial was not shown (Motor Vehicle Act, § 141).

Refusal to grant new trial for new evidence after conviction for violating Motor Vehicle Act, § 141 (St. 1923, p. 562), held not abuse of discretion, where evidence was cumulative, and defendant made no showing that the attendance of the new witnesses could not have been procured at the trial.

6. Criminal law ⇨1173(1)—In prosecution under Motor Vehicle Act failure to instruct jury that to convict they must agree on one of alternative charges, if error, held harmless, where evidence showed defendant failed to stop after accident (Motor Vehicle Act, § 141).

In prosecution under Motor Vehicle Act, § 141 (St. 1923, p. 562), providing that, after striking a person, automobile driver should stop, give name, address, and registration number of his automobile, and render necessary assistance, failure to instruct jury that to convict they must agree either on defendant's failure to stop, to give name, to give address, to give registration number, or to render necessary assistance, if error, held harmless, where evidence showed defendant failed to stop after accident, and thus violated all such duties.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Albert Campridon was convicted of violating Motor Vehicle Act, § 141, relating to an automobile driver's duty to stop and give assistance after an accident, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John V. Copren, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TYLER, P. J. Appellant was accused and convicted of violating section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 562). The information charged, in substance, that on or about the 21st day of January, 1926, while operating his automobile on Potrero avenue, in the city and county of San Francisco, defendant struck one Patrick Biggins, and he then and there lawfully failed and neglected to give to the person so struck his name or address, or the registration number of his automobile, or the name and address of any passenger in said vehicle, and likewise failed and omitted to render to Patrick Biggins all or any necessary or other assistance contrary to the provisions of the act. Defendant upon arraignment pleaded not guilty. Trial was had by jury on the 1st day of March, 1927, which resulted in a conviction. Thereafter a motion for a new trial was made, which was denied, and defendant was sentenced to serve 8 months in the county jail. This appeal is prosecuted from the order and judgment. It is the contention of appellant that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict of the jury. It is also contended that the trial court erred in permitting the complaining witness to testify as to the extent of his injuries and the length of time he was confined in a hospital in consequence thereof; and, finally, the further claim is made that the court erred in refusing defendant's motion for a new trial. The facts, briefly stated, show that Patrick Biggins, the complaining witness, was on the morning of the day charged in the information struck by an automobile driven by defendant while he was attempting to cross Potrero avenue at Twenty-fourth street, and in consequence thereof was rendered unconscious and spent 18 weeks in a hospital with a broken leg.

[1] A special police officer, called by the prosecution, testified that at the time in question he was proceeding in a northerly direction on Potrero avenue; that while he was crossing Twenty-Fourth street, a Ford coupé driven by defendant passed him quite suddenly and turned partly toward his machine; that he had to pull towards the curb in order to avoid being hit; that at this time he heard a dull sound and saw a man fall; that defendant's machine came to a stop momentarily, and then proceeded; that he pursued defendant and caught up with him in a traffic jam when about 150 feet away from the accident; that defendant did not attempt to give his name to Biggins before he was brought back to the scene of the accident or the name of his companion, or render any aid or assistance to the injured man. Some four other witnesses called on behalf of the defense testified that defendant did stop, and that he returned to the scene of the accident and made no attempt to escape. Whatever conflict there may be in this evidence, it is apparent that the testimony of the police officer is sufficient to support the verdict.

[2] It is the function of the jury in the first instance, and of the trial court after verdict, to determine what facts are established by the evidence, and before the verdict of the jury, which has been approved by the trial court, can be set aside on appeal upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support it, it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there substantial evidence sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court. People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 184 P. 389. There is, therefore, no merit in this contention.

[3] Nor do we think the action of the trial court in permitting the prosecuting witness to testify as to the nature of his injuries constitutes reversible error. The very purpose of the provision of the act was designed to prohibit, under pain of severe punishment, negligent or wanton drivers of vehicles from leaving persons injured by them in distress and danger for want of proper medical or surgical treatment. People v. Kaufman, 49 Cal. App. 570, 193 P. 953. The fact of injury and its extent is most material to prove the commission of the offense. Without an injury there would be no need for medical assistance.

[4, 5] Equally without merit is the remaining contention that the trial court erred in refusing defendant's motion for a new trial. In support of this motion certain affidavits of two additional witnesses were offered and received in evidence. These affidavits recited that defendant did not attempt to flee after the accident. There was no showing made that defendant could not have procured the attendance of these witnesses at the trial. Moreover, the evidence set forth in the affidavit was merely cumulative, and the question as to whether or not it was sufficient to warrant the granting of a new trial was a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and its conclusion upon the subject cannot here be disturbed in the absence of a showing of manifest abuse, and here there is no such showing. People v. Lakenan, 61 Cal. App. 368, 214 P. 1021.

[6] Since the filing of his opening brief appellant has drawn our attention to the case of People v. Scofield (Cal. App.) 258 P. 656, wherein it is held that in a prosecution under section 141 of the Motor Vehicle Act it is incumbent upon the trial judge to instruct the jury that, in order to find an accused guilty, the members of the jury must agree upon at least one of the alternative charges pleaded; that is, that the accused failed to stop, or to give his name, or to give his address, or to give the registration number of his car, or to render necessary assistance, and this notwithstanding that defendant failed to request such instruction. A transfer has been granted in this case to the Supreme Court, and it is no longer authority on the subject. The rule has been generally recognized in this state that, where a party in a criminal case fails to ask the court to give instructions to the jury upon a particular point, he cannot complain of error on the part of the court in not giving the instructions. People v. Rogers, 163 Cal. 476, 126 P. 143.

However, irrespective of what the proper rule may be upon the subject, we do not see what possible prejudice could have resulted to defendant in the present case because of the absence of an instruction on this point. While there is evidence in the record to the effect that defendant did not give his name, address, or registration number to any one, the testimony of the police officer shows that defendant immediately drove away from the scene of the accident without rendering his victim any aid, and that he was only prevented from escaping by reason of a congestion in the traffic. This act on his part made it impossible for him to comply with the enumerated duties imposed by the statute. By immediately driving away without rendering aid he put it beyond his power to comply with the other acts, the omission of which is denounced by the statute. He therefore violated all such duties. Under such circumstances, the fact that the trial judge failed to instruct the jury that it was necessary to agree upon one of the alternative charges is immaterial.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MCDONALD v. BERNARD et al. (Civ. 6061.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 21, 1927.

1. Brokers ⇨61(1)—Broker's right to compensation for procuring exchange properties held not to depend on validity of title.

Where broker is employed to procure the acceptance of a proposition to exchange certain properties, his right to compensation does not depend on validity of title, and failure of person who employed him to perfect title, which would enable such person to complete the exchange, does not affect his liability to the broker.

2. Brokers ⇨61(2)—Assignee held entitled to commissions under contract employing brokers for procuring exchange of properties, notwithstanding exchange failed because defendant's wife clouded title.

Where defendant promised to pay assignors of plaintiff a commission for securing acceptance of proposition to exchange properties, which acceptance brokers procured, plaintiff held entitled to recover commissions, notwithstanding exchange failed because defendant's wife clouded title by recording a declaration of homestead on defendant's property, especially since defendant knew of wife's threats to cloud title before he executed contract employing brokers.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Ross Campbell, Judge.

Action by J. F. McDonald against J. Bernard and others to recover commissions on exchange of real estate. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 262 P. 431.

Geary & Geary, of Santa Rosa, for appellants.

Eugene F. Conlin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued as assignee of two real estate brokers to recover the commission claimed by them to be due for their services in connection with the proposed exchange of real properties. Plaintiff had judgment for $3,000, without interest, from which defendant has appealed on a type-written transcript.

The services were performed in accordance with the terms of a written contract wherein defendant promised to pay a commission of $3,000 "upon acceptance of this agreement" by the owner of the properties which were to be conveyed to defendant. This acceptance was procured in writing, and deeds of conveyance were duly executed, but, before defendant's deed was recorded, his wife recorded a declaration of homestead upon his property, and the exchange was not completed. Though the property owned by defendant and proposed to be exchanged by him was his separate property, the wife opposed his plan to sell or exchange it, and notified the brokers before the commission agreement was executed that she would not execute a conveyance of the property, and would do all in her power legally to prevent the exchange. Of this the defendant was fully aware at the time he executed the contract with the brokers.

This constitutes the only defense raised by appellant to the payment of the commission. It is argued that the brokers, knowing the opposition of appellant's wife to the exchange, entered into the contract at their peril, and therefore may not recover. There is no charge of fraud or misrepresentation; no claim that appellant was not at all times the sole owner of the property, and able to give clear title, except for the lien of the homestead created by his wife.

The rule of law involved is simple and well settled. The appellant knew of his wife's objection to the exchange when he employed the brokers to procure an acceptance from the owner of the other piece of property. It may be that he thought he could satisfy her objections if he had the exchange contract signed, or that he would complete the exchange without her consent, or that she might change her mind, but these are matters with which the brokers were not concerned. They were employed to procure the acceptance of the other owner, and they performed that service in strict accordance with their contract.

[1] When a broker is employed to procure the acceptance of a proposition to exchange specified properties, his right to compensation does not depend upon the validity of the title. Gonzales v. Broad, 57 Cal. 224, 226. The refusal of the wife to join her husband in a conveyance of community property does not affect the liability of the husband on his individual contract with a broker to procure a purchaser. Goodrich v. Turney, 44 Cal. App. 516, 520, 186 P. 806; Johnson v. Krier, 59 Cal. App. 330-333, 210 P. 966; Russell v. Ramm (Cal. Sup.) 254 P. 532. These cases merely follow the general rule that a party may contract with a broker to procure a suitable purchaser for property which he does not own and his subsequent failure to perfect a title which would enable him to complete a sale does not affect his liability to the broker. Martin v. Ede, 103 Cal. 157-161, 37 P. 199, and cases cited.

[2] We see no reason for a different rule, where a perfect title is clouded before the sale is completed through no fault of the broker. Here both parties had knowledge of the wife's threats to cloud the title before the written contract of employment was executed. Notwithstanding this knowledge, appellant agreed to pay the stipulated sum, if the brokers procured the acceptance by the owner of the other parcel. If appellant hoped to be relieved of this obligation if the wife carried out her threat, he should have so stipulated in the written contract.

The judgment, in so far as it is attacked on this appeal, is affirmed.

McDONALD v. BERNARD et al. (Civ. 6048.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 21, 1927.

Brokers §87—Assignee of brokers who procured exchange of properties could recover interest on commissions from date acceptance was procured (Civ. Code, § 3287).

In suit by assignee of brokers to recover commissions for procuring acceptance of a proposition to exchange real property, where judgment was for plaintiff, plaintiff held entitled to interest on the sum recovered from date the acceptance was procured, in view of Civ. Code, § 3287.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Ross Campbell, Judge.

Action by J. F. McDonald against J. Bernard and others to recover commissions on exchange of real property. From a judgment for plaintiff which denied him interest, plaintiff appeals. Modified.

Eugene F. Conlin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Geary & Geary, of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. This is a separate appeal by the plaintiff from the same judgment considered in McDonald v. Bernard (No. 6061) 262 P. 430, and particularly from that portion of the judgment which denied plaintiff interest on the sum recovered from the date of performance to the rendition of the judgment. The appeal is taken on a separate typewritten transcript.

The contract called the plaintiff's assignors to procure the acceptance of defendant's proposal to exchange real properties. Written acceptance of this proposal was procured by them on November 19, 1920. Defendant's obligation to pay for the services became fixed as of that date, and, as the amount was determined by the contract, interest should have been allowed from that time. Gray v. Bekins, 186 Cal. 329, 399, 199 P. 767; Civ. Code, § 3287.

The judgment is modified by adding after the word "action" in the last line thereof the following: "And interest on said sum of $3,000 from November 19, 1920, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum." Appellant to have his costs on this appeal.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 9, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 6, 1928.

1. Appeal and error §110, 782—Order denying new trial is not appealable, and appeal must be dismissed.

Order denying new trial was not appealable, and attempted appeal therefrom had to be dismissed.

2. Malicious prosecution §56—Burden is on plaintiff to prove malice and want of "probable cause."

In action for malicious prosecution, burden is on plaintiff to prove both malice and want of "probable cause"; "probable cause" being a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant reasonable man in belief that charge is true.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Probable Cause (in Malicious Prosecution).]

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

3. Malicious prosecution ☞8—That date of offense charged in complaint was wrong was immaterial in malicious prosecution action.

Where complaint charged plaintiff with stealing on June 18th note and mortgage turned over to him by defendant to sell, when they were not delivered into his possession until August 1st, was immaterial in malicious prosecution action, where matter of placing proper charge against plaintiff was left entirely to deputy district attorney.

4. Malicious prosecution ☞8—That defendant in malicious prosecution action did not read criminal complaint was immaterial.

That defendant in malicious prosecution action testified that he did not read criminal complaint charging plaintiff with stealing defendant's note and mortgage defendant had turned over to him to sell, after same had been prepared by deputy district attorney, was immaterial, where matter of preparing legal papers and placing proper charge against plaintiff had been left entirely to deputy district attorney.

5. Malicious prosecution ☞16—To support "malicious prosecution" action, there must be want of probable cause and malice.

In order to support an action for "malicious prosecution," two essential facts must occur; namely, want of probable cause and malice.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Malicious Prosecution.]

6. Malicious prosecution ☞27—To constitute "malice" supporting malicious prosecution action, defendant must have had some evil or sinister purpose.

To constitute "malice" supporting an action for malicious prosecution, there must be malus animus denoting that party who instituted proceeding was actuated by wrong motive; that is, he must have had in his mind some evil or sinister purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Malice.]

7. Malicious prosecution ☞31—Defendant's threat to have plaintiff arrested if he did not return note belonging to defendant did not show malice.

Where defendant had turned over note and mortgage to plaintiff to sell, and plaintiff had failed to do so, and defendant had been trying for five or six months to get note and mortgage back, and another party was claiming to own mortgage, defendant's telling plaintiff that he would have him arrested if he did not return note and mortgage did not import malice supporting malicious prosecution action.

8. Malicious prosecution ☞71(2)—Evidence of want of probable cause for prosecution or charge of larceny of note or existence of malice, held insufficient for jury.

Where defendant in malicious prosecution action had charged plaintiff with stealing note and mortgage which defendant had turned over to plaintiff to sell, and which plaintiff had refused to return, evidence of want of probable cause or existence of malice held insufficient to go to jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action for damages for malicious prosecution by C. E. Fackrell against Hugh McDonald. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Appeal from the order denying a new trial dismissed. Judgment reversed.

Fred W. Heath, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Warren L. Williams and Seymour S. Silverton, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. [1] This is an appeal by defendant, Hugh McDonald, from a judgment entered against him upon a verdict of a jury in the sum of $5,000 in an action for malicious prosecution. Appellant also appeals from the order denying him a new trial. The order denying a new trial is not appealable, and for that reason the attempted appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

The plaintiff, C. E. Fackrell, brought this action in the superior court of Los Angeles county, alleging that the defendant, Hugh McDonald, did, maliciously and with probable cause, swear to a complaint charging him with the crime of grand larceny, and procured a warrant for his arrest upon that charge.

At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence defendant made a motion for a nonsuit upon the ground that plaintiff had failed to establish want of probable cause and the existence of malice in the criminal prosecution. This motion was denied. A motion for a new trial was made upon various grounds which motion was also denied.

The facts necessary for a correct understanding of the questions involved in this appeal may be thus briefly stated: The plaintiff and respondent was, at the time of the transaction involved herein, a stock salesman, 33 years of age, residing at Glendale, Cal. During the latter part of December, 1922, respondent called upon the appellant, Hugh McDonald, at his home near Glendale, Cal., and sought to sell him stock in a corporation known as the "Blue Tank Company." On his first visit respondent was unable to interest Mr. McDonald in the stock, and thereafter made a number of other calls upon appellant from time to time for the same purpose. During one of these visits respondent learned that appellant had no ready money, but owned a note for $8,000, secured by a first mortgage on certain real estate situate in or near Glendale, Cal. Finally, on June 18, 1923, it was agreed between respondent and appellant that respondent would take said note and mortgage and dispose of them at a discount of not more than 10 per cent., and from the proceeds buy $5,000 worth of "Blue Tank Company" stock in the name of appellant and return the balance of the money, amounting to some $2,200 in cash to appellant. Thereupon appellant signed what is called a "purchasing order" for the stock, and at the same time gave plaintiff an order on a bank in Glendale for the note and mortgage, where it had been left for safe-keeping by appellant. No time limit was specified in said "purchasing order" as to when the stock should be purchased or the note and mortgage sold. The note was not indorsed by appellant, and the mortgage was not assigned to respondent. Neither did respondent have any power of attorney from appellant under which he could assign the note and mortgage. Respondent received the note and mortgage from the bank on the 1st day of August, 1923.

Shortly thereafter, and on the 23d of August, 1923, appellant left California on a visit in the east, having placed all his business in the hands of his attorney, Mr. Fred W. Heath, and requested respondent to deliver the stock and money, etc., to Mr. Heath, his attorney. During his absence, and on October 4, 1923, while in Boston, appellant received a telegram from his attorney stating that respondent was trying to dispose of the note and mortgage to the Nugent Oil Company for stock, and that the situation was not favorable, and for him, appellant, to wire respondent to deliver the note and mortgage to Mr. Heath. Upon receipt of this telegram appellant sent a telegram to respondent requesting him to deliver the note and mortgage to his attorney, Mr. Heath. This request was not complied with by respondent.

Appellant returned to Glendale on October 22, 1923, and on the next morning had a conversation with respondent, in which respondent stated that the note and mortgage could not be sold at a discount of 10 per cent. and wanted appellant to agree to a discount of 20 per cent., which appellant refused to do. Respondent did not return the note and mortgage and did not purchase the stock. Soon after this conversation on October 23, 1923, Mary C. Ward, the maker of the note and mortgage, called upon appellant and told him that a lady by the name of Mrs. George had informed her that she, Mrs. George, owned the McDonald note and mortgage of $8,000, and insisted that Miss Ward pay the interest to her. The agent of Miss Ward also called upon Mrs. George, and she also informed him that she was the owner of the McDonald note and mortgage and had purchased it in August, 1923, and stated to this agent that she desired respondent to be present before she would allow the agent of Miss Ward, to inspect the note and mortgage. A few days later this agent of Miss Ward, a Mr. Heald, interviewed respondent and told him that it was immaterial to Miss Ward who received the interest, but that Miss Ward must know that she was paying the interest to the right party. Thereupon respondent replied, "I think Mrs. George has advanced money for the transaction." Neither the note nor mortgage, or any assignment thereof, was exhibited to Mr. Heald. Mr. Heald then called upon appellant and informed him of what respondent had said, and also told him that Mrs. George claimed to own the note and mortgage. Shortly before or after this conversation Mr. Nugent of the Nugent Oil Company informed appellant that respondent had offered to sell the Nugent Oil Company the $8,000 note and mortgage and had stated to him that he, respondent, "had a power of attorney in the matter of the mortgage and could dispose of it to anybody he wanted to." Both before and after this conversation with Mr. Nugent, appellant had consulted Mr. Heath, his attorney, regarding this matter, and Mr. Heath directed appellant to again call upon respondent and demand the return of the note and mortgage, or the delivery of the money and stock. In pursuance to this request, appellant set about looking for respondent and after two or three days finally located him and again demanded the return of his papers, which demand was again ignored by respondent. Appellant testified that on this occasion, after he had demanded the return of his papers, respondent replied, "I have gotten in a hard row of stumps and had to use your mortgage and put it up for collateral," whereupon appellant replied, "If you did, you will get into trouble." Respondent denies having made any such statement, but does not deny that appellant demanded a return of the note and mortgage, and that such demand was not complied with. Appellant again reported to his attorney that his efforts to obtain the note and mortgage from respondent were unavailing, whereupon his attorney again requested appellant to take a witness and go and again demand a return of his papers from respondent.

Appellant again called upon respondent, this time in company with his brother, and demanded the return of his note and mortgage, and, according to both appellant and his brother, respondent admitted that he had pledged appellant's note and mortgage, and that appellant would have to pay $7,200 to get his note and mortgage back, and that appellant said, "See here, Fackrell, you put the Blue Tank stock in escrow by Saturday, or there will be trouble," and respondent said "I won't do it." The respondent, Fackrell, testified that this conversation occurred on November 19th, and that appellant told him that he, McDonald, had decided to go through with the deal as he had agreed in the first place and let Fackrell sell the papers subject to 10 per cent. discount, but that he said, "I will give you five days to sell them in, and if you haven't sold them in five days I will have you arrested. * * * He told me he would be back in five days after the papers. The 24th, he said, would be Saturday, and he would be back to my office for the papers."

After this conversation, whatever date it took place, no further demands were made upon respondent, and neither the note nor mortgage or stock or money, or any part thereof, was ever delivered either to the attorney, Mr. Heath, or appellant. Another conference was had with the attorney, and Mr. Heath advised appellant to go to see the district attorney and gave appellant a letter to the district attorney. Appellant called upon Mr. Orme, a deputy district attorney of the county of Los Angeles, and stated to him all the facts relative to the transaction with respondent. Mr. Orme advised him that he wanted to make some independent investigation before issuing a warrant and asked appellant to secure certain other information relative to the transaction, which appellant furnished, and, after Mr. Orme had made an independent investigation and about one month had elapsed, a complaint charging respondent with grand larceny on the 18th day of June, 1923, was prepared by the deputy district attorney and appellant requested to take it to the justice of the peace and sign and swear to it before him, which was done on the 30th of November, 1923. Respondent was arrested upon that date and in default of bail was held in the county jail until December 3, 1923, when he gave bail in the sum of $3,000 and was released. On December 5, 1923, the preliminary examination was commenced and continued to the 13th, at which time it was agreed by the district attorney's office and the attorney for respondent that if respondent would deliver to appellant the note and mortgage the criminal action would be dismissed. Thereupon the note and mortgage were produced and given to appellant, and a receipt was prepared by the deputy district attorney and signed by appellant acknowledging the return of his note and mortgage, and the action was dismissed and respondent discharged. Following the dismissal of the action the case at bar was commenced.

There is some conflict between the testimony of appellant and the testimony of respondent as to what was said and done at some of these conversations between them, but all the other facts are substantially uncontradicted.

The appellant first contends that the evidence is wholly insufficient to show that he instituted the criminal proceedings against respondent without probable cause. A careful study of all the evidence in the case convinces us fully that this contention must be sustained.

[2] The law is well settled that in an action of this character the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove both malice and want of probable cause. Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 217; Anderson v. Coleman, 53 Cal. 188; Grant v.

Moore, 29 Cal. 644; Jones v. Jones, 71 Cal. 89, 11 P. 817; Smith v. Liverpool, 107 Cal. 433, 40 P. 540; Davis v. Pacific Telephone Co., 127 Cal. 312, 57 P. 746, 59 P. 698; *Lacey v. App. 257, 223 P. 1019; Franzen v. Shenk, 192 Cal. 572, 221 P. 932; Pickering v. Havens, 70 Cal. App. 381, 233 P. 346; Redgate v. Southern Pacific Co., 24 Cal. App. 573, 141 P. 1191.

Reasonable or probable cause has been defined to be "a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true." Potter v. Seale, supra; Redgate v. Southern Pacific Co., supra; Lee v. Levison, supra; Morris v. Moore, supra; 2 Greenleaf on Evidence, § 453, 457.

The facts and circumstances of which appellant had knowledge at the time he sought the arrest of respondent were such as would naturally excite the honest belief in any reasonable mind that respondent had committed a crime. Appellant had turned over to respondent a note and mortgage of $8,000 six months before, with the understanding that respondent would sell the same and out of the proceeds purchase for appellant $5,000 worth of "Blue Tank Company" stock, and return the balance in cash to him, less a discount of 10 per cent. Respondent did not purchase the stock as agreed; neither did he return the note and mortgage to appellant, or the proceeds thereof. Appellant had many times demanded the return of his papers both personally and through his attorney. The maker of the mortgage had informed appellant that another party was claiming to own the note and mortgage and demanding that the interest be paid to her. These facts alone as we have stated, would be sufficient to create in the mind of any reasonable person the belief that respondent had misappropriated the property of appellant; but appellant, not being satisfied with his own judgment that respondent had misappropriated his property, sought the advice and counsel of his attorney and laid before him fully and fairly all the facts within his knowledge, and after so doing he was advised by his attorney that in the opinion of the attorney a crime had been committed, and directed that he take the matter up with the district attorney. Following the advice of his own counsel, the appellant took the matter up with a deputy district attorney and likewise made to him a full and fair disclosure of all the facts within his knowledge and, after so doing, the deputy district attorney advised appellant that a crime had been committed.

Respondent lays great stress upon the fact that the note was not indorsed by appellant and, he having no power of attorney from appellant, the note and mortgage were not negotiable and valueless in his hands under such conditions. There is no merit in this contention. The fact that the note and mortgage had been placed in respondent's possession without indorsement and for a specific purpose, coupled with the fact that this specific purpose had not been carried out by respondent, but, on the contrary, information was coming to appellant that respondent had represented to others that he had a power of attorney to dispose of the mortgage in any way he saw fit, and the further information coming to appellant that another person was actually claiming to own the note and mortgage, and such alleged owner was demanding the interest from the mortgagor, would certainly be sufficient suspicious circumstances to warrant appellant or any reasonable man, in believing that respondent had misappropriated his property and was guilty of a crime. It is not what respondent could have lawfully done with the note and mortgage, but the test of probable cause is, Were the facts and circumstances that were known to appellant sufficient to warrant him, as a reasonable man, in honestly believing that respondent had disposed, or was attempting to dispose, of his property unlawfully? A careful review of all the evidence convinces us that appellant had abundant evidence upon which to base such a belief.

[3, 4] Respondent also lays particular stress upon the fact that the complaint states that the note and mortgage were stolen on the 18th day of June, 1923, when they were not delivered into the possession of respondent until August 1st, and that appellant testified that he did not read the criminal complaint after the same had been prepared by the deputy district attorney. There is no merit in either of these contentions. The matter of preparing the legal papers and placing the proper charge against respondent was left entirely to the deputy district attorney. Appellant was not an attorney and could not have known the exact name of the crime that the facts indicated respondent had committed.

[5] Appellant also contends that there is no evidence that he acted maliciously in causing the arrest and prosecution of respondent. We need not however, dwell at length upon the question of malice, for, as we have seen, the evidence is wholly insufficient to show want of probable cause. The law is well settled that, in order to support an action for malicious prosecution, two essential facts must concur; namely, want of probable cause and malice. Runo v. Williams, 162 Cal. 444, 122 P. 1082; Burke v. Watts, 188 Cal. 118, 204 P. 578; Redgate v. Southern Pacific Co., supra; Potter v. Seale, supra; Anderson v. Coleman, supra.

[6] To constitute malice, there must be

"malus animus," denoting that the party who instituted the proceeding was actuated by a wrong motive; that is he must have had in his mind some evil or sinister purpose. Pickering v. Havens, supra; Redgate v. Southern Pacific Co., supra.

We find no direct evidence of malice and no facts or circumstances from which malice or bad faith on the part of appellant could be lawfully inferred. The evidence of respondent, which is relied upon to show malice, is the following:

"Q. When was the next conversation you had with Mr. McDonald before he had you arrested? A. On November 19th. * * *

"Q. State what Mr. McDonald said to you there? A. He told me he had decided to go through with the deal, as he agreed to in the first place, and let me sell the papers subject to 10 per cent. discount; but he says, 'I will give you five days to sell them in, and if you haven't sold them in five days I will have you arrested.' * * *

"Q. What is the next you heard about Mr. McDonald or the case? A. He told me he would come back in five days after the papers. The 24th, he said, would be Saturday, and he would come back to my office for the papers.

"Q. What is the next thing that happened in connection with it? A. The officers came for me and arrested me on November 30th."

[7] This evidence, as above stated, was contradicted by appellant and his brother, who was present. Assuming that respondent's statement is correct, nevertheless, this would not constitute malice, especially in view of the circumstances under which it was made. Appellant had been trying for five or six months to get his property back, and another party was claiming to own the mortgage. To tell a man, under such circumstances, that he would have him arrested would certainly not import malice. To tell a man he will be arrested, if you find that he has stolen your automobile, is no basis for the inference of malice. If respondent was acting in the best of faith, as he contends, why did he not return to appellant, or to his attorney, the note and mortgage? At the preliminary examination in the justice court, he delivered up the note and mortgage to appellant. He was certainly obligated to either carry out the contract that he had made with appellant or return to the appellant his property. Respondent did neither until he was arrested, and then he was more than willing to surrender up appellant's property.

[8] We conclude, therefore, that there is no evidence upon which the jury could infer a want of probable cause or the existence of malice, and that the motion for a nonsuit made by appellant should have been granted, or, if not granted, a directed verdict should have been ordered in favor of the defendant and appellant.

From the conclusions that we have reached, it is unnecessary for us to discuss the other points relative to the instructions and the admission of testimony, urged by appellant. We find no basis whatever upon which the judgment can be sustained.

The appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed. The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

MOSEE v. FIREMEN'S INS. CO. OF NEWARK. (Civ. 5783.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 12, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1928.

1. Insurance ⇨504—Interest created by mortgage is separate "insurable interest," and separate insurance thereon is not "other insurance" requiring apportionment of loss (Civ. Code, § 2546).

Interest created by mortgage or deed of trust in nature of mortgage is an "insurable interest," distinct from that of mortgagor or grantor, under Civ. Code, § 2546, and separate insurance procured thereon is not "other insurance," requiring an apportionment of loss upon claim by owner of policy insuring his interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Insurable Interest; Other Insurance.]

2. Insurance ⇨504—Union mortgage clause in mortgagor's policy, for benefit of mortgagee who refused to accept policy, did not become effective to reduce payment of loss by apportionment with policy purchased by mortgagee.

Mortgagor's policy for benefit of mortgagee who refused to accept it, providing that, in case of loss, company should be liable for no greater proportion of loss than amount insured bears to whole amount of insurance, did not preclude action by mortgagor, since mortgage clause which was to give mortgagee benefit of direct obligation never became effective as part of policy.

3. Taxation ⇨87—Payment by insurer into court of sum less than insured recovered, which he refused to accept, was ineffective to charge insured with taxes assessed on deposit (Pol. Code, § 3647; Civ. Code, § 1504; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 997, 1030).

Sum paid into court by insurance company representing its claimed proportion of loss, which was rejected by insured and was less than sum recovered by insured, remained property of insured, in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 997, 1030, and was ineffective to stop running of interest as provided by Civ. Code, § 1504, or for any purpose, and taxes assessed on deposit under Pol. Code, § 3647, were not chargeable to insured.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by John W. Mosee against the Firemen's Insurance Company of Newark on a policy of fire insurance. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chauncey F. Eldridge and George O. Bahrs, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Miller & Thornton, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal by defendant, Firemen's Insurance Company of Newark, from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff in an action on a policy of fire insurance.

The appeal involves the question whether the defendant is liable for the full amount of a loss or for the proportion thereof which the amount of its policy bears to the total amount of insurance on the property insured.

The facts are as follows: On November 7, 1912, the plaintiff executed to Charles Mettler a promissory note for $1,225, payable three years after date, and to secure the payment thereof executed to Los Angeles Title & Trust Company, a deed of trust to certain real property upon which a dwelling house was situated. The trust deed authorized the trustee and the beneficiary thereunder to maintain insurance upon the dwelling house to the satisfaction of either of them at the expense of the plaintiff. At the time the trust deed was executed, a policy of insurance upon the dwelling was issued to the plaintiff by defendant, insuring him against loss or damage by fire, the loss, if any, being made payable to Mettler, who then selected the defendant as a company satisfactory to him. On February 20, 1913, this policy expired, and the defendant, at the request of the plaintiff, issued and delivered to him the policy involved in this action, which was for $1,300, and covered the same property. The latter policy insured the interest of the plaintiff; the loss or damage, according to a mortgage clause or rider attached, being made payable to Mettler, who, however, refused to accept the policy as being satisfactory. On February 21, 1913, Mettler, without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, procured from the Queen Insurance Company a policy upon the same property for $1,250, which also insured the plaintiff; the loss or damage being payable to Mettler. The plaintiff in turn refused to accept the policy issued by the Queen Insurance Company or to pay the premium thereon, of which facts the latter company was notified; whereupon it requested Mettler to retain the policy, and agreed to recognize liability to him alone to the extent of his interest in the property insured. The plaintiff and Mettler each retained the policy procured by him, and on October 20, 1913, a fire occurred which damaged the property to the extent of $825.

In the body of the policy issued by the defendant appears the following clause:

"This company shall not be liable under this policy for a greater proportion of any loss on the described property or for loss by and expenses of removal from the premises endangered by fire than the amount hereby insured bears to the entire insurance covering such property whether valid or not or by solvent or insolvent insurers."

And the mortgage clause or rider attached provided as follows:

"In case of any other insurance upon the within described property, this company shall not be liable under this policy for a greater proportion of any loss or damage sustained than the sum hereby insured bears to the whole amount of insurance on said property issued to or held by any party or parties having insurable interest therein whether as owner, mortgagee, or otherwise."

It is contended by defendant that the clauses quoted limited its liability to a proportionate part of the loss, namely $420.55; and that the conclusion of the trial court that plaintiff was entitled under the policy to a judgment for the full amount of the loss was erroneous.

[1] According to the agreement between Queen Insurance Company and Mettler, the insurance issued to the latter was limited to his interest in the property; and, it being the rule that the interest created by a mortgage or deed of trust in the nature of a mortgage is an insurable interest distinct from that of the mortgagor or grantor (Civ. Code, § 2546; 26 Corp. Jur. "Fire Insurance," § 11, pp. 29, 30; Davis v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 111 Cal. 409, 43 P. 1115; Loring v. Dutchess Ins. Co., 1 Cal. App. 186, 188, 81 P. 1025), as is held in the following cases, separate insurance procured thereon is not other insurance requiring an apportionment of the loss upon a claim by the owner on a policy insuring his interest, as the clause first quoted above has no application to insurance obtained upon another distinct insurable interest in the property: Commercial, etc., Assur. Co. v. Scammon, 144 Ill. 506, 32 N. E. 916; Traders' Ins. Co. v. Pacaud, 150 Ill. 245, 37 N. E. 460, 41 Am. St. Rep. 355; Home Ins. Co. v. Koob, 113 Ky. 360, 68 S. W. 453, 58 L. R. A. 58, 101 Am. St. Rep. 354; Hardy v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 166 Mass. 210, 44 N. E. 209, 33 L. R. A. 241, 55 Am. St. Rep. 395; Tuck v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 56 N. H. 326; Eddy v. London Assurance Corporation, 143 N. Y. 311, 38 N. E. 307, 25 L. R. A. 686; Smith v. American Ins. Co., 177 Mich. 123, 143 N. W. 54; Dietzel v. Patrons' Mutual, etc., Co., 232 Mich. 415, 205 N. W. 149.

[2] The form of mortgage clause or rider attached to the policy issued to the plaintiff is that known as the union mortgage clause; and, unlike the open mortgage clause, which is but a provisional assignment of the contingent proceeds of the policy (Reynolds v. London, etc., Ins. Co., 128 Cal. 16, 60 P.

467, 79 Am. St. Rep. 17), operates as an independent contract of insurance between the insurer and the mortgagee, giving the latter the same protection as if he had taken out a separate policy (Collinsville Sav. Soc. v. Boston Ins. Co., 77 Conn. 676, 60 A. 647, 69 L. R. A. 924; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Olcott, 97 Ill. 439; Magoun v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 86 Minn. 486, 91 N. W. 5, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370; Allen v. St. Paul F. & I. Ins. Co., 167 Minn. 146, 208 N. W. 816; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Omaha L. & T. Co., 41 Neb. 834, 60 N. W. 133, 25 L. R. A. 679; Smith v. Union Ins. Co., 25 R. I. 260, 55 A. 715, 105 Am. St. Rep. 882; Ormsby v. Phenix Ins. Co., 5 S. D. 72, 58 N. W. 301; Eddy v. London Assurance Corp., supra; Hastings v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., 73 N. Y. 141; Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn [C. C. A.] 65 F. 165, 27 L. R. A. 614; People's Savings Bank v. Retail Merchants', etc., Ass'n, 146 Iowa, 536, 123 N. W. 198, 31 L. R. A. [N. S.] 455). As stated, the provision of the mortgage clause last quoted is not found in the body of the policy; and it is manifest from the omission that it was the intention that the same should apply only in the event that contractual relations between the insurer and a mortgagee should be established. The sole purpose of the mortgage clause was to give Mettler the benefit of the direct obligation of the insurer under a policy which the plaintiff assumed would be satisfactory; and, as held in the above cases, such would have been its effect had the policy been accepted. It cannot fairly be assumed, however, that the plaintiff agreed or that the insurer contemplated that the obligation of the latter should be limited further or otherwise than as provided in the body of the policy unless the benefit of the mortgage clause should be accepted by Mettler. The latter by his refusal, having declined to enter into contractual relations with the insurer, or to accept the proposed benefit, the circumstances sufficiently support the implied conclusion of the trial court that the mortgage clause never became effectual as part of the policy.

[3] The defendant paid into court a sum equal to a proportionate part of the loss for which it acknowledged liability; and from the sum deposited certain taxes thereon were deducted by the proper authorities pursuant to section 3647 of the Political Code. It is contended that the tender under the provisions of section 1504 of the Civil Code stopped the running of interest on the obligation, and that the amount deducted for taxes was chargeable to the plaintiff as the party ultimately entitled to the deposit. Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Water Co., 137 Cal. 699, 70 P. 770. Whatever the effect of an offer made and accepted as part payment of the claim in suit, here, as shown by the record, the offer—which was not accepted by the plaintiff—was to be in full satisfaction of the claim. Under such circumstances the amount deposited remained the property of the defendant, as such, was subject to taxation, and, in view of the finding that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for a sum in excess of that offered, the offer was ineffectual for any purpose. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 997, 1030; Fell v. Frierson, 171 Cal. 351, 153 P. 229.

It is our conclusion that the construction placed upon the policy by the trial court was correct, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the full amount of the loss.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

87 Cal. App. 654

TILLOTSON et al. v. FINDLEY. (Civ. 4865.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 19, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 16, 1928.

1. Trusts §44(2)—Evidence held to show that stock was actually held by decedent for plaintiffs under complete understanding and upon valuable consideration.

In action against executrix to compel assignment of corporate stock, evidence held to show that stock was actually held by decedent for plaintiffs under a complete understanding between the parties and upon a valuable consideration.

2. Trusts §61(3)—One holding corporate stock in trust for others could not divest owners of interest therein at will (Civ. Code, § 2280).

One holding corporate stock in trust for others could not, because of Civ. Code, § 2280, by his own actions and at his own will, divest owners of such property of their interest therein.

3. Specific performance §70—Specific execution of assignment of corporate stock having no determinable market value held proper remedy against one breaching agreement to assign to plaintiffs (Civ. Code, § 3387).

In an action against an executrix seeking execution of an assignment of corporate stock claimed to have been held by the decedent for the plaintiffs, the fact that at the time of trial the corporation was a struggling one with its success or failure yet unproved, the stock therefore being without determinable market value, held to make specific execution of the assignment a proper remedy; the facts not bringing the case within the provision of Civ. Code, § 3387, relative to money damages being the appropriate remedy for breach of personal property trust or contract.

4. Trusts §51—That agreement to hold stock for plaintiffs violated corporation commissioner's escrow provisions against assignment prevented stock's being held in trust, though all other trust elements were present.

In an action to compel an executrix to execute assignments of corporate stock claimed to have been promised by the decedent, the fact that the agreement to hold the stock in trust violated the corporation commissioner's escrow provisions against its being assigned prevented the stock's being held in trust, although all other elements of a trust relationship were present.

5. Trusts §371(8)—Where testimony is one way as to trust's existence, courts should go as far as possible under pleadings to make judgment conform to true determination of issue.

Where the testimony is all one way on the ultimate fact, to wit, was a trust existent at the time of the death of the one claimed to have held personal property in trust, courts ought to go as far as possible under the pleadings, to the end that the judgment may conform to the true determination of the issue.

6. Evidence §594—Uncontradicted testimony tending to establish issuable fact must be accepted as proof unless inherently improbable.

Uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony of a witness tending to establish an issuable fact must be accepted as proof of the fact which it is offered to establish, unless it can be said that such testimony is so inherently incredible and improbable as to amount to no evidence at all.

7. Pleading §430(2)—Issue whether trust existed held raised under evidence, although not specifically by pleadings, variance being immaterial (Code Civ. Proc. § 469).

In an action to enforce execution of corporate stock assignments by the executrix of a decedent claimed to have made such assignments to plaintiff, the question whether said decedent had held such stocks in trust held to be before the court, where testified to without objection, although not specifically raised by the pleadings, and hence variance between pleading and proof would be deemed immaterial, under Code Civ. Proc. § 469.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by Clifford Tillotson and Ada Tillotson against Mary E. Findley, individually and as executrix of the estate of Mathew W. Findley, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Peyton H. Moore, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem. Clifford Tillotson and his mother, Ada Tillotson, plaintiffs and appellants herein, brought this suit in May, 1922, to compel Mary E. Findley, executrix of the estate of Mathew W. Findley, deceased, to execute to them an assignment of 2 certificates of stock, each representing 7½ shares in the Atlas Fire Brick Company, a California corporation. The trial court denied any relief to plaintiffs and ordered judgment for defendant for her costs. Most of the facts are uncontroverted and may be fairly stated as follows:

M. I. Powers, N. B. Harris, and Mathew W. Findley organized the Atlas Fire Brick Company with an authorized capital of $25,000, divided into 250 shares of a par value of $100 each. Powers' interest was 125 shares; Harris' and Findley's, 62½ shares each. In consideration therefor Powers paid $12,500 to the corporation, and Harris and Findley delivered and sold certain secret formulas for the manufacture of brick to the company. The amount of cash put up by Powers was to be repaid to him out of the first dividends, before any other holder of stock should enjoy a dividend. The corporation began to function in February of 1918. All issued stock was in Powers' name escrowed by order of the corporation commissioner. A condition of the escrow was that:

"The holders of the shares evidenced thereby shall not sell or offer for sale, or otherwise transfer, or agree to sell or transfer, such shares, without the written consent of said commissioner shall have been first obtained in writing so to do."

This permit is dated July 18, 1918.

Mathew W. Findley had known each of the plaintiffs, the appellants herein, for a long time and had had close business and friendly relations with each of them. When the negotiations for the incorporation of the Atlas Fire Brick Company were practically completed, Findley sought to induce (Christmas Day, 1917, and during January, 1918), and did induce Clifford Tillotson to quit a position paying $175 per month, with fair prospects for betterment, and accept a position with the Atlas Company paying him $100 per month. Tillotson accepted the proposition offered by Findley on or about February 1, 1918, and actually entered the services of the Atlas Company about May of the same year. Later, commissions on sales were added and raises to $150 and $200 a month were given him. As an additional inducement to secure the services of Clifford Tillotson to the Atlas Company, Findley agreed to give him 25 per cent. of his interest in the company stock, this being conditional that one-half of this 25 per cent. should belong to Ada Tillotson and apply on or cancel an antecedent debt from Findley to her. This was accepted by both the Tillotsons. Later, in May or June, 1918, this agreement was changed so that the Tillotsons were to receive 7½ shares each on the same consideration. When the stock was issued to Findley he directed it to be divided into separate certificates, one of 42½ shares, two of 7½ shares, and one of 5 shares. Powers testified:

"He wanted the services of Mr. Tillotson on the plant and he wanted to give him— he told me he wanted to have those 7½ shares, and 7½ to Mrs. Tillotson and 5 to Stewart [a son of Findley]. That was the reason he wanted them in that form."

On February 28, 1918, Findley and Harris entered into a pooling agreement whereby the stock held by them was to be voted as a whole or not at all.

On the 27th of December, 1918, an agreement was entered into between Atlas Fire Brick Company and the Tillotsons, as follows:

"This agreement, made and entered into this 27th day of December, A. D. 1918, by and between Atlas Fire Brick Company, a corporation, and Clifford Tillotson and Mrs. A. Tillotson, his mother, said Clifford Tillotson and his mother being assignees of stock of M. W. Findley in said company, said stock being held in escrow according to the terms and conditions of permit No. 5454, issued by the state corporation department of California. * * *"
[Then follows a recital that the incorporators have entered into an agreement against divulging secret formulas and a recital that the Tillotsons, being assignees of some of the original stock, are so bound.]

"In witness thereof parties hereunto have set their hands the day and year first above written. Atlas Fire Brick Company. [Seal.] [Signed] M. W. Findley, Pres. [Signed] Nick B. Harris, Sec. Clifford Tillotson. Mrs. A. Tillotson."

The company did not make money immediately, but it continued to go and some time prior to trial declared at least one dividend. It borrowed about $21,000 from Powers, who did not care to advance more money, and in order that the company should be in funds, on February 20, 1920, Findley and Harris each paid into the corporation $6,250, par value of the stock which they received, whereupon the escrow was closed and the stock released. Up to this time no written consent to transfer of stock had been given by the corporation commissioner. There is no evidence that either of the Tillotsons was ever consulted or ever agreed to the payment of the $6,250 to the corporation by Findley. The full 125 shares of stock in the divided certificates were issued to Findley, who explained the matter to Clifford Tillotson for himself and Ada Tillotson that this was desirable under the pooling agreement, and Clifford Tillotson then assented thereto. The latter continued to work for the company, receiving salary until Findley died, on or about January 15, 1922, and the pooling agreement remained in effect to that date. No stock was ever issued to either of the Tillotsons, and claim for same was rejected by the executrix of the estate of M. W. Findley.

The testimony of Clifford Tillotson assenting to the request of Findley that the stock should remain in his name while the pooling agreement was in effect is as follows:

"Mr. Findley never made out that stock to me directly. He made it out in what he explained to me to be the necessary forms to comply with this agreement he had with Mr. Nick Harris, pooling agreement. That was in—that was at the time, or just a few days—well, I will say at the time that the stock was released by the corporation commissioner. I could not give you the date on there; but I know that near the time the stock was released I was interested to know where my stock was coming, if I would not receive it, and he told me that there was a paper in Mr. Moote's office that had been written up, but never signed up, we would go up there and have that executed; but he says, 'After this, stock, you know, will have to be voted by myself and Nick Harris to conform to our pooling agreement.' He asked me if I saw any reason or had any objection to that way of handling the matter. I saw none, so I told him—

"Mr. Harris: Do you recall anything else that was said about the stock? A. There was no further conversation at that time as the matter was made clear to me. Mr. Findley never delivered that stock to me. I never asked him to.

"Q. Did he ever tell you when he would deliver it to you? A. That the stock would be held so that the vote of the stock would be in his name; that proxies would be of no value only from time to time, and, if the stock was issued to other than his name or that of Nick Harris, the one in whose name the stock stood would naturally have the voting power of the stock; that the stock for that reason would have to stand in his name so long as the pooling agreement existed between him and Nick Harris. However, that he was having a paper drawn up by Mr. Moote, an attorney, which would show my interest and my mother's interest and right and title to that stock and the benefits of that stock, but that as long as this pooling agreement existed, the stock would remain on the books of the company in his or Mr. Harris' name, had to be one of the two; but that if the pooling agreement was canceled, why, quite naturally the stock would come to me and my mother. The pooling agreement was never canceled, to my knowledge, during his lifetime. It was canceled after his death."

[1] Under the facts as here stated, it would seem to us that the stock was actually held by Findley for the Tillotsons under a complete understanding between the parties and upon a valuable consideration.

Counsel for respondent in his brief complains that:

"Counsel for the appellants has failed to segregate the points upon which he relies to reverse the judgment appealed from in this action, and therefore it is somewhat difficult to answer said arguments specifically."

But counsel for respondent should appreciate that his antagonist is faced with the difficulty of attacking a judgment which does not reveal, in findings, conclusions, or judgment, the point or points upon which the trial court found against him. The findings are simply that all allegations of the complaint which refer to the alleged agreement between the Tillotsons and Findley are untrue. Appellant attacks the findings on the ground that they are not supported by the evidence, and this necessarily presents a negative problem. To convert it into an affirmative problem we shall have to consider the narrative of facts from the undisputed evidence in the case. The problem may be stated as follows: Does the evidence which stands unattacked and as to which there is no conflicting evidence entitle plaintiff to any relief under the pleadings? The evidence is here under a bill of exceptions and respondent has in her brief set out the points upon which she relies in support of the trial court's findings and judgment based thereon. With the above question in mind we shall recite defendant's points and comment thereon:

[2] (1) That under the evidence introduced "the stock was never released from escrow upon the basis in which it was originally placed therein, and was only released upon a reorganization of the company being effected and upon Findley and associates paying for said stock in cash." It may be doubted that the payment of money by Findley and Harris equal to the par value of the stock they had subscribed for was in effect a reorganization of the company. It must be remembered that the formula given remained the property of the company, and the sole testimony on the subject is that it had taken more money to run the business than was anticipated; that Powers, having paid in more than his share in money loaned, did not care to furnish any more money; and that the difficulty was met by Harris and Findley paying in the par value of their stock and having the same released from escrow. But if the Tillotsons had any interest in stock that stood in Findley's name, such an arrangement could not of itself divest them of such interest. Civ. Code, § 2280; Hellman v. McWilliams, 70 Cal. 453, 11 P. 659.

(2) "The record shows that Findley did not declare that he held said stock in trust for Tillotson in present, but merely promised a delivery of stock in futuro upon the happening of certain stipulated conditions." It seems to us that the various conversations, acts, and admissions of Findley leave no uncertainty as to the fact that it was the intention and belief of all of the parties concerned that the two Tillotsons owned $7\frac{1}{2}$ shares each of the stock escrowed in Findley's name, subject not to the whims or caprice or option of Findley or anybody else, but only to the fixed terms of the escrow. This is a delivery in present, unless there is some legal inhibition to the delivery. We think the only possible conclusion from the evidence is that the stock was given unconditionally by Findley for the desired services of Clifford Tillotson to the company and the satisfaction of an indebtedness owing to Ada Tillotson, both of which Findley got upon the assent of the offer made to the Tillotsons by Findley. Therefore there was no element of future delivery present, unless a legal inhibition intervened to prevent the consummation of Findley's intention.

[3] (3) The claim that "appellant fails to recognize the distinction between a delivery in escrow to be made upon conditions which may never be fulfilled and an actuality." This is sufficiently treated under the last two paragraphs. Respondent claims that plaintiffs have mistaken their remedy in that they should have proceeded in an action in damages for breach of covenant to convey personal property. Counsel correctly states the law that:

"In general, a court of equitable jurisdiction will not decree the transfer of personal property which has a market value and no special or unique value."

But the record reveals that this company, at the time this case was tried, was a struggling corporation with its success or its degree of success or failure as yet unproved. The facts in the case do not bring it under the principle stated in section 3387, Civil Code.

[4] It was unquestionably the intention of Findley in splitting the stock into separate certificates to hold the same for the Tillotsons until it was freed from the escrow conditions and the pooling agreement and every element of a trust was present (Souza v. First Nat. Bank of Hanford, 36 Cal. App. 388, 172 P. 175), but this action violated the provision of the escrow conditions prohibiting assignment of any part of said stock, and failed of being a trust because thereof. However, upon the release of the stock from escrow, Findley reavowed, reacknowledged and reasserted to the Tillotsons that he held their stock for them. Whereupon the Tillotsons consented to its remaining in trust with Findley (and here the close relations of the Tillotsons and Findley should be remembered) so as to preserve the pooling agreement.

[5, 6] The case was tried upon the theory that the evidence was not sufficient to constitute a trust. The allegations of the complaint are that a trust was formed because of the acceptance of the offer from Findley to Clifford Tillotson and Tillotson's engaging in the work mentioned in the offer, and at the time the stock was issued in separate certificates under the escrow. The undisputed testimony establishes this allegation, and the trust only fails because of the provision in the escrow against alienation, placed there by order of the corporation commissioner. Where the testimony is all one way on the ultimate fact, to wit, Was a trust existent at the time of the death of Findley? courts ought to go as far as possible under the pleadings, to the end that the judgment may conform to the true determination of the issue. It is the general rule that the uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony of a witness tending to establish an issuable fact in the case may not be arbitrarily disregarded by the trial court; that, to the contrary, such testimony must be accepted as proof of the fact which it is offered to establish unless it can be said that such testimony is so inherently incredible and improbable as to amount to no evidence at all. 10 Cal. Jur. § 362, and cases cited.

We find in paragraph I of the answer the following:

"That the defendants, and each of them, deny that on or about the month of February, 1920, or at any other time, Mathew W. Findley received from the Atlas Fire Brick Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of California, as trustee for Clifford Tillotson, one of the plaintiffs in this action, 2, or any, certificates representing 7½ shares of the capital stock of the Atlas Fire Brick Company."

And in paragraph III the following:

"* * * They [defendants], and each of them, deny that the said Mathew W. Findley promised or agreed prior or at the time of the issuance of said certificates, or at any other time, that he would take the same [shares of stock] in trust or for the benefit of the said plaintiff, Clifford Tillotson, or that he would indorse the same to the plaintiff Tillotson, or his assignee, upon demand or otherwise, or at all."

[7] Considering the fact that in the face of these denials Clifford Tillotson testified in full without objection being interposed as to the time that Findley reiterated his statements in regard to his possession of stock belonging to the Tillotsons, subsequent to release of the stock from escrow, it is apparent to us that the issue as to whether or not a trust of the stock existed at the time of Findley's death was before the court. "No variance between the allegation in a pleading and the proof is to be deemed material, unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits. * * *" Section 469, Code Civ. Proc.; Carter v. Baldwin, 95 Cal. 475, 30 P. 595; Antonelle v. Kennedy & Shaw Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 309, 320, 73 P. 966; Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 121 Cal. 167, 171, 175, 53 P. 573. Since the testimony is all one way, and there is no inherent improbability in it, we conclude that the evidence does not support the findings of fact, and that, therefore, the judgment based thereon must fall.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

PEOPLE v. RAYMOND et al. (Cr. 1536.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 13, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1928.

1. Jury ⇨118—Challenge to panel, not alleging departure from forms in drawing and return or omission to summon juror drawn, was properly overruled (Pen. Code, § 1059).

Defendant's objection to the panel was properly overruled under Pen. Code, § 1059, where there was no claim that there was a departure from the forms prescribed in respect to drawing and return of the jury, or that the sheriff omitted to summon one of the jurors drawn.

2. Jury ⇨131(13)—Refusal of individual examination of jurors as to acquaintance and conversation with jurors in related prosecution held not error, in view of collective inquiry and further individual inquiries.

In prosecution for compounding murder, refusal to permit defendant to examine every juror individually as to their acquaintance and conversation with jurors from panel in trial of principal, held not to have prejudiced defendant's substantial rights, where court, interrogating one of jurors as to such matter, and receiving negative reply, made same inquiry to all of jurors collectively, and jurors were individually questioned at length as to their prejudice by reason of conviction of principal, and as to whether any of them had sat in prosecution against him.

3. Criminal law ⇨1169(7)—Error, if any, in admitting declarations of codefendant in defendant's absence, was cured by similar testimony by codefendant as defendant's witness.

In prosecution for compounding a murder, error, if any, in admission of declarations and statements of codefendant, and another made at autopsy, and before coroner's jury, defendant not being present, was cured by codefendant testifying to same matter as defendant's witness.

4. Criminal law ⇨863(2)—Instruction to jury on return for further instructions that any juror refusing to accept circumstantial evidence was guilty of perjury held not prejudicial error (Pen. Code, § 118).

Court's instruction to jury returning for further instructions, and in answer to question as to result of jurors' opposition to circumstantial evidence, that any juror taking such attitude committed perjury, because they had sworn to try the case according to the evidence, held not prejudicial error; it being justified, in view of Pen. Code, § 118.

5. Indictment and Information ⇨189(1)—Defendant, charged with compounding murder, may properly be convicted of "compounding manslaughter" (Pen. Code, §§ 153, 950, 1159).

In prosecution for compounding a murder, court properly submitted to jury verdict authorizing them to find defendant guilty of compounding manslaughter, since, in view of Pen. Code, §§ 153, 950, 1159, the offense of compounding manslaughter is a lesser offense necessarily included in charge of compounding murder, and conviction of former was an acquittal of latter, and bar to further prosecution of charge of latter.

6. Compounding felony ⇨6—Evidence held to sustain conviction of compounding manslaughter.

Evidence held to sustain conviction of compounding the crime of manslaughter in receiving money from one committing crime, on understanding to conceal such crime and withhold evidence thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Dorothy MacKaye Raymond was convicted of compounding a felony, to wit, manslaughter, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Jerry Giesler and Roger Marchetti, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. An indictment was returned by the grand jury of Los Angeles county charging appellant Dorothy MacKaye Raymond and Dr. Walter James Sullivan in count 1 of being accessories to a murder committed, and in count 2 of compounding a felony, to wit, the crime of murder. Dr. Sullivan was granted a separate trial. Count 1 was dismissed by the court at the close of the people's case. Dorothy MacKaye Raymond was convicted under count 2, and appeals from the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

Appellant was the wife of Ray Raymond, the deceased, and both of them were actors. About eight weeks before his death the deceased went to San Francisco to fill a theatrical engagement, and during a part of this time appellant was doing theatrical work in Los Angeles and San Francisco. Paul Kelly was a moving picture actor, living in Hollywood, and knew both Mr. and Mrs. Raymond in New York before they came to California. While the deceased was absent from home Paul Kelly and appellant associated together. He often met her at the theater after evening performances and took her home, or to his home; and, when she was out of employment, they were in each other's company much of the time. A Japanese servant in Paul Kelly's home testified that Miss MacKaye (appellant's stage name) stayed at Mr. Kelly's house eighteen times; that she stayed over night; that he had once seen Miss MacKaye in bed with Kelly; and that he served breakfast to them in the dining room. Letters and telegrams addressed by Kelly to appellant contained passionate declarations of love. Appellant testified that she and Paul Kelly talked about getting married, but not seriously; and also that she and the deceased had talked about a separation and divorce. It also appears that Ray Raymond and the appellant had frequently quarreled over Kelly's attentions to appellant, and at one time Raymond had ordered Kelly to stay away from his home.

Ray Raymond, the deceased, arrived home from his theatrical engagement about 1 p. m. on Friday, April 15th, and was greeted by appellant. The deceased stayed at home all afternoon, playing with his 4½ year old daughter; drinking considerable gin, and becoming somewhat intoxicated. Appellant, in the middle of the afternoon, went to the home of Paul Kelly, and visited for about an hour. On the following day (Saturday) she, in company with her friend, Miss Wilkinson, again visited Paul Kelly at his home between 1 and 2 o'clock in the afternoon. They drank some gin, and appellant and Miss Wilkinson left Kelly's home about 6 p. m. Shortly before that time Kelly left the living room, and went into a back room to use the telephone, and, after telephoning, he went through the living room, where appellant, Miss Wilkinson, and Max Wagner were sitting, and then to the home of the deceased, Ray Raymond, where he arrived about 6 o'clock. Miss Lee, a colored maid in the Raymond home, admitted Kelly into the home of the deceased. According to the testimony of Miss Lee, Kelly appeared to be very angry. He and Raymond sat down on the divan, and, when the deceased referred to his wife, Miss MacKaye, Kelly struck Raymond in the face three or four times with his fist. Raymond got up, and went into the dining room. Kelly caught Raymond by the shoulder, dragged him back into the living room, and threw him toward the divan. Raymond struck his head against the divan, and then Miss Lee helped him up. Kelly and Raymond sat down on the divan, and again Kelly struck Raymond. Raymond then struck Kelly for the first time. Both men got up, and Kelly struck Raymond, and knocked him down five or six times. They were clinched and struck each other. Kelly caught Raymond, and held him by the back of the neck, and struck him in the face with his fist. Raymond staggered back again into the dining room, against the dining room table. Kelly struck Raymond again in the face. The witness testified that the entire left side of Raymond's face was swollen; his lips swollen and bleeding; his left eye swollen and purple; and his forehead bruised.

Appellant arrived home about 7:30 or 8 o'clock p. m. the same evening. The appellant testified that about 9 o'clock on that evening she again went to the home of Kelly and reprimanded him for fighting with her husband; that she remained with Kelly for about 45 minutes, drove to the beach, and returned home, where she talked with her husband until 3 o'clock a. m., when they retired. Appellant also testified that before retiring the conduct and actions of the deceased were normal, and that he did not appear to be seriously ill or injured. At 7 o'clock on the following (Sunday) morning appellant heard the deceased moaning on the floor between the twin beds, and she immediately called the servant, Miss Lee. Miss Lee testified that some time after 2 o'clock Sunday morning she saw deceased come out of his room and go into the bathroom; that he held out both hands, and acted as though he could not see, although the lights were turned on; that she next saw the deceased at 7 o'clock Sunday morning, lying on the floor between the twin beds; that he appeared to be unconscious, breathing unnaturally, with a gurgling sound, and frothing at the mouth; that, at the request of appellant, she lifted the deceased back into his bed; that Dr. Sullivan was called, and arrived about 2 o'clock p. m.; that Raymond's eye was still black, and his face swollen; that Dr. Sullivan asked appellant if Raymond had been hit, and appellant said "yes," and Dr. Sullivan said Raymond was in a serious condition, and should be removed to the hospital; that Raymond was taken to the hospital in an ambulance about 3 o'clock p. m. on Sunday; that about 6 o'clock Monday evening she answered the telephone, and Dr. Sullivan asked for Mrs. Raymond, and she told him Mrs. Raymond was on her way to his office; that Dr. Sullivan replied, "I am not going to wait here for Jesus Christ's sake; the newspaper reporters are after me; this is a police case, and I will have to report it, and, if Mrs. Raymond doesn't get here, her name will be in the newspapers tomorrow morning"; that within a few minutes afterward she conveyed the gist of this conversation to Mrs. Raymond.

The deceased died at the hospital at 5:20 o'clock the following (Tuesday) morning. Max Wagner, who lived with Kelly, testified that on Sunday afternoon, between 3 and 4 o'clock, appellant and her friend, Miss Wilkinson, came to Kelly's house, and told them that Raymond had been sent to the hospital; that they did not stay at Kelly's house very long. Kelly testified that on Tuesday morning, around 6 or 7 o'clock, he learned from Wagner, who had received the information by telephone from Miss Wilkinson, that Raymond had died that morning.

Frank H. Schoeffel, deputy coroner of Los Angeles county, testified that he had a telephone conversation with Dr. Sullivan on Tuesday morning, April 19th, about 7:30 o'clock, as follows:

"Q. Just relate the conversation? A. The party said, 'This is Dr. Sullivan, and I want to report a case that I believe is a medical case, but I just want to see what you have to say about it.' So I said, 'What are circumstances, Dr.?' And he said, 'I had a patient come to me in a state of coma two or three days ago, and he has since died.' And he felt that it was a medical case; that he could sign it. Q. Do you mean sign the death certificate? A. Sign the death certificate, and I asked him if he signed it how would he sign it, and he stated

'Acute or chronic alcoholism, with nephritis.' I asked him if there were any marks of violence on the body, and he said not to his knowledge; I said, 'Any history of violence?' and he said not to his knowledge. I asked where the body was then, and he said at the Roy Bagley Undertaking Parlors. I said, 'On whose order?' He said he believed on the order of the family. I further asked him if there was any insurance, and he said he didn't know that. During that time the chief deputy had come in, and I asked him to hold the wire until I found out what the chief deputy would say, and I told the chief deputy—Mr. Giesler: I object to that. The Court: Don't state any conversation with the coroner or his chief deputy unless it was in the presence of the defendant. A. After consulting with him, I told him it was all right for him to sign it, if the circumstances were as he reported. Mr. Murray: Did he state to you at that time that the man had a black eye? A. No, sir. Q. That he had a couple of ribs fractured? A. No, sir. Q. That he had a mark on his left chest three inches in width and four inches in length? A. No, sir. Q. Did he tell you that he had four or five bruises on the left-hand side of his forehead? A. No, sir. Q. When was the first time that you saw Dr. Sullivan after that? A. The morning of the inquest; that was two or three days afterwards."

Miss Lee testified that Dr. Sullivan came to the Raymond home about 9:30 o'clock on Tuesday morning, the day Raymond died, and conversed with Miss MacKaye and Miss Wilkinson in the sun parlor for half an hour, and then all of them left the house, and that appellant returned in half an hour, and said she had been to Dr. Sullivan's office, and he wanted her to pay his bill at once. Kelly testified that Miss Wilkinson phoned him near 11 o'clock on the morning that Raymond died that Miss MacKaye (Mrs. Raymond) wanted to borrow $800; that he went to the bank and withdrew $800, and handed it to Max Wagner, who went to appellant's house. Wagner testified that he gave the $800 which he received from Kelly to appellant that same morning. Frank M. Loomis, a friend of deceased, testified that he received a telephone call from Miss Wilkinson requesting him to come to the Raymond home, and that on his arrival Miss MacKaye gave him $800 in currency, and requested him to pay the hospital and doctor bills; she stating that the doctor's bill would be $500; that he and Miss Wilkinson went to Dr. Sullivan's office, and that he paid Dr. Sullivan $500 out of the $800 which appellant gave him, and took his receipt therefor. At 4:15 on the day of decedent's death appellant made a statement to police officers, in which she stated that there had been strained relations between herself and husband for a couple of years; that Raymond was always accusing her of seeing Paul Kelly. She was asked: "Was there anything that might arouse Mr. Raymond's temperament between you and Mr. Kelly?" and she answered:

"Well, he told me that he had forbidden me to see Paul, and Paul was my friend first, and Ray wasn't kind to me. It is a terrible thing to say since this awful thing has happened, but, after all, I can't help it, and I felt that Paul's friendship for me was very clean; it was very lovely and very beautiful, and I didn't want to give it up."

She also stated that Raymond had previously ordered Kelly out of his house; that she went over to see Kelly on Easter Sunday, and that Kelly told her how the fight had started, and that—

"he said that Ray had said a lot of terrible things about us, and wouldn't stand for it. Q. Meaning you and him? A. Yes, and our friendship. Q. That your husband had said a lot of things about you and Mr. Kelly, and Mr. Kelly said he wasn't going to stand for it? A. Yes."

At the conclusion of her statement to the police officers, appellant said:

"In case you find that his death didn't result from that, how much of this will come out? I am asking this for my baby, and I have to make a living, you know. How soon will you know?"

On or about April 19th an autopsy was performed on the body of the deceased. Dr. A. F. Wagner, autopsy surgeon, testified:

"A. I found two contusions of the forehead, shown on reflecting back the scalp, also ecchymosis of the left eye—that is, a black and blue bruised left eye. On opening the skull I found a large subdural hemorrhage, covering the entire right lateral surface of the right hemisphere of the brain. There was no fracture of the skull bones, nor any injury of the brain, except the pressure effects of the subdural hemorrhage. There were contusions of the right shoulder on its outer side, also the outer side of the left forearm, on the anterior surface of both shins, and on the left instep. There was also a contusion on the left side of the chest about three or four inches, extending outward from the left nipple to the left lateral surface of the chest. On opening the body I found the fourth rib fractured near its cartilagenous junction and the fifth rib cracked, but not completely fractured, about an inch to the left of the seat of fracture in the fourth rib. Both lungs showed considerable hypostatic congestion, and the anterior portion of the right lung was in a condition of pneumonia, sections of which sank in water, constituting a hypostatic pneumonia. The heart was normal; the liver markedly fatty, and the kidneys slightly swollen, but normal in color, and free from organic disease. The system contained a small quantity of decidedly greenish bile contents. I subsequently had a microscopic examination made of the kidneys; that, under the microscope, showed a few sclerotic changes in the kidney. Q. Anything else other than that? A. No, sir. Q. Did you form an opinion as to what was the cause of death, Doctor? A. I did. Q. What was it? A. The cause of death was hypostatic pneumonia, following extensive subdural hemorrhage on the right side of the brain. I added 'contributory acute alcoholism.' Q. Now, what was the sole or main cause of death, Doctor? A. Subdural hemorrhage. Q. What is a subdural hemorrhage? A. A subdural hemorrhage is a hemorrhage between the dura mater, one of the coverings of the brain, and the brain itself."

He further testified that the hemorrhage was traumatic, or one caused by an injury. Dr. Sullivan and Dr. McHugh, a consulting physician, were present at the autopsy. Dr. Wagner testified:

"A. About the first thing I asked was, directing my question to both of the doctors, I asked them what the history of the case was. Dr. McHugh spoke up, and said, 'We don't know much about this case. He was on a spree for several days, and we think he fell.' Q. Did Dr. Sullivan say anything to that? A. Dr. Sullivan was standing right by, and he never said anything."

The witness further testified that he spoke of the advisability of opening up the head, and Dr. Sullivan said:

"Yes; we want to open up the head because we suspect either a skull fracture or a hemorrhage," and that the spinal puncture showed blood, which caused him to suspect that there was a hemorrhage or a skull fracture.

Dr. Wagner further testified:

"Mr. Kemp: Did Dr. Sullivan or Dr. McHugh in Dr. Sullivan's presence tell you that Ray Raymond had been in a fight? A. No, sir."

The foregoing is a review of the main points in the testimony relied upon by the prosecution. It is contradicted in many respects by the testimony of defendant's witnesses; but we believe the statement of the case to be sufficient for the purpose of discussion of the points raised by appellant.

[1, 2] The first point presented by appellant is that the court erred in limiting and restricting appellant's examination of the jurors on voir dire, and in refusing the request of the defendant to examine every juror individually with respect to their acquaintance and conversation, if any, with the jurors from the panel who had sat as trial jurors in the case of People v. Kelly, wherein defendant Kelly was charged with the crime of the murder of Ray Raymond. The superior court of Los Angeles county is divided into a number of departments. The trial of this case was had in department 21, and jurors were first called from department 24. At the commencement of the trial, and before trial jurors were called to the jury box for examination, appellant interposed an objection to the panel upon the ground that it was from this panel that the jurors were selected who sat in the case of People v. Paul Kelly when he was tried for the murder of Ray Raymond and convicted of the crime of manslaughter, and that the same jurors called in appellant's case were examined in that case and excused. No claim is made that any juror who sat in Kelly's trial also acted, or was called, as a juror in appellant's case. The trial court overruled appellant's objection to the panel. A challenge to the panel can be founded only upon a material departure from the forms prescribed in respect to the drawing and return of the jury in civil actions, or on an intentional omission of the sheriff to summon one or more of the jurors drawn. Pen. Code, § 1059. Appellant made no claim that there was a departure from the forms prescribed in respect to the drawing or return of the jury, or that the sheriff omitted to summon one of the jurors drawn. Appellant's objection to the panel was therefore properly overruled. People v. Giminiani, 76 Cal. App. 352, 244 P. 625.

The jurors were then examined collectively by the court as to their general qualifications. Mrs. Lillehoff, the first juror called, was then examined by appellant's counsel, and stated that she had been called as a juror in the Kelly Case, and was challenged and excused; that she did not hear anything concerning the Kelly Case in the courtroom during the time she was present; that some of the members of the panel were selected as jurors in the Kelly Case: that, after the Kelly Case was concluded, she talked to one juror who sat in that case concerning some of the facts of the case, and that she did not form any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of Mr. Kelly concerning the charge of murder against him. The trial court then questioned Mrs. Lillehoff as follows:

"The Court: Just a moment before you pass to Mrs. Kirkwood. Let me ask you, Mrs. Lillehoff, then, has anything you have heard said by any of your fellow jurors from the panel of department 24, or by anybody else, or any discussion you have had with any one, no matter who it was, whether on the jury or not, caused you to form any opinion whatsoever as to the facts of this case? A. No, sir. Q. You have not been influenced in any way by anything you have heard either for or against the defendant in this case or for or against the people; is that correct? A. No, sir, I have not. Q. Now, as to the rest of you ladies and gentlemen from department 24, would you all answer that question as Mrs. Lillehoff had answered it, or different? (No response.) I take it you would all answer the same way as she did, then. Then that ground has already been covered, Mr. Giesler. Mr. Giesler: Am I precluded from interrogating each individual juror as to the matter? The Court: Yes. They have already answered the question. Mr. Giesler: I challenge Mrs. Lillehoff for cause. The Court: Better wait until it is time, hadn't you? Mr. Giesler: For cause. Mr. Murray: We resist that, your honor. The Court: Challenge not allowed. In the first place, no cause has been stated. Mr. Giesler: I therefore ask permission to interrogate the other individual jurors on the same grounds, so as to ascertain their state of mind concerning the action. The Court: You may interrogate any of the jurors you desire, except that the court will not permit you to repeat any of the questions that have been asked and answered by the jurors in the box. Mr. Giesler: I appreciate that I could not do that, except this, I did ask special permission of your honor to interrogate the individual jurors. The Court: The court would not allow its time or the time of the jury to be wasted by repeating questions.

Mr. Giesler: But in this particular case—The Court: You have heard what the court said. Mr. Giesler: Very well, sir. Now, if your honor please, if I cannot interrogate these jurors individually, then, simply as to matters I am permitted to do so, may I interrogate them collectively in regard to the matters I desire to interrogate them about? The Court: Oh, yes. It would save time if you can do that as much as possible."

After examining several of the jurors individually as to occupation, counsel for appellant examined the jury as a whole at great length, among other matters, as to whether they would permit any prejudice to influence their verdict, and whether they would require the prosecution to prove the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of the particular crime as charged, and whether they would allow the fact that Paul Kelly had been found guilty in another case to influence their verdict in the case on trial. After both sides had passed the jury for cause, peremptory challenges were exercised, and the court questioned the first juror called after a peremptory challenge, as follows:

"By the Court: Q. Mrs. Eaton, did you hear the general statement of the nature of the case which I made to the others in the box with you? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you have heard all the questions that have been asked both by the court and counsel on both sides of this case? A. I have. Q. Would you answer any of those questions, either those asked by the court or Mr. Giesler or Mr. Murray, any differently than those in the box with you answered the questions? A. I would not. Q. You would answer them just the same as they did, would you? A. Yes, sir. The Court: All asked and answered, then except as to your occupation, and address and so forth."

The court permitted the appellant to examine this juror as to whether she was selected as a juror in the Kelly Case, and at no time refused appellant the right to ask this question individually of each juror. The juror was interrogated as follows:

"Q. Were you selected as a juror in the Kelly case? A. No, sir. Q. Were you examined as a juror? A. No, sir. Q. Were you in the courtroom? A. I came in a few minutes before half past four when the jury was being called. Q. But you got here too late? A. Yes, sir. Q. Are you acquainted with the ladies and gentlemen, whichever they may have been, from your department, who sat on that case? The Court: That question was covered in the questions that were asked of Mrs. Lillehoff, and Mrs. Eaton has answered that her answers would be the same as Mrs. Lillehoff's. Mr. Giesler: So I am precluded from that, your honor? The Court: Yes; that has been covered already."

All other jurors called after the jury had been passed for cause were examined by the court in substantially the same manner as Mrs. Eaton was examined, and at least one juror was specifically asked by the court as to whether she had served in the Kelly Case; whether anything she had heard from fellow jurors or from anybody else had caused her to form any opinion one way or the other on any of the facts in this case. Appellant claims error on the part of the trial court in refusing to allow her to interrogate each juror individually as to whether or not he or she had talked about the Kelly Case with a juror who sat in that case, and, if so, whether the juror had formed any opinion as to the facts of the case on trial from what he or she had heard from such juror. Appellant cites the case of People v. Riordan (Cal. App.) 250 P. 190, where the trial court refused to permit certain questions to be asked of each individual juror when these same questions had been asked and answered by the jurors collectively, and states that the case is not to be used as authority in this case, for the reason that the appellate court only qualifiedly approved the action of the trial court in that case by holding that, under the circumstances of the case, there was no invasion of the defendant's substantial rights to his prejudice; also, that in the Riordan Case the questions which defendant desired to ask the jury individually related to matters for a peremptory challenge, and not a challenge for cause, whereas, in her case, the question related to matters upon which a challenge for cause could be predicated. In the Riordan Case it is said:

"Some of the questions put to the juror Buchanan by counsel for the defendant would, if answered, have been a possible basis for challenge for cause, but the court ruled that these questions when asked of one juror had been asked and answered, and the record shows this to be the case; that is, that the jurors other than Buchanan answered collectively. It is usually better practice to have each juror say for himself whether or not he would answer any of the questions asked of another juror differently from the answers given by the latter. When the jurors are examined en masse, there is a considerable likelihood of a juror not fully understanding the question and remaining silent, when should he give an answer, it might show ground for challenge. Also, the reporter might easily be mistaken in concluding that all of the prospective jurors being questioned had responded 'yes,' or 'no,' and yet we cannot say, as a matter of law, that the method pursued in this case, under the circumstances shown by the record, did not result in the questions asked of juror Buchanan being answered by the others. It is certain that there is nothing to impeach the record, which shows that they were answered. In some states it is provided by statute that the examination of jurors in criminal cases shall be directed to 'each juror,' 'any juror,' or 'a juror,' while in other states such limitation applies only to capital cases. It has been held, however, that in the absence of such legislation the examination of jurors is largely within the sound judicial discretion of the trial court. Comm. v. Nye, 240 Pa. 359, 87 A. 585; State v. McGee, 80 Conn. 614, 69 A. 1059; State v. Munch, 57 Mo. App. 207; Connors v. U.

S., 158 U. S. 408, 15 S. Ct. 951, 39 L. Ed. 1033; Murphy v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 7 F.(2d) 85. It has repeatedly been decided that, in jurisdictions where no statutory limitation or restriction of such examination to individual jurors exists, a judgment will not be reversed unless it shall affirmatively appear that the defendant was precluded from interrogating the jurors upon matters not theretofore covered, or that any juror who served was prejudiced or not qualified. Nichols v. State, 97 Tex. Cr. R. 174, 260 S. W. 1050; Murphy v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 7 F.(2d) 85; State v. Munch, 57 Mo. App. 207; Johnson v. State, 29 Wyo. [181] 121, 211 P. 484. While not intending to encourage this method of examining jurors, we cannot say that its use in this case constituted an invasion of the defendant's substantial rights to his prejudice."

As appears from the testimony hereinbefore quoted in the present case, the court, after interrogating Mrs. Lillehoff as to whether anything she had heard either from fellow jurors or any one else would influence her opinion as to the facts of the case on trial, received a negative reply, and then inquired from the rest of the jurors as to whether they would answer as Mrs. Lillehoff had answered. The record shows there was no response. Then the court said:

"I take it you would all answer the same as she did, then. Then that ground has already been covered, Mr. Giesler."

Under such circumstances, the silence of the jury, we believe, constituted an affirmative answer in the absence of any affirmative showing to the contrary. Subsequently, the court inquired of each juror upon entering the box whether he or she would answer any questions that were asked by the court or counsel in a different manner than by the others then sitting in the jury box. Each juror replied in the negative. As in the Riordan Case, so in the instant case, we cannot say, as a matter of law, that the method of examining the jurors here pursued, under the circumstances shown in this case, did not result in the questions asked of juror Lillehoff being answered by the others; nor that such method of examination constituted an invasion of the defendant's substantial rights to her prejudice. The case of People v. Carmichael, 198 Cal. 534, 246 P. 62, is to be distinguished from the present case, in that the Carmichael Case held it was prejudicial error for the court to refuse to permit defendant's counsel to examine prospective jurors as to whether they knew that the case was tried before; whether the failure of the former jury to agree would prejudice them against the defendant; whether they had heard how the former jury stood; whether such information would prejudice them against the defendant; whether they recognized that evidence might be produced on the second trial which was not brought out on the first; and whether knowledge as to how the former jury stood had left their minds as open and impartial as if they had never heard of the case. Furthermore, the court forbade appellant from further mentioning the former jury to the members of the present jury. No such error was committed in the case at bar; to the contrary, similar questions were permitted to be asked of the first juror, and then the jurors were asked collectively whether they would answer in the same manner. In the case of People v. Wismer, 58 Cal. App. 679, 209 P. 259, cited by appellant, the defendant was compelled to accept a juror who was disqualified by reason of actual bias by reason of the fact that the juror sat in a previous trial of a similar offense, and formed an opinion that the organization of which defendant was charged with being a member was an unlawful organization. In the present case, there is no showing that any juror sat in a previous trial of a similar offense, or that such juror had formed any opinion as to the facts in the case on trial, or as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant. Counsel for appellant questioned the jury at length upon whether or not they were, or any one of them was, prejudiced because other jurors had found Paul Kelly guilty of killing appellant's husband, of which crime she was accused of compounding. Moreover, it does affirmatively appear that no juror who sat in the Kelly Case acted as a juror in the case on trial.

[3] Appellant next complains that the court erred in admitting in evidence the testimony of appellant's codefendant, Dr. Walter James Sullivan, given at the coroner's inquest held a day or two after the death of Ray Raymond, which testimony was given without the presence of the defendant and appellant. Appellant contends that such testimony was inadmissible as being hearsay, being a declaration made by an alleged coconspirator outside the presence of his codefendant after the termination of the alleged conspiracy; and also that the testimony was in the nature of an admission made without the presence of the conspirator on trial, and not in furtherance of the object of the conspiracy. Count 2 of the indictment charges:

"That the said defendants, Dorothy MacKaye Raymond and Dr. Walter James Sullivan, on or about the 19th day of April, 1927, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, after the commission of the said crime, and having knowledge of the commission thereof, did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously take and receive the sum and value of $500, lawful money of the United States, from said Paul Kelly, upon the agreement and understanding had with said Paul Kelly to compound and conceal the said crime of murder aforesaid, so committed by the said Paul Kelly, and to withhold evidence thereof, and to abstain from any prosecution thereof, and that, in pursuance of said agreement and understanding, the said defendants Dorothy MacKaye Raymond and Dr. Walter James Sullivan did then and there inform and say to one Frank H. Schoeffel, who was then and there a deputy coroner of the said Los Angeles county, that the said Raymond had died of natural causes alone, and that the body of said Raymond bore no signs of physical injury or of violence, and that the said Ray Raymond had died of acute alcoholism with neuritis and Bright's disease."

The testimony of Dr. Sullivan so admitted and complained of by appellant contains statements tending to prove appellant had concealed from Dr. Sullivan at the time he was called to attend decedent the fact that decedent had been in a fight at his home and with whom. It contained an answer given by the doctor to the effect that the reason he did not issue the death certificate was that, when he called the coroner's office, he did not wish to do so until he had heard from appellant; that appellant told him to use his own judgment, if he didn't think there was a skull fracture. He was asked the following question, and gave the following answer, which was read into the record:

"Q. Didn't Mrs. Raymond tell you that she didn't want any publicity about this case? A. Yes; on the morning that he died she said that she didn't want any."

Conceding without deciding, that the admission of the doctor's testimony given before the coroner's jury was error, such error was cured by the testimony of Dr. Sullivan, given as appellant's witness at the trial, when he testified as to those matters to which he had testified at the coroner's inquest. The witness testified on direct as follows:

"Q. Miss MacKaye, did tell you the first time when you called on Sunday that he had a fight? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did she tell you with whom? A. I asked her with whom, and she said she didn't know."

The witness was further interrogated, and answered as follows:

"Q. Now, there has been introduced here a transcript of the coroner's testimony of yourself, and there is one answer I would like to have you look at and explain what that was or what it means, if anything. Page 24, Mr. Murray, line 4. Have you read that answer? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you give that answer as it is written there or not? A. I don't recall giving it exactly that way. I think I misspoke the name there. Q. I will read you this question and answer: 'Q.—Did you issue a death certificate? A.—Well, when I called the coroner's office, I didn't want to go on until I heard from Miss MacKaye, and Miss MacKaye said to use my own judgment, if I didn't think there was a skull fracture, and about that time the chief of police of Hollywood called up, and I made up my mind to sign nothing until you people had taken charge of the body.' Did you rely at all upon the judgment of Miss MacKaye as to what was the matter with Mr. Raymond? A. No; that was in reference to the coroner's office. I think I misspoke the word 'Miss MacKaye' for the coroner's office; there is no connection whatsoever."

The witness further testified on direct examination:

"Q. Did she at any time, directly or indirectly, seek to have you hush up or to cover up the cause of death? A. No, sir. Q. Or anything of that character? A. No, sir. There was one time she said something about publicity, and I have been trying to recall the exact date of that, but when she was talking about that, she stated that Mr. Raymond was very popular, and very prominent, and I think I testified at the coroner's inquest that was the day he died. As I recall, that was preparatory to that and in reference to the hospital when she said he was very prominent and very popular, and she hoped he wouldn't have a lot of publicity."

On cross-examination the witness testified as follows:

"Q. Did Miss MacKaye tell you that she didn't want any publicity about the case, Doctor? A. Yes, sir."

Appellant cites People v. Oldham, 111 Cal. 648, 44 P. 312, as holding that error in admitting the declarations of a coconspirator, made after the commission of the crime as to the details of the crime, is not cured by the fact that such coconspirator testified to the same statements. The Oldham Case is to be distinguished from the instant case in that in the Oldham Case the witness testified as a witness for the prosecution, while here the witness testified as a witness for the defendant and appellant. Here the error, if any, was cured by the appellant herself in calling Dr. Sullivan to the witness stand and having him testify in her behalf to the same matter concerning which he had testified before the coroner's jury. It follows that, whether the evidence was competent or incompetent, appellant cannot now complain.

Appellant attacks the rulings of the trial court in admitting in evidence the declarations and statements of Drs. Sullivan and McHugh made at the autopsy held on the afternoon of the day of decedent's death, and subsequently to a telephone conversation with the deputy coroner, alleged in the charging part of the indictment, upon the same grounds that she complains of the rulings of the trial court in admitting in evidence the declarations and statements given at the autopsy. The testimony to which objection is taken was given by Dr. A. F. Wagner, autopsy surgeon, and L. P. Ball, his assistant. In that case the error, if any, committed by the trial court in admitting such testimony, was cured by the testimony of Dr. Sullivan and Dr. McHugh, offered on the part of the defense.

[4] Appellant contends that the trial court erred in giving an oral instruction on the question of the belief of jurors in circumstantial evidence. After the jury had retired for deliberation, they returned to the court for further instructions, when the following proceedings occurred at 4:37 p. m.:

"The Court: Ladies and gentlemen, I understand that you want some further advice or instructions of some kind? A Juror: Yes, sir. We want further advice along what is considered as circumstantial evidence. The Court: Well, I can't give you any further instructions than I have on that, because that is all there is to the definition of circumstantial evidence, that it is any other evidence than the evidence of a direct eyewitness. In other words, it may consist of declarations made by the parties, circumstances that have been developed in the evidence in any particular case, anything that is in evidence before you other than the testimony of a direct eyewitness. Circumstantial evidence includes everything but that, and that is as far as I can go on an instruction of that kind, because that is all there is to it. Any other questions that you have? The Juror (to another juror): If you want to ask your question, go ahead and ask it. Another Juror: We don't know whether we would be permitted to ask that question. The Court: You can always ask, you know. I may not be permitted to answer it, but I can't tell until I know what it is you want. What is it you want to know? Go ahead and ask any question that you want to, ladies and gentlemen. Of course, as I say, it may be a question I am not permitted to answer. The Juror: Judge, if one is opposed to circumstantial evidence, don't believe in it, what then? The Court: If any one on this jury takes that attitude, then they have committed perjury, because you have sworn to try the case according to the evidence, and, if any one takes that view, they haven't any business on this or any other jury. Jurors are supposed to be people of sound minds, and to be able to understand the instructions of the court, and to abide by them. Now, are there any other questions? A Juror: No. The Court: You know, you might find people on the jury who are opposed to the doctrine that the earth is round, but you are supposed to be people of ordinary intelligence and to understand instructions and act upon them intelligently. You heard the oath when you were asked as to your qualifications."

Subsequently the court stated:

"Now, I want to give you folks all the time you need. Of course this case has taken a long while, and I want you to have all the time you need, and, if you haven't agreed on a verdict, why, we will say, half past five, then I will hear from you tomorrow morning. But don't think the court is going to hurry you in any way. You are entitled to all the time you want. If you need the time, take all that you need."

Thereupon the jury retired for further deliberation, and at 4:50 p. m. returned a verdict.

Appellant urges that language such as here used could have no other effect than to intimidate and coerce the juror, and cause him to bow his will to that of the majority because of his fear of the consequences. It is urged that it would have been much more proper for the court to have ascertained what was in the mind of the juror, and to have fairly and succinctly explained to him the value of circumstantial evidence and its construction in the eyes of the law, rather than to have told him that he was guilty of perjury and questioned intelligence, and not fit to serve on this or any other jury. Appellant further contends that the speed with which the verdict was returned should be indicative of the harm done by such language. It is to be conceded that the remarks of the court could have been expressed in less direct terms; but we have here to determine only whether the language as used constituted reversible error. The question itself disclosed what was in the mind of the juror, and, in our opinion the reply of the court was not a misstatement of the law. It was not within the right of any juror to oppose circumstantial evidence, or refuse to consider it, and so to do constituted a violation of his oath as a juror. The jurors were sworn to answer such questions as might be propounded to them touching their qualifications to sit as jurors in the case, and were asked:

"Would all of you, do you think, be able to base your verdict on the evidence as you receive it here in court and upon the instructions of the court, and nothing else? (Various members of the jury answered in the affirmative.)"

The jury was instructed as to the law of circumstantial evidence as follows:

"There are two classes of evidence recognized and admitted in courts of justice, upon either of which juries may lawfully find an accused guilty of crime. One is direct evidence, which is the direct testimony of an eyewitness to a transaction, and the other is circumstantial evidence, which includes all evidence other than that of an eyewitness. Such evidence may consist of statements by defendant, plans laid for the commission of the crime; in short, any acts, declarations, or circumstances admitted in evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. There is nothing in the nature of circumstantial evidence which renders it less reliable than the other class of evidence. One may as well swear falsely to an absolute knowledge of the facts as to a number of facts from which, if true, the facts on which the guilt or innocence depends must inevitably follow. If upon consideration of the whole case you are satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, you should so find, irrespective of whether such certainty has been produced by direct evidence or circumstantial evidence. The law makes no distinction between circumstantial evidence and direct evidence in the degree of proof required for conviction, but only requires that the jury shall be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt by evidence of either the one character or the other, or both."

Section 118 of the Penal Code reads:

"Every person who, having taken an oath that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly before any competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any of the cases in which such an oath may by law be administered, willfully and contrary to such oath, states as true any material matter which he knows to be false, is guilty of perjury."

In the case of In re De Martini, 47 Cal. App. 228, 190 P. 468, it is said:

"The oath of a prospective juror on his voir dire examination binds him, under the pains and penalties of perjury, to truthfully answer the questions that may be propounded to him by either court or counsel. The language of section 118 of the Penal Code is certainly broad enough to include the offense of perjury when committed by a prospective juror upon his voir dire examination, and to hold otherwise would certainly be to open the door wide to all forms of collusion in the selection of jurors, if false answers knowingly and corruptly made under such circumstances can be given with impunity."

After a juror has answered under oath that he will base his verdict on the evidence and on the instructions of the court, and after the court has instructed him on the value and effect of circumstantial evidence, the juror cannot consistently say, at the time he is deliberating with his fellow jurors on a verdict, that he is opposed to, and does not believe in, circumstantial evidence. A false statement concerning such a fact, when made by a prospective juror under examination, constitutes perjury. And, under the circumstances existing in this case, the court had the right to use the language necessary to convey such information to the jury, when requested by a member of the jury, as in this case. The cases cited by appellant in support of her claim that the trial court should not say or do anything which might bring to bear upon the jury an influence not compatible with an unbiased verdict are cases where the court commented on the weight of the evidence, or the credibility of a witness. In one case relied upon by the appellant, the court referred to the deceased as the "victim." People v. Williams, 17 Cal. 142. In People v. Matthai, 135 Cal. 442, 449, 67 P. 694, the court gave an instruction erroneously stating the facts; in People v. Frank, 71 Cal. App. 575, 236 P. 189, the court recommended to the jury the high standing of two prosecuting witnesses; in People v. McDonald, 167 Cal. 545, 140 P. 256, the trial court stated that a witness for the prosecution had been courteous, kind, and modest; in People v. Derwae, 155 Cal. 592, 102 P. 266, the district attorney persisted in asking improper questions of the defendant. In the case of People v. Mahoney, 258 P. 607, the Supreme Court said:

"When, as in this case, the trial court persists in making discourteous and disparaging remarks to a defendant's counsel and witnesses, and utters frequent comment from which the jury may plainly perceive that the testimony of the witnesses is not believed by the judge, and in other ways discredits the cause of the defense, it has transcended so far beyond the pale of judicial fairness as to render a new trial necessary."

And in State v. Tulip, 9 Kan. App. 454, 60 P. 659, the following proceedings occurred:

"What are we going to do with a man who claims he don't believe any of the witnesses at all? Court: I suppose you can argue with him. That is all I know to do. I don't suppose there is any man but who will act with some reason. * * * I put you in the box because you are 12 decent, sensible men; and I presume you will act that way, and I don't presume anything to the contrary. If you ask me what you are going to do with any man who acts the fool—but I don't suppose that you are, any of you, that kind of men. I suppose that you are twelve honest, conscientious men, and will act conscientiously according to your best judgment."

In each of the foregoing cases the trial court commented on the weight of the evidence, or credibility of witnesses, except that in one case the district attorney was guilty of misconduct. In the present case there was neither comment on the evidence nor on the credibility of witnesses. While we do not fully approve of the language employed by the trial court in conveying its ideas to the jury, yet we cannot say that we find any prejudicial error therein.

[5] Appellant next urges that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that, if they found that Paul Kelly was responsible for the death of Ray Raymond, but that his act constituted manslaughter and not murder, they should find the defendant not guilty, and in giving and submitting to the jury a verdict in the form of the one returned against this defendant. Count 2 of the indictment reads as follows:

"For a further and separate cause of action, being a different offense of the same class of crimes and offenses, and connected in its commission with the offense set forth in count 1 hereof, the said Dorothy MacKaye Raymond and Dr. Walter James Sullivan are accused by the grand jury of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, by this indictment, of the crime of compounding a felony, a felony, committed at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, and before the finding of this indictment as follows, to wit: That on or about the 19th day of April, 1927, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, one Paul Kelly did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, and with malice aforethought, kill and murder one Ray Raymond, a human being; that the said defendants Dorothy MacKaye Raymond and Dr. Walter James Sullivan, on or about the 19th day of April, 1927, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, after the commission of the said crime, and having knowledge of the commission thereof, did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously take and receive the sum and value of $500, lawful money of the United States, from said Paul Kelly, upon the agreement and understanding had with said Paul Kelly to compound and conceal the said crime of murder aforesaid, so committed by the said Paul Kelly, and to withhold evidence thereof, and to abstain from any prosecution thereof, and that, in pursuance of said agreement and understanding, the said defendants, Dorothy MacKaye Raymond and Dr. Walter James Sullivan, did then and there inform and say to one Frank H. Schoeffel, who was then and there a deputy coroner of the said Los Angeles county, that the said Raymond had died of natural causes alone, and that the body of said Raymond bore no signs of physical injury or of violence, and that the said Ray Raymond had died of acute alcoholism with neuritis and Bright's disease; whereas in truth and in fact the body of the said Ray Raymond showed numerous marks and bruises and other evidence of violence, and the death of the said Ray Raymond was caused by injuries received by reason of blows struck said Ray Raymond by the said Paul Kelly as aforesaid. Contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California."

The court instructed the jury as follows:

"You are instructed that, if you believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that on or about the 19th day of April, 1927, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, one Paul Kelly did kill one Ray Raymond, a human being, and that in so doing said Paul Kelly was guilty either of murder or of manslaughter, and that the said defendant Dorothy MacKaye Raymond and Dr. Walter James Sullivan, on or about the 19th day of April, 1927, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, after the commission of the said crime, and having knowledge of the commission thereof, did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously take and receive the sum and value of $500, lawful money of the United States, from said Paul Kelly, upon the agreement and understanding had with said Paul Kelly, to compound and conceal the said crime aforesaid, so committed by the said Paul Kelly, or to withhold evidence thereof, or to abstain from any prosecution thereof, you should find the defendant Dorothy MacKaye Raymond guilty as charged in count 2 of the indictment."

The jury returned the following verdict:

"We, the jury in the above-entitled action, find the defendant guilty of compounding a felony, to wit, manslaughter, a felony, as charged in the indictment."

Appellant urges that there are no degrees in the crime of compounding a felony; that, since the prosecution elected to accuse the defendant with the crime of compounding a murder, it was incumbent upon them to establish that offense; that the jury has found that the preceding crime necessary to conviction, to wit, murder, has not been committed, nevertheless they have proceeded to convict the defendant, and returned a verdict provided to them by the court for a different offense than charged in a manner not provided by law. It must be conceded that there is considerable force to the argument of appellant, yet no case directly in point is cited; nor have we been able to find any case holding that a defendant charged with the crime of compounding the crime of murder may not be convicted of compounding the crime of manslaughter, a lesser crime necessarily included in the crime of murder. As stated by appellant, it has been held in this state that manslaughter is a distinct crime

(People v. Huntington, 8 Cal. App. 612, 97 P. 760), and that a verdict of manslaughter acquits the defendant of murder (People v. Smith, 134 Cal. 453, 66 P. 669; Huntington v. Superior Court, 5 Cal. App. 288, 90 P. 141). It has also been held that the offense of manslaughter is included in the charge of murder. People v. Muhlner, 115 Cal. 303, 305, 47 P. 128; People v. Cyty, 11 Cal. App. 702, 706, 106 P. 257. Section 1159 of the Penal Code provides:

"The jury may find the defendant guilty of any offense, the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged, or of an attempt to commit the offense."

It follows that, if appellant had been placed on trial for the crime of murder, and had been found guilty of the crime of manslaughter, she could not complain. We see no difference from the foregoing in the case at bar. Where, as in this case, the indictment charges the crime of murder as having been compounded and concealed, and the proof shows that it was the crime of manslaughter that was compounded and concealed, the defendant is in no way prejudiced thereby, since the crime of manslaughter is necessarily included in the crime of murder. An examination of the indictment fortifies our conclusion. The indictment charges defendants with compounding a felony, after the commission of the crime of murder of Ray Raymond by Paul Kelly:

"Having knowledge of the commission thereof, did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously take and receive the sum and value of $500, lawful money of the United States, from said Paul Kelly, upon the agreement and understanding had with the said Paul Kelly to compound and conceal the said crime of murder aforesaid, so committed by the said Paul Kelly."

We believe the gist of the charge to be that defendants, having knowledge of the willful, unlawful, and felonious killing of Ray Raymond by Paul Kelly, did unlawfully take and receive from Paul Kelly the sum of $500 upon the agreement with Paul Kelly to compound and conceal the said unlawful and felonious killing. The gravamen of the offense consists in stifling public prosecution, or in some way perverting public justice. 12 Corpus Juris, p. 305. An indictment for compounding a crime, as for crimes generally, must contain a statement of acts constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. People v. Bryon, 103 Cal. 675, 37 P. 754; Pen. Code, § 950. In section 153 of the Penal Code it is provided as follows:

"Every person who, having knowledge of the actual commission of a crime, takes money or property of another, or any gratuity or reward, or any engagement, or promise thereof, upon any agreement or understanding to compound or conceal such crime, or to abstain from any prosecution thereof, or to withhold any evidence thereof, except in the cases provided for by law, in which crimes may be compromised by leave of court, is punishable as follows: 1. By imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years, or in a county jail not exceeding one year, where the crime was punishable by death or imprisonment in the state prison for life; 2. By imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding three years, or in the county jail not exceeding six months, where the crime was punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for any other term than for life; 3. By imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six months, or by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, where the crime was a misdemeanor."

In view of the provisions of section 1159 and section 153 of the Penal Code, we conclude that in the case at bar the indictment does contain a statement of facts in ordinary and concise language constituting the offense of compounding the crime of murder, or of any crime necessarily included in the offense of compounding the crime of murder, including manslaughter, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. In our opinion, the offense of compounding the crime of manslaughter is a lesser offense necessarily included in the charge of compounding the crime of murder. The conviction of the lesser offense of compounding the crime of manslaughter was an acquittal of the charge of the greater offense of compounding the crime of murder, and was a bar to further prosecution of the charge of compounding the crime of murder, so that defendant was not prejudiced by such conviction. It follows that no error was committed by the trial court in giving the instruction and submitting the verdict authorizing the jury to find the defendant guilty of compounding the crime of manslaughter.

[6] Finally, appellant claims that the evidence is legally insufficient to sustain the verdict. We have reviewed the entire evidence, and, while there is much conflict, we believe the evidence offered by the prosecution, as heretofore outlined, is sufficient to support the verdict. The evidence offered by the prosecution tended to prove that appellant and Paul Kelly were associating in intimate relations; that appellant frequently had differences with her husband, Ray Raymond, concerning these relations; that Ray Raymond had ordered Paul Kelly to stay away from his home; that appellant was in Paul Kelly's home on many occasions both before and after Ray Raymond's death; that Kelly telephoned to Raymond while appellant was present in Kelly's home, and immediately Kelly went to Raymond's house, and beat Raymond up so severely that the blows delivered by Kelly resulted in Raymond's death; that appellant called her codefendant, Dr. Sullivan, to attend Raymond; that, upon Raymond's death,

Dr. Sullivan had a conference with appellant, and she then made payment of his bill for medical services, which was the sum of $500, the money being furnished by Paul Kelly, with whom appellant had been in conference after the death of Raymond; that appellant and Dr. Sullivan were seeking to avoid publicity in regard to the cause of Raymond's death; that Dr. Sullivan concealed from the coroner the fact that Raymond had been injured in the fight. These facts, together with other evidence of the prosecution, justified the jury in concluding that Ray Raymond met his death as a result of the blows struck by Paul Kelly, and that appellant committed the crime of compounding a felony, to wit, manslaughter, after the commission of said crime and having knowledge thereof, in willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously taking and receiving the sum and value of $500 from Paul Kelly upon the agreement and understanding had with said Paul Kelly to compound and conceal the said crime, and withhold evidence thereof, and abstain from any prosecution thereof.

After an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, we cannot say that the errors complained of resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

87 Cal. App. 301

GAS APPLIANCE SALES CO., Inc., v. W. B. BASTIAN MFG. CO. (Civ. 6053.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 7, 1927.

1. Corporations ⚡503(3)—Affidavit of president of defendant corporation regarding its residence and principal place of business, being uncontradicted, was conclusive on motion for change of venue.

On motion for change of venue, affidavit of president of defendant corporation, being uncontradicted with respect to its residence and principal place of business, was conclusive in that regard.

2. Venue ⚡7—Time and place for consummation of contract, as regards venue, is place where and time when last act necessary to complete its validity is performed.

Time and place for consummation of contract, as regards venue of suit thereon, is place where and time when last act necessary to complete its validity is performed.

3. Appeal and error ⚡1024(3)—Conflict between caption of contract and allegation of affiant regarding place of consummation of contract must be resolved in favor of judgment granting change of venue.

In action for damages for breach of contract, conflict between caption of agreement and allegation of defendant affiant as to place where contract was finally consummated must be resolved in favor of trial court's judgment granting change of venue.

4. Evidence ⚡414—Date of writing may be controverted by other evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 23).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 23, providing that it is a disputable presumption that a writing is truly dated, date may be controverted by other evidence.

5. Venue ⚡68—While place of execution designated in contract is prima facie location where it is made, this may be rebutted; "date" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 23).

While place of execution designated in contract is prima facie the location where it is made, this may be rebutted by other evidence, since term "date," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 23, includes both time and place when and where written instrument is deemed to have been made.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Date.]

6. Evidence ⚡385—Conclusive presumption of truth of facts recited in written instrument refers only to essential facts necessary to determine obligations of parties (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 2).

Conclusive presumption of truth of facts recited in written instrument by the parties thereto, as declared by provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 2, has reference only to essential facts therein contained which are necessary to determine obligations or liabilities of contracting parties.

7. Venue ⚡7—Where contract is accepted by mailing, delivery is determined by time and place of mailing.

Although contract may purport to have been acknowledged in one county, upon competent evidence that it was in fact approved, executed, and mailed by one of parties from another county, and that it was not finally accepted or executed until mailing thereof, contract will be deemed to have been consummated at time and place where last act necessary to its validity was performed, and, under such circumstances, delivery would be determined by time and place where and when document was mailed to party entitled thereto with proper address affixed and postage prepaid.

8. Corporations ⚡503(3)—Conclusions of pleader will not create prima facie case entitling one to maintain action at county other than that of defendant corporation's residence (Const. art. 12, § 16).

Although corporation, moving for change of venue to location of its principal place of business, under Const. art. 12, § 16, sustains burden of showing that contract upon which action was instituted was neither executed, required to be performed, nor violated at place where action was commenced, mere conclusions or indefinite statements of pleader will not create prima facie case entitling one to maintain action at county other than that of residence of defendant.

9. Appeal and error ⚡1024(3)—Where evidence on motion for change of venue is conflicting, judgment will not be disturbed on appeal.

Where evidence on motion for change of venue is conflicting with respect to residence of defendant, place of performance of contract, or violation thereof, judgment will not be disturbed on appeal.

10. Corporations ⚡503(3)—Where evidence showed defendant corporation's principal business place was in another county, that contract involved was made and to be performed there, that breach, if any, followed rescission occurring there, court properly granted change of venue (Code Civ. Proc. § 397; Const. art. 12, § 16).

Where evidence showed that residence and principal place of business of defendant corporation was at Los Angeles, that sales contract appointing plaintiff agent for sale of defendant's heaters in other counties was made and was to be performed at Los Angeles and not elsewhere, that all sales and payments for heaters were made at Los Angeles, and that breach of contract on part of defendant, if any, followed rescission of agreement, which also occurred at Los Angeles, and that situs of basis for acts complained of was at Los Angeles, court properly granted motion for change of venue from Alameda county to Los Angeles, under Const. art. 12, § 16, and Code Civ. Proc. § 397.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action for damages for breach of contract by the Gas Appliance Sales Company, Inc., against the W. B. Bastian Manufacturing Company. From an order granting defendant's motion for change of venue, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank M. Carr, Stanley R. Sterne, and Richard Liebman, all of Oakland, for appellant.

Frank P. Doherty, of Los Angeles, and R. A. Carter, of San Francisco, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from an order granting a change of venue from Alameda county to Los Angeles, which is the place of residence of the defendant corporation.

Both appellant and respondent are California corporations. The residence and principal place of business of the former party is at Oakland, Alameda county, Cal., and the latter is at the city of Los Angeles. A written agreement between the parties purports to have been executed in Alameda county, November 13, 1923, the introductory paragraph of which reads: "Agreement made this 13th day of November 1923, in the city of Oakland, county of Alameda, state of California, etc. By the terms of this agreement, the respondent corporation appointed appellant corporation "exclusive sales agent for the sales of the Majestic, California, and Universal automatic water heaters," for all the northern counties of California, for the term of five years. The contract provided that appellant should purchase from respondent not less than 1,200 heaters for the first year, 2,500, per year for two succeeding years, and 3,600 each year thereafter, at specified prices, payable f. o. b. on cars at Los Angeles. Respondent reserved the right to cancel the contract for failure to purchase the specified number of heaters.

April 9, 1925, appellant filed a complaint in Alameda county, setting forth a copy of the contract, and alleging that the appellant's principal place of business, as well as the place where the contract was to be performed, and where it was violated, was at Oakland, Alameda county; that respondent was engaged in manufacturing said heaters at the city of Los Angeles; that appellant had organized his territory, employed salesmen, and advertised said water heaters throughout his district, and had at all times performed the conditions of said contract on its part; but that the respondent had broken the contract by refusal to sell or ship said heaters pursuant to their agreement, and by selling large numbers of said heaters to persons residing in said territory, other than appellant, to its damage in the sum of $8,000.

May 9, 1925, respondent filed in the superior court of Alameda county, in due form, its motion for change of the place of trial to the city and county of Los Angeles, which motion was supported by proper affidavits alleging that the residence and principal place of business of respondent, as well as the place where said heaters were manufactured, was, at all times, at Los Angeles; that said contract was in fact drafted at Oakland on the date which it bears, but that it was then turned over to Wm. B. Bastian, the president of said corporation, for approval, and was taken by him to Los Angeles, where it was finally accepted, approved, executed on the part of respondent, and then mailed to appellant from Los Angeles on November 19, 1923; that appellant violated this contract, in that during the first year of its term appellant failed to order or purchase more than 981 heaters and for the first four months of the succeeding year, it failed to order more than 200 heaters; that on March 18, 1925, respondent notified appellant of said breach of contract, and thereupon canceled the agreement.

Appellant objected to that part of respondent's affidavit which contradicted the caption of the agreement reciting that the contract was made and executed at Oakland, October 13, 1923, on the ground that it varied the terms of a written instrument. Appellant also contends that the evidence shows that the breach of contract occurred in Alameda county, and not in Los Angeles.

The court may change the place of the trial of a cause when the county designated in the complaint is not the proper one. Code Civ. Proc. § 397. The Constitution of California (article 12, § 16) provides:

"A corporation or association may be sued in the county where the contract is made, or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises or the breach occurs; or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases."

[1-5] The affidavit of Wm. B. Bastian, president of the respondent corporation, is contradicted with respect to its residence and principal place of business, and is therefore conclusive in that regard. The time and place for the consummation of a contract is the place where, and the time when, the last act necessary to complete its validity, is performed. Fitzhugh v. University Realty Co., 46 Cal. App. 198, 188 P. 1023. With respect to the place where the contract was made, or where it is to be performed, the caption of the agreement and the allegation of the affiant, Bastian, are in conflict. The former recites that the contract was made "this 13th day of November, 1923, in the city of Oakland, Alameda county," while affiant for respondent declares that it was drafted at Oakland, but taken to Los Angeles for approval, where it was finally accepted, executed, and mailed to appellant from Los Angeles, November 19, 1923. If the date and place of execution of the contract may be disputed by extrinsic evidence, it would then satisfactorily appear that the contract was in fact finally consummated at Los Angeles, and not at Oakland, as it purports to have been done. At least, where such a conflict exists, it must be resolved in favor of the judgment of the trial court. It is a disputable presumption that a writing is truly dated, and the date may therefore be controverted by other evidence. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 23. While the place of execution designated in a contract is prima facie the location where it is made, this may be rebutted by other evidence. The term "date," as it is used in section 1963, subd. 23, Code of Civil Procedure, includes both the time and the place when and where the written instrument is deemed to have been made. Hammond v. Ocean Shore Dev. Co., 22 Cal. App. 167, 133 P. 978; 17 C. J. 1130, § 2; 1 Bouvier's Law Dict. (3d Rev.) 756. In the case of Loud v. Collins, 12 Cal. App. 786, 789, 108 P. 880, 881, it is said:

"The place where the contract was written, signed, or dated does not necessarily fix or determine the place where it was executed. Delivery of the instrument is the final act essential to its consummation as an obligation. Civ. Code, § 1626. * * * The place of delivery is the place of execution, and, in the absence of matters constituting an estoppel, this fact may be established by parol evidence, notwithstanding a venue other than that shown to exist is designated in the date line of the instrument. Such designation is prima facie evidence only of the fact when disputed."

[6, 7] The conclusive presumption of the truth of facts recited in a written instrument, between the parties thereto, as declared by the provisions of section 1962, subd. 2, Code of Civil Procedure, has reference only to the essential facts therein contained, which are necessary to determine the obligations or liabilities of the contracting parties (Osborne v. Endicott, 6 Cal. 149, 65 Am. Dec. 498; Ingersoll v. Truebody, 40 Cal. 603, 610; Moffatt v. Burlson, 96 Cal. 106, 110, 30 P. 1022, 31 Am. St. Rep. 192; Rhine v. Ellen, 36 Cal. 362, 370), and does not preclude the contradiction of the unessential designation of the mere time and place of the execution of the contract by extrinsic evidence. Although a contract may purport to have been executed in one county, upon competent evidence that it was in fact approved, executed, and mailed by one of the contracting parties, from another county, and that it was not finally accepted or executed until the mailing thereof, the contract will be deemed to have been consummated and become binding at the time and place where the last act necessary to its validity was performed. Under such circumstances the delivery would be determined by the time and place where and when the document was mailed to the party entitled thereto, with the proper address affixed and the postage prepaid. Ivey v. Kern County Land Co., 115 Cal. 196, 46 P. 926; Michelin Tire Co. v. Coleman Co., 179 Cal. 598, 178 P. 507; Swann-Day Lumber Co. v. Cornett, 161 Ky. 98, 170 S. W. 516.

The cases relied upon by appellant in support of its contention that the affidavit of respondent was incompetent to dispute the time and place designated in the contract as the location of its execution have reference only to matters essential to the determination of the liabilities of the contracting parties in the respective cases. Knoch v. Haizlip, 163 Cal. 154, 124 P. 998, involved the acknowledgment contained in a written agreement between the parties litigant, of the ownership of certain lots of land, which the court properly refused to permit the contradiction of by extrinsic evidence. Moore v. Gould, 151 Cal. 729, 91 P. 616, held that the recital in a contract between the parties, which acknowledged the extension of time for the instituting of an action upon a promissory note and mortgage, could not be disputed. Pierce v. Whiting, 63 Cal. 540, was a suit upon an undertaking for attachment. It was there held that the recital in the bond as to the issuing of the writ, together with the attachment and subsequent release of the property were binding on the parties to the undertaking. These were essential matters affecting the very validity and liability under the bond. Waldrip v. Black, 74 Cal. 411, 16 P.

226, was a suit to foreclose a mortgage given by defendant to secure plaintiff harmless on account of his indorsement of a certain note as a mere surety. The due execution of the mortgage was not controverted, and was therefore admitted. Neither the date nor the place of execution were involved. Merely the essential recitals of the mortgage were deemed to be indisputable in that case. Shaw v. Caldwell, 16 Cal. App. 9, 115 P. 941, involved the construction of an agreement with respect to the development of a mine. It was there held that the recitals of the contract regarding the ownership of the mine were conclusive as between the parties. The merits of this case depended entirely upon the ownership of the mine, and this was therefore an essential recital. So also Borland v. Borland, 56 Cal. App. 642, 206 P. 478, cited by appellant, was a suit upon a written contract guaranteeing the payment of alimony awarded in a divorce suit previously tried and determined. It was there held that recitals in this contract to the effect that the guaranty was based upon a valuable consideration, and that the decree of divorce had been previously obtained, were binding on the parties, and barred them from now disputing these facts, for the reason that these matters had been determined in a former action and were therefore res adjudicata. The court said:

"Our conclusion that the validity of the contract between these parties was conclusively settled * * * in the former action disposes of the only real question on this appeal."

The uncontradicted evidence in the instant case shows that the breach of contract, chiefly relied upon, occurred in Los Angeles county, for that is where the water heaters were manufactured and sold, which is the subject-matter of the contract sued upon. The allegations of the complaint contain nothing to the contrary. The case of Byrum v. Stockton C. H. & A. W., 91 Cal. 657, 27 P. 1093, presented a similar situation. In that case the plaintiff bought a combination harvester from the defendant, with a guaranty that the machine would satisfactorily cut and harvest grain. The defendant's principal place of business was at Stockton, where the contract of sale was made, and from which point the machine was shipped to Stanislaus county. A suit for damages was commenced in Stanislaus county for breach of contract. The complaint alleged that the machine was unfit to perform the work of harvesting according to the guaranty. A motion for change of venue was denied. On appeal to the Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Temple said:

"It is quite immaterial whether the corporation did business in Stanislaus county, if this contract was not made or was not to have been performed there. The affidavit of the moving party is positive to the effect that the contract, the breach of which is the subject of the action, was made in San Joaquin county. This fact is not controverted in the complaint, but it is there stated that the breach occurred in Stanislaus county. This is, however, a mere legal conclusion, probably drawn by the pleader from the fact that the failure of the machine to perform was in that county. * * * It is not stated on either side where the machine was delivered to plaintiff, but, as the sale was at Stockton, defendant's principal place of business, the presumption is that it was delivered there. If the machine was, as charged, wholly inadequate * * * to perform according to the guaranty, the breach was there and then, and not when it failed to perform on plaintiff's farm, in Stanislaus."

It is true that the complaint in this case charges defendant with a breach of contract not only in refusing to sell and ship to plaintiff water heaters, when ordered pursuant to said contract, but also accuses defendant with alleged sales of water heaters to persons residing in said district in Northern California, other than appellant, and of appointing other agents in said district who were authorized to sell said heaters. But all these alleged acts, if unwarranted, constituted a violation of the contract which was to be performed at Los Angeles. Moreover, the complaint is extremely vague and indefinite as to these alleged violations of the contract. It is averred that these sales of heaters were made at times "the exact dates whereof plaintiff does not now remember." Neither the names of individuals to whom heaters are alleged to have been sold, or who are alleged to have been appointed agents for respondent, are mentioned, nor is the time of these alleged violations of contract stated. On the contrary, the affidavits of Mr. Bastian, in behalf of respondent, alleges that all sales of said heaters were made f. o. b. at Los Angeles; that, for failure on the part of appellant to purchase said heaters according to the terms of the contract, the respondent rescinded said contract in writing on March 18, 1925, and notified appellant that it refused to ship further heaters under said contract. The evident inference from the affidavits on file is that whatever sales or appointment of agents respondent made, if any, in conflict with the contract involved in this case, were made after its purported rescission of contract on March 18, 1925. There is no evidence to the contrary. Moreover, this is not an action for damages for the sale of heaters in Northern California to individuals other than appellant, but rather an action for damages for breach of a specific contract, the performance of which was at Los Angeles, and not elsewhere.

[8, 9] While it is true that a corporation moving for a change of the place of trial to the location of its principal place of business sustains the burden of showing that the contract upon which the action was instituted was neither executed, required to be performed, nor violated at the place where the action was commenced (Lakeside Ditch Co. v. Packwood Canal Co., 50 Cal. App. 296, 195 P. 284; Chase v. S. P. Coast Ry. Co., 83 Cal. 468, 23 P. 532; 25 Cal. Jur. 910, § 42; 2 Bancroft's Code Pl. & Rem. 1457, § 1014), nevertheless, mere conclusions or indefinite statements of a pleader will not suffice to create a prima facie case entitling one to maintain an action at a county other than that of the residence of the defendant. In Griffin & Skelly Co. v. Magnolia F. C. Co., 107 Cal. 378, 40 P. 495, it is said:

"If a plaintiff would avail himself of the privilege given by this exception to the general rule, he must bring himself clearly within the exception."

And in 25 California Jurisprudence, at page 910, it is said:

"The right of a plaintiff to have an action tried in a county other than that in which the defendant has his residence is exceptional, and, if the plaintiff would claim such right he must frame his pleadings in such a manner as to bring himself within the terms of the exception."

See Hammond v. Ocean Shore Dev. Co., 22 Cal. App. 167, 133 P. 978.

Where the evidence on motion for a change of venue is conflicting with respect to the residence of the defendant, the place of the performance of the contract, or the violation thereof, the judgment will not be disturbed on appeal. 25 Cal. Jur. 911, § 43.

[10] From the evidence in this case it satisfactorily appears that the residence and principal place of business of the defendant was at Los Angeles; the contract involved was made and was to be performed there, and not elsewhere; all sales and payments for heaters were made at this place; the breach of contract, on the part of respondent, if any, followed the rescission of the agreement which also occurred at this place; the situs of the basis for the acts complained of was at Los Angeles, and not in Alameda county.

For the foregoing reasons, the order is affirmed.

LIERLY et al. v. McEWEN et al.
(Civ. 5217.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 21, 1927.

Appeal and error  705—That appellant was awarded greater sum than entitled to, hence was uninjured, held not shown by record and not available to respondent.

In appeal from judgment determining the amount of oil royalties to which parties were entitled, contention that the appellant was awarded a greater sum than his contract required, hence was uninjured by the judgment, held not available to respondents, where basic facts to support such contention were not shown by the record but would have required an analysis of the schedule for determination.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Erwin W. Owen, Judge.

Action by W. S. Lierly and others against the Security Trust Company of Bakersfield, for whom Daniel H. McEwen and others were substituted as defendants. Judgment for plaintiffs, and the substituted defendants appeal. Reversed with directions.

Superseding former opinion in 259 P. 468.

James Donovan, of Los Angeles, and John L. McNab and Byron Coleman, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

W. W. Kaye, of Los Angeles, and Alfred Siemon, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. This action was originally brought by plaintiffs against Security Trust Company of Bakersfield as defendant for the purpose of having determined the proportionate amount of royalties that certain locators of oil lands were entitled to under a leasing agreement with the Associated Oil Company, which royalties were held by the defendant banking company under a certain trust agreement. The company later came into court under motion, according to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, and deposited the sum of $1,704.32, the amount held by it, and procured an order bringing into the action certain defendants who thereafter filed pleadings alleging the proportion of the amount they were entitled to.

The facts are somewhat involved. It appears from the record that on January 1, 1910, W. S. Lierly, plaintiff herein, made a number of oil locations on government lands under the then existing system, and named B. F. Wilson as one of the locators. Shortly thereafter the Associated Oil Company leased certain of these locations, including those in which Wilson's name was used as a locator. As soon as Wilson ascertained the fact that his name had been used as one of the locators, he communicated the fact to his partner D. H. McEwen, defendant and appellant herein, advising him that the locations made in his name were for the joint benefit of both, by reason of their partnership. Later the government sought to disturb the locations so made because of the withdrawal of the particular lands from location by President Taft in the fall of 1909. Nothing was determined under these controversies at this time. On February 25, 1920, Congress passed what is known as the Leasing Act. Comp. St. § 4640¼ et seq. On August 10, 1920, the Associated Oil Company entered into an agreement with certain locators, including McEwen, from whom leases were taken covering the locations in which B. F. Wilson was interested. This agreement had for its object the development of the lands under the Leasing Act, in the event that it should be determined that the locators were entitled to a lease. The Associated Oil Company succeeded in procuring a lease from the government upon the properties on condition that it effected a settlement among the various claimants of their conflicting interests. This the company succeeded in doing, and on April 2d all of the parties to this action, or their predecessors in interest, signed an agreement with the Associated Oil Company, whereby they agreed upon the proportion that each claimant should have under their various claims.

The substance of this contract is: That the government of the United States leased to the Associated Oil Company the southeast quarter of section 26, township 30 south, range 24 east, on condition that such company would clear up any adverse claims against the government upon this quarter section and upon the further consideration that three other quarter sections which were put into the Naval Reserve should be surrendered to the government by all the locators or their successors in interest, and that, in consideration of the surrender of these three quarter sections, the government leased the quarter section above described to the oil company. This section is outside the Naval Reserve. It then became incumbent upon those who had claimed some interest, either as locators or subsequent transferees of the three quarter sections, to adjust their respective rights with the Associated Oil Company, which was done under the contract of April 2, 1921. By the terms of this contract, the government was to receive 20 per cent. royalty and other interests were to receive 5 per cent., leaving 75 per cent. of the net production to be divided between the oil company and the various locators on the three quarter sections.

It is claimed by appellant McEwen that, as there were twenty-four locators on these disputed three quarter sections, and each surrendered to the government the same quantity that each other person surrendered, they therefore surrendered ⅓ of each location considered as a separate surrender of each quarter section, or, considering the three quarter sections as a unit, each surrendered $\frac{1}{24}$ of the three; that this is the respective relation that each locator stood to the other— $\frac{1}{8}$ of one, or $\frac{1}{24}$ of the three considered as a unit, and the royalty which the Associated Oil Company agreed to pay them was $\frac{1}{8}$ of 75 per cent. of the net production. One-eighth of the royalty divided by $\frac{1}{24}$ gives each person $\frac{1}{192}$ part of the royalty of 75 per cent. and the agreement specifically provided that this was the interest that each of the locators was entitled to thereunder. This agreement was signed by both Wilson and McEwen.

Prior to the entering into thereof, Wilson attempted to repudiate and deny that McEwen had any interest in the locations or the contract originally entered into with the Associated Oil Company. McEwen thereupon instituted suit against Wilson, joining the oil company, the Security Trust Company, and one William C. Davis, the latter having acquired from Wilson some interest in the property. The issues were joined, and, prior to the case going to trial, a certain stipulation was entered into by all the parties to said action to the effect that upon its final determination there would be paid to the person or persons to whom said royalty should be awarded, in such proportions as the court should determine. On January 10, 1923, judgment was duly made and entered, giving and granting to McEwen $\frac{1}{2}$ of all the interests acquired by Wilson under the locations made on and after January 10, 1910. It was also decreed that under the contracts of August 10, 1920, and April 2, 1921, above referred to, McEwen was entitled to $\frac{1}{2}$ of the interests acquired by reason of Wilson's locations and also $\frac{1}{2}$ of the compromise agreement made between the government of the United States and the Associated Oil Company under the contract of April 2, 1921. In other words, Wilson's and McEwen's interest collectively in the southeast quarter of section 26, township 30 south, range 24 east, was $\frac{1}{24}$ of the royalty or $\frac{1}{192}$ part of the 75 per cent., which would make their separate interest $\frac{1}{384}$ part of 75 per cent. of all production of oil, gas, and other substances obtained from the quarter section mentioned. Prior to the settlement of the controversy between McEwen and Wilson, the Security Trust Company, on September 21, 1921, entered into an agreement with certain of the locators who were entitled to a part of the royalty on the above-described quarter section, whereby the Associated Oil Company was to pay to the Security Trust Company the royalties, and the owners of such royalties were to receive from such trust company the distributive share to which each was entitled.

Thereafter W. S. Lierly brought the present action against the Security Trust Company to recover the royalties in its hands. This action set forth the trust agreement, and then alleged the reception by the trust company of a certain sum of money from the oil company. The action was filed on March 20, 1923, subsequent to the rendition of the decree in McEwen v. Wilson. On application of the trust company an order was made permitting it to pay the amount into court, and certain of the royalty owners were then substituted as defendants in the action. As above recited, certain of these defendants filed pleadings. McEwen answered, denying any knowledge of the contract of September 21, 1921, with the trust company, and he also alleged that he was not a party to that contract. He then referred to his action against Wilson, wherein it was adjudged and decreed that he was the owner and entitled to the possession of $\frac{1}{384}$ part of 75 per cent. of the royalty due from the oil company under the agreement of April 2, 1921; that the judgment had become final. Wilson also filed an answer claiming a $\frac{1}{48}$ interest in the royalties. The action proceeded to trial before the court without a jury.

There was introduced in evidence a certain schedule prepared by W. W. Kaye, Esq., one of the attorneys for plaintiffs herein, which purported to show the proportionate interests of the various grantors and their successors in interest in the fund. This schedule adopts the number 5,120 as a common denominator or number of shares into which the entire fractional interests of the several locators and their successors in interest is to be divided. It recites that Wilson is entitled to 80 shares and McEwen to an equal number. Under this computation Wilson and McEwen would be entitled to $\frac{80}{5120}$, or reduced to its lowest terms, $\frac{1}{64}$ of $\frac{1}{8}$, or $\frac{1}{192}$ of the total royalties payable to each of the eight locators of one of the three quarter sections surrendered to the government; there being, as above pointed out, twenty-four locators on the three quarter sections surrendered. The trial court adopted the schedule as showing the interest that each party to the action owned in the fund and rendered judgment accordingly.

It is appellant McEwen's contention that he was in no manner bound by the agreement entered into on September 21, 1921, by certain of the locators with the Security Trust Company, as he was not a party to it, that his rights were fixed and determined under his contract with the oil company, and that, never having conveyed any of this interest, he was by reason of his judgment against Wilson entitled to $\frac{1}{2}$ of the $\frac{1}{192}$ part of 75 per cent. of the royalties obtained from the oil company, which would be $\frac{1}{384}$ of 75 per cent. This claim of appellant is not denied by respondents, but they take the position that, as appellant has been awarded a greater amount under the judgment than he prayed for, he is not injured and is therefore in no position to complain. Appellant, on the other hand, denies that the judgment secures to him the portion to which he is entitled, and claims that it amounts to four times less than his rightful share. The record is not clear as to the manner in which Mr. Kaye determined the respective interests of the parties, and counsel have not enlightened us upon the subject. Under the position which counsel have taken, we do not feel that we are called upon to determine the arithmetical correctness of the involved schedule upon which the judgment is based. Appellant claims that he is entitled to $\frac{1}{384}$ part of 75 per cent. for the reasons above indicated. There is nothing in the record to show that McEwen has parted with any portion of this interest to which he is entitled under the contract with the oil company, and counsel for respondents have not pointed out in what manner this interest has in any manner been affected; their only claim being that the judgment awards appellant a greater amount, for which reason he should not be heard to complain. Whether this be true or not would require an analysis of the schedule to determine, a task we do not consider we are called upon to undertake. There being no question but that appellant is entitled to $\frac{1}{384}$ part of the total royalties under his contract with the oil company, he should have judgment for this amount.

This being so, judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment accordingly.

McKEON v. LISSNER et al. (Civ. 6058.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 8, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 5, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 6, 1928.

1. Carriers ⇨318(1)—Evidence held to support jury's finding in effect that defendants were negligent in having apartment house hallway dark and in operating elevator.

In action by prospective tenant for injuries from fall into shaft of apartment house elevator, evidence held to sustain jury's finding in effect that defendants were negligent in having hallway near elevator dark, and in operating elevator with broken lock, and without proper inspection.

2. Carriers ⇨280(4)—Statute held not to take from owners power to provide competent elevator safety devices and efficient operation, or to affect measure of required care (St. 1917, p. 84).

St. 1917, p. 84, providing for state inspection of elevators, did not take from owners power to provide competent safety devices and efficient operation, and duty of care prescribed by law and owing to persons lawfully using elevators has not been diminished thereby.

3. Carriers ⇨293—Proprietors of apartment building held responsible for their agent's negligence in inspecting elevator (Civ. Code, § 2338; St. 1917, p. 84).

Fact that St. 1917, p. 84, required proprietors of apartment house to employ, for inspection of elevator, person holding certificate of competency from Industrial Accident Commission, did not relieve them of liability under Civ. Code, § 2338, for negligence of such person in inspecting elevator.

4. Carriers ⇨347(4)—Evidence as to negligence of prospective tenant falling into apartment house elevator shaft held to present jury question.

Evidence as to negligence of prospective tenant falling into apartment house elevator shaft held not to show contributory negligence as matter of law, but to present jury question.

5. Trial ⇨250—Refusal to instruct on issue not brought to jury by either pleading or evidence held proper.

In action for fall into apartment house elevator, refusal to instruct that, if third party left shaft door open, proprietors could not be charged with negligence, which issue was not brought to jury by either pleading or evidence, was proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by Alice T. McKeon against A. L. Lissner and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 193 Cal. 297, 223 P. 965.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for damages caused by her fall through an open elevator shaft located in an apartment house conducted by defendants. The cause was tried before a jury and resulted in a verdict in the sum of $5,000. From the judgment on the verdict the defendants have appealed on a bill of exceptions.

[1] The cause was previously tried, and resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff for $4,000. An appeal was taken to the District Court of Appeal, which affirmed the judgment but, upon transfer to the Supreme Court, the judgment was reversed because of errors in the instructions to the jury. McKeon v. Lissner, 193 Cal. 297, 223 P. 965. The facts which were developed at the first trial are set forth at length in the opinion cited, and it is unnecessary to repeat them here. On the second trial no new evidence of importance was presented, except the evidence tending to show that the hallway on the first floor of the apartment house near the door of the elevator was dark and unlighted. This element was urged by respondent on the first appeal, but the Supreme Court ruled that it could not be considered, because it had not been specifically pleaded. To meet this objection, the complaint was amended before the second trial. As evidence of defendants' negligence, the respondent now relies upon this darkened condition of the hallway and upon the negligent operation of the elevator with a broken lock and without proper inspection. The point is that, as plaintiff approached the elevator shaft, she found the door unlocked and partially open; that, being accustomed to use automatic elevators of this character she assumed that the cage must be level with the floor when she saw the door open, and that she stepped into the darkened space, thinking she was entering the elevator cage. The cage was, however, at the third floor of the building, and plaintiff fell to the basement of the shaft, suffering serious injuries from which she has not fully recovered. It appears that defendants had employed the Federal Elevator Company to care for and inspect the elevator, and that an inspection had been made two days previous to the accident. It is plaintiff's contention that this inspection was inadequately and carelessly made; that, after the accident, it appeared that the spring of the lock on this door had broken from crystallization; that the inspectors knew this was a condition which frequently occurred upon the particular kind of lock used; that the broken spring could be discovered only by removing the lock; and that this was not done.

Upon these facts the appellants now argue that there was no evidence of negligence on their part, and point out that all the evidence was controverted by witnesses called in their behalf. The darkened condition of the hallway was shown by the direct evidence of the respondent and of a police officer, who appeared upon the scene a very few minutes after the accident. The "conflicting" evidence is found in the testimony of the witnesses as to the usual condition of the hallway when the afternoon sun was shining through the windows. The respondent testified in no uncertain terms that the door to the elevator shaft was partially open when she approached it. She was contradicted by the testimony of the house manager, who said she stood on an upper floor of the building and heard respondent unlock the door. Further contradiction was made by a roomer, who testified that, while standing on the second floor, she heard the respondent on the first floor press the buzzer to call the elevator. It was for the jury to determine the facts, and, in view of the evidence, we cannot say they erred in their finding on either issue.

[2] Appellant argues at length concerning the poor judgment of the Legislature in enacting the statute providing for periodical state inspection of elevators. Stats. 1917, p.

84. It is argued that this act took from them the power to provide competent safety devices and efficient operation, but, in the former opinion, the Supreme Court clearly says that the act was intended merely for the purpose of providing additional safeguards, and that "the measure of the owner's care prescribed by the law and owing to persons lawfully using an elevator, has not been diminished in the slightest degree by said act." 193 Cal. 303, 223 P. 968.

[3] Appellants criticize the instruction given the jury holding them responsible for the negligence, if any, of the Federal Elevator Company in inspecting the elevator. The company was the agent of the appellants, appointed by them to perform this particular function. Their liability for negligence on the part of their agents is fixed by section 2338, Civil Code. Appellants insist that, because the statute of 1917 required them to employ for inspection purposes persons holding a certificate of competency from the Industrial Accident Commission, they were relieved of liability under the exception in section 2338, Civil Code, when the party is "required by or under the authority of law to employ that particular agent." But this statute does not require any one to employ a particular agent. It merely requires the employment of one certified to be competent. The provision of the statute is in line with all the recent legislation covering the licensing of particular professions and employments. It is directed to the benefit of the public at large—to insure, so far as possible, competent service. If appellants are correct in their position, it might as well be said that an employer will not be responsible for the negligence of his engineer or chauffeur, as they must be licensed by the state. It must be apparent that such a result was not contemplated by these statutes, particularly when no one of them discloses any intention of modifying the provisions of the Code section cited.

[4] Appellants argue that the respondent must be held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. We have been unable to find any material difference in the evidence heard in the two trials on this issue, and must say, as was said by the Supreme Court, in the former appeal, that this issue was properly left with the jury. 193 Cal. 304, 223 P. 968.

[5] Appellants complain because the trial judge refused to instruct the jury that, if they found that a third party had left the shaft door open, the appellants could not be charged with negligence. This was an issue which had not been brought to the jury by either pleading or evidence, and the instruction was properly refused.

Judgment affirmed.

BRYSON v. BYRER et al. (Civ. 5869.)

District Court of Appeals, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 7, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1039(13)—Where trial court's decision for plaintiff was unaffected by alleged failure to prove certain allegations, failure held immaterial.

Where trial court's decision for plaintiff was shown by findings to have been unaffected in any event by alleged failure to prove certain allegations of complaint, appellant's criticism in that respect held of no importance.

2. Deeds ⇨196(2)—In action to set aside wife's conveyance to husband, where deed was without consideration, defendants had burden of proving conveyance in good faith (Civ. Code, §§ 158, 2235).

Under Civ. Code, § 158, providing that transactions between husband and wife should be subject to rules controlling actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other, and section 2235, providing that all transactions between trustee and beneficiary, by which trustee obtains any advantage from beneficiary, are presumed to be without sufficient consideration and under undue influence, in action to set aside wife's conveyance to husband, where deed was found to be without consideration, defendants held to have burden of showing affirmatively that husband acquired the property in good faith and in compliance with all equitable requirements.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1041(2)—Permitting amendment after taking of evidence had ceased, if error, held harmless, where two counts of complaint were substantially same as amendment.

Permitting plaintiff to amend his complaint after taking of evidence had ceased, in an action to set aside a conveyance from wife to husband, by alleging that, instead of community property, as originally alleged, conveyance was of wife's separate property, if error, held harmless, where two counts of the complaint contained allegations in substantially same language as that of the amendment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Frank Bryson, administrator of the estate of Anna England (sometimes known as Annie W. England), substituted for Anna England, against C. W. Byrer, as administrator of the estate of Isaac W. England (sometimes known as I. W. England), deceased, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants, except C. W. Byrer and Charles R. England, appeal. Affirmed.

Page, Nolan, Rohe & Freston and Hurt & Howard, all of Los Angeles (Howard F. Shepherd, Louis P. Pink, and J. A. McLaughlin, all of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

John J. McMahon, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. From the findings made by the trial court it appears that the basic facts upon which the judgment herein is predicated, and from which judgment the appeal herein is taken, are that one Isaac W. England and Anna England were husband and wife; that from their community funds they acquired certain real property, which, at the request and direction of the husband, was deeded to the wife; and that several years thereafter the wife deeded the property to the husband. The findings recite the further fact that the deed made by the wife to the husband "was delivered to said Isaac W. England without any consideration whatsoever, and solely by reason of undue influence exercised by said Isaac W. England over the said Anna England, * * * by which said deed and transaction said husband obtained an advantage over his wife and was thereby enriched to the extent of the value of said real property." Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff.

[1] One of the points made by appellants for reversal of the judgment is that on the trial of the action no evidence was offered by the plaintiff which proved or tended to prove any of the allegations of the complaint with reference to the execution of the deed in question. An examination of the pleading on the part of plaintiff discloses the fact that the allegations to which attention is thus directed in substance were that said deed was executed contemporaneously with another deed covering the identical property mentioned in the first deed, made by the husband to the wife; that each of said deeds was then placed in a safe-deposit box, to which each of the parties at all times had access, with the intent and purpose on the part of the wife that each of said deeds was to be delivered and become effective only in the event of and upon the death of the grantor thereof; but that, notwithstanding such situation of the parties with reference to such deeds, and in violation of the understanding thereof on the part of the wife, the husband caused the deed to him by the wife to be placed of record.

No specific finding with reference to such allegations was made by the trial court, but with regard thereto the trial court in substance did find that the husband never executed the deed to which such allegations referred. In such circumstances, the criticism of appellants in that connection becomes of no importance. The judgment of the court is based primarily upon the facts, as hereinbefore and in the findings set forth, that the deed of separate property of the wife made by her to the husband was without consideration, and that the husband "obtained an advantage over his wife and was thereby enriched to the extent of the value of said property," and the principal attack of appellants is directed to the conclusion of law and judgment by the court arising from such finding that the deed in question should be "set aside and canceled, and declared invalid and of no force or effect whatsoever."

It is the contention of appellants that the mere fact that without consideration therefor a wife has deeded her separate property to the husband does not constitute a sufficient showing to justify a judgment for the cancellation of the deed on the ground that it was induced by undue influence of the husband. In reply, the respondent points to the provisions of sections 158 and 2235 of the Civil Code, which are as follows:

Section 158: "Either husband or wife may enter into any engagement or transaction with the other, or with any other person, respecting property, which either might if unmarried; subject, in transactions between themselves, to the general rules which control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other, as defined by the title on trusts."

Section 2235: "All transactions between a trustee and his beneficiary during the existence of the trust, or while the influence acquired by the trustee remains, by which he obtains any advantage from his beneficiary, are presumed to be entered into by the latter without sufficient consideration, and under undue influence."

On the trial of the action the plaintiff introduced the deed in question, which on its face showed that the consideration for its execution was the sum of $1. Plaintiff also showed that the value of the property covered by the deed was approximately $15,000. Defendants offered no evidence relating either to the consideration paid for the property, or as affecting the general issue of "undue influence" in the execution of the deed.

[3] Appellants also complain that in the course of the trial, and after the taking of evidence had ceased, over defendants' objection, plaintiff was permitted to amend his complaint by an allegation to the effect that, instead of the property in question having been the community property of husband and wife, as originally alleged, in fact it was the separate property of the wife. In that connection it should be noted that the complaint consisted of three counts, in the first and second of which the allegation was made in substance as in the language of the amendment which is here the subject of the criticism by appellants. Waiving any question of the discretion of the trial court to permit an amendment to conform to evidence, and without taking into consideration the rule allowing great liberality with reference thereto, it is apparent that in the circumstances the defendants were in no wise harmed by the action of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem. Judgment was had in this case in the sum of $1,080.41, interest and costs, in favor of plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Through concessions in the briefs the sum in dispute is reduced to $139. It is not thought necessary or useful to detail the original issues of the case, since the only issue for us to decide consists of one point of fact.

Appellant relies upon a statement of account rendered to one of his customers. Against this the customer testifies that he believes the account to be incorrect and to show a sum greater than the true amount. He is not asked by either party as to particular items in error. If the trial court accepted the statement as correct, the judgment is for $139 too much. If it rejected the statement as unreliable, the judgment is correct.

The judgment must be sustained. The evidence was conflicting, and it is our duty to assume that the trial court gave it that construction which supports the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

Action by W. A. Brandenburger, as trustee of the estate of Charles Studarus & Son, a copartnership, bankrupt, against Eldon Chipman. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas B. Leeper, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Ralph H. Lewis and Hughes, Bradford, Cross & Prior, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

WEYAND, Justice pro tem. Charles C. Studarus and Charles C. Studarus, Jr., were copartners doing business as farmers, under the name of Charles Studarus & Son. On October 15, 1924, they filed their petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, and said partnership was on that day adjudicated a bankrupt. Their farming operations had, prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy been conducted in Sacramento and Yolo counties. The plaintiff above named, the trustee in bankruptcy, is the respondent herein, and he will be referred to hereafter as the trustee. Studarus & Son will be referred to as the bankrupts.

The trustee above named, by an amended complaint filed in the superior court of Sacramento county, on October 27, 1925, sought to recover from Eldon Chipman, the appellant, the sum of $1,500 which sum was by the trustee averred to be property of the estate of the bankrupt partnership, and illegally held by the defendant, Eldon Chipman.

Judgment in the lower court was in favor of the trustee, and the defendant, Chipman, appeals to this court.

The complaint contains three causes of action. In the first cause of action it is alleged that the bankrupt firm paid the defendant, Chipman, the sum of $1,500, on or about the 10th day of October, 1924, upon an indebtedness, "claimed" by the bankrupt partnership, to be due Chipman. By proper averments this is stated to be void, as it permitted a preference to be given Chipman. The second count states that for more than two years next preceding the 10th of October, 1924, the partnership was insolvent, and that defendant, Chipman, knew of that condition. It is then alleged that on or about August, 1923, this being more than a year before the adjudication in bankruptcy, Chipman, to aid the bankrupt partnership to conceal its property, accepted from the partnership an assignment of the sum of $1,500 due to the partnership from a creditor of the partnership, and that defendant, Chipman, received that sum of money, the property of the partnership, upon an understanding that he (Chipman) was to hold the same for the partnership and thus conceal the same from the partnership creditors. The third cause of action in said complaint is upon the common count for money had and received by Chipman for the use and benefit of said copartnership.

The answer of defendant, Chipman, denies these allegations, in so far as any illegal or improper conduct of Chipman is concerned. The defendant further answers to the effect that the $1,500 received by him was reloaned to the partnership, and was, by the partnership, used in the production of a crop, which the trustee received, and that, even if Chipman's receipt of the $1,500 was void as against creditors, yet the creditors got the benefit of the crop upon which it was spent, and therefore that sum should be allowed as an offset to the money paid Chipman. To further illustrate the force of this claim, we will here state that on January 1, 1923, as appellant contends, the partnership gave him a note for $1,500, which was given to cover a number of small sums of money previously loaned by Chipman to the partnership. On August 14, 1923, the partnership did actually give Chipman an order on the Guernsey-Ames Grain Company for the sum of $1,500, which order was by the grain company accepted two days thereafter, and which order was paid by the company a few days before the adjudication in bankruptcy, more than a year after it was given to Chipman. Chipman alleges he in turn reloaned this very sum to the partnership, and they used it to produce a certain crop, which the trustee in bankruptcy took over.

[1] We will eliminate from this case matters with which we need not concern ourselves. As to the first cause of action, we are of the opinion that the date of payment to Chipman was at latest August 14, 1923, when he received the order on the grain company. This was more than four months before the adjudication in bankruptcy. Therefore that cause of action should fail, as it is predicated upon a payment within four months before the adjudication.

As to the offset claimed by defendant, the decision of the lower court cannot be disturbed. This money was paid by the grain company to Chipman on the day before the adjudication. The defendant's bank account shows it was by Chipman deposited after the adjudication. It could not have been used for the benefit of the trustee. It is claimed by Chipman that the reloan was made to the wife of Studarus, Jr. However, the crop upon which Mrs. Charles C. Studarus, Jr., used $1,000 of the money paid her by Chipman (according to Mrs. Studarus' testimony) failed to mature and therefore nothing was received therefrom. A loan of $700, made to Mrs. Studarus by Chipman, was made in November, 1922, antedating even the note of $1,500. The ruling of the trial court was correct upon this issue.

[2, 3] The main contention in this case, as we view it, is the one made by plaintiff's second cause of action and the denial thereto. As we view the testimony, the trial court was amply sustained by the evidence in its holding that the note, the assignment, and the subsequent receipt of the $1,500 by Chipman from the Guernsey-Ames Grain Company were all transactions fraudulently contrived and arranged so as to place $1,500 of the partnership money into the hands of Chipman, to hold the said money for the partnership or for its members.

The transaction has upon its face nearly all the usual badges of fraud. The trial court heard the witnesses, and had occasion to observe their manner upon the stand. The charge of fraud is usually made out solely from statements and acts of the perpetrators of the fraud.

In this transaction there was secrecy by the parties. No person saw or participated in the alleged dealings excepting Charles C. Studarus, Jr., his wife, and defendant, Chipman. The dealings were apparently unknown by the elder Studarus. The transaction was wholly unusual. Studarus, Jr., testifies he never kept an itemized list of his small borrowings from Chipman, that in January, 1923, had reached the sum of $1,500. Although Chipman had a bank account, these small loans were paid to Studarus, Jr., in cash, from Chipman's pocket. The assignment given to Chipman did not include the interest expressed in the note. In August, when this assignment was given, there was overdue interest from January 1, 1923, to the middle of August that year. Chipman testifies he never kept the dates of the small loans to Studarus, Jr. The testimony of Chipman is that the items of these small loans were kept in a small pocketbook, but he testifies the book was lost after the note was executed. At all the times, from before the execution of the note in January, 1923, until the adjudication in bankruptcy, Chipman knew of the financial straits of the partnership, yet no security for the note was taken.

An effort to give a transaction an appearance of fairness is frequently made. In the order of August, 1923, the first paper that came into the view of outsiders, an attempt is apparently made to give it a certificate of bona fides. After the wording of the order, in usual form, and the signature, an added paragraph says, "This sum is covered with a note dated January 1, 1923, due July 15, 1923." Another assignment, against the same fund, given by the bankrupts, at the same time, to pay another note due to a mercantile firm in Sacramento, does not mention a note.

Dealing in such manner with a party in financial difficulties of itself indicates how wholly irregular the instant matter was.

There are some other circumstances indicating fraud, but it is wholly unnecessary to go into all the circumstances. The testimony supports the findings and judgment of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

(262 P.)

Ex parte GUNDELFINGER. (Cr. 1429.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California, Dec. 19, 1927.

1. Statutes $\Leftrightarrow$ 188—Words of statute must be interpreted according to their common acceptance, unless context shows they are used in technical sense.

One of the fundamental rules of statutory construction is that words of statute must be interpreted in their usual, ordinary, and popular sense, that is, according to their common acceptance, unless the context of the statute shows that they are used in a technical sense, and where words have a technical as well as a popular meaning, courts will accord to them their popular signification.

2. Licenses $\Leftrightarrow$ 19(3)—Exemption provision of charter conferring privilege on certain class of persons should be strictly construed.

Provision of city charter exempting from license tax any person selling or manufacturing goods, wares, or merchandise, being a privilege conferred on a certain class of persons, subject to change at any time by charter amendment without violating any right of such persons, should be strictly construed.

3. Statutes $\Leftrightarrow$ 245—If true meaning of phrase "goods, wares or merchandise" in taxation law is in doubt, it must be determined from context and purposes of act.

Though, where question of application of statute of frauds is involved, phrase "goods, wares or merchandise" is equivalent to term "personal property," where phrase is employed in taxation laws it may be used in different senses, and in case of doubt its true meaning must be determined from context and purposes of act wherein it is used.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Goods.]

4. Licenses $\Leftrightarrow$ 19(3)—City charter exempting from license tax persons engaged in selling "goods, wares or merchandise" held not to include business of selling stocks and bonds.

City charter exempting from license taxes persons selling or manufacturing "goods, wares or merchandise" held not to include business of selling stocks and bonds, and hence ordinance imposing license tax on such business does not conflict with charter and is not invalid.

Application by E. R. Gundelfinger for writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Chief of Police of the City and County of San Francisco, to secure the release of petitioner from custody on a charge of violating provisions of a municipal ordinance. Writ discharged; petitioner remanded.

McKinstry, Haber & Firebaugh, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Matthew Brady, Dist. Atty., I. M. Golden, Asst. Dist. Atty., John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Henry Heidelberg, Deputy City Atty., all of San Francisco (J. A. Pritchard, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Petitioner was arrested for violating the provisions of a municipal ordinance, and seeks to be discharged from custody on a writ of habeas corpus.

[1, 2] The city and county of San Francisco maintains an ordinance imposing a license tax upon various classes of business conducted within its boundaries. Section 83 thereof reads as follows:

"Every person, firm, or corporation engaged in the business of buying or selling mining stocks, bonds, state, county or municipal stocks or bonds, or stocks of incorporated companies or evidences of indebtedness of private persons or of incorporated companies, directly or on margin, shall pay a license, * * * the amount of which varies from twelve to fifty-two dollars a quarter, according to the amount of commissions or gross profits earned by the business.

Section 90 declares a violation of any of the provisions of said ordinance to be a misdemeanor. The complaint herein charged that petitioner did willfully and unlawfully "engage in the business of buying and selling bonds, stocks, and evidences of indebtedness of private persons and of incorporated companies without having obtained the municipal license so to do," in violation of the provisions of sections 83 and 90 of said ordinance.

The charter of said city contains the following provision:

"Subject to the provisions, limitations and restrictions in this charter contained, the board of supervisors shall have power: (15) To impose license taxes and to provide for the collection thereof; but no license taxes shall be imposed upon any person who, at any fixed place of business in the city and county, sells or manufactures goods, wares or merchandise, except such as require permits from the board of police commissioners as provided in this charter." Article 2, c. 2, § 1, subd. 15. (Italics ours.)

Petitioner contends that the phrase "goods, wares or merchandise" as used in the foregoing charter provision includes every species of personal property, that is, all property which is not real estate or freehold; and that therefore, since bonds, stocks, and evidences of indebtedness are deemed to be personal property, section 83 of the ordinance, which imposes a license tax upon the business of buying and selling such property, is violative of the italicized portion of the charter provision above quoted and consequently void.

We are of the opinion that the unlimited construction petitioner would have placed upon the phrase "goods, wares or merchandise" cannot be sustained. One of the fundamental rules of statutory construction is that the words of a statute must be interpreted in their usual, ordinary, and popular sense, that is, according to their common acceptance, unless the context of the statute shows that they are used in a technical sense (Quigley v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 418, 63 Am. Dec. 139; Farrell v. Board of Trustees, 85 Cal. 408, 24 P. 868; Directors of Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Abila, 106 Cal. 355, 39 P. 794; Ex parte Galivan, 162 Cal. 331, 122 P. 961), and where words having a technical as well as a popular meaning are used, the courts will accord to them their popular signification (Perrin v. Miller, 35 Cal. App. 129, 169 P. 426). We are dealing here with the provisions of a municipal charter framed by a board of freeholders and approved by a vote of the people, and it is therefore only reasonable to assume that if it had been intended that all fixed places of business, selling or manufacturing any species of personal property, should be exempt from the operation of said license tax, the term "personal property" would have been used in the enactment of said exemption clause instead of the phrase "goods, wares or merchandise." Furthermore, the exemption provided being a privilege conferred upon a certain class of persons by the supreme lawmaking power of the city, which contains no element of contract and grants no vested rights, is subject to change at any time by charter amendment without violating any right of which such persons could be heard to complain; and therefore said exemption clause should be construed with strictness. Ransome-Crummey v. Bennett, 177 Cal. 560, 171 P. 304.

[3, 4] It is doubtless true that where the question of the application of the statute of frauds is involved, which is not the case here, it is held generally that the words constituting the phrase "goods, wares or merchandise" when taken together are equivalent to the term "personal property" (28 Corpus Juris. p. 726), but it is also held, as petitioner concedes, that where, as here, said phrase is employed in the enactment of taxation laws, it may be used in different senses, and in case of doubt that its true meaning must be determined from the context and purposes of the act wherein it is used. 28 Corpus Juris. 727; New England, etc., Co. v. Commonwealth, 195 Mass. 385, 81 N. E. 286, 11 Ann. Cas. 678. In any event, since a phrase of restricted meaning was employed in framing said exemption clause, it is not within the power of the courts to extend the scope and operation of said clause by judicially substituting in the place of such restricted phrase a term of unlimited meaning. Therefore, looking to the context and purposes of the charter provision containing said exemption clause rather than to the numerous conflicting cases upon the subject to be found in other jurisdictions, and interpreting said phrase "goods, wares or merchandise" according to its common acceptation and meaning, we are convinced that in the enactment of said exemption clause the framers of the charter did not intend to include within its scope those places of business like petitioner's dealing in intangible assets, from which the city otherwise derives no revenue.

The decision rendered in Re Dees, 50 Cal. App. 11, 194 P. 717, upon which petitioner mainly relies in support of his theory, is not, in our opinion, controlling here, nor do we believe that it has the far-reaching effect petitioner claims for it. There the controversy related to the validity of section 70 of the license tax ordinance of said city and county, which made it unlawful for any person to engage in the business of selling theater tickets at any place other than at the office of the theater without first taking out a ticket peddler's license, which was fixed in the sum of $300 a month. The facts appearing in the opinion show that petitioner therein was conducting a news stand in a hotel, selling various articles of goods, wares, and merchandise, and as a part of such business, for the convenience of the guests of said hotel and as a necessary prerequisite to the occupancy of said news stand, resold theater tickets, charging a premium thereon of 25c each. The gross sales from the entire news stand business amounted to no more than $600 a month. It was held that said section 70 could not be upheld as a valid exercise of police power since it was not based upon any reasonable consideration of the public health, morals, or safety, nor of the cost of the police supervision; and that as a revenue measure it was invalid because the license tax of $300 a month was not based upon any reasonable distinction; that the amount thereof was unfair and oppressive, if not in fact prohibitory; furthermore that under the city charter the board of supervisors, though vested with power to license ticket peddlers, was without power to exact a tax on those selling goods at a fixed place of business and could not enlarge upon its power by declaring persons as peddlers who were not such in fact. It will therefore be seen that the questions before the court there were essentially different from those presented here.

However, it having appeared that the resale of theater tickets was only a part of petitioner's main business of selling goods, wares, and merchandise at said news stand, the court, in the determination of the principal issues, quoted excerpts from several cases and cited others arising in foreign jurisdictions holding that the phrase "goods, wares or merchandise" included all species of movable property, from which the court in the Dees Case concluded that theater tickets might properly be included within the definition of "goods." But a fair analysis of the decision in the Dees Case shows, we think, especially in the light of the fact that all except two of the cases cited therein involved the application of the statute of frauds, that the excerpts quoted were invoked only in an argumentative sense in determining that the single item of property there under consideration, namely, theater tickets, constituted "goods," and were not intended to constitute, as petitioner claims, an abstract adjudication that the phrase "goods, wares, or merchandise" as employed in said exemption clause includes every species of personal property. Said decision contains no express declaration to that effect, and acting upon the assumption that the law was not so declared, the city thereafter continued to and does now collect a large revenue from license taxes imposed upon the character of business now under consideration. For the reasons stated, we believe the construction petitioner would have placed upon the effect of the Dees Case is untenable, and we are therefore unable to adopt the same.

Nor do we consider that any of the cases which petitioner cites from other jurisdictions, notably the case of Banta v. Chicago, 172 Ill. 204, 50 N. E. 233, 40 L. R. A. 611, are decisive here. As petitioner concedes, in construing taxation laws "there is not a unanimity on the part of the courts in defining 'goods, wares or merchandise,'" for the reason that the phrase is used in different senses, and in case of doubt its meaning is ascertained from the context and purposes of the act. New England, etc., Co. v. Commonwealth, supra. It may therefore be fairly inferred that the decisions in the cases petitioner cites, as well as in those which may be found holding to the contrary, were grounded to some extent at least upon the contexts and purposes of the particular acts there considered.

Upon the grounds and for the reasons hereinabove set forth, we conclude that section 83 of said ordinance is not in conflict with the charter provision quoted, and consequently not invalid. The writ is therefore discharged and petitioner is remanded to the custody of the chief of police of said city.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 22, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 20, 1928. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 20, 1928.

Where plaintiffs paid balance due on conditional sales contract for operating plant of a newspaper, and took assignment thereof, in their action to replevy property, evidence held to sustain finding that publisher of newspaper had paid unpaid balance due on contracts in advertising which supported building of an All-American Canal which plaintiffs were advocating.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by C. D. Hartshorn against the Elite Printing Company, in which F. M. Couch, trustee for Blake, Moffitt & Towne, intervened. From a judgment for the intervenor, and from order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Harry W. Horton, of El Centro, for appellant.

Jas. W. Glassford, of El Centro, for respondents.

VALENTINE, Justice pro tem. An action in replevin was commenced by the plaintiff and appellant June 27, 1921, against defendant for the recovery of the possession or value of the personal property involved in this proceeding. The appellant alleged ownership and right to possession. The defendant answered, claiming right to possession and ownership as purchasers of the property from F. M. Couch, as trustee. F. M. Couch, as trustee for Blake, Moffitt & Towne, intervened and claimed ownership to the property as purchaser from one E. F. Howe.

The property in question was originally purchased by E. F. Howe from the American Type Founders Company, under and by two conditional sales contracts. Howe was publishing a newspaper called the Zanjero, in the city of El Centro, and the property in question was practically the entire operating "plant" of this newspaper. Howe was in default, and other parties (the plaintiff's group) paid the balance due on these contracts to the American Type Founders Company to enable Howe to continue the publication of said newspaper for the purpose of advocating the completion of a certain irrigation canal, called the All-American Canal, which was deemed to be for the benefit, among others, of the parties arranging such payment. E. F. Howe continued the publication of the newspaper and to advertise and advocate the cause of the All-American Canal under a verbal agreement or understanding, as claimed by the intervenor, that certain members of "plaintiff's group" should pay to the American Type Founders Company the balance due on the two contracts, and that Howe should continue to so advertise to the extent of $100 per month until such time as the total advertising amounted to a sufficient sum to "wipe out" such balance; the plaintiff's group taking an assignment in blank of the two conditional sales contracts as security until E. F. Howe should repay them "by means of advertising and editorial service in said newspaper" as aforesaid, which the intervener claims was done.

The transactions were numerous and involved, but we believe this sufficiently states the facts and contentions of the parties material to the issue raised on this appeal.

The defendant, Elite Printing Company, appears to have abandoned its claim, and has filed no brief on this appeal.

[1] The trial court found for the intervenor, F. M. Couch, as trustee, and rendered judgment that said intervener, as trustee, have and recover from the plaintiff possession of said property, or, if delivery could not be had, for the sum of $3,441.58, the admitted value. From this judgment and an order denying appellant's motion for a new trial plaintiff appeals upon the ground that the evidence does not support the trial court's findings and judgment.

It will only be necessary to consider appellant's specifications of error designated (a) and (b), as their determination disposes of the others:

"(a) That there was no evidence to support the finding of the court that there was any contract or agreement between the plaintiff and any of the parties for whom the plaintiff took the assignment of said contracts as trustee, by the terms of which any services rendered, or to be rendered, by Mr. Howe or his newspaper, the Zanjero, were in any way to be in payment for or to satisfy the contract so assigned to the plaintiff as trustee or the payments due thereon, or that any such services were to be in payment of the obligations on the Rehkopf note.

"(b) That the evidence is insufficient to support the finding and decision to the effect that any contract or agreement between the Imperial Laguna Water Company and Mr. Howe or his paper, the Zanjero, was in effect and fact a contract and agreement between the plaintiff and the persons he represented as trustee."

The trial court's finding IV is as follows:

"That on the 19th day of March, 1918, the said Edgar F. Howe entered into an agreement whereby the following named persons agreed to pay to the American Type Founders Company the unpaid balance on the two conditional contracts of sale between the said Type Founders Company as vendors and Edgar F. Howe, as vendee, to wit: Ed R. Gorman; T. A. Stevens; C. L. Gillett; D. W. Weist; Ernest Poston; C. D. Hartshorn; C. M. Berry; T. P. Banta; and L. R. Bonstiele. That in accordance with said agreement the said persons paid all of the unpaid purchase price as stipulated in said contracts of sale, and took from the said Founders Company an assignment of said contracts in blank as security for the repayment of the said parties by the said Edgar F. Howe of the amount so advanced and paid by said parties to the said Type Founders Company as the unpaid balance on said conditional sales contract. It was further agreed and understood between the said parties and Edgar F. Howe that said unpaid balance should be paid by Howe by means of advertising and editorial service in the newspaper then owned by Howe, named the Zanjero, and the said Howe did supply such advertising, publicity, and editorial service in conformity with said agreement to such an extent as to fully pay and satisfy the whole amount of the unpaid balance then due and owing on said conditional contracts of sale, and which had been advanced by said parties heretofore named. That said conditional contracts of sale were assigned to C. D. Hartshorn as trustee for the use and benefit of the above-named parties."

The evidence is voluminous and conflicting. C. N. Berry, one of plaintiff's witnesses (and one of "plaintiff's group"), although denying any knowledge of a contract, admits writing Howe:

"I note with much pleasure that the contract has been ratified by the people at the polls by a vote of nearly three to one. This result was obtained, and I give you full credit for it, largely thro' your increasing advocacy of the project."

He also testified that the payment of the money and the taking the assignments "might have been to the individual interest of every man who supported the All-American Canal"; and that "the object in paying off the balance due on the contracts and taking the assignment was that they, with others, were ardent supporters in support of the All-American Canal issue"; that Howe's newspaper, the Zanjero, was supporting the All-American Canal issue; that "the individuals wished to see it continue"; that "it was understood that Howe would have to pay the balance due for the machinery before he would get it"; that "the understanding was made with Mr. Howe as editor of the Zanjero by the persons whose names were on the Rehkopf note (the plaintiff's group); that Howe would proceed as he had in the past to defend the policies with reference to the All-American Canal, and that we were not to pay him anything for it"; "we had been paying him all the time for this purpose."

Mark M. Rose, another of plaintiff's witnesses (and also of "plaintiff's group"), testified that the company had been paying Mr. Howe $100 a month "in order to keep his paper going," but was "not bound to pay it"; that "Mr. Howe was entitled to the support and respect of every 100 per cent. American in the Imperial Valley."

E. R. Gorman (another of "plaintiff's group"), plaintiff's witness, testified that he "understood that the Imperial Laguna Water Company" ("plaintiff's group" were officers and stockholders of this company) "was to take care of the Rehkopf note by payments of $100 per month; that he so represented to the other men signing the note with him."

Howe's testimony is voluminous, but, on the question of this contract or agreement, is consistently to the effect that he went ahead in good faith as editor and publisher of the paper, relying upon his understanding that his advertising and supporting the idea of the All-American Canal was to continue at the rate of $100 per month until the amount of the unpaid balance on the conditional sales contracts was "wiped out," and that this was done.

We think a further detailed consideration of the evidence is unnecessary. A careful examination of the transcript shows that there was sufficient evidence to support the findings of the trial court.

[2] The principle that under these circumstances this court will not disturb the findings of the trial court is so well established that we will emulate the commendable course pursued by counsel for both sides on this appeal, and cite no unnecessary authorities.

In the final analysis it may fairly be said that the evidence on both sides disclosed that it is not disputed that a contract or understanding existed between the plaintiff and Howe that the latter should continue, through his paper the Zanjero, to advertise and support the cause of the All-American Canal as he had been doing until the amount which plaintiff and his group had borrowed from Rehkopf to pay the balance due on the two conditional sales contracts had been repaid, and that the real issue was and is whether this amount should be repaid in cash as claimed by plaintiff and appellant, or by advertising and support by Howe in his paper of the All-American Canal as claimed by intervenor and his witnesses.

Believing the latter, as he did, the trial court could not have found for plaintiff and appellant. To have done so would have been in violation of the principle laid down in Blood v. La Serena Land & Water Co., 134 Cal. 361, 66 P. 317:

"The law does not allow a corporation to retain the benefits which it has received from the contract, and escape liability upon it."

Judgment affirmed.

SIMPSON v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 5756.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 19, 1927.

1. Master and servant $\S$ 391 $\frac{1}{4}$ —Payments awarded under Workmen's Compensation Act may properly bear interest at 7 per cent. from date of award or date payment becomes due.

In proceeding under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), it is proper to order that all payments awarded shall bear interest at rate of 7 per cent. until paid, beginning with date of award or date thereafter at which payment becomes due, and objection to rate of interest is merely objection to law.

2. Master and servant $\S$ 417(7)—Industrial Accident Commission's findings on evidence are conclusive.

In proceeding under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), in which there is any evidence to support findings and award of commission, reviewing court is powerless to intervene to weigh evidence or disregard portions of it.

Application by John Simpson, an individual, doing business under the name and style of John Simpson & Co., for certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation for injuries. Award affirmed.

Henry M. Lee, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

YORK, J. On petition for writ of review.

The undisputed evidence in this case shows that the injured employee received his injury when a tower on which he was working toppled over and at the time the tower so fell it was not guyed in accordance with safety order No. 1113 (h) of the general construction safety orders of the Industrial Accident Commission, which had been served upon the employer. There is no merit in the claim that such tower did not have to be guyed at all until completed. From then on the record discloses a conflict as to practically all material points to be considered on the hearing of this writ, but the fact remains that in the voluminous transcript filed in connection with the return to the writ for review there is sufficient evidence to support each conclusion found by the commission. It is true that a great many of the findings are in general form, but nevertheless are in such form as has been approved heretofore by the Supreme Court of this state.

It may be that the evidence would have justified a finding that the employers were not guilty of serious and willful misconduct. But the commission has passed upon this matter, upon sufficient evidence, and it is not for us to disturb their finding or the allowance of additional compensation on account of the finding by them that the employer was guilty of willful and serious misconduct.

[1] The objection to the rate of interest is merely an objection to the law, in accordance with which the award did set forth:

"It is hereby ordered that all payments herein awarded shall bear interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum until paid, beginning with the date of this award or the date thereafter at which payment becomes due."

[2] The briefs of the petitioner seem to request this court to weigh the evidence and to disregard certain portions of the evidence. Any of such argument and the questions so raised by petitioner will not be discussed in this opinion, as it has always been held that where there is any evidence to support the findings and award of the commission, that this court is powerless to intervene.

The award is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 17, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 15, 1928.

1. Mechanics' Liens $\S$ 281(4)—Evidence held not to warrant findings that owners were indebted to builders under cost plus contract for extras in excess of agreed maximum cost.

Evidence that contractors had received from owners $18,639.20 for constructing buildings, maximum cost of which was limited to $16,000, held not to sustain finding that owners were indebted to contractors for extras in sum of $1,878.44, although there were some changes in specifications, both by addition and subtraction.

2. Contracts $\S$ 143—Courts do not make over contracts for parties or strike out portions written therein.

It is not function of court to make over contracts for parties or to strike out portions clearly written therein.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Thomas A. Cavanagh and another, copartners doing business under the name and style of Cavanagh Bros., against Martha Q. Keplinger and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Knight, Boland & Christin, of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. E. McCurdy, of San Mateo, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs commenced an action against the defendants to foreclose a mechanic's lien. The defendants appeared and answered and a trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiffs, and from a judgment entered thereon the defendants have appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The plaintiffs were the original contractors. They were given a written contract to construct a dwelling and a garage for the defendants. In their complaint they attempted to plead a common count for the balance due on an account for goods sold, etc., and the facts showing that they were entitled to a lien therefor. In their answer the defendants, among other things, denied that there was any balance due or unpaid. On the trial of the case it transpired that after the contract was executed the parties made many changes therein, the defendants ordered many extras, and the parties agreed to omit certain features contained in the original contract. The plaintiffs claimed that they had built the residence and the garage, and that in addition to the structure called for in the original plans and specifications the plaintiffs had furnished 73 items which they claimed as extras, consisting of materials and labor. The defendants conceded that they had ordered some extras, but they asserted that some things, claimed to be extras, were included in the original contract and the trial court so held as to eighteen items.

[1] At this time the defendants make several points, but it will not be necessary to consider but one of the points. The defendants assert that the evidence is insufficient to support the decision. We think that the assertion is well founded. In their complaint the plaintiffs claimed that the balance due them was $3,089.26. After hearing the evidence the trial court fixed the amount at $1,878.44. The essence of the objection of the defendants is that the evidence introduced does not show that any balance was due the plaintiffs. It was admitted that the defendants had paid to the plaintiffs $18,639.20. There was no evidence that the payments so made did not fully discharge the obligations of the defendants. Some of the passages contained in the contract are as follows:

"2. * * * Other changes may be made in said plans and specifications, but only upon and in accordance with written consent first obtained from the said architect, approved by owner.
* * * 4. It is agreed that the maximum cost of said building shall be fourteen thousand five hundred dollars ($14,500), which shall include everything in connection with the construction of said building, excepting * * * your fees, and the architect's fees. Any cost in excess of this amount is to be borne by you. If the actual cost as above specified shall be less than said sum, then any saving is to inure to my benefit.
* * * I agree to pay you in addition to the above amount the sum of fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00) as and for your total compensation for supervising and directing the construction of the building, and all other services that may be rendered by you pursuant to this contract. This amount of payment is to be regardless of the cost of the building, except that if the cost of the building exceeds the maximum herein specified, I reserve the right to withhold such excess out of your commission, and if such commission be not sufficient to carry the whole excess, then it is agreed that you will pay any additional amount over to me on demand.
5. The said price hereinabove provided for is to include everything necessary for the completion of said building, except as mentioned herein, as called for by the plans and specifications, and no expense for extra work is to be incurred by me or charged to me unless you have first procured the architect's consent in writing, carrying my approval, with an agreement on the price of the extra work or charges, which in no instance is to exceed cost plus 10 per cent. 6. Payments are to be made by me on the 10th day of each month. Said payments are to cover the amounts of moneys actually paid out by you upon said building as shown by receipted bills and time cards to be delivered to me; and a certificate from my architect that the amount is properly due. You agree, before the final payment to submit to me a complete statement of the actual cost of said work set forth in this agreement and to submit all pay rolls, receipts, bills and vouchers for same. * * *

It is quite clear that if the building, set forth in the written contract and the plans and specifications, cost $16,000 (that is, $14,500 plus $1,500), or more, the owners would not be liable to the contractor in excess of the total just named. If it cost a less sum they were entitled to an allowance accordingly. The contract provided that before an extra was incurred that the price thereof should be agreed upon, but in no instance was it to exceed cost plus 10 per cent. The contractor agreed to pay all bills for labor and materials. The owners agreed to pay on the 10th of each month. Those payments were to cover actual outlays as shown by receipted bills. That covenant was that the receipted bills would be delivered to the owners. Before receiving the final payment the contractor agreed to submit to the owners "a complete statement of the actual cost of said work and to submit all pay rolls, receipts, bills and vouchers for same." It is thus made clear that the contractor under his contract was entitled to receive from the owner (1) the net cost of the buildings as specified not exceeding $16,000; (2) the net cost of the extras; and (3) 10 per cent. on the extras. There is nothing in the record from which we can compute separately any one of the factors just enumerated nor all together. The record discloses that, although often requested, the contractor never furnished "a complete statement of the actual cost, * * *" nor any statement. It also discloses that neither before nor during the trial did he exhibit "all payrolls, receipts * * *" but that he did exhibit some payrolls and some receipts. Before the contractor was entitled to $14,500 he was bound to show that the buildings, as specified, had cost that sum. If they had not, he was bound to deduct accordingly. Before he was entitled to receive the $1,500, or any part thereof, he was bound to show that the cost of the building, less extras, had not exceeded $14,500. Before he was entitled to pay for an alleged extra, he was bound to show (1) that the alleged extra was in fact an extra; (2) that there was an initial agreement therefor; and (3) that the charge did not exceed actual cost plus 10 per cent. The claims for extras were not established by any evidence as to the third element just stated. It was established and the trial court found what in fact were extras. During the trial there was a great deal of controversy over whether the contractor obtained an authorization before executing each extra. That controversy has been abandoned by the defendants. It may now be assumed that the authorizations were obtained.

As the record stands, it is admitted that the plaintiffs have received from the defendants $18,639.20 and that they built some buildings for the defendants on which the maximum cost to defendants was limited to $16,000. It also appears that there were some changes of addition and some of subtraction. But there is not a particle of evidence to show that, at this time, the defendants owe the plaintiffs any balance. It follows that the finding as to a balance of $1,878.44 is not sustained by the evidence.

[2] In reading the record we notice that the claim is made that it is impossible to make a segregation of the cost of each extra as distinguished from the cost of the building as specified. We are not unmindful of difficulties, but a most cursory reading discloses that it is not impossible to make the segregation. Moreover, the parties made the contract and it is no function of the courts to make over contracts for parties or to strike out portions clearly written therein.

The judgment is reversed.

CLARKE et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 5781.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 23, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 20, 1928.

1. Master and servant ☞417(7)—Industrial Accident Commission's findings of fact on substantial evidence are conclusive.

As to questions of fact in compensation proceeding, where any substantial evidence is introduced in support thereof, the findings by the Industrial Accident Commission are conclusive.

2. Master and servant ☞417(7)—Industrial Accident Commission's finding of employers' serious and willful misconduct constitutes finding of fact.

A conclusion by the Industrial Accident Commission as to serious and willful misconduct of employers constitutes a finding of fact, not subject to review, if supported by substantial evidence.

3. Master and servant ☞387—"Serious and willful misconduct" of employers is conduct likely to jeopardize employee's safety, with reckless disregard for safety (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, § 6 [a] [4], as amended).

"Serious and willful misconduct" of employers, within meaning of Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 834) § 6 (a) (4), as amended by St. 1919, p. 912, § 2, and St. 1923, p. 375, authorizing extra compensation to employee injured by reason thereof, is any conduct which employers either knew or ought to have known was likely to jeopardize safety of employee with reckless disregard for employee's safety and willingness to inflict injury.

4. Master and servant ☞405(6)—Finding that employee's death was caused by serious and willful misconduct of employers held supported by evidence.

Finding by the Industrial Accident Commission that death of employee from slide of earth on a cut on a hillside, where employee was digging a retaining wall, was caused by serious and willful misconduct of employers and managing representatives, held supported by substantial evidence.

5. Master and servant ☞416—Industrial Accident Commission need not set forth minor facts leading to determination of ultimate fact.

Industrial Accident Commission, on finding of ultimate fact, need not set forth the several minor facts which, taken together, lead to determination of such ultimate fact.

6. Master and servant ☞347—Law providing for extra compensation for injuries through serious and willful misconduct of employers held constitutional (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act, § 6 [a] [4] as amended).

Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 834) § 6 (a) (4), as amended by St. 1919, p. 912, § 2, and St. 1923, p. 375, providing for extra compensation to employee, where injury was caused by serious and willful misconduct of employers, held constitutional.

Certiorari to Review an Order of the Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act by Ruth M. Ross for the death of her husband, opposed by H. O. Clarke and another, copartners doing business under the firm name of H. O. Clarke Company, and another. Order of Industrial Accident Commission, awarding compensation, and the employers bring certiorari. Affirmed.

W. C. Flynn, of Los Angeles, and Frank J. Creede, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

HOUSER, J. Briefly, the facts appear to be that an employee of petitioners was killed by a slide of earth on a cut on a hillside at a point where the employee was engaged in shoveling soil from a trench preparatory to the construction of a retaining wall. At the hearing of the application by the widow of the employee for compensation arising from his death, among other things, the respondent commission found:

"Said injury was caused by reason of the serious and willful misconduct of the employers and/or their managing representative. The applicant is entitled to have the amount of compensation otherwise recoverable for said injury increased one-half."

Petitioners contend, first, that there was no evidence to support such finding, and consequently that the respondent commission acted in excess of its powers. The following facts were in evidence:

That petitioners herein were general contractors, who at the time of the accident were engaged in the preliminary work incident to the construction of a 10-foot reinforced concrete wall, which was proposed to be built as a retaining wall against or adjacent to a cut which had been made on the side of a hill. In the preparation for the construction of the wall, it became necessary to dig a ditch of about two feet in depth and of equal width, in addition to the cut on the hillside, which had been made before the contractors for the construction of the wall itself had become connected with the work. That the wall might have a more secure foundation, and in order to allow for a footing of the retaining wall, the cut had been undercut "about one foot." As was stated by one witness, "it varied from a foot to eighteen inches on a horizontal plane." Although practically the upper one-fourth of the soil in the side of the hill to be retained was composed of adobe loam, the lower three-fourths portion thereof was composed of "aluminum of silicate which was bredpated" and which had a tendency to admit a great deal of water. It was also shown that the hill "was saturated with spring water and surface water, which was evident in the soil in the face of the bank cut and in the seepage to the surface in numerous places. The bank was not held by shoring or bracing. The bottom of the trench contained running spring water." Under such conditions a cave-in or slide of earth of the hillside occurred at the point where the cut was made, which resulted in the death of the employee.

As hereinbefore indicated, at the time of the accident the employee was engaged in shoveling loose soil from the bottom of the trench. One witness testified that a short time prior thereto several "slight slides" occurred within from 30 to 40 feet of the place where the employee was killed. It was also shown that each of the contractors, as well as their foreman on the job, was experienced in the work of building retaining walls, and knew, or at least should have known, the dangers incident thereto. In part, the foreman testified that in the location in which the accident occurred a cave-in was not anticipated, because "the peculiarity in our line—dirt don't slump down; it sort of chips off." A construction engineer in the employ of the safety department of the respondent commission testified in substance that, from his observation of the cut, it would appear to a person reasonably familiar with work of the character of that proposed to be done, the bank or cut was dangerous, and that the danger would be "perceptible to a man working on that kind of construction"; that previous to the time when the slide in question occurred, and located within approximately 18 feet thereof on a cut which ran at right angles to the cut here under consideration, another cave-in had taken place.

The objection of petitioners to the finding which is the subject of their criticism is directed to that part thereof which indicates that the accident which caused the death of the employee was "caused by the serious and willful misconduct of the employers and/or their managing representative."

[1, 2] At the outset it should be remembered that, as to questions of fact, where any substantial evidence is introduced in support thereof, the findings by the commission are conclusive. 27 Cal. Jur. p. 582, and cases there cited. With so much in mind, it becomes advisable to inquire whether a conclusion by the commission as to "serious and willful misconduct" constitutes a finding of fact. A definition of "serious misconduct," as well as of "willful misconduct," may be found in the language used by the Supreme Court of this state in the case of E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 184 Cal. 180, 188, 189, 193 P. 105, 108, 16 A. L. R. 611, as follows:

"The first question presented is, then: Was the commission justified in finding that the petitioner was guilty of 'serious misconduct'? There is no statutory definition of this term. In this connection we may again quote from Beven, p. 401: 'To constitute "serious misconduct," it is probable that the Legislature intended to signify conduct that an average workman in being guilty of, either would know, or ought to know, if he turned his mind to consider the matter, to be conduct likely to jeopardize his own and his fellow workman's safety.' In our opinion the serious misconduct of an employer under our statute may be similarly defined. There should be no difference in principle between the degree of care required of an employer and that exacted from an employee. 'Serious misconduct' of an employer must therefore be taken to mean conduct which the employer either knew, or ought to have known, if he had turned his mind to the matter, to be conduct likely to jeopardize the safety of his employees. * * * Next, as to whether such serious misconduct was 'willful.' It has frequently been said that willful misconduct involves the knowledge of the person that the thing which he is doing is wrong. Lewis v. Great Western Ry. Co., L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 195; In re Burns, 218 Mass. 8, 105 N. E. 601, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 787; Riley v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., 227 Mass. 55, 116 N. E. 259; Beckles' Case, 230 Mass. 272, 119 N. E. 653. Conceding that knowledge is required, it seems to us that, in order to prove the requisite knowledge, it is not necessary for the evidence to show positively that the person was notified of the unsafe condition of his premises, but that it is sufficient if it appears that the circumstances surrounding the act of commission or omission are such as 'evinced a reckless disregard for the safety of others and a willingness to inflict the injury complained of.' Louisville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Bryan, 107 Ind. 51, 7 N. E. 807. See, also, Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Judd, 10 Ind. App. 213, 36 N. E. 779."

And the opinion therein also indicates that a conclusion on the issue of serious and willful misconduct was a finding of fact within the province of the Industrial Accident Commission. But direct authority, where the question was necessarily involved, is contained in the case of Myers v. Industrial Accident Commission, 191 Cal. 673, 677, 678, 218 P. 11. It is there said:

"When injured, the applicant was a common laborer, 23 years of age. It was for the commission to determine the facts from all the surroundings and attendant circumstances as they existed at the time of the injury. Whether the action of the employee amounted to willful misconduct, as used in the act, and as defined in Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 186, 149 P. 35, or whether it did not amount to that, was for the commission to determine. * * *

In the case of Cunningham Construction Co. v. Morgan (Ind. App.) 156 N. E. 524, it was said that "the question [of willful misconduct] was one of fact for the Industrial Board."

[3, 4] Considering that any conduct which the employers either knew or ought to have known was likely to jeopardize the safety of the employee constituted serious misconduct, and that willful misconduct is manifested by a reckless disregard for the safety of the employee and a willingness to inflict the injury of which complaint is made (Horst Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 184 Cal. 180, 188, 189, 193 P. 105, 16 A. L. R. 611; Blue Diamond Plaster Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com., 188 Cal. 403, 205 P. 678), and that (assuming the existence of substantial evidence in support thereof) the question of whether such conditions exist is one solely for the determination of the Industrial Accident Commission (Myers v. Industrial Acc. Com., 191 Cal. 673, 218 P. 11) from the facts adduced in evidence, as hereinbefore set forth, it becomes clear that the respondent commission had before it at least substantial evidence relating to the issue and therefore was acting within its powers in reaching the conclusion that "said injury was caused by reason of the serious and willful misconduct of the employers and their managing representative." It follows that the objection of petitioners herein with reference to such finding cannot be sustained.

[5] It is next urged by petitioners that the respondent commission failed to make findings of fact which would show upon what its conclusion of serious and willful misconduct on the part of the contractors was predicated. But assuming, as we must, that the finding of serious and willful misconduct was that of an ultimate fact, it follows that it was unnecessary to set forth the several minor facts which taken together led to the determination of the ultimate fact. In the case of Frankfort G. I. Co. v. Pillsbury, 173 Cal. 56, 60, 159 P. 150, 152, it is said:

"The commission found the ultimate facts in controversy. It was not required to make specific findings upon probative matters. Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 705, 151 P. 398."

And see, also, Harlan v. Industrial Acc. Com., 194 Cal. 352, 356, 228 P. 654; Smith v. Industrial Acc. Com., 26 Cal. App. 560, 563, 147 P. 600.

[6] Petitioners finally contend that that part of section 6 (a) (4) of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831), as amended (St. 1919, p. 912, St. 1923, p. 375), which provides for extra compensation to the employee where his injury was caused by the serious and willful misconduct of the employer, is unconstitutional. In that connection it need only be said that the precise point made by petitioners was ruled adversely to their contention in the case of E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 184 Cal. 180, 192, 193 P. 105, 16 A. L. R. 611.

The award is affirmed.

Ex parte MARTINSON. (Cr. 1006.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 8, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 9, 1928.

1. Criminal law §1084—Amendment by which order to stay execution, pending appeal from conviction, is placed within sole discretion of trial court held mere change of method of procedure (St. 1927, p. 1062; Pen. Code, § 1243).

St. 1927, p. 1062, providing that granting or refusal of order staying an execution on appeal from judgment of conviction shall rest in sole discretion of trial court, merely changes form or method of procedure for staying execution provided by Pen. Code, § 1243, which the 1927 enactment amends.

2. Statutes §161(1)—Repeal by implication is effected only where both acts relate to same subject-matter.

Where repeal is had by implication, both former and later statute must relate to same subject-matter.

3. Statutes §231—Court, in construing Code, should ascertain legislative intent.

In construing different sections of the Code, court should ascertain, if possible, intent of Legislature at time of their enactment.

4. Statutes §231—Interpretation which gives all sections of Code practical effect is preferred over that which leads to absurd result.

In interpreting statute, if one interpretation leads to absurdity, while another will give practical effect to all sections of the Code, latter interpretation is to be preferred.

5. Bail §42—Statute giving right to bail on appeal in misdemeanor cases held not repealed by act denying stay of execution except by order of trial court (Pen. Code, § 1272, subd. 2; St. 1927, p. 1062, amending Pen. Code, § 1243).

Pen. Code, § 1272, subd. 2, granting bail as matter of right when appeal is from a judgment imposing imprisonment in cases of misdemeanor, held not repealed by St. 1927, p. 1062, amending Pen. Code, § 1243, which denies stay of execution on judgments after conviction unless trial court shall so order, since amended section 1243 is found in Pen. Code, pt. 2, tit. 9, c. 1, relating to appeals, whereas section 1272 is contained in part 2, tit. 10, c. 1, art. 1, relating to subject of bail.

6. Bail §51—Court is guided somewhat by extent of penalty imposed, in fixing bail on appeal from conviction for misdemeanor (Pen. Code, § 1272, subd. 2).

In fixing amount of bail, under Pen. Code, § 1272, subd. 2, allowing bail as matter of right on appeal from conviction for misdemeanor, court is guided to some extent by penalty imposed.

Application by O. A. Martinson for writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the sheriff of Sonoma county, to secure the petitioner's release from custody on bail pending appeal from a conviction for a misdemeanor. Petitioner ordered admitted to bail pending appeal.

W. F. Cowan and John O. Kroyer, both of Santa Rosa, for petitioner.

Carl Barnard, Dist. Atty., of Santa Rosa, and E. J. Dole, Asst. Dist. Atty., of Petaluma, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The petitioner was tried and convicted of a misdemeanor as provided for in section 21 of the Juvenile Court Law (see Deering's General Laws 1923, Act No. 3966, p. 1568), and was sentenced to pay a fine of $750, and also to be imprisoned in the county jail of the county of Sonoma for the period of 6 months. From this judgment the petitioner has appealed to this court and applied to the trial court for admission to bail pending the determination of such appeal. This application was denied by the trial court, and the petitioner is here asking that he be admitted to bail pending such appeal.

[1] Unless the second subdivision of section 1272 of the Penal Code has been repealed or modified by the amendment made to section 1243 of the Penal Code by the act of the Legislature approved May 19 (Statutes 1927, p. 1062), it is conceded that the petitioner is entitled to bail. Prior to the approval of the act just referred to, section 1243 of the Penal Code read as follows:

"An appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment of conviction stays the execution of the judgment in all capital cases, and in all other cases, upon filing with the clerk of the court in which the conviction was had, a certificate of the judge of such court, or of a justice of the Supreme Court, that, in his opinion, there is probable cause for the appeal, but not otherwise."

As amended, said section now reads:

"An appeal to the Supreme Court or to a District Court of Appeal from a judgment of conviction stays the execution of the judgment in all cases where sentence of death has been imposed, but does not stay the execution of the judgment in any other case unless the trial court shall so order. The granting or refusal of such order shall rest in the sole discretion of the trial court. If such order is made, the clerk of the court shall issue a certificate stating that such order has been made. In cases where the defendant has been sentenced to death or life imprisonment he shall be confined in a state prison pending the decision upon his appeal."

By the amended section the law is really changed only in matters of procedure. The granting to an appellant of a stay of execution prior to the amendment rested in the trial court, in the District Court of Appeal, and the Supreme Court, as to whether a writ of probable cause should be issued. It was not a matter of absolute right one way or the other. The exercise of the discretion as to whether such a writ should issue was placed in the courts above mentioned. While the section of the Code did not, in terms, give the District Court of Appeal the authority to issue such a writ, the constitutional provision under which such court was created provided therefor. As amended, the right of the Supreme Court and of the District Court of Appeal to issue such a writ is eliminated. There is no provision in the amended section for the issuance of a writ of probable cause. Whether execution shall be stayed, which really means whether the defendant in a felony case shall remain in the county jail in the county where conviction has been had, or shall be taken to the state's prison, other than in the two excepted cases, is vested solely in the trial court. Section 1243 of the Penal Code, as it read prior to the passage of the amendatory act in 1927, and since, has to do only with the stay of execution. The form or method of procedure by which execution may be stayed, and the court vested with power to stay such execution, is the only change wrought by the amendment. The title of the act amending section 1243 of the Penal Code, passed by the Legislature and approved May 19, 1927, as above stated, reads as follows:

"An act to amend section 1243 of the Penal Code, relating to stay of execution pending appeal in criminal cases."

The subject-matter of the title is staying execution, which is the substantive law of the section as it stood both before and after the 1927 amendment or revision. Section 1243 is found in chapter 1 of title 9, pt. 2, relating to appeals to the Supreme Court, which, under the Constitution, also relates to appeals to the District Court of Appeal. There is nothing in any one of the sections contained in chapter 1 of title 9, pt. 2, relating to any subject other than that of appeals and the effect thereof. The subtitle, as it appears in the Codes, indicates the entire subject-matter, to wit:

"Appeals, when allowed and how taken, and the effect thereof."

By reference to the title employed by the Legislature in passing the amendatory act of 1927, it is readily perceived that the Legislature had in mind just one subject; i. e., the staying of execution pending appeal, and who should be vested with authority to issue such order. Nothing else is included in the title, and nothing further appears in the amended section.

[2] Subdivision 2 of section 1272 of the Penal Code, relating to bail as a matter of right, as it now reads and has read since the amendment in 1909, is as follows:

"As a matter of right, when the appeal is from a judgment imposing imprisonment in cases of misdemeanor."

Prior to 1909 this subdivision was not included in the section. Section 1272 of the Penal Code is found in article 1, chapter 1, title 10, pt. 2, of the Penal Code under the title:

"In what cases the defendant may be admitted to bail."

The article has to do exclusively with the subject of admitting a defendant to bail, both before and after conviction; specifies in what cases it is a matter of discretion and in what cases it is a matter of right. There is nothing contained in any of the sections found in article 1 of chapter 1, title 10, pt. 2, of the Penal Code, relating to the staying of executions. The proposition before us may be stated more succinctly in this way: Chapter 1, of title 9, pt. 2, has to do with appeals and executions. Article 1 of chapter 1 of title 10, pt. 2, has to do exclusively with the subject of bail. Neither one contains a section referring to any subject-matter contained in the other. Notwithstanding this, it is contended by the respondent that section 1243 of the Penal Code, by implication, repeals subdivision 2 of section 1272 of the same Code in so far as bail in misdemeanor cases is made a matter of right. This contention overlooks the essential fact that where repeal is had by implication, the essential requisite is that both acts must relate to the same subject-matter. This is clearly set forth in section 85 of 23 Cal. Jur. 697, as follows:

"In order that one act may repeal another by implication, it seems clear that both must deal with the same subject-matter. An act is not repealed by a subsequent act relating to another matter, nor is a section repealed by a subsequent section if the subjects of the two sections are distinct and separate and in no wise conflict with each other."

Again, as said in the case of People v. Pacific Improvement Co., 130 Cal. 442, 62 P. 739:

"It is the established rule of construction that the law does not favor a repeal by implication, but that where there are two or more provisions relating to the same subject-matter they must, if possible, be construed so as to maintain the integrity of both."

See, also, the case of California Highway Commission v. Ballard as County Auditor, 247 P. 527, where the subject of repeal by implication was considered by this court.

To the same effect is the case of Banks v. Yolo County, 104 Cal. 258, 37 P. 900, where the court said:

"Repeals by implication are not favored; and the repugnancy between two statutes should be very clear to warrant a court holding that the later in time repeals the other, when it does not, in terms, purport to do so."

As shown by the sections as set forth herein, there is nothing in the act of the Legislature of 1927 amending section 1243 of the Penal Code which refers in terms to anything whatever contained in section 1272 of the Penal Code or to any of the sections of the title in which said section is found.

[3] Again, in construing different sections of the Code, it is helpful to ascertain, if possible, the intent of the Legislature at the time of their enactment. In this particular we have before us the report of the commission for the reform of criminal procedure, submitted to the Legislature in 1927, and which led to the enactment of section 1243 of the Penal Code in its present form. This report shows that nothing outside of the subject-matter of said section was being considered. As to said section 1243, the report upon which the Legislature acted reads:

"It is recommended that this section be amended to provide that the granting of a stay of execution on appeal shall rest in the sole discretion of the judge of the trial court. The evident intent of the Legislature in adopting the section as it now stands was to make the issuance of such certificate a matter of discretion. This intent has, to a large extent, been nullified by judicial decision. The proposed amendment will restore it. It is felt that this discretion should rest with the judge of the trial court rather than with the Justices of the Supreme or appellate courts, who can have no personal familiarity with the case."

Reading further in the report we find that the same commission recommended to the Legislature amendments to certain sections of the Penal Code relating to the admission of bail, a reading of which shows that the commission did not have in view the recommending of any limitation being placed upon the statutory right to bail in misdemeanor cases. A quotation from the report will best explain what the commission had in thought:

"As a result of the study of the present system and its practical application, several changes are recommended. The present system has been, and is subject to a number of very serious abuses. Perhaps first among these is the so-called straw bail evil; that is, the giving of bonds which are not collectible. Another serious abuse has grown up in connection with the bail bond business; that is, the business of giving bail bonds for pay."

The commission then recommended certain amendments to sections of the Penal Code found in article 2, c. 1, title 10, pt. 2, providing for a closer scrutiny as to the financial responsibility of sureties upon bail bonds.

[4-6] Another principle must also be held in thought when interpreting statutes. If one interpretation leads to an absurdity, while another will give practical effect to all the sections of the Code, the latter is to be preferred. Section 1272 of the Penal Code, as we have stated, gives the defendant in misdemeanor cases an absolute right to bail pending appeal. If the construction contended for by the people should be given to section 1243 of the same Code, and the court should hold that this section, as amended in 1927, repeals, by implication, the right given by section 1272, the Legislature would be placed in the position of having granted a defendant the right of appeal in a misdemeanor case, and at the same time opened the door to take away every possible benefit that could be derived from such an appeal. This will clearly appear by the following illustration: The law allows the reporter in a criminal case 20 days from the time of notice being given in which to write up the testimony in a criminal case. Settlement of the transcript may be had by the clerk giving notice to the respective parties to appear before the trial judge at a certain date, 10 days being allowed for this. Assuming that the cause is placed upon the calendar of the appellate court to which the cause is appealed, the statute allows 30 days before the same needs to be heard, assuming that the court complies therewith and the cause is placed upon the calendar for hearing. After the hearing is had, the statute allows 90 days within which the appellate court may render a decision. After the decision has been rendered 60 days must elapse before the remittitur of the appellate court goes down to the trial court from which the cause was appealed. Thus, under the provisions of the statute, where a defendant in a misdemeanor case is sentenced to imprisonment for 6 months or 180 days under the same Penal Code, 210 days might be lawfully taken under the Codes before rendering a decision. In other words, if a defendant, under such circumstances, has presented a meritorious cause on appeal and secured a reversal of a sentence imposing 6 months' imprisonment in the county jail, he would have served his time and been at liberty 30 days before the decision in his case would, under the law, become final. We assume that 6 months' period would cover, or perhaps more than cover, the average sentence in misdemeanor cases. We do not think the Legislature intended any such result, and there seems to us no escape from the conclusion that the Legislature had no thought of taking away the statutory right to bail in misdemeanor cases, and that the Legislature did not, by the amendment of section 1243 of the Penal Code by the Act of May 19, 1927, limit such statutory right. The statutory right to bail pending appeal in misdemeanor cases being in full force and effect, we have only to fix the amount or sum that should be exacted as security for the defendant's appearance, to render himself in execution. In doing this we are guided somewhat by the extent of the penalty imposed in this case. It is therefore ordered that the petitioner be admitted to bail, pending appeal, upon giving a bond in the sum of $1,500, with sureties approved by a judge of the superior court of Sonoma county.

87 Cal. App. 795

In the Matter of the Application of Ione MARTINSON for a Writ of Habeas Corpus.
(No. 1007.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 8, 1927.

Application for writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the sheriff of Sonoma county to secure the release of petitioner from custody on bail pending appeal. Writ granted.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, and John O. Kroyer, of Santa Rosa, for petitioner.

Carl Barnard, Dist. Atty., of Santa Rosa, and E. J. Dole, Asst. Dist. Atty., of Petaluma, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The defendant in this case was convicted of a misdemeanor under the Juvenile Court Law of the state of California (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act No. 3966), and has appealed to this court from such judgment of conviction. Bail, upon appeal, was denied in the trial court.

This case, in all particulars, is identical with that of In re O. A. Martinson, 262 P. 474, on petition for writ of habeas corpus, this day decided. Upon the authority of that case the petitioner herein is admitted to bail, pending appeal, upon giving a bond in the sum of $1,500 with sureties approved by a judge of the superior court of Sonoma county.

In the Matter of the Application of C. PERFETTI for a Writ of Habeas Corpus.
(No. 1008.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 8, 1927.

Application for writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the sheriff of Sonoma county to secure the release of petitioner from custody on bail pending appeal. Writ granted.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, and John O. Kroyer, of Santa Rosa, for petitioner.

Carl Barnard, Dist. Atty., of Santa Rosa, and E. J. Dole, Asst. Dist. Atty., of Petaluma, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner above named was convicted of a misdemeanor for an offense committed against the Juvenile Court Law of the state of California (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act No. 3966), and has appealed to this court from such conviction. Bail, pending appeal, was denied by the superior court. Every legal question involved in this proceeding is identical with those considered in the case of In re O. A. Martinson, 262 P. 474, this day decided. Upon the authority in that case the petitioner is admitted to bail, pending appeal, upon giving a bond in the sum of $1,500, with sureties approved by a judge of the superior court of Sonoma county.

BLEUEL v. CITY OF OAKLAND et al.
(Civ. 5867.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 15, 1927.

1. Certiorari ⚡22—Discretionary action of board given authority to determine facts is not reviewable except by review analogous to certiorari.

When Legislature has given board discretion to determine facts, board's decision is not reviewable except in some way substantially the same as upon writ of certiorari.

2. Mandamus ⚡87—Mandamus held proper remedy for alleged abuse of discretion by city council refusing permit for riding academy.

Mandamus held proper remedy to review alleged abuse of discretionary power by city council in refusing to issue permit for riding academy under ordinance requiring permit from council.

3. Mandamus ☞187(9)—City council appealing from judgment granting mandamus has burden of showing error.

On appeal from judgment granting mandamus to control action of city council, burden of showing error is upon city council as appellant as in other cases.

4. Trial ☞375—Action of trial court in visiting premises of proposed riding academy, previously viewed by city council, was not error in mandamus action to compel issuance of permit for its maintenance.

Action of trial court in viewing premises where proposed riding academy was to be conducted, and in viewing premises of rival riding academy which had been licensed, held not error in mandamus action to compel city council to issue permit, where members of council had also visited premises.

5. Mandamus ☞174—Trial court has jurisdiction to hear and determine allegations of complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 1090).

Trial court has jurisdiction to hear and determine allegations of complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 1090, and determines whether allegations are proved.

6. Mandamus ☞174—Whether allegations of petition were proved and whether there was any legal cause justifying denial of permit to maintain riding academy held questions for trial court (Code Civ. Proc. § 1090).

In mandamus action to compel city council to issue permit for maintaining riding academy, whether allegations of petition were proved and whether there was any legal cause justifying the council in rejecting plaintiff's application were questions for determination of trial court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1090.

7. Mandamus ☞168(4)—Finding that city council abused discretion in refusing permit for riding academy, thought to be objectionable at some future time, held proper under evidence.

Finding that city council abused discretion given under ordinance in refusing permit to conduct riding academy and was therefore subject to mandamus held sustained by evidence showing proposed academy was located in sparsely-settled neighborhood and that ground of refusal was that neighborhood would ultimately become residential district in which presence of academy would be objectionable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Raglan Tuttle, Judge.

Action by Davida S. Bleucl against the City of Oakland and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. Stanley Wood, Acting City Atty., George O. Perkins, Deputy City Atty., Preston Higgins, City Atty., and Homer W. Buckley, Deputy City Atty., all of Oakland, for appellants.

John Jewett Earle, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff applied to the trial court for a writ of mandamus.

The defendants appeared and answered. A trial was had before the trial court, sitting without a jury, and the trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff. From a judgment entered thereon the defendants have appealed and have brought up a bill of exceptions.

The plaintiff had commenced the construction of a building for the purpose of conducting a riding academy near the corner of Daisy street and Davenport avenue in the city of Oakland. Thereafter the individual defendants, acting as the council of the city of Oakland, passed and enacted Ordinance 3183 regulating the erection and maintenance of riding academies; among other things the ordinance provided that before any one commenced the operation of a riding academy he should apply to the council for a permit; the plaintiff applied for a permit, the permit was refused, and she commenced this proceeding. On the presentation of her application before the council there were several hearings and many witnesses were called and examined. Many documents were produced and offered in evidence. Several members of the council went to the property owned by the plaintiff and made a personal examination of the property and the territory immediately contiguous thereto. On the trial of the action before the trial court similar proceedings were had. Three of the councilmen were called as witnesses and were examined as to the proceedings had before the council. Upon request of counsel the trial court visited the plaintiff's property and made an examination thereof and of the territory immediately contiguous.

The record is long, and we will not attempt to recite all of the evidence introduced in the trial court. Some of it follows: About the time that the defendants refused a permit to the plaintiff they granted a permit to one Hayford to maintain a riding academy in the same general neighborhood. The defendants did not consider that no riding academy should be allowed in the neighborhood. Both before the council and also before the trial court there was evidence that the plaintiff's building was constructed in the manner required by law, and there was no evidence that the building, as such, was objectionable in any respect; that the plaintiff's building was properly maintained and there was no evidence that it was improperly maintained; that the plaintiff's building and Hayford's building are in the same general neighborhood; that neither building was a fire risk; that both buildings are situated in a rural community where the roads are unpaved and where there are numerous cowpaths; that some of the property in the neighborhood is used for pasturing goats and some is used for poultry raising; that the Hayford building is located on lower ground than is the building of the plaintiff; that the Hayford building is in a more thickly settled community, and if there is any menace there is more of a menace to health by reason of the Hayford building than in the building of the plaintiff; that the distance between the two buildings is but a few blocks; that within a radius of 500 feet around the plaintiff's property there are five buildings; that within a radius of 1000 feet there are many more homes around the Hayford property than around plaintiff's property; that within 500 feet of the Hayford property is an orphanage sheltering over 100 small children; that the orphanage is much closer to the Hayford property than to the plaintiff's property; that the sanitary inspector, pursuant to the request of the defendants, made an examination and report to the defendants regarding the plaintiff's property; and that in his report he stated that he had made an investigation and he found it to be in an excellent locality, out in the country where homes will not be built up around it for a good many years, and that he recommended that a permit be granted as the place complies with all the health regulations. Standing over against the foregoing evidence, it should be stated that some of the councilmen testified that it had been the plan and intention of the council to reserve the foothills for residences and to confine places of business to the level territory and to the main thoroughfares; that the territory where the Hayford building is located is a potential business district, and that the territory where the plaintiff's property is located is a potential residence district. In this same connection it should be stated that by section 11 of Ordinance 3183 it is provided: " * * * when the public health, safety, or general welfare should require, or for other cause, the council shall have power to revoke any permit previously granted. * * * "

[1, 2] 1. The defendants contend that mandamus is not the proper form of remedy under the circumstances of this case. In this connection they call to our attention that the city council under the ordinance was clothed with discretionary power. The ordinance does not lay down predetermined rules or conditions by which a citizen may know in advance whether or not he will be granted a permit. Such legislation has been sustained by our Supreme Court upon the theory, expressed in 2 Dillon's Municipal Corporations (5th Ed.) § 598, and quoted in Gaylord v. City of Pasadena, 175 Cal. 433, 440, 166 P. 348, that such discretionary power is justified in respect to certain businesses on account of the great difficulty of defining in advance the rules and conditions upon which a permit would or would not be given. It has also been sustained upon the broader ground that the reservation of such broad discretionary power is justified in respect to all businesses which are subject to police regulation either on account of their tendency to become a nuisance or on account of their tendency to become a nuisance or on account of their tendency to become a nuisance if conducted in a certain locality or in a certain manner. Parker v. Colburn, 196 Cal. 169, 177, 178, 236 P. 921.

Previous to the time of the last-cited opinion, the court had occasion, in several instances, to deal with the contention that such discretionary power would result in arbitrary discrimination and would be inimical to our system of law, which requires all rules of action to be predetermined and predeclared. For example, in Re Holmes, 187 Cal. 640, 203 P. 398, the court quoted Gaylord v. City of Pasadena, 175 Cal. 433, 166 P. 348, which in turn quoted in re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 558, 38 P. 981, 27 L. R. A. 529, and, at page 647 (203 P. 400) it is said:

"Laws are not made upon the theory of the total depravity of those who are elected to administer them; and the presumption is that municipal officers will not use these small powers villainously or for purposes of oppression or mischief." If this petitioner had applied for a permit under the requirement of the section of the charter above quoted, and been either whimsically or arbitrarily refused such permit, he might then, as is shown in Gaylord v. City of Pasadena, supra, have had recourse to the courts for relief from such unjust and arbitrary action."

Other authorities upholding the issuance of the writ when the discretionary powers of the inferior board have been abused are: Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Com., 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874; Keller v. Hewitt, 109 Cal. 146, 148, 149, 41 P. 871; Raisch v. Board of Education, 81 Cal. 542, 22 P. 890; Levin v. Board of Medical Examiners, 74 Cal. App. 104, 109, 239 P. 410. The appellants rely upon Chambers v. Board of Supervisors, 57 Cal. App. 401, 207 P. 288, to the effect that discretion will not be controlled by mandamus. But in that case the court had no discretion to grant or deny the petition in any sense which is comparable to the discretion defined in the ordinance involved in the instant case. In the Chambers Case the board of supervisors had the power to determine the truth or existence of certain prescribed allegations of fact set forth in the applicant's petition to the board. In case these facts were found to exist the board had no discretion but to grant the petition which was in the nature of a permit. Whatever the nature and extent of the discretion the board may be said to have had in that case, it was a discretion to determine certain allegations of fact. The Legislature having given to the board the power to determine those facts, the board's decision could not be reviewed except in a way substantially the same as upon a writ of certiorari. Some of these distinctions can be seen in the case of Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Com., 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874.

While contending that mandamus is not the proper remedy, respondent has not indicated any other remedy available where such wide discretion is wrongly exercised by the city council. It certainly cannot be the intention of our courts to sustain ordinances vesting such broad discretionary powers in the city council, and justify the same with the statement that if such discretion is abused a remedy is available, and yet refuse to hold available the writ of mandamus, which seems to be the only appropriate writ. We conclude, therefore, that it may not properly be said that a writ of mandamus is not a proper remedy to control an alleged abuse of discretion.

[3, 4] 2. It is next contended that the trial court had no jurisdiction to consider any evidence other than the evidence produced at the hearing before the city council on petitioner's application for a permit to conduct and maintain a riding academy. In this connection appellants complain particularly of the action of the court in viewing the premises where the petitioner proposed to conduct a riding academy and also in viewing the premises of the Hayford riding academy for the conduct of which a license had been previously granted. This seems to have been an important part of the evidence in the opinion of the trial judge. In taking this evidence, however, the trial court was not taking evidence which was not also taken by the city council, for the members of the council also visited the two premises in question and made other outside investigations which influenced them in arriving at their conclusion. The burden of showing error in this case is upon appellants as in other cases. Appellants have not shown affirmatively that the court heard or considered any evidence other than the evidence produced at the hearing before the city council.

[5-7] 3. The third point made by the defendants is that the evidence is insufficient; and this point is subdivided into attacks on seven findings. The trial court made findings in which it held that the defendants abused their discretion in denying a permit to the plaintiff. In making those findings it followed the wording of the petition of the plaintiff. In doing so it used many different adjectives, adverbs and phrases which were synonymous with abuse of discretion. We think the attack on the findings is without merit. The following is a fair statement:

"In accordance with elementary rules, mandamus is a proper remedy to compel municipal officers or boards to take action and exercise their discretion in respect of matters properly presented to them and within their jurisdiction; but it will not lie to control or review the exercise of this discretion, or compel the boards or officers to act in a particular way; * * * but the courts will relieve against an abuse of discretion * * * of these officers or boards." 38 C. J. 689, § 258.

In her petition the plaintiff pleaded the facts bringing her within the latter portion of the rule. The jurisdiction to hear and determine the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint rested in the trial court. Code Civ. Proc. § 1090. Whether the allegations of her petition were proved and whether there was any legal cause justifying the council in rejecting the plaintiff's application for a permit, were all questions which the trial court was bound to hear and determine. In Raisch v. Board of Education, 81 Cal. 542, at page 546, 22 P. 890, 891, the court said:

"And whether there was a semblance of cause for rejecting the claim or not was a question which might be and was properly tried in the court below."

The question then arises as to whether any evidence was introduced in the trial court supporting or tending to support its findings that there was an abuse of discretion. We think there was, and we have set forth above some portions of it.

There were no conflicts in the evidence. The territory including plaintiff's property has not been zoned so far as the record discloses. The only question of fact before the trial court was reduced to this: Will plaintiff's riding academy conflict with the plans of the council as set forth above in the statement of facts? It is not claimed that it does now conflict. The argument is that in the opinion of the council it will so conflict at some time in the future. But that contingency is provided for by section 11, Ordinance 3183, supra. Whenever the time arrives that there is any cause for doing so the council retains the power to revoke the permit.

The legal effect of the judgment of the trial court was to hold that the plaintiff presented to the defendants, as the council of Oakland, a prima facie case showing that she was entitled to a permit as of the date of the presentation of her application and that the council abused its discretion in refusing the permit on the ground that, in the opinion of the council, at some future date the location of the riding academy would be a residence district and the presence of the academy would be objectionable to the general welfare of the public at such future date.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

In action for damages for death of plaintiff's minor son alleged to have been killed by defendant's truck when crossing street on way to school, question of plaintiff's contributory negligence in permitting 9 year old boy to use streets where accident occurred on his way to school unattended held for jury.

2. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 999(3)—Jury's conclusion, under evidence, that father's negligence was not responsible for son's death by truck while crossing street, was conclusive.

Under evidence in action for damages for death of plaintiff's minor son, who was killed by truck while crossing street unattended on way to school, jury's conclusion that there was no ground for imputing to plaintiff culpable blame for accident in permitting son to use street where accident occurred was conclusive on reviewing court.

3. Death $\hookrightarrow$ 24—Father watching son killed while crossing street had right to assume truck driver saw boy and would slacken speed.

Father watching son killed by truck while crossing street on way to school had right to assume that truck driver, about 40 steps from boy and having clear view, would see boy and slacken speed of truck before reaching point where boy was walking.

4. Municipal corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 706(7)—Contributory negligence of boy struck by truck while crossing street on way to school held for jury.

In action for damages for death of plaintiff's minor son, who was struck by defendant's truck while crossing street on way to school, contributory negligence of boy held for jury.

5. Municipal corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 706(5)—Evidence warranted jury's finding that truck driver, striking boy crossing street from left, was guilty of negligence.

In action for damages for death of plaintiff's minor son, who was struck by truck while crossing street, on way to school, from truck driver's left, evidence warranted jury's finding that truck driver was guilty of negligence.

6. Municipal corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 705(3)—Boy pedestrian struck by truck had equal right with truck driver to use street for legitimate purpose.

Boy pedestrian struck by truck while crossing street on way to school had right equal to that of truck driver to use street for any legitimate purpose for which public streets and roads are maintained.

7. Municipal corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 705(2)—Pedestrian, as well as motorist, must exercise reasonable care in using streets.

A pedestrian, as well as motorist, must exercise such reasonable care in using streets as will protect him from injury.

8. Municipal corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 706(5)—Evidence justified jury's finding that boy struck by truck while crossing street exercised proper care.

In action for damages for death of plaintiff's minor son struck by truck while crossing street on way to school, evidence justified jury's finding that boy in attempting to cross street exercised proper care for his own safety.

9. Municipal corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 705(3)—Truck driver could not assume boy crossing street would make crossing before truck reached him.

Driver of truck which struck boy while crossing street from driver's left had no right to act upon assumption that boy would make crossing or get beyond path of truck before it reached him, since neither pedestrian nor truck had superior right of way.

10. Municipal corporations $\hookrightarrow$ 705(5)—Truck driver traveling 12 miles per hour was not necessarily immune from liability for injuries to pedestrian crossing street.

Driver of truck which struck boy crossing street from his left was not necessarily immune from liability by showing that at time of accident he was running at speed of 12 miles per hour.

11. Death $\hookrightarrow$ 87—Parent may recover, as damages for death of child, loss parent might probably suffer after minor attained majority.

Basis of pecuniary loss suffered by parent from negligent killing of minor child includes any such loss which such parent might probably suffer after such minor would have attained his majority.

12. Death $\hookrightarrow$ 104(3)—Instruction on expectancy of life of parent suing for son's death held not erroneous because mortality tables were not introduced.

In action for death of plaintiff's minor son, instruction that jury could consider probable length of life of parent and probability that child even after its majority might aid in support of parent held not erroneous because mortality tables or other proofs of expectancy were not introduced other than showing that plaintiff was 59 years of age and deceased 9½ years of age, since expectation of life is a matter of which courts take judicial notice.

13. Death $\hookrightarrow$ 104(5)—Instruction on damages for child's death, requiring jury to consider present worth of dollar payable in future, held proper.

In action for damages for death of plaintiff's minor son, instruction that jury in considering question of present and future loss should bear in mind that present worth of dollar payable in future was less than dollar paid to-day held not erroneous, since it merely laid down proposition that jury in estimating and assessing damages to which plaintiff might be entitled by reason of pecuniary loss he has suffered now and will suffer in future from killing of minor child should consider only present worth of dollar, which is proper statement of rule.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action for damages for the death of a minor child by Wong Kit against the Crescent Creamery Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harry M. Irwin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action for damages in the sum of $25,000 for the death of plaintiff's minor son, Wong Fook Sam, who, it is alleged, was killed through and by the negligent act of an employee of the defendant. By their verdict, the jury by whom the case was tried awarded plaintiff damages in the sum of $5,500, for which amount judgment was entered in his favor.

The appeal, supported by a bill of exceptions, is by the defendant from the judgment so entered.

At the time of the accident resulting in the death of the child, the defendant was engaged in the creamery business in the city of Los Angeles.

The salient allegations of the complaint are:

"That on September 25, 1922, the defendant, in the conduct of its business as aforesaid, maintained and operated an auto delivery truck upon and along Los Angeles street, near Ferguson alley, in said city of Los Angeles. That on September 25, 1922, while so operating said auto delivery truck toward the north upon and along said Los Angeles street across and near the intersection of said Los Angeles street with said Ferguson alley, defendant so negligently and carelessly managed and operated said truck at said time and place that said truck violently ran against, struck, knocked down, mortally injured, and killed said Wong Fook Sam, said minor son of plaintiff, and that, by reason of the negligence, carelessness and violence of defendant as aforesaid and as the proximate result thereof, said Wong Fook Sam was struck, knocked down, mortally injured and killed by defendant at said time and place.

"That at the time of the killing and death of said Wong Fook Sam, said minor son of plaintiff, as aforesaid, said Wong Fook Sam was of the age of nine years and two months, * * * was strong, healthy and robust, and was a source of great comfort, cheer and assistance to plaintiff, and that, by reason of the killing and death of said Wong Fook Sam as aforesaid, plaintiff has been totally and forever deprived of the society, comfort, protection, and services of his said minor son, and has been required to pay and has paid more than $175 for the funeral and burial expenses of said minor son. * * * That at all times herein mentioned said Los Angeles street and said Ferguson alley, at all the places herein mentioned, were and each of them was a public highway, used and occupied by the public in passing and repassing thereon with automobiles, horses, wagons and other conveyances, and on foot."

The answer denies the material averments of the complaint and pleads contributory negligence upon the part of the deceased and also on the part of the plaintiff, the father of the deceased. As to the charge that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence which, it is alleged, was the proximate cause of the accident in which the minor lost his life, the answer avers that he (said minor) "did not exercise ordinary care or any care at and about the time and place of the accident, did not look for approaching vehicles, or do any other act to protect himself or his person from injury." The claimed negligence of the plaintiff, which it is also alleged contributed to the accident and its very serious consequences, and which, it is further charged, constituted the proximate cause of the death of the boy, consisted in the negligent failure of the plaintiff, as father of the deceased, to "exercise ordinary care or any care in keeping said minor out of places of danger," the thoroughfare upon which the accident occurred being, as in the present connection the answer alleges, "a public street, traveled at all times in the day and night with automobiles, automobile trucks, and all character of commercial conveyances."

The points made for a reversal, as they are specifically set forth in the brief of the defendant, are: (1) That the evidence does not show that the defendant's employee (the operator of the truck which collided with the boy) was guilty of negligence; (2) that, assuming that said "employee was negligent, then the evidence disclosed that the deceased contributed to his own injuries in attempting to cross the street by running in front of the appellant's truck"; (3) that, even if the evidence showed that the defendant's employee was negligent, the plaintiff himself was guilty of contributory negligence which proximately caused the injuries which caused the death of the minor "by permitting his son to attempt to cross the street running in front of the moving truck driven by appellant's employee"; (4) errors in the instructions.

It is perhaps well first to describe more specifically than it appears to be explained in the complaint the exact location of the point at which the accident happened. Los Angeles street, in the city of Los Angeles, runs in a northerly and southerly direction. Plaza street (running in an easterly and westerly direction) connects with Los Angeles street at the western line thereof. For a short distance Plaza street is substantially bordered by a small park or plaza, from which, presumably, said street derived its name. Ferguson alley (running in an easterly and westerly direction) intersects Los Angeles street at the east line thereof, and is directly east of Plaza street and is the passageway for those traveling east on Plaza street towards Los Angeles street who may choose to enter the street paralleling Los Angeles street on the east without turning either south or north on the last-named street to do so, and also for those desiring to pass from the street paralleling Los Angeles street on the east across the last-named street to Plaza street without "going around the block."

The accident in which the boy lost his life happened, as the complaint alleges, on the 25th day of September, 1922, about (as the evidence shows) 2 o'clock p. m., on the street and at the place stated in the complaint. The lad, then of the age of 9½ years, was a pupil in both the American and the Chinese schools of the city of Los Angeles, his attendance at the first-named school being in the forenoon and his attendance at the Chinese school in the afternoon of each day. At the time of the accident the deceased was on his way to the regular afternoon session of the Chinese school. When struck by defendant's truck, the boy was in the act of crossing Los Angeles street from the west side thereof, or from Plaza street, towards Ferguson alley. At the same time, the truck was being operated by defendant's employee in a northerly direction on Los Angeles street. The plaintiff who, as the complaint states, was the father of the deceased, was, at the time of the accident, employed in a Chinese store conducted under the name of the "Far East Company." This store was located on or near the corner of Los Angeles street and Ferguson alley.

Strangely as it may seem after reading the statement of the several points urged here by the defendant for a reversal and enumerated above, the opening brief of its counsel contains the following admission:

"The disputed facts of the case resolve themselves into the question of whether the deceased himself heedlessly attempted to cross the street by running in front of the automobile and placing himself in a position of danger, without any negligence on the part of appellant's employee. Also, whether, notwithstanding any negligence on the part of appellant's employee, the deceased himself was guilty of contributory negligence; and the further disputed fact as to whether or not the deceased's father was guilty of contributory negligence."

Upon the foregoing statement in the brief, we might warrantably waive all consideration herein of the evidence, in so far as it affects the points made here by the defendant that the evidence shows that the accident was directly occasioned by the boy's own negligence and that of his father, and that it fails to show that the driver of the truck was negligent, but, assuming that it does, such negligence was not the direct or efficient cause of the fatal injuries to the boy. But the discussion in defendant's brief has led us to the conclusion that its counsel went farther in said statement than he intended to go, and we will therefore consider herein the question whether we can properly say, as a matter of law, that the argument of counsel that the verdict cannot stand because there is no evidence to support it for any of the reasons urged by counsel for the defendant after making the statement referred to is or is not maintainable.

This appeal is the culmination of a second trial of this action.

The section of Los Angeles street in which the truck driver was operating the truck is a business street and ordinarily characterized by a heavy automotive traffic. At the time, however, that the truck driver was approaching the point where the accident occurred and at the very time of the accident, there was no other automobile traveling over the street in either direction in that particular section, nor was there then any other person using the street in any manner, in that immediate vicinity. All the witnesses that saw the collision, including the driver of the truck himself, so testified; nor, as the same witnesses and the operator of the truck testified, was there any obstruction of any character between the driver of the truck and the boy, as the former was approaching the latter as he was crossing Los Angeles street, for a distance of over 100 steps from the truck to the point at which the accident happened. All the witnesses are as one upon the fact that the boy, proceeding easterly across Los Angeles street from Plaza street, had traversed a distance approximately of 40 feet, or to be more explicit, had reached a point a short distance beyond the center line of Los Angeles street, going east, when he was struck by the truck. There is testimony (uncontradicted) that the truck, just before and when it struck the child, was traveling northward and to the right or east of the center line of Los Angeles street. The deceased at the time was, therefore, proceeding towards the point at which the collision took place from the left of the truck driver. The boy was struck by the right fender of the truck.

The plaintiff testified that, knowing that his child daily passed the store at which he (plaintiff) was employed in the afternoon, about 2 o'clock, on his way to the Chinese school, he always looked or watched for the boy's appearance at or near the store at the hour stated of each day. On the day the fatal injuries were received by the child, and as the hour of two o'clock p. m. was in near approach, he now and then would look through a window of the store from the inside thereof towards Plaza street where it intersects Los Angeles street, and, at the usual time, would see his son at the corner of the two streets just named. On the day of the accident, the plaintiff, looking through the window at the usual time, observed the boy as he reached the intersection of the two streets referred to, and he thereupon stepped out to the sidewalk from which he saw the boy as he left the curbing on the west side of Los Angeles street, and watched him as he was proceeding across said street towards the store on Ferguson alley. Plaintiff further testified that the boy was walking at his usual gait until he arrived at a point a little beyond the center of Los Angeles street, when he (the boy) increased his speed; that is, to use the language of the witness, the boy "stepped over the street about 2 or 3 fast steps," when the truck struck him. "The automobile," said the plaintiff, "was about 10 steps away (or between 28 and 30 feet) from the boy at the time he (the boy) commenced to take those 2 or 3 fast steps. * * * The right wheel on the right side hit the boy." The plaintiff said if the boy "had been able to get up one step further, he would have been clear past the machine." He further testified that he did not holla at the boy to warn him of the approach of the truck because the truck was then a considerable distance south of where the child was crossing the street, "and that the truck was then the only vehicle in said street." Plaintiff testified that the operator of the truck at no time sounded the horn attached to the truck or gave any other signal of his approach as he was proceeding towards the point at which the accident occurred. He further testified that he knew that Los Angeles street "was a very heavily traveled street up there, so far as trucks and automobiles are concerned," and that he had warned his boy "to watch for the cars and not pass when a car was coming. In other words," continued the plaintiff, "I told him about the danger from these cars and he said he understood that." Plaintiff also stated that he had instructed the boy "to come to my place" when he (the boy) was on his way to the Chinese school.

One Chan Jin testified: That he witnessed the accident, having just prior thereto stepped out of his place of employment, situated near the point of the collision, to the sidewalk. He saw the boy as he started across the street in the direction of Ferguson alley. That he observed the truck traveling from the south toward the point where deceased was crossing the street, and that, when the truck was about 24 feet from the boy, he noticed that the latter started to run, going east or towards the alley referred to. The truck, said the witness, "sounded like a truck going with a big noise. There was no horn or whistle blown by the truck." The witness stated that, after the boy started to "run fast," there was no diminution in his speed until he was struck.

A Chinese named Wong Hing saw the accident. He was at the time walking along the sidewalk on the north side of Ferguson alley, east of Los Angeles street, and near the intersection of said alley with said street. That he first observed the boy walking east and in about the center of Los Angeles street. That he also saw the truck traveling from the south towards the point where the boy was then walking. That, "when the truck was about ten steps from the boy, the latter was coming here (to the east sidewalk) from the middle of the street, and the boy was in front of the machine, and he started fast steps. And finally the boy got struck at the left, on the right side. * * * When I first saw the boy, he was walking the ordinary way, in ordinary walk." Cross-examination: "In the danger time the boy run fast. When the boy started to run from the middle of the street he stepped off about three or four steps." (Witness indicating, it being stipulated by counsel that as indicated the boy, when he started to run, or "step fast," was at a point about half way from the center of the street to the sidewalk on the east side.) The boy," proceeded the witness, on cross-examination, "ran one or two steps. The truck then went about 24 to 27 feet, while the boy was running two feet and a half. After it hit the boy it stopped about twenty footsteps."

The defendant's witness J. L. Firebaugh testified that he witnessed the accident; that, when he first noticed the boy, he (witness) was approximately 75 yards from the boy, the latter then being on the west side of Los Angeles street; that he did not see the boy when he stepped off the sidewalk; that the boy was running east across Los Angeles street, "at a fairly good clip"; that "the boy was looking over his shoulder, back toward the plaza over his left shoulder. That," said the witness, "is why I particularly noticed that boy. * * * He did not stop running until the truck hit him. * * * From the time I first saw the boy until the automobile struck him, he had run past the center of the street." On cross-examination, the witness admitted that at the coroner's inquisition into the circumstances of the killing of the deceased, held within a few days after the fatal accident, and "while the facts were still fresh in his memory," he testified that he "only saw him (the deceased) run two or three steps"; that when he first saw said deceased, the latter was "in front of the truck" and "within three or four steps of where the truck hit him." The witness testified that the testimony given by him at the coroner's inquest and contained in the transcript of the proceedings before that officer constituted a correct description of the circumstances of the accident.

W. H. Atwood, operator of the truck at the time it struck the boy, testified:

That he was route foreman of the defendant and that the accident happened about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. "I was driving north on Los Angeles street," he said; "I do not remember how far from the curb I was—well, I was to the right of the middle of the street, I know that. I first saw the boy when he was about 6 feet, 4 or 6 feet, right somewhere in front of the radiator cap of the machine. That was when I first saw him. As soon as I saw him, I swung the truck to the left and grabbed for the brakes, trying to miss him. I struck him with the right fender. I did stop my car just as soon as possible. I was not over one or two truck lengths, I don't think. * * * I was traveling about 12 miles an hour. * * * When the boy was first seen by me, he seemed to be running, kind of looking back. He seemed to be looking over his right shoulder. That was not towards me; he was not looking toward me with (over?) his left shoulder."

Cross-examination:

"I had driven an automobile many times before this accident up and down Los Angeles street, in that vicinity. I passed there several times a day in my business. I knew that that was a very busy street. I had reason to expect at any time there a great deal of traffic, both of automobiles and on foot. As I passed up this street, on this particular day, from the time I passed this hay market until I reached that corner, there was nothing very close in the way of traffic. As far as I remember there wasn't any automobile or other person in the street from this point in the vicinity of the hay market or substation until I reached that corner. There was nothing in the street, of any kind, so far as I remember, to attract my attention away from the operation of my machine. I was coming along there about 12 miles an hour. The first I saw of the boy was when my radiator cap was within 4 to 6 feet of the boy; I never saw him before at any time, up until that time. There was nothing the matter with my eyes at that time; I have good eyesight. Operating my truck at the rate of 12 miles an hour, I don't know how quickly I could have stopped it under ordinary conditions; not as quick as I did then, I know. I don't hardly think I could have stopped it in 8 or 10 feet, with a loaded truck. I could have slowed it down. I don't know that I could have brought it to a standstill in that distance, but I think I could have slowed it down to at least half of the speed or more, within that distance. I don't know how fast the boy was running. I can't say that I remember now whether he seemed to be gaining speed or to be starting up faster during that small intermission of time that I saw him there before the truck hit him. I testified at the coroner's inquest within two or three days of this accident. I did testify as follows: 'Q. Did the child make any effort to get out of the way? A. He was going toward the sidewalk. Q. Did he hurry his steps any when you were 6 feet from him? A. He seemed to start a little faster. Q. When you struck him, was he walking or running? A. He seemed to be running. Q. He seemed to quicken his steps at that time? A. He must have heard the machine coming.' * * * I don't remember to have said anything, about the boy having his head turned away from the machine, at the coroner's inquest, or at the other trial of this case.

"Mr. Gilbert (Attorney for Defendant): I don't think he was asked about it at all, as far as I recall. I don't remember it.

"Mr. Irwin (Attorney for Plaintiff): I will stipulate that he was not asked, and that he did not say anything about it. That may be taken in place of reading the whole testimony?

"Mr. Gilbert: Yes.

"Q. (By Mr. Irwin): There is no reason that you can assign now why you failed to see the boy before you got to that point, within 4 to 6 feet from him, is there? A. No, sir. * * * As far as I remember there was nothing in that street between me and the boy from the time I left this place down at the hay market up to the time I struck him. My machine continued at the same rate of speed, as far as I can tell, from the time I left the hay market until I got within 4 to 6 feet of the boy. When within 4 to 6 feet of the boy is when I put on my brakes for the first time."

Called in rebuttal by the plaintiff, Chan Jin testified that he at no time saw the deceased turn his "head back over his shoulder to look toward the west"; that, as he stated when testifying for plaintiff when first called in the case as a witness, he first saw the deceased "in the street, on the other (west) side, and he was still walking."

[1-3] The foregoing embraces a statement in substance of all the facts to which the witnesses both for the plaintiff and the defendant testified. It is clear that, under the testimony, the alleged contributory negligence of the plaintiff and the asserted like negligence of the deceased were questions for the jury to determine. It is perfectly clear that the jury's conclusion that there was no ground for imputing to the plaintiff culpable blame for the accident is conclusive upon a reviewing court. The basis, and, so far as we are able to discern from the record, the only basis for attributing to plaintiff responsibility for the accident, rests in the fact that the plaintiff permitted the boy to walk along and on the public streets unattended by some older person who was able to protect the child from the constantly menacing hazards incident to the heavy automotive traffic of such thoroughfares. But the uncontradicted evidence discloses that the deceased was not only physically robust, healthy, and active, but was intelligent and of excellent judgment for one of his years. The boy, at the time that he was fatally injured, was on his way to school, which, unattended, he had previously been accustomed to doing, and generally, as may be implied from the evidence, taking the same route and always, as the plaintiff instructed him to do, passing the store in which his father was employed; that the latter had warned the boy to be careful in passing over and along the streets, particularly Los Angeles street, because of the unusual automotive traffic always on said street; and that the boy in effect said to his father in answer to such warning that he (the boy) understood the situation with respect to the hazards to a pedestrian of such traffic. Moreover, the plaintiff testified that, when the boy started to "step fast" or run, he then being, as plaintiff also testified, approximately 11 or 12 feet from the curbing on the east side of the street, the truck was about 40 steps from the boy. Under those circumstances, there being nothing to prevent the driver from seeing the deceased had he looked ahead of him, the plaintiff had the right to assume that the operator of the truck did see the boy and would slacken the speed of the truck before reaching the point where the boy was walking. It may here be added that, although the record is silent as to the location of the Chinese school attended by the boy, it may properly be assumed from the fact that, in going to said school, it was his daily custom to pass along Plaza street and thence across Los Angeles street, past the Far East store, that the route thus taken by the deceased was the nearest or most convenient one for him to follow to get to said school. But, however that may be, as in effect before stated, it was not negligence per se on the part of the plaintiff to permit or even authorize the boy to use the streets mentioned to get to his school, and it is clear that the record furnishes no ground justifying the declaration by this court that the jury arrived at an erroneous conclusion in finding from the evidence that the plaintiff was not guilty of culpable negligence in doing so.

[4] As stated, the alleged contributory negligence of the deceased presented a question for the jury's solution. As to this, the claim is that the boy, without looking either north or south while crossing Los Angeles street to see whether any vehicle was from either direction approaching the point where he undertook to cross said street, ran in front or "entered the path" of the truck. There is, as seen, evidence from which the jury was authorized to conclude that the boy started to walk from the west to the east side of the street and, on reaching a point near the center line of the street, suddenly quickened his steps, some of the witnesses saying that "he ran" and some that "he walked fast." Undoubtedly, the act of accelerating his speed when he arrived at the center line of the street was caused by some reason or some purpose which suddenly occurred to him, and clearly the jury could very properly have concluded from all the circumstances that the act of increasing his speed was due either to his seeing the truck or hearing the noise of the machine as it was nearing him, and that the deceased conceived and believed that, under the circumstances, that was the best and safest course he could take to protect himself against being run into or struck by the truck. What is said in the following excerpt from the opinion in Varcoe v. Lee, 180 Cal. 338, 340, 341, 181 P. 223, 224, in which the party fatally injured was a child, and the facts as shown by the evidence were very similar to those of this case, applies with equal force to this.

"The claim that the child was guilty of contributory negligence is based on the fact that she ran across the street instead of walking and was looking the other way when she got in front of the car. There was testimony that she was seen waiting on the left-hand side of the street, with relation to the chauffeur, for some wagons and a street car going north to pass, and that as soon as they passed she started to run across the street. Not improbably she ran across thinking it the safest way to get across. Certainly, there is nothing to justify taking from the jury the question as to whether or not her conduct amounted to contributory negligence, particularly in view of her youth."

In the present case there is at least a conflict in the evidence upon the question whether the boy, as he started to run and did run while he was crossing the street, was looking over his left shoulder and in an opposite direction from that in which the truck was going, or whether he looked back at all. The question was for the jury to determine.

[5-9] We now reach the question of the alleged negligence of the defendant's employee, the driver of the truck. All the witnesses, as seen, testified that immediately prior to and at the time of the accident, the street in the section of Los Angeles street where the disaster happened was absolutely free from obstructions of any character; that, when the truck was approaching the point where the deceased attempted to cross the street, there was no automobile or other vehicle or person between the truck and the boy; that, in other words, it is shown that the vision of the driver of the truck, for a distance of several hundred feet from the point where the boy was in the act of crossing the street, was wholly unobstructed. Indeed, the operator of the truck himself, in response to a question propounded by the attorney for plaintiff, frankly stated that he could give or assign no reason why he did not see or should not have seen the boy long before he arrived at the point where first he observed the child in the street, to wit, a distance of from 4 to 6 feet from the latter. There is evidence, uncontradicted, that the driver at no time sounded a horn or gave any other warning of his approach towards the deceased.

It is not further necessary analytically to discuss the testimony to justify the acceptance by this court of the result arrived at by the jury. The defendant out of his own mouth convicted himself of negligence in failing to avoid striking the boy; for, whether he did not, under the circumstances as shown by the evidence, observe the boy in the act of crossing the street at a sufficient distance to have stopped his truck before reaching the point at which the collision occurred or, seeing the boy at such a distance and all the time up to the moment that the latter was struck, proceeded on the assumption that the deceased would pass the path of the truck before it reached him, in either case he was guilty of negligence and the jury were warranted in so finding. The deceased, as is the right of all pedestrians, had a right equal to that of motorists to use the street for any legitimate purpose for which public streets and roads are maintained. Of course, it is the law that a pedestrian, as well as a motorist must exercise such reasonable care in using the streets as will protect him from injury. As has been stated, the jury were apparently amply justified in finding that the deceased in attempting to cross the street exercised proper care for his own safety. Manifestly, the driver of the truck had no right to act upon the assumption (and, as declared, the jury could well have found and impliedly did find that he did so assume) that the boy would make the crossing or get beyond the path of the truck before it reached him. The principle of law pertinent to a case such as we have here is thus stated in the case of Burgesser v. Bullock's, 190 Cal. 673, 675, 214 P. 649, 650:

"The opinion of the trial court in granting the motion for the instructed verdict is incorporated in the transcript and it appears that the trial judge was of the opinion that the decedent, having observed the approaching automobile before he entered its path, and having continually observed it thereafter, and having apparently misjudged its speed, was therefore guilty of contributory negligence. The fallacy of the conclusion reached by the trial court results from the assumption that the automobile had the right of way and that it was the duty of the pedestrian to assume that the automobile would continue in its direction without diminishing its speed or yielding to the pedestrian. The law is that neither the pedestrian nor the automobile has a superior right of way, and that each is entitled to use the highway and that the conduct of both must be regulated with reference to this fundamental rule."

[10] Nor is the driver of an automobile necessarily immune from liability for injuries to other persons occurring in a public street by merely showing that at the time of the accident he was running at a rate of speed of twelve miles per hour. As is said in Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335-340, 208 P. 125, 127:

"He still remains bound to anticipate that he may meet persons at any point of the street, and he must, in order to avoid a charge of negligence, keep a proper lookout for them and keep his machine under such control as will enable him to avoid a collision with another person using proper care and caution, and if the situation requires he must slow up and stop."

The defendant complains of the following language of an instruction embraced within the court's charge to the jury:

"You are not confined, however, in your estimate of the monetary loss to the parent to the period of minority of the child, for the relation of parent and child of course does not terminate when the child reaches its majority and thereafter there remain certain legal obligations of support that are recognized in the laws and are enforceable by appropriate legal proceedings. For 'it is the duty of the father and mother, and the children of any poor person who is unable to maintain himself by work, to maintain such person to the extent of their ability.' You have a right to take into consideration the probable length of life of the parent and the probability, if such you find from the evidence, that the child even after its majority might do that which the law did not require, namely, aid in the support of the parent."

It is the parts in italics which the defendant particularly stresses as being erroneous and prejudicial.

The specific criticism of the above language, as an instruction to the jury, is: (1) That the probable earnings of the child after reaching the age of majority and the benefits from which the father would be legally and morally entitled to receive do not constitute an element in the legal basis upon which compensatory relief may be awarded in cases of this character; (2) that, the instruction being based upon the probable length of plaintiff's life, there was introduced no mortality tables or other evidence other than the showing that the plaintiff was 59 years of age and the deceased 9½ years of age, upon which the jury could form a just conclusion as to the "probable length of the life of either of these parents."

[11] That the basis of the pecuniary loss suffered by a parent from the negligent killing of a minor child includes any such loss as such parent might probably suffer, after such minor would have attained his majority, is a proposition in law thoroughly settled. This rule of law is, with great clearness, considered and approved as sound in an opinion by former Chief Justice Shaw in Bond v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 270, 113 P. 366, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 50. The action in that case, as here, was by a parent for the negligent killing of her minor child, and, as here, was founded on sections 376 and 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The last clause of section 377 provides:

"In every action under this and the preceding section (section 376, authorizing an action by a parent for the injury or death of a minor child), such damages may be given as, under all the circumstances of the case, may be just."

Speaking of the measure of damages in actions under either of said sections, the court said:

"It would seem to follow from this rule absolutely limiting the damages in every case to the pecuniary loss occasioned by the death, and upon a consideration of that justice which the statute itself invokes, that this pecuniary loss should be extended to, and should include, all pecuniary loss of every kind which the circumstances of the particular case establish with reasonable certainty will be suffered by the bene-fiary of the statute in the future, because of the death of the victim. Nothing less would be a just compensation for the injury, and anything more, or anything in the realm of improbability, conjecture or mere fancy, would be beyond the purview of the statute and unjust to the defendant. In many cases where the minor is near majority, the certainty of pecuniary loss from his death, to the parent, accruing after his minority, would be as great as the certainty of such loss during minority, and the expectation of benefits for many years thereafter would be as well established as in the case of the death of an adult. In other cases, where the child is a mere infant, the expectation of pecuniary benefits to accrue in the years following its arrival at majority would be so remote that it could not justly be made the basis for a large addition to the damages. So in the case of some adults such benefits would be exceedingly improbable. But the statute prescribes but one rule for all cases: "Such damages may be given as under all the circumstances of the case, may be just." The manifest effect of this language is that in all cases to which the rule applies it is to be left to the jury to say, upon a consideration of the facts, what amount is a just compensation for the financial loss which the evidence shows will probably be directly or proximately caused by the death of the victim."

In Sneed v. Marysville, etc., Co., 149 Cal. 710, 87 P. 379, cited approvingly in Bond v. United Railroads, the court said:

"This pecuniary loss may be either a loss arising from the deprivation of something to which such heirs would have been legally entitled if the person had lived, or a loss arising from a deprivation of benefits which, from all the circumstances of the particular case, it could be reasonably expected such heirs would have received from the deceased had his life not been taken, although the obligation resting on him to bestow such benefits on them may have been a moral obligation only."

See, also, Peluso v. City Taxi Co., 41 Cal. App. 297, 302, 182 P. 808; Redfield v. Oakland, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 277, 42 P. 822, 1063; Hillebrand v. Standard Biscuit Co., 139 Cal. 236, 73 P. 163; Johnson v. S. P. Co., 154 Cal. 298, 97 P. 520; Beeson v. Green M. G. M. Co., 57 Cal. 37; Ruppel v. United Railroads, 1 Cal. App. 666, 82 P. 1073; Valente v. Sierra R. R. Co., 158 Cal. 412, 111 P. 95.

[12] There is no legal force to the point that the instruction is obnoxious to the objection that, where mortality tables in common use are not received in evidence, there can be no basis for a just consideration and fair adjustment of the element of "the present value of the reasonable benefit which the" plaintiff "would probably have received after his [the child's] majority and during the period of" his (the plaintiff's) "common expectancy of life." Peluso v. City Taxi Co., 41 Cal. App. 297-300, 182 P. 808. In that case it is said: "As to the expectation of life, that is a matter of which the courts take judicial notice"—citing 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) page 886; Valente v. Sierra Ry. Co., 151 Cal. 534, 91 P. 481.

In Dickinson v. S. P. Co., 172 Cal. 727-730, 158 P. 183, 184, the rule is thus stated:

"There was no evidence offered to show the expectancy of life of a man of Dickinson's age. The courts may, however, take judicial notice of mortality tables in common use."

Again in Dallas v. De Yoe, 53 Cal. App. 452-457, 200 P. 361, 363, the court announced the rule as follows:

"Appellant urges that there was no evidence as to the expectancy of life of Mrs. Dallas or as to the condition of her health. Mortality tables are admissible in such cases but not essential. * * * It is presumed that a person is in average normal health, in the absence of evidence to the contrary."

See, also, 17 C. J. 1366.

[13] The defendant, further assailing the charge of the court to the jury, insists that the following language contained in a certain other instruction, the subject-matter of which is cognate to the proposition dealt with in the instruction first hereinabove considered, expresses an erroneous statement of the law and was prejudicial:

"In considering the question of present and future loss you should bear in mind that a verdict rendered by you is payable forthwith and that the present worth of a dollar payable or receivable at a distant future time is much less than a dollar paid to-day."

Construing that language, the counsel for the defendant declares that "the vice of the instruction," or of the language thereof just quoted herein, lies in the fact that the court thereby told the jury "that the present dollar would be worth less in the future than it would be to-day," or, in other words, that the court thereby charged "the jury that the earning powers of the deceased should be more in the future for the reason that the future purchasing power of the dollar would be less and the cost of living greater than that of to-day"; that, "therefore, the said court (by said language) in effect instructed the jury to enhance the damages in favor of respondent relative to elements of damages based upon future losses." The learned counsel has not read the instruction correctly. The instruction, stated concisely, merely laid down the proposition that the jury, in estimating and assessing the damages to which plaintiff might be entitled by reason of the pecuniary loss he has suffered now and will suffer in the future from the killing of his minor child, should consider only the "present worth" of the dollar. This was a proper statement of the rule. In embracing in effect in the instruction the warning that the jury in estimating and assessing any damages to which the plaintiff might be entitled for present and future pecuniary loss, the jury should keep in mind the proposition that the "present worth of a dollar payable at a distant future time is much less than a dollar paid to-day," the court stated what is obviously true. The real purport of that language of the instruction, reduced to a simple form, involved only a statement to the jury that, in determining what they might satisfactorily be persuaded by the evidence that the plaintiff was entitled to by way of damages as measured in dollars and cents, they were to consider only "the present worth" of the dollar, and this is clearly what it was their duty to do. The principle underlying the proposition that the instruction was intended to submit to the jury is stated and applied in the case of Peluso v. City Taxi Co., supra, where it is said:

"The recovery was not limited, of course, to the earning capacity of the son during his minority, but it included the present value of the reasonable benefit which the parents would probably have received after his majority and during the period of their common expectancy of life. Bond v. United Railroads, supra."

It may be added that the instruction, as so construed, appears to be favorable rather than unfavorable to the defendant. And, further, may it be suggested that the jury, in appraising or admeasuring the compensatory relief which their verdict evidences, acted with a marked degree of moderation, considering the circumstances of the case and the deprecable result of the accident.

The judgment is affirmed.

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 19, 1928.

1. Principal and agent ⇨85—Complaint alleging defendants' failure to furnish inner tubes under exclusive sales right held to state cause of action for recovery of amount paid for right.

Complaint alleging that plaintiff paid defendants for exclusive sales right, in certain territory, of compression inner tubes for automobile tires, that defendants were to furnish him at agreed price specified number of tubes per day, and that defendants refused and neglected, notwithstanding demand, to furnish tubes according to agreement, rendering sales right utterly valueless, and that plaintiff had notified defendants of rescission for failure of consideration held to state cause of action for recovery of amount paid.

2. Principal and agent ⇨85—Plaintiff held entitled to recover full amount paid for exclusive sales right on defendants' failure to furnish product as agreed, notwithstanding sales right was undisturbed.

Plaintiff, who paid sum for exclusive right to sell inner tubes for automobile tires within particular territory under agreement of defendants to furnish specified quantity, could recover full consideration paid on defendants' failure to furnish any tubes, notwithstanding sales right which defendants' violation of contract rendered worthless was otherwise undisturbed.

3. Contracts ⇨271—Plaintiff suing for total failure of consideration need not give prior notice of rescission.

Total failure of consideration renders it unnecessary to give notice of rescission before bringing action to recover money paid on the contract.

4. Money received ⇨6(4)—Action on common count lies to recover money paid under rescinded contract.

Where contract is rescinded, plaintiff may sue on common count to recover money paid or property delivered thereunder.

★Rehearing denied.

5. Action $\S$ 48(3)—In suit to recover payment for exclusive sales agency, causes of action for rescission, failure of consideration, and money paid held properly joined.

Causes of action based on rescission of contract, total failure of consideration, and common count for money paid, alleged in three separate counts in complaint, held properly joined where they arose out of same transaction, which involved question of plaintiff's right to recover amount paid for exclusive sales agency on defendants' failure to furnish sales product.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Morris Orton against C. R. Privett and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Meserve & Meserve, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

G. M. Spicer, Ray Meacham, and Bruce Mason, all of Long Beach, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. Defendants have appealed from a judgment against them for $7,200. The action was brought to recover the amount of money paid by plaintiff under an agreement whereby the defendants were to transfer to him the exclusive sales right, in certain territory, of a patented compression inner tube for automobile tires, and to furnish him, at an agreed price, twelve inner tubes a day, to be manufactured and delivered either from a factor to be completed at Burbank, Cal., "or from some other factory." The complaint, after alleging the facts with reference to the contract, sets out that the defendants have neglected and refused at all times, and do now fail, neglect, and refuse, although demand therefor has often been made, to furnish and deliver to said plaintiff said inner tubes, according to the terms of said agreement; that the $7,200 was paid to defendants upon the sole consideration of the sale to plaintiff of said exclusive sales right and the furnishing and delivery to said plaintiff of said inner tubes; and that said sales right is utterly useless and without value unless there be delivered and furnished to plaintiff said inner tubes, etc. It is alleged, further, that plaintiff has notified defendants that he rescinded said contract because of the failure of consideration in a material respect and has offered to restore to defendants everything of value which he received under said agreement, upon condition that defendants restore the $7,200 to plaintiff, and that no part of said $7,200 has ever been paid to plaintiff.

[1, 2] The second cause of action contains substantially the same allegations, but proceeds upon the theory of a total failure of consideration. The third cause of action is for money had and received. A general demurrer was interposed to each cause of action and also a demurrer for improper joinder of causes of action. The demurrers were overruled, and answers were filed denying the allegations of the complaint. Findings were made in favor of plaintiff, and, upon appeal, defendants contend that their demurrers were improperly overruled. At great length, they argue many technical matters with relation to plaintiff's pleading. We shall not consider these objections in detail. We are of the opinion that the complaint states a cause of action, and that the first count thereof is not open to the objection that plaintiff was not entitled to recover all the money he had paid because he had enjoyed the exclusive sales right for the patent in certain territory for over a year. It is alleged and found that this right to sell was utterly valueless without something to sell, and that defendants had at all times failed and refused to furnish to plaintiff the product to be sold under the exclusive right. That right, standing alone, being of no value, should not preclude plaintiff from recovering the full consideration paid by him for the contract obligations of defendants.

[3] It is objected that the second count does not allege that plaintiff has given defendants notice of rescission. As we have stated, this count is framed upon the theory that there was a total failure of consideration for the payment of the money by plaintiff. "A total failure of consideration makes it unnecessary to give notice of rescission before bringing an action." 6 Cal. Jur. 392. See, also, Field v. Austin, 131 Cal. 379, 63 P. 692; Richter v. Union Land & Stock Co., 129 Cal. 367, 62 P. 39; Russ Lumber & Mill Co. v. Muscupiabe Land & Water Co., 120 Cal. 521, 52 P. 995, 65 Am. St. Rep. 186.

[4] The third cause of action is likewise good against demurrer. It was said in Macowsky v. Irvine, 71 Cal. App. 77, 234 P. 839:

"The contract being rescinded the plaintiff could sue on common count to recover money paid or property delivered thereunder."

[5] With reference to the question raised by the special demurrer, we are of the opinion that the three causes of action were properly joined, as they all arose out of the same transaction.

The findings amply sustain the judgment, and we agree with the construction which the trial court placed upon the contract between the parties, which was made a part of the pleadings herein.

The judgment is affirmed.

HAMMOND LUMBER CO. v. PILE et al.
(L. A. 8901.)★

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 12, 1928.

1. Appeal and error §1011(1)—Finding on conflicting evidence that contractor used materials elsewhere and materialman represented he would not assert lien, sustained by evidence, is conclusive.

In suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien, finding on conflicting evidence that materials delivered to contractor were used by him for other construction work than on defendants' building and that materialman had represented to defendants it would not assert lien on their premises, if sustained by evidence, is conclusive on appeal.

2. Mechanics' lien §281(4)—Materialman could not assert lien for materials of uncertain value and amount.

In suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien, where trial court found that it was impossible to estimate amount of material which had been diverted from defendants' property to other uses by the contractor, materialman could not assert lien for materials used on defendants' building, since they were of uncertain value and amount.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Action by the Hammond Lumber Company against J. E. Pile and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Scarborough, Forgy & Reinhaus and Carl M. Heim, all of Santa Ana, for respondents.

Walter J. Hartzell, of Redlands, for W. J. Bill, etc.

LANGDON, J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment against it in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien upon property belonging to defendant J. W. Kennedy. It is alleged that plaintiff delivered to defendant Pile, a building contractor, certain lumber and other building materials to be used in the erection of a dwelling house on real property in Orange county, Cal., which was owned by defendant J. W. Kennedy, and that there remains due thereon the sum of $1,944.42.

[1] Two defenses were set up in the answer: (1) That the materials were delivered to defendant Pile for general use in his contracting business and not for the construction of Kennedy's house, and that a large part of the materials were used by Pile in other construction work; (2) that the plaintiff was estopped from asserting a lien for said materials, because it had represented to defendants that it would not assert such a lien, and had also represented to defendants that the purchase price of the materials had been charged to defendant Pile personally, and that plaintiff had requested defendant Kennedy to pay the contractor for the house, upon the assurance that no lien or claim would be asserted against the house, and that Kennedy had relied upon such assertion and promise and had paid the contractor for his work.

Upon both defenses, the trial court found the facts as alleged by defendants. An attack is made by appellant upon these findings. The evidence is in conflict, but the record contains testimony supporting the findings made. It is unnecessary to set forth the evidence here, but the portion thereof relied upon by respondents is set forth in their brief filed on appeal. If either of these findings is supported by the evidence, the judgment for defendants is a proper one, and we think they are both so supported.

[2] The only other matter to be noticed is the claim of appellant that even though a portion of the materials was used on buildings other than Kennedy's house, the lien should be enforced for the value of the materials used on Kennedy's house. This contention is answered by the finding of the trial court that it is impossible to estimate the amount of material which has been diverted to other uses. Plaintiff therefore could not assert a lien for materials of uncertain value and amount, even though he were not precluded from doing so by reason of having misled the defendants to their damage in asserting that credit was given solely to the contractor and that no attempt would be made to establish or enforce a mechanic's lien.

Judgment affirmed.

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 19, 1928.

1. Municipal corporations §800(1)—Defendants dedicating strip along street and constructing curbing, leaving culvert in original street with abutments injuring motorist held not negligent.

Defendants dedicating strip along public street for public street purposes and constructing concrete curbing and sidewalk on strip dedicated, leaving concrete culvert with abutments in original street without guides, lights, or other warning, held not negligent where motorist traveling in original street, struck abutment of culvert when turning out to pass automobile.

2. Municipal corporations §806(4)—Motorist traveling at night striking abutment of culvert left in original street when street was widened held guilty of contributory negligence.

Where defendants dedicated strip along street for street purposes and constructed curbing and sidewalk on same, but concrete culvert with abutments in original street was left there without light or other warning, motorist traveling on original street, striking abutment when turning out to pass car, held guilty of contributory negligence.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action for damages for personal injuries by Owen Moore against Alfred H. Whitworth and others. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Zach Lamar Cobb and Earl A. Littlejohns, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joe Crider, Jr., Clarence Runkle, and Chandler, Wright & Ward, all of Los Angeles (H. W. Kidd, W. O. Schell, and Gerald F. H. Delamer, all of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

SHENK, J. The defendants were the owners of certain real property abutting on Preuss road, a public thoroughfare along the boundary line between the cities of Los Angeles and Beverly Hills. The defendant owners subdivided the acreage and dedicated for public street purposes a strip of land 10 feet in width along the easterly side of the thoroughfare, which had the effect of widening the same from 60 to 70 feet. On the strip so dedicated, through the medium of the defendant contractor, they constructed a concrete curbing and sidewalk. In the original right of way was a concrete culvert at right angles to the highway with abutments on either side 29 feet apart and about 21 feet long. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants carelessly and negligently left this said culvert in the street with the wooden railings approaching the same projecting into the road at the end of a steep grade and failed and neglected to place any warning of the danger by means of guides, barriers or lights; that they were cognizant of the dangerous condition of this section of the highway. While he was driving his automobile at night on Preuss road, the plaintiff collided with one of these alleged obstructions in the highway and was seriously injured. The accident occurred while the plaintiff was passing another automobile on the central traveled portion of the roadway. His own car struck the end of the railing and was overturned.

[1, 2] The trial court granted a motion for a nonsuit, stating in ruling on the motion "that the defendants had not the slightest thing to do with either putting" the culvert where it was "or leaving it there." While the reasons stated by the court for granting the motion may not have been full justification for the ruling, we think the record itself furnishes sufficient reason for the granting of the motion. It was not shown that the grading and improvement of the newly dedicated portion of the right of way caused the plaintiff to use the highway or handle his car in any other way than he would have done if the grading and improvement had not taken place. Furthermore, assuming that a reasonable inference of negligence on the part of the defendants might have drawn from the evidence, it is clear from the undisputed evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The paved portion of the highway was not disturbed by the defendants and was readily distinguishable from the unpaved portion. As the plaintiff approached the culvert and its abutments and railings he was traveling on the paved surface. His headlights were functioning properly and his view was not obstructed, nor did the lights from the car approaching him obscure his view. He was traveling at a moderate rate of speed, and no reason appears why in the exercise of ordinary care he could not have crossed the culvert without difficulty or injury to himself. Accepting as true the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff and according to the same every favorable inference and presumption, it is apparent that the action of the trial court was justified on the theory that on the evidence presented no negligence was brought home to the defendants as the proximate cause of the injury, and that, in any event, the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

The judgment is affirmed.

WARSON v. TALPEY-ARNOLD SYNDICATE et al. (L. A. 8908.)★

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 16, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 12, 1928.

Specific performance — 31—Preliminary contract for oil acreage could not be specifically enforced, where details to be embodied in supplementary agreement were never agreed on.

Preliminary contract to put down test well for which plaintiff was to be given oil leases and acreage on other structures could not be enforced in suit for specific performance, where it provided only that actual choosing of acreage should finally be made at main office and descriptions thereof be embodied in supplementary agreement, details of which supplementary agreement parties never agreed on.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Burnell, Judge.

Action by G. L. Warson, trustee, against the Talpey-Arnold Syndicate and others.

From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. S. Wheeler and Chas. S. Wheeler, Jr., both of San Francisco (Henry F. May, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

R. L. Alderman and E. S. Williams, both of Los Angeles, and Nolan, Rohe & Freston, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment against him in an action in which he sought specific performance of a contract with reference to oil and gas leases upon land in Canada, with a prayer for incidental and alternative relief.

The plaintiff acted as the trustee or agent of a syndicate known as the Underwriters of the Consolidated Petroleum Company in making the contract involved herein, and sues in such capacity. The defendant syndicate was a general partnership, composed of the other named defendants, organized and existing for the purpose of acquiring and operating oil and gas lands in the United States and Canada. The contract involved in this case, which was attached to the complaint, provided that the plaintiff should drill a test well on certain property leased to defendants, known as "No. 2 Structure," on Pakowki Lake, and in consideration of such work should be given "leases or acreage on some or all of the various other structures, Nos. 1 to 16," which are numbered and named in the contract. Plaintiff was to receive leases covering 5,200 acres on the said Pakowki Lake structure and an additional 10,000 acres of Canadian government oil and gas leases, distributed among the other structures named. It was provided, further, "that the actual choosing and designation of said acreage shall finally be made at the office of said first party (defendant herein) in Calgary, Alta., and such descriptions embodied in a supplementary agreement." Other provisions, of no materiality here, are then embodied in the contract, after which the following appears:

"It is understood that this is a preliminary contract, being exact only as to the spirit of the undertaking of both parties, and final details shall be embodied in said supplementary agreement herein referred to and to be made at the time of the determination of specific leases."

No supplementary agreement is set forth in the pleading of plaintiff, although it is alleged by him that he and the agent for the defendant syndicate thereafter "did select and designate the lands upon which leases were to be assigned, pursuant to the provisions of said contract, which selection said Talpey agreed were fair and equitable to both parties; and plaintiff did then and there promptly notify the said syndicate, in writing, through the said J. R. Talpey, of such selections and requested him and said syndicate to deposit in escrow in some bank in said Calgary the leases covering the lands so selected."

It appears from the complaint that the defendant failed and refused to place the leases covering the lands so selected, or any of them, in escrow, claiming and alleging that the greater part of said leases had been disposed of by the syndicate to other parties, and promising to try to secure them from such other parties. The plaintiff alleged that he was able, ready, and willing to complete the drilling to be done by him.

It is alleged that the defendant made efforts to recover the leases, and, later, notified plaintiff that they were unable to recover some of them, and confirmed the other selections made by plaintiff and suggested that new selections be made for the remaining acreage and that the drilling be done upon land other than that originally selected for that purpose. To this suggestion, plaintiff alleges, he agreed. Plaintiff alleges that he "offered to agree upon other tracts in place of the drilling tract of 5,200 acres and upon structures in which leases had already been chosen and agreed upon and suggested and offered and attempted to agree upon such tracts to make up the complete acreage in the various structures to which plaintiff for himself and his associates was and is entitled; but that said syndicate and its members have refused and still refuse to come to any agreement as to such acreage or to carry out the terms of said contract or agreement, or any part thereof, and have so notified plaintiff."

Among other prayers for relief, plaintiff asks that defendants "be required to come to some agreement in the matter of the selection of the parts of the 5,200 acres which it and they claimed they were unable to furnish" on certain designated structures, and "to that end, either to agree to tracts in lieu thereof suggested by plaintiff, or to suggest tracts, on their behalf for his consideration, pursuant to the suggestion and request made by them," etc. Plaintiff also offers to waive the further selection of acreage as part of his consideration under the contract and offers to perform, upon consideration of the transfer of the leases to the tracts which were designated by him, and which he alleges were accepted by the defendant.

The complaint was attacked by general demurrers by the several defendants, which demurrers were sustained, and, plaintiff having failed to amend his complaint, judgment was entered in favor of defendants.

The contract appears to be, and it expressly recites that it is, a preliminary agreement, embodying only the spirit of a contemplated supplementary contract to be entered into by the parties, and it is perfectly clear, from the facts alleged in the complaint, that the minds of the parties never met upon the details of such supplementary agreement.

No question arises as to the power of the court to give either equitable relief by specific performance or legal relief by damages for breach of contract, for the contract pleaded, upon its face, gives no right of action upon any theory, without a definite supplementary agreement such as was contemplated by the parties. The instrument pleaded shows on its face that it was not intended to form the basis of contract rights, and it expressly recites this fact.

We think the demurrers were properly sustained. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

4. Municipal corporations $\S$ 697(4)—Complaint to enjoin erection of gasoline service station and garage at street intersection was properly dismissed, where it showed no street obstruction.

Complaint, in action to enjoin erection and operation of a gasoline service station and garage on land owned by city at intersection of public streets, was properly dismissed, where it did not show obstruction of streets, but, on contrary, showed streets surrounding plot of ground were open and accessible.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Action by Peter Nagel against Clinton E. Dorrington and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Kenneth K. Scott, T. L. Foley, and Chas. Mitschrich, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Horace S. Wilson and Constan Jensen, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment against him in an action in which he sought to enjoin the defendant Dorrington from erecting and operating a "gasoline service station and garage" upon a triangular plot of ground "at the center of the intersection of Irena, Jaspar, and Opal streets in the city of Redondo Beach, Los Angeles county, Cal."

Plaintiff alleged that he is the owner of certain lots and real property which "run from Opal street to Jaspar street, at the intersection of said streets with Irena street and front on said Irena street."

It is alleged, also, that plaintiff's lots are residence lots, and that the view from them will be impaired by the filling station, and that the free access thereto will be cut off; that the filling station will attract automobiles which will create noise and annoyance to plaintiff, etc. The plaintiff alleges that this triangular strip was parked by the city, and has been maintained by said city as a park from and after the time the tract of land designated as the townsite of Redondo Beach was platted into lots, streets, and parks and alleys in a map duly filed by the owner of said tract of land and recorded, together with a certificate of dedication, setting apart for the use of the public all the streets and parks and parkways as shown and delineated upon said map; that the city accepted Opal, Jaspar, and Irena streets and its intersections as delineated upon said map; that the city has caused a lease to be made to defendant Dorrington of said triangular strip of ground for use as a filling station, and Dorrington is proceeding to put the property to such use. It is alleged that the said lease was an ultra vires act on the part of the city, and is illegal and void, and that Dorrington is a trespasser.

The city was never served with a copy of the complaint, and the action proceeded against defendant Dorrington alone. He filed a general and special demurrer, attacking the complaint in over 35 different particulars. Amendments to the complaint were made from time to time, and finally, after the demurrer to the fifth amended complaint had been sustained, plaintiff declined to amend further, and judgment went against him.

[1, 2] Plaintiff's position is that the filling station is a public nuisance, and that he, as a member of the public, is specially injured, entitling him to sue. The first position is not sustained by any authority and it is apparent that a "gasoline filling station and garage" is not a nuisance per se. It was not in operation at the time the complaint was filed, and, unless it is operated in some extraordinary manner so as to be a nuisance because of such operation, this court cannot say that it is a nuisance requiring suppression at the suit of the representative of the public generally or at the suit of an individual specially affected.

[3, 4] The questions concerning the legality of the lease to defendant Dorrington are not involved in this action to enjoin Dorrington from proceeding with his building. Plaintiff claims no title to the strip of ground occupied by Dorrington, and has no rights, unless the erection of this structure is a nuisance. It is settled that an obstruction of a public street is a nuisance, and the authorities cited by plaintiff and appellant all deal with situations where a public street was obstructed, but the complaint herein does not show the obstruction of a public street, but, on the contrary, shows that the streets completely surrounding this plot of ground are open and accessible.

It is unnecessary to go into all the questions raised by the demurrer. Upon the merits, plaintiff has not stated a cause of action and the demurrer was properly sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

HYNES v. JACQUELIN et al. (CALIFORNIA TRUST CO., Intervener). (L. A. 8927.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 17, 1927.

1. Deeds ⇨207—Evidence held to prove deed, under which widower claimed fee of property willed to him by wife for life, to be a forgery (Civ. Code, §§ 1195, 1196).

Deed under which relict husband claimed fee ownership of property willed to him for life only by his wife, and which he claimed to have found, after unsuccessful effort to probate alleged later wills of wife giving him fee estate, and to establish execution by subscribing witness, under Civ. Code, §§ 1195, 1196, and whose signature as transcribed thereon witness denied, held, under remaining evidence, to be a forgery.

2. New trial ⇨99—Refusal of new trial for newly discovered evidence, cumulative in effect and within defendant's knowledge before trial, held not abuse of discretion.

Refusal of new trial for alleged newly discovered evidence, which was cumulative in effect merely and within defendant's knowledge months before trial, and which, if accepted as true, would not change result, was not an abuse of discretion.

3. Appeal and error ⇨981—Trial court's ruling on motion for new trial for newly discovered evidence will not be disturbed, unless discretion is abused.

Trial courts have broad discretion in ruling on motions for new trial for alleged newly discovered evidence, and their ruling thereon will not be disturbed, unless discretion is abused.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by Wilma J. Hynes against Sydney S. Jacquelin and another, in which the California Trust Company, as administrator, intervened. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Jacquelin appeals. Affirmed.

James McLachlan and Paul Barksdale D'Orr, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Asa V. Call and J. Wiseman Macdonald, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal was taken from a judgment decreeing a deed purporting to convey valuable property, wherein appellant was the grantee and his wife, Jean Way Jacquelin, since deceased, was the grantor, to be a forged instrument, for an accounting of rents, issues, and profits, and quieting title to said property described in said forged instrument.

[1] Decedent, Jean Way Jacquelin, a resident of the city of Los Angeles, died in the city of Paris, France, on August 30, 1920. By her last will and testament, executed February 16, 1918, she disposed of an estate of considerable value, consisting of real and personal property, situate in this state and in the state of Illinois. Appellant was the husband of said decedent, and respondent Wilma J. Hynes was an adopted daughter of decedent. Said will was admitted to probate in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles on October 20, 1920, and by its provisions the property which is the subject of this proceeding, known as the home property of decedent, and located at 1019 Beacon street, and which comprised the bulk of said estate and was estimated to exceed $50,000 in value and yielded $5,000 per annum in rentals, was devised to said Sydney S. Jacquelin, appellant, for and during the term of his natural life, with remainder to said Wilma J. Hynes, respondent. Numerous other bequests and legacies were made by the testatrix, which are not material to any issue involved in the action. By a codicil to said will, executed February 7, 1919, more than four months after the signing and delivery of the deed found by the court to be a forged instrument, the testatrix referred to the specific devise and bequest made to her adopted daughter, and ratified and confirmed her will, which devised the fee of the property described in said forged deed to respondent, her daughter. All the rest, residue, and remainder of her said estate, including her real estate situate in the state of Illinois, was devised and bequeathed to her executor and trustee, with full power to sell, transfer, and convert the same into money as he might be advised, and with instructions to distribute the net proceeds to those certain persons named by said testatrix in her will. Her brother-in-law, Robert A. Burton, of Chicago, Ill., was appointed by her as executor and trustee of her said will and estate, with the provision that, in case of his death, the Chicago Title & Trust Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Illinois, should succeed to said trust. Robert A. Burton died pending the administration of his trust, and said corporation was, by an order subsequently made by the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, appointed to succeed as executor and trustee of said trust. Subsequent to the death of said Robert A. Burton, the California Trust Company was appointed special administrator of the estate of said decedent, with general powers to prosecute and defend actions necessary for the preservation and protection of said estate. Said corporation, therefore, intervened, joining forces with respondent Wilma J. Hynes in the prosecution of this action to obtain a decree invalidating and canceling of record said deed, purporting to have been executed by said decedent and conveying to appellant said Beacon street property, for an accounting for the rents, issues, and profits thereof, and for other relief.

Appellant is a licensed physician and claimed to have given some attention to the study of the law. Decedent was the widow of the late Judge William J. Hynes. Respondent Wilma J. Hynes was the adopted daughter of Judge and Mrs. Hynes. Judge Hynes died in 1915, leaving to his wife all the property of which she died seized. During the year following the demise of Judge Hynes, his widow, who was then 69 or 70 years of age, and appellant, who was then 43 years of age, intermarried. The family, as then constituted, continued to reside at the family residence, the title of which constitutes the subject-matter of this action, until June, 1920, when decedent accompanied her husband on a trip to Paris, France, where she died approximately 2 months thereafter. It was the persistent effort of appellant to defeat the provisions of the will dated February 16, 1918, whereby he was devised a life estate in the said Beacon street property, with remainder over to decedent's adopted daughter, Wilma J. Hynes. Soon after said will was admitted to probate, he filed a petition to revoke said will, and offered for probate a purported unattested will, by the terms of which he was devised the Beacon street property in fee simple. In this proceeding he listed the Beacon street property, to which he lays claim by virtue of the deed which he sought to establish by this latest proceeding, as property of the decedent. His petition in said probate matter was in all respects denied. On December 1, 1920, appellant filed and offered for probate another alleged will, which purported to have been executed by decedent at New York City, while she was sojourning there en route to Paris. This purported will bore the formalities of attestation, but, upon being put to the test, it was found by the court to be a forged instrument.

By his petition to probate said will appellant again listed said Beacon street property as property belonging to said estate. Defeated in his attempts to establish as the will of decedent any of said offered papers which he claimed to be testamentary in character, appellant petitioned the probate court to set aside to him as a homestead said Beacon street property. His petition was denied. The several attempts made by appellant to defeat the provisions of said will devising said property to Wilma J. Hynes, and to acquire it for himself by the methods above pointed out, are absolutely inconsistent with a well-grounded conviction or belief on his part that he held title absolute to said property by any deed of conveyance executed by decedent and delivered to him. The claim of title under said deed is the latest effort of appellant to establish in himself absolute ownership in said property. His story, briefly told, is that on the 1st day of October, 1918, his wife handed him the deed and said: "Here is a little present for you." She suggested that he have it typewritten. In response to her suggestion, he put it into typewritten form, and, at the request of decedent, he called Miss Avery, who had been decedent's secretary for some time past, to witness decedent's signature. Decedent sat down and very slowly and deliberately signed the deed, and Miss Avery signed as a witness. Three or four weeks thereafter appellant and his wife went to the office of George H. Seward, a notary public, and had him attach his certificate of acknowledgment. Appellant then placed the deed in a desk with his private papers. In May, 1920, appellant became aware that the deed was lost. It is the testimony of appellant that he and decedent searched frantically for two or three weeks for the deed, but were unable to find it. On August 4, 1921, something like a year and three months thereafter, he informed Miss Avery of the loss, and she suggested to him that it might be in a little lacquered Japanese box. The box was discovered by him in the attic or storeroom, locked, and the key to it was lost. Appellant took the box to a locksmith, who opened it. Upon discovering the deed as a part of the contents of the box, appellant testified that in his excited state of mind he exclaimed, "Good Heavens; there is the deed that my wife gave me in 1918, which I thought was lost." Upon the discovery of the deed in the manner as related, it was found that it did not contain the notary's certificate, and there was no evidence of an impress of said notary's seal upon the instrument. Appellant was unable to account for the absence of a notarial certificate, except upon the theory that the impress of the seal was made only upon the certificate and it had in some way become detached from the deed.

It then became necessary to establish the execution of the instrument with the aid of the alleged subscribing witness. Sections 1195, 1196, Civ. Code. This appellant set about to do. A few days thereafter, accompanied by a second notary public, he visited Miss Avery and informed her that he had found the deed in the little box which he had examined upon her suggestion, and he requested her to make oath to the genuineness of her own and decedent's signatures, which, he claimed, she did, and said second notary thereupon attached his certificate of acknowledgment thereto. The notary public corroborated appellant to the extent that Miss Avery identified Mrs. Jacquelin's signature as the grantor and her own signature as a witness to be genuine. When called as a witness, however, she denied that she had identified her name which appeared as a witness to the execution of the deed, or that the subject-matter had ever been brought to her attention. She admitted that the signature in some respects resembled her handwriting, but denied that she ever knowingly affixed her name to a deed whereby Mrs. Jacquelin conveyed any property to appellant. She also testified that the signature purporting to have been subscribed by Mrs. Jacquelin did not resemble her signature, nor was the name affixed to the deed as the grantor therein the name which Mrs. Jacquelin was in the habit of using in signing documents. It was her habit to subscribe herself "Jean Way Jacquelin." The name affixed to the deed was "Jennie M. Jacquelin." Upon the stand the witness absolutely repudiated the genuineness of both signatures to the deed. Her testimony is in sharp contradiction of appellant's claim that she took any part in the procurement of the deed as a witness or otherwise. She also claimed that appellant, in the company of the notary whom he produced to take her acknowledgment, insisted that she identify said signatures as genuine, but she refused to do so. In addition to the very important testimony given by this witness, which tended to establish the fraudulent character of the deed, four or five other witnesses called by the respondents testified that the signature purporting to be the signature of Mrs. Jacquelin was clearly a forgery. Among this number, one was a professional handwriting expert, and four were officials connected with various Los Angeles banking houses. The reasons assigned for their opinions are quite convincing.

The purposes and intentions of decedent, as shown by her expressed wishes and conduct, tend strongly to rebut the claim of appellant that decedent intended that he should become the absolute owner of the residence property, to the exclusion of any right of ownership whatsoever in her adopted daughter. Such a conclusion is not only inconsistent with the testimony, but with the logic of the situation. It is a fact that the appellant himself admitted that the signature to the deed did not resemble ordinarily Mrs. Jacquelin's signature, and he would be unable to identify it as hers, except for the fact that he was a witness to it. The handwriting expert called by appellant weakened considerably the value of his testimony by stating that Mrs. Jacquelin's signature had the appearance of having been "drawn," rather than written by a free-hand motion. It is true that appellant produced witnesses who testified to matters which, if credited by the court, had a tendency to establish the genuineness of the deed; but this evidence was, in the opinion of the court, overcome by evidence more convincing and satisfactory.

[2, 3] Two affidavits, one by appellant, and the second by Adelaide Day Shorb, were presented on motion for a new trial. It is claimed that these affidavits set forth newly discovered evidence sufficient in probative effect to have compelled the granting of a new trial. The matters therein set out are cumulative in effect merely. Besides this, the alleged newly discovered evidence was, according to the averments of affiants, facts which were within the knowledge of affiants months before the trial of the case. The excuse urged for failure to present Adelaide Day Shorb as a witness at the trial is that the matters which she and appellant had discussed several months prior to the trial had passed out of his mind. Trial courts are granted a broad discretion in passing upon motions for new trial based upon affidavit alleging newly discovered evidence, and their action will not be disturbed, unless a plain abuse of discretion is made to appear. No such showing is made here. A conclusive answer to appellant's motion is that the testimony of the absent witness, if accepted as true, would have no weight whatever in overturning the findings of the court that the deed was a forged instrument. As to the genuineness of the signatures which appeared upon the paper which she claims to have seen, she expresses no opinion, and, if she did, it would simply be cumulative evidence addressed to a disputed fact.

The instant case is one of evidence solely, and the trial court was the judge of the credibility of the witnesses, and of the weight, effect, and sufficiency of the evidence adduced. It being sufficient to sustain the judgment, this court would not be warranted in disturbing it.

Judgment affirmed.

Waters and water courses §87—Judgment enjoining interference with flow of sufficient water down creek for plaintiffs' domestic use held not fatally uncertain in not specifying amount.

Judgment enjoining maintenance of any dam or artificial obstruction which would interfere with flow of sufficient water down creek to lands of plaintiffs for their household and domestic use held not fatally uncertain because failing to adjudicate amount of water to which each party was entitled, where there was no allegation or proof on subject nor any request or suggestion from either litigant that court determine this matter, especially since gravamen of action was to determine plaintiffs' riparian status and defendant's right to divert all water from stream.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Benjamin K. Knight, Judge.

Action by Santos Omnes and others against A. B. Crawford. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Charles B. Younger, of Santa Cruz, for appellant.

W. M. Gardner, of Santa Cruz, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment enjoining the defendant from maintaining a dam or artificial obstruction in the channel of Logan creek, sometimes called Rodgers creek, in Santa Cruz county. It was alleged by the plaintiffs and found on sufficient evidence that the plaintiffs Santos Omnes and Elsie Omnes, his wife, are the owners of lands riparian to said stream and have been such owners and have resided on said land since 1906; that said plaintiffs have no other water for domestic purposes than the waters of said stream, and that such waters are necessary for their domestic and household purposes; that the defendant is the owner of lands bordering on said stream above the lands of the plaintiffs; that within 90 days prior to the commencement of this action the defendant constructed and now maintains a dam in the bed of and across said stream at a point above the lands of the plaintiffs thereby completely shutting off the flow of the waters of said stream and preventing the same from flowing in its natural channel down to the lands of the plaintiffs, thus wrongfully and entirely depriving the plaintiffs of the use of said waters to their irreparable damage and injury. The court further found that the defendant "is diverting much of the impounded waters of said stream to lands not riparian to said stream, and that if such waters were not so diverted, there would be sufficient water pass over the lands of the plaintiffs to supply plaintiffs' demands." The judgment ordered that the defendant be "perpetually enjoined and restrained from maintaining, erecting, having, or keeping, in the channel of the stream, * * * at any point above the lands of the plaintiffs, any dam or artificial obstruction of any kind which will prevent, or otherwise interfere with the flow of sufficient water down said stream to the lands of plaintiffs for their household and domestic use."

It is the contention of the defendant: (1) That plaintiffs did not establish their right to the use of any of the waters of the stream; and (2) that the judgment is fatally uncertain in that it does not adjudicate the amount of water to which the parties are, or either of them is, entitled.

As to the first point the evidence was conflicting as to whether the lands of the plaintiffs are riparian to the stream, and while it was shown that the said lands bordered on the stream only to a small extent, the extent to which they so bordered was sufficient upon which to establish riparian proprietorship in the plaintiffs and to support the finding to that effect.

In support of the second point it is urged that as the court found and determined only that the plaintiffs are entitled to the flow of sufficient water down the stream for their household and domestic uses and did not find or determine the specific amount to which the parties were or either of them was entitled, the judgment is fatally uncertain, can serve no purpose other than to furnish the basis of further litigation and therefore must be reversed on the authority of Steinberger v. Meyer, 130 Cal. 156, 62 P. 483; Rogers v. Overacker, 4 Cal. App. 333, 87 P. 1107; and Powers v. Perry, 12 Cal. App. 77, 106 P. 595. The foregoing cases undoubtedly support the contention of the defendant that it is desirable and in proper cases essential, in order to constitute an estoppel and prevent further litigation, that the judgment define the rights of the parties with such certainty as to enable them to understand what they are to do or not to do under its terms, and said cases are illustrative of those instances wherein such certainty will be required. But it is not in every controversy involving rights to the use of water that the adjudication of the particular amount of water to which the parties are entitled is essential to the validity of the judgment. The circumstances of each case must be considered in order to determine the question. In the present case the plaintiffs by the allegations of their complaint and their proof endeavored to and did establish their status as riparian owners and their right to enjoin the diversion away from the stream of all of its water by an upper riparian owner. The amount of water to which the plaintiffs claimed to be entitled was neither alleged nor proved by the plaintiffs. In his answer the defendant denied that the lands of the plaintiffs were riparian to the stream and sought unsuccessfully to prove that they were not riparian. He denied all right in the plaintiffs to the use of any of the waters of the stream. He asked for no affirmative relief, made no mention in his pleadings or proofs as to the amount of water to which he claimed to be entitled as against the plaintiffs, and prayed merely that plaintiffs take nothing, and for costs. It may be assumed that under the prayer of the plaintiffs for general relief the court would have been justified in receiving proof and ascertaining therefrom the specific amount of water to which each party was entitled and render judgment accordingly. Nevertheless we think the court was not bound to do so in the absence of any allegation or proof on the subject and in the absence of any request or suggestion from either litigant that such course be taken by the court. This would seem especially to be true when the gravamen of the action was to determine first the status of riparian proprietors on the part of the plaintiffs, and, secondly, the right to maintain the dam and divert all the water from the stream on the part of the defendant. This case therefore properly falls within the doctrine announced in such cases as Strong v. Baldwin, 154 Cal. 150, 163, 97 P. 178, 129 Am. St. Rep. 149, and Bigelow v. Merz, 57 Cal. App. 613, 208 P. 128, wherein it was held that if a controversy should arise as to the specific amount of water to which the parties are entitled in the exercise of the rights adjudicated by the judgment, such controversy might well abide the result of a future determination. In the present case it is fair to assume that since the status of riparian owner is established in the plaintiffs herein and the wrongfulness of the maintenance of the dam by the defendant for the diversion of waters to lands not riparian to the stream is also determined, a compliance with the judgment by the defendant will obviate further litigation.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

Action by Robert Adams against William R. Adams and wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. W. Benshoof, of Riverside, for appellants.

Frank L. Miller, of Banning, for respondent.

SHENK, J. In this action to quiet title the plaintiff had judgment, from which the defendants appeal.

The defendants contend that plaintiff offered in writing to put the defendant William R. Adams and his family on the land in question for the remainder of plaintiff's life, that the defendants accepted the offer, and that under this agreement the plaintiff was to have one-half of the crops raised on the land and was to devise the property to the defendants. The defendants urge that the trial court erred in denying their motion for a new trial on the ground that the decision is against law, and that the court failed to find on all the material issues made by the pleadings. The material evidence is contained in letters which passed between the two brothers, the plaintiff and the defendant William R. Adams. The plaintiff was a resident of Beaumont, in this state. The defendant and his wife and family were residents of Glasgow, Scotland. In the correspondence between the two brothers in 1921, the plaintiff made a proposition to his defendant brother that, if the latter would come to California with his family, the plaintiff would place him and his family on a 40-acre fruit ranch near Beaumont and give him one-half of all the crops grown on the ranch; the defendants to have the five-room house rent free and to pay one-half of the expense of producing the crops.

[1, 2] Giving all proper weight to the testimony on behalf of the defendants, the trial court was justified in finding that the tenancy was a tenancy at will, or a tenancy from year to year, at a rental of one-half of the crops produced, which tenancy could be terminated, and was terminated, by notice duly given. Whatever may be said otherwise as to the alleged agreement to make a will, it is enough to say that there is no evidence in the record of a breach of such an agreement, or of an attempt on the part of plaintiff to divest himself of the property. The parties are still in being, and no interest in the title to the land appears to have been conveyed by any of the correspondence in question. From an examination of the record, we are satisfied that the court found on all the ultimate facts presented by the pleadings essential to a proper determination of the controversy.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

MOJAVE RIVER IRR. DIST. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA, in and for SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY et al. (L. A. 9943.)★

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 19, 1928.

1. Waters and water courses ⇨133—Powers of water commission as to permits to appropriate water are "administrative," not "judicial" (Water Commission Act 1913, as amended).

Powers of state water commission as to issuance or denial of permits for appropriation of water, granted by Water Commission Act 1913 (St. 1913, p. 1012), as amended, are wholly "administrative" and not "judicial."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First Series, Administrative; First and Second Series, Judicial.]

2. Certiorari ⇨24—Courts cannot review acts of water commission by writ of review (Water Commission Act 1913, as amended; Code Civ. Proc. § 1067 et seq.).

Courts have no power to review acts of state water commission or of any of its departments, under Water Commission Act 1913 (St. 1913, p. 1012), as amended, by means of ordinary writ of review which is provided for by Constitution and defined and limited by Code Civ. Proc. § 1067 et seq.

3. Waters and water courses ⇨152(1)—Statutory action to "review" order of water commission to appropriate water is not proceeding by certiorari or appeal, but is original action (Water Commission Act 1913, § 1b, as added by St. 1923, p. 162).

Action in superior court to "review" order of state water commission issuing or denying permit to appropriate water brought under Water Commission Act 1913, § 1b, as added by St. 1923, p. 162, is not a proceeding by writ of certiorari nor by appeal, but is an original proceeding, since function of certiorari is to determine whether judicial tribunal has exceeded jurisdiction, and Legislature cannot enlarge function of writ nor invest superior court with jurisdiction over appeals from nonjudicial bodies, under Const. art. 6, § 5.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Review.]

4. Statutes ⇨76(1)—Statute authorizing review of order of water commission issuing or denying permit to appropriate water held invalid as "special law," where general law is applicable (Water Commission Act 1913, § 1b, as added by St. 1923, p. 162; Const. art. 4, § 25).

Water Commission Act 1913, § 1b, as added by St. 1923, p. 162, authorizing any one interested in application for permit to appropriate water or any party protestant before commission to bring action in superior court to review order issuing or denying permit wherein court should review all matters considered by commission and render judgment affirming, reversing, or modifying order, held to violate Const. art. 4, § 25, forbidding special laws regulating practice of courts of justice, in view of subdivision 33, forbidding special laws on any subject where general law can be made applicable.

5. Constitutional law ⇨56—Validity of statute authorizing review of order of water commission cannot be upheld as "special case or proceeding" within superior court's jurisdiction (Water Commission Act 1913, § 1b, as added by St. 1923, p. 162; Const. art. 6, § 5).

Validity of Water Commission Act 1913, § 1b, as added by St. 1923, p. 162, authorizing any one interested in application to state water commission for permit to appropriate water or any party protestant before commission to bring action in superior court to review order granting or denying permit, cannot be upheld as providing for "special case or proceeding" not otherwise provided for, within Const. art. 6, § 5, giving superior court jurisdiction in such cases, since aggrieved party previously had remedy and constitutional provision governs only justiciable matters, in view of article 3, § 1.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Special Proceeding.]

6. Constitutional law ⇨43(2)—Petitioner securing permit to appropriate water under statute held not estopped to deny constitutionality of provision for review of order granting permit (Water Commission Act 1913, § 1b, as added by St. 1923, p. 162).

Petitioner who obtained permit from state water commission to appropriate water under Water Commission Act 1913 (St. 1913, p. 1012), as amended, held not estopped by fact that he applied for and obtained permit to deny constitutionality of section 1b, as added by St. 1923, p. 162, authorizing review by superior court of order granting permit.

RICHARDS, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition directed to the respondents herein, the superior court of San Bernardino county and the judges thereof, preventing further action in a proceeding instituted in said court under the provisions of section 1b of the Water Commission Act (Stats. 1923, p. 162), for the purpose of a review of a certain order of the division of water rights, provided for in said act, granting to the Mojave River irrigation district a permit to appropriate water from the Mojave river. The title of said proceeding was "Van Dyke et al., Plaintiffs, v. Department of Public Works, etc., et al., Defendants." The so-called plaintiffs in said proceeding consisted in a large number of persons and corporations or associations claiming prior rights as riparian owners, or appropriators, or adverse claimants to the recipient of said permit, and who were seeking, by said proceeding, to have said court review and reverse or modify the order of said division of water rights granting such permit. The defendants, so-called, in such proceeding were the department of public works, the director of public works, the chief of division of water rights, operative institutions or individuals under said act, and in addition to these the Mojave River irrigation district, the recipient of such permit. The sole authority under which the plaintiffs, so-called in said proceeding in the superior court were acting in instituting, and under which said court was acting in entertaining, the same is expressly pleaded as being derived from the provisions of said section 1b of said act; and the sole question presented to this court for determination in the instant proceeding is that of the constitutionality of said section 1b of said act. There is involved in this question, however, certain preliminary considerations, to which we shall first address ourselves.

[1, 2] The Water Commission Act, so-called, was adopted by the Legislature in the year 1913. Stats. 1913, p. 1012. By the provisions of that act a state water commission was created and invested with the powers and duties prescribed therein. Among the powers with which the state water commission was thus intrusted was the power, conferred by sections 15, 16, and 17 of said act, of granting permits for the appropriation of unappropriated water flowing or existing in the streams, lakes, or other bodies of water within the state of California, upon proper application for such permits, and which permits when granted should give to the applicants thereof certain priorities as to the use of the water thus permitted to be appropriated upon compliance with the provisions of section 18 of said act relative to the commencement, prosecution, and completion of such construction work as was required therein in order to render available the use or uses of the waters thus to be appropriated. The nature and scope of the powers thus conferred upon the said water commission came under review before this court in the case of Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Commission, 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874, wherein this court was called upon to consider the question as to whether the said water commission, in the attempted exercise of the aforesaid powers in the granting or refusal of permits for the appropriation of water, was acting in a judicial or administrative capacity. The question was directly presented to the superior court when, upon the denial by the state water commission of an application for a permit to appropriate water from the Kern river for the purpose of irrigating agricultural lands, made to it by the Tulare Water Company, the latter presented to said court two applications for peremptory writs—one for a writ of review and the other for a writ of mandate. When said court denied both writs, appeals were taken upon both applications to the appellate court, from the decision of which, in both matters, the questions presented therein were in due course transferred to this court for determination. In a well-considered opinion, written by Mr. Justice Sloane, it was decided that the powers with which the state water commission was invested under the foregoing provisions of the act in question, and the various amendments thereto made up to that time were purely administrative and not judicial in character. As a result of this conclusion the writ of review was denied and the writ of mandate granted.

In the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Shaw the fundamental basis of this conclusion was tersely shown to rest upon the provisions of section 1 of article 6 of the state Constitution, whereby the entire judicial power of the state is solely vested in the judicial tribunals designated in said section, and as a result of which it is not within the power of the Legislature to invest any other body with judicial power to establish and declare the right and title to private property. The decision of this court in that case has been consistently followed in the later cases, and particularly in the case of Department of Public Works v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 215, 239 P. 1076, wherein a writ of prohibition was sought and issued in this court to prevent the superior court of the county of Siskiyou from entertaining a writ of certiorari for the purpose of reviewing certain proceedings taken by one of the divisions of the department of public works under the provisions of section 12 of said act, the action of this court in the issuance of said writ being expressly based upon its former decision in the cause of Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Commission, supra, and upon the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Shaw in that case.

The most recent expression of this court touching this subject is to be found in the case of Bank of Italy v. Johnson (Cal. Sup.) 251 P. 784, wherein the principle declared in the foregoing decisions is fully approved. From these foregoing recent decisions of this court two conclusions may be said to be fully and firmly established. They are, first, that the powers with which the state water commission and the several departments and divisions thereof were invested under the Water Commission Act of 1913, and the later amendment thereto with relation to the issuance of permits or the denial thereof for the appropriation of water, were purely and wholly administrative and were not judicial in their character and exercise; second, that the courts of this state possessed no power to review the said acts of the water commission or any of its departments through the ordinary process or proceeding of a writ of review, as such writ is provided for in the state Constitution and is defined and limited by the provisions of section 1067 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. We do not deem it necessary in this case to enter upon a consideration or attempted differentiation between the foregoing cases and certain other decisions of this court having reference to the issuance of writs of review with respect to a limited class of proceedings of certain other subordinate departments of the state government with relation to the acts of which writs of review have been at times issued. It suffices here to say that as to the state water commission the foregoing decisions have foreclosed further discussion of the two propositions above referred to as decided therein.

[3] The Water Commission Act of 1913 was several times amended by subsequent Legislatures down to the year 1923, when there was added thereto the provision designated as section 1b, with respect to the interpretation and application of which the present controversy has arisen. Stats. 1923, pp. 161, 162. Said section 1b reads as follows:

"Any person, firm, association, or corporation interested in any application for a permit to appropriate water or any party protestant before the state water commission may within thirty days after issuance of a permit or an order refusing to issue a permit and rejecting an application bring an action in the superior court in and for the county wherein the proposed point of diversion or a proposed point of diversion lies. Said action shall be for a review of the order of the state water commission.

Said court shall review all correspondence, maps, data and other records on file with the state water commission which pertain to said application and all evidence taken before said commission and take such additional evidence as it may require or as may be submitted by the parties in interest or the state water commission and shall then render judgment affirming, reversing, or modifying the action of the state water commission. The priority of right of an applicant shall continue until final judgment is rendered."

In determining the scope and effect of the foregoing amendment to the Water Commission Act certain primary conclusions would seem to be inevitable. The first of these relates to the use of the term "review" as defining the nature of the proceeding to be instituted and conducted in the superior court under the terms of said amendment. It would seem to be clear that in the use of said term the framers of said amendment could not have intended that it should have reference to the writ of certiorari or review as the same is provided for in the Constitution and defined in the Code. This for two reasons: First, for the reason that the remedy provided for in said amendment is not that remedy to which in both its ancient and modern uses the writ of certiorari is confined, viz., that of determining whether the jurisdiction of a court or other tribunal exercising judicial functions has been exceeded. The amendment in question contemplates no such action or determination on the part of the superior court in which the proceeding provided for in it is to be begun and conducted, and it cannot therefore be concluded that the framers of this amendment used the term "review" therein as referring to writs of review or proceedings thereunder. The second reason is that the law is well settled that the function of a writ of certiorari or review, as such writ existed prior to and is provided for in the state Constitution, cannot be extended by the Legislature so as to embrace the consideration and review of the proceedings of nonjudicial bodies. The early and later decisions of this court touching this subject refer to both writs of prohibition and review and to the inability of the Legislature to enlarge or restrict the functions of either of these writs. Maurer v. Mitchell, 53 Cal. 289; Camron v. Kenfield, 57 Cal. 550; Farmers' Union v. Thresher, 62 Cal. 407; Pac. Tel. Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 694, 137 P. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822; Miller & Lux v. Board of Supervisors, 139 Cal. 260, 208 P. 304. It follows that for both of the foregoing reasons the proceeding provided for in said amendment cannot be considered as in the nature of "certiorari" or "review." It would seem to be equally well settled that said proceeding cannot be treated as in the nature of an appeal to the superior court from a ruling of the division of water rights in granting or denying permits, although it would appear from some of the provisions of said amendment that its framers contemplated that in some of its aspects it should resemble an appeal. It is firmly established, however, that the Legislature has no power to invest the superior court with jurisdiction over appeals from nonjudicial bodies or from other tribunals than those embraced in the provisions of section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution, which limits the appellate jurisdiction of superior courts to "such cases arising in inferior courts in their respective counties as may be prescribed by law." In the cases of Chinn v. Superior Court, 156 Cal. 480, 105 P. 580, and of Inglin v. Hoppin, 156 Cal. 483, 491, 105 P. 582, this question was fully considered and determined, this court in each of these cases holding that an attempt on the part of the Legislature to provide for an appeal to the superior court from an order of the board of supervisors, in the one case establishing an irrigation district and in the other creating a reclamation district, was unconstitutional and void.

[4] We have thus by a process of elimination reached the conclusion that the proceeding in the superior court provided for in section 1b of the Water Commission Act is neither a proceeding by way of certiorari or appeal. It follows necessarily that the proceeding provided for in said amendment must be an original action or proceeding to be instituted and conducted in the superior court following the action of the division of water rights, created under the Water Commission Act, granting or denying an application for a permit to appropriate water. This being so, we look to the content of said amendment to ascertain the nature of such action or proceeding, and we there find that the procedure of the superior court in such action or proceeding is strictly limited and defined to be, first, that "said court shall review all correspondence, maps, data, and other records on file with the state water commission which pertain to said application and all evidence taken before said commission, and take such additional evidence as it may require or as may be submitted by the parties in interest or the state water commission;" and that having done so, such superior court "shall then render judgment affirming, reversing, or modifying the action of the state water commission." It will be seen at a glance that the practice and procedure to be pursued by the superior court in the particular action or proceeding provided for in said amendment differs from the ordinary practice and procedure of superior courts in original actions or proceedings of which such courts have jurisdiction in at least two essential respects. The first of these relates to the evidence to be presented and considered by such courts in such action or proceeding, and which, according to the provisions of said amendment, is to obviously consist, in a large part at least, of matters which would ordinarily not be admissible as evidence upon the trial of an ordinary action or proceeding instituted in such courts. In providing that said courts shall "review" all such matters as may have been considered by the division of water rights in its determination to grant or deny the application for the permit in question, the amendment assuredly contemplates that all of such matters shall be received in evidence before such court in such action or proceeding, whether receivable in evidence in an ordinary action or proceeding or not. In the foregoing respect it would seem to be obvious that said amendment provides for the particular action or proceeding which it purports to create a practice and procedure radically at variance with that which the general laws provide for the practice and procedure of the superior courts in actions or proceedings of which such courts are given jurisdiction, and that in so doing said amendment runs counter to the provisions of section 25, art. 4, of the state Constitution, which inhibits the Legislature from passing "local or special laws" regulating the practice of courts of justice. The other essential particular in which the practice and procedure provided for in the action or proceeding which it directs the superior court to entertain has reference to the judgment to be rendered by it in such action or proceeding; and in which by the terms of such amendment said court is directed to "render judgment affirming, reversing, or modifying the action of the state water commission." It would seem to be apparent that by such a direction to the superior court to confine its action and determination to the rendition of the particular and limited form of judgment designated by the foregoing provisions of said amendment the Legislature has therein undertaken to provide a different form and content of judgment than that which by the general laws may be rendered and entered in such courts, and in that respect also said Legislature runs counter to the foregoing inhibition of the state Constitution.

The respondents herein, while apparently conceding that the amendment in question does undertake to provide a practice and procedure for the superior courts in the particular action or proceeding to which it relates differing in the foregoing essentials from the general practice and procedure of such courts, attempt to avoid the inhibition of the foregoing provision of the state Constitution through one or both of two contentions. It is first contended that the amendment in question is not a "special" law, and hence is not within the inhibition of the foregoing constitutional provision. It is argued in support of this contention that the amendment in question, since it has application to all coming within the classification of those who are seeking permits for the appropriation of water and that it also has application to the proceedings before the division of water rights, a subordinate division of the department of public works, which in its delegated power to grant or refuse such permits, is in a class by itself; and that thus the amendment in question, since it applies as to its practice and procedure to all those who come within one or both of these classifications, is a general law. We are unable to perceive that this argument supplies an adequate answer to the aforesaid constitutional objection, since there would appear to be no reason why persons seeking the permit or privilege to appropriate water from this particular subordinate branch of the state government should be accorded this special form of access to courts of justice as distinguished from all other persons who seek permits or privileges of many sorts from one or other of the numerous boards or officials similarly functioning as executive agencies of the state and who are similarly empowered by statute to grant or refuse such permits. Neither does there appear to be any sufficient reason why the purely administrative action of the division of water rights in granting or refusing permits to appropriate water should have accorded to it and its orders, or to the persons or associations affected thereby, the special right of a judicial method of review differing essentially from that available in courts of justice to all other similar functions and empowered to issue similar orders in similar applications for similar privileges or permits. In a word, there appears to be no basis for any such classification of either the persons seeking, or of this particular subordinate branch of the state government granting or denying, permits to appropriate water which would suffice to justify the Legislature in providing a special practice and procedure in courts of justice applicable only to those seeking, granting, or denying such permits, but denied, or at least not accorded, to all other persons or institutions having access to such courts. The inhibition of the Constitution against special enactments regulating the practice and procedure in courts of justice is further enforced by the subsequent clause in the same section of the Constitution, which forbids the Legislature to enact local or special laws upon any subject, "where a general law can be made applicable." Const. subd. 33, § 25, art. 4.

We have been pointed to no reason why a general law could not be made applicable to the situation presented by the amendment under review, nor, in fact, why the general laws of the state already in existence are not entirely adequate to deal with the controversies of those who are claiming or seeking to exercise conflicting rights in or to the use of waters of the state. It is, however, insisted by the respondents herein that this court has heretofore given its sanction in certain leading cases to statutes which have assumed to provide for a special practice and procedure in certain classes of newly created actions or proceedings in courts of justice; and in making this contention the respondents strongly rely upon the decision of this court in the case of Title, etc., Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 88 P. 356, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199. It is true that in that case it was conceded that the statute commonly known as the "McEnerney Act" (St. 1906, Extra Sess. p. 78) did provide for a special practice and procedure in the class of cases covered, thereby differing in certain essential respects from those provided for by general laws in other judicial proceedings. This court, however, in its elaborate opinion sustaining said act clearly pointed out that in order so to do it was necessary for it to find that the persons and classes of cases to which said law was to be given application were so far to be distinguished from all other persons or cases by the existence of such substantial, natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinctions as would reasonably indicate the necessity or propriety of special legislation restricted to such classification. The distinction between that case and the case at bar it too obvious to require further elucidation, and this may also be said of the several other cases which the respondents have cited to the same effect.

[5] The respondents, however, further contend that the validity of the procedure embraced in said amendment can be upheld under the provisions of section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution, which contains the following provision:

"The superior courts shall have original jurisdiction * * * of all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for."

The foregoing provision of our present Constitution was brought into it in substantially identical language from our former Constitution as amended in 1862 (article 6, § 8), and was, in fact and substance, a part of our statutory law even prior to that time. The clause giving county courts originally and superior courts latterly original jurisdiction "in all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for" was given early and not infrequent interpretation by the courts. The earlier of these cases were considered and their conclusions restated in the case of Bixler's Appeal, 59 Cal. 550, 555, and the phrase "special cases and proceedings" was therein defined as referring to such "new cases, the creation of statutes, and the proceedings under which are unknown to the general framework of courts of law and equity"—as not including any class of cases for which courts of general jurisdiction had always supplied a remedy." It would thus seem that this provision of our past and present Constitutions can be of no avail to the respondents in the instant matter, for the reason, if for none other, that our law has always supplied a remedy for those who were, or were in danger of being, wronged by the action or nonaction of administrative bodies. This is made clear by our decision in the cases of Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Commission and Department of Public Works v. Superior Court, supra. An even better reason, however, exists why the foregoing provision of the Constitution can have no application to such a proceeding as that which was pending before the division of water rights, and which was sought to be transferred to the superior court by virtue of the provisions of the amendment to the Water Commission Act under review. That reason is that said matter, when instituted before the division of water rights, was a purely administrative as distinguished from a justiciable matter, of which, under the Constitution as well as under our decisions above cited, only the executive branch of our state government could have, and of which the judicial branch thereof could not have, and could not be given by the Legislature, original jurisdiction. Section 1 of article 3 of the Constitution declares:

"The powers of the government of the state of California shall be divided into three separate departments—the legislative, executive, and judicial; and no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the other, except as in this Constitution expressly directed or permitted."

It follows necessarily that the clause in section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution referring to "special cases and proceedings" could only have reference to such matters as were justiciable and could not be given application to any matters which were essentially administrative in character, and over which, therefore, the courts could neither assume nor be given by the Legislature jurisdiction. Such is the matter over which section 1b of the said Water Commission Act vainly attempts to confer jurisdiction upon the superior court and the judges thereof, who are respondents herein.

[6] Finally, the respondents herein contend that the petitioner herein is estopped to seek the aid of this court in this proceeding for the reason that, having invoked the aid and benefit of those other provisions of the Water Commission Act which confer upon the division of water rights the power of granting permits for the appropriation of water, it cannot here be heard to claim that another and entirely severable provision of said act, later incorporated therein and purporting to invest the superior court with jurisdiction to "review the action of said administrative board is void as violative of the Constitution."

We do not think that the principle of estoppel can be so far applied as to prevent a party who may be entitled to the benefits to be obtained by application to an administrative board or officer from asserting in a court of justice that other and severable portions of the law under which he makes such application and receives such benefit, and which impair his full enjoyment thereof, are void because violative of the Constitution; nor do we think the cases cited by the respondents sustain so extreme an application of the principle of estoppel. We find no merit, therefore, in this final contention.

The foregoing considerations render unnecessary a review of any others matters presented by either of the parties or by amicus curiae in this proceeding.

Let the writ of prohibition issue as prayed for.

PER CURIAM. In this proceeding, while the facts are different from those involved in the decision of the matter of *Mojave River Irrigation District v. HUNT v. L. M. FIELD, Inc. (S. F. 11429.)★

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 20, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 15, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Finding on conflicting evidence may not be disturbed on appeal.

Findings based upon substantially conflicting evidence may not be disturbed by an appellate court.

2. Evidence ⇨434(8)—Fraudulent representations inducing party to enter into contract may be established by parol evidence.

Fraudulent representations as to a material matter by which a party is induced to enter into a contract to his damage may be established by parol evidence, notwithstanding written instrument purports to contain entire agreement between parties.

3. Sales ⇨125—Delay in rescinding contract for sale of truck for fraudulent representations, which was result of indulgence extended to defendant, is not available as defense.

That plaintiff, seeking rescission of sale and lease of truck on ground of fraudulent representations, requested defendant, prior to delivery of truck, to make certain necessary repairs, thus technically delaying rescission through indulgence extended to defendant, is not available as defense.

4. Sales ⇨121—Delay of 2½ weeks by purchaser of truck and request for repairs made prior to delivery did not constitute an unreasonable delay nor waiver of right to rescind.

Delay by plaintiff seeking rescission of contract for sale and lease of truck, on ground of false representations as to mechanical condition and as to hauling job asserted to accompany purchase of truck, of approximately 2½ weeks between date of delivery and giving of notice of rescission and request for certain necessary repairs, made prior to delivery, did not constitute unreasonable delay nor an affirmation of contract and waiver of right of rescission.

5. Sales ⇨121—Waiver of right to rescind sale of truck for misrepresentation as to mechanical condition did not waive right to rescind for misrepresentations as to hauling job.

Even though purchaser seeking to rescind contract for sale and lease of truck on ground of misrepresentations as to mechanical condition and hauling job asserted to accompany purchase of truck, waived right to rescind because of representations as to mechanical condition, such waiver did not of itself result in waiver of right to rescind for falsity of representations as to hauling job.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Thomas Hunt against L. M. Field, Inc. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal. 254 P. 594.

Herbert Chamberlin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Walter McGovern and S. T. Hogevoil, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment rescinding and canceling a written contract. On February 28, 1922, and at divers times thereafter, the agents of the appellant company are alleged to have represented to the respondent, among other things, that said company had for sale a certain motortruck and trailer; that said vehicles were in good mechanical condition and available for immediate delivery; that they carried with them a manufacturer's warranty as to their proper construction and freedom from mechanical imperfection; and that the purchaser of said vehicles would be employed, on April 1, 1922, and for approximately eight months each year for a period of five years thereafter, by the La Honda Mill Company to haul at a fixed compensation certain of its lumber to distributing points. In addition to the foregoing, the complaint avers that each and all of said representations were, to the appellant's knowledge and to the knowledge of its agents making the same, false and untrue and made solely for the purpose of defrauding the respondent and thereby inducing him to enter into and execute the written contract; that the respondent, being ignorant of the falsity of said representations, and in reliance thereon, entered into said contract and paid the appellant thereunder the sum of $1,000 in part payment of the purchase price of said motortruck and trailer; that respondent discovered the false character of said representations on April 14, 1922, and gave written notice of rescission to the appellant on April 29, 1922. A second cause of action for money had and received is also appropriately alleged in the complaint, the prayer of which asked that the contract be rescinded and canceled and that respondent be given judgment for the $1,000 theretofore paid thereunder. In its answer, the appellant denied the material allegations of the complaint. The cause went to trial before the court with a jury sitting in an advisory capacity. A verdict was returned in favor of the respondent, whereupon the court made findings declaring all the allegations of the complaint to be true and those of the answer untrue. Upon these findings of fact judgment was entered as prayed for in the respondent's complaint.

In support of a reversal thereof, it is urged by the appellant that the findings as to the making of the false representations by the appellant's agents and respondent's reliance thereon are without support in the record. It is also contended that the respondent by his conduct lost or waived any right to rescind the contract, if such right ever existed, by reason of the delay in exercising the same and because of his asserted election to affirm the contract at a time subsequent to his alleged discovery of the falsity of the representations inducing its execution.

[1, 2] An examination of the record leads us to conclude that there is ample evidence to sustain the findings complained of. It is true that the evidence adduced by the appellant conflicts in many material respects with that offered by the respondent. The rule is well settled, however, that findings based upon substantially conflicting evidence may not be disturbed by an appellate court. Taber v. Besks, 182 Cal. 214, 217, 187 P. 746; Blanc v. Connor, 167 Cal. 719, 722, 141 P. 217; Estate of Moore, 162 Cal. 324, 326, 122 P. 844; Still v. San Francisco & N. W. R. Co., 154 Cal. 559, 564, 98 P. 672, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 322, 129 Am. St. Rep. 177. It is equally well settled that fraudulent representations as to a material matter, by which a party is induced to enter into a contract to his damage, may be established by parol evidence (Newman v. Smith, 77 Cal. 22, 25, 18 P. 791; Barfield v. South Side Irrigation Co., 111 Cal. 118, 121, 43 P. 406; 14 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 199), and this despite the fact that the written instrument purports to contain the entire agreement between the parties (14 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 199, § [c]).

[3-5] It merely remains to be determined, therefore, whether the respondent by unreasonable delay or by conduct asserted to evince an intention to affirm the contract has lost or forfeited his right of rescission. We have no quarrel with the principle advanced by the appellant, to the effect that the exercise of such right may be foreclosed to a party as the result of unreasonable delay in asserting the same or by an affirmation of the contract at a time subsequent to the discovery of the falsity of the representations inducing its execution. The doctrine is well established in this state, and citation of authorities in support thereof is unnecessary. We encounter difficulty, however, in applying said doctrine to the facts presented in the instant case. It appears that the contract sought to be avoided was executed on March 1, 1922. There is evidence to the effect that the appellant's agents had, prior to that time, agreed to give the motortruck a "general overhauling" in order to make certain that it complied with the representations previously made as to its "good mechanical condition." Apparently acting upon this agreement the respondent, at a time subsequent to the execution of the written contract but prior to the delivery of the truck, requested and obtained of the appellant certain necessary repairs of the vehicle. While from this conduct it may be technically said that the respondent did not immediately exercise his right of rescission upon the discovery of the falsity of the representations touching the mechanical condition of the truck, yet it is readily apparent that his delay in giving notice thereof was attributable, not to any inexcusable neglect upon his part, but rather to the indulgence extended to the appellant. A delay in rescinding, which is the result of such indulgence should not be available as a defense to an action for rescission, for the defaulting party by his belated attempt to comply with the fraudulent representations has momentarily lulled his adversary into inactivity. Menefee v. Oxnam, 42 Cal. App. 81, 94, 183 P. 379. Moreover, it appears that delivery of the truck was not made until April 11, 1922. The respondent, within 24 hours thereafter returned the vehicle to the appellant as being unsatisfactory and not as represented. Since that time the vehicle has remained in the appellant's possession. From this it can be seen that only 2½ weeks were permitted to elapse between the date of delivery and the giving of written notice of rescission. It would be impossible, of course, to designate a definite period within which a party must exercise the right to rescind for the facts peculiar to each case are determinative thereof. 4 Cal. Jur. 801. Examination of the authorities discloses that it has been variously held that a delay of from 2 months to 2 years might, under certain circumstances, be excusable. Suhr v. Lauterbach, 164 Cal. 591, 593, 594, 130 P. 2; Davis v. Butler, 154 Cal. 623, 98 P. 1047; Matteson v. Wagoner, 147 Cal. 739, 743, 82 P. 436; Hill v. Wilson, 88 Cal. 92, 97, 25 P. 1105. In the case of Davis v. Butler, supra, it is declared that:

"Whether the defrauded party has acted promptly (Civ. Code, § 1691) is a question to be decided by the trial court upon the facts of the particular case, and there were here no circumstances requiring the court to find that the delay had been unreasonable."

We are not prepared to say, therefore, that the respondent herein, under the circumstances above narrated, unreasonably delayed his election to rescind. Nor are we prepared to declare that respondent's conduct in the premises has been such as to constitute an affirmation of the contract and a waiver of the right of rescission. But, even if this were true as regards the defective mechanical condition of the truck, it would avail the appellant nothing, for a waiver or ratification made with knowledge of only a part of the invalidating circumstances does not preclude a party from seeking a cancellation of the contract on the basis of other circumstances. Willey v. Clements, 146 Cal. 91, 99, 79 P. 850. In other words, we are of the opinion that a waiver of the right to rescind upon the ground of the falsity of the representations touching the mechanical condition of the truck would not, of itself, result in a waiver of the right to rescind for the falsity of the representations as to the hauling job asserted to accompany the purchase of said truck. That these latter representations were material and an inducing element in the execution of the contract is apparent from the record. Their falsity is likewise established therein. The evidence discloses that respondent did not discover the falsity of said representations until a time subsequent to his requested repair of the truck. In this connection he testified in part that at the time the repairs were requested he "firmly believed the job was good and they would have the job, and later on it turned out there was no job." Respondent also testified that the appellant's agents upon several occasions informed him that they would "force" the La Honda Mill Company to furnish the hauling job. From this it is readily apparent that a waiver of the right to rescind for the false representations as to the mechanical condition of the truck would not, in and of itself, constitute a forfeiture of the right to rescind based upon the subsequent discovery of the falsity of the representations touching the hauling job. The case of Scott v. Delta Land & Water Co., 57 Cal. App. 320, 324, 207 P. 389, is authority for the principle that a judgment of rescission may be sustained upon evidence supporting any one material misrepresentation.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

(L. A. 9870.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1927.

1. Railroads ⚡425—Railroad's fence held not to have contributed to injury, where mules were entrapped at point where track ran between precipitous slopes.

Fence maintained by railroad along its right of way did not contribute to injuries to mules which entered right of way from public highway, where mules were on track at time of injury at a point along right of way, where there was rising ground on one side of track and sharp decline on the other and were unable to leave track because of uneven character of ground.

2. Railroads ⚡411(10)—One occupying land not abutting railroad right of way could not recover prior to amendment of statute for injuries to animals (Civ. Code, § 485, prior to amendment by St. 1915, p. 1281).

Owner of mules, occupying land which did not adjoin railroad right of way, could not recover from railroad for death of mules under Civ. Code, § 485, prior to amendment by St. 1915, p. 1281, since such statute applied only to proprietor occupying land abutting right of way.

3. Appeal and error ⚡931(1)—Appellate court will make all possible assumptions to support judgment, in absence of finding.

Appellate court must make all possible assumptions which will uphold trial court's decision, as to matters as to which there was no finding.

4. Railroads ⚡411(10)—Railroad's breach of covenant to fence did not entitle occupant of nonadjoining land to recover for injuries to animals.

Owner of mules, occupying land which did not adjoin railroad right of way, cannot recover from railroad for death of mules, which entered onto right of way from a public highway, because of railroad's breach of covenant with grantor of land to maintain fence, since such covenant was obviously to prevent ingress of stock from adjoining land.

Preston, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by E. L. Brenot against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Adopting opinion of the District Court of Appeal (254 P. 917).

Louis P. Boardman and Philip C. Boardman, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. At the time of granting a hearing of this cause, after a decision thereof by the District Court of Appeal, we entertained some doubt as to whether the facts of this case as found by the court did not bring it within the rule announced in the cases of Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Co. v. Robinson, 6 Colo. App. 432, 40 P. 840; Missouri, K. & G. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Loyell, 110 Tex. 546, 221 S. W. 929; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Dixon, 49 Tex. Civ. App. 506, 109 S. W. 978. These authorities hold in effect that, where a railway company, although under no legal obligation to fence its right of way, elects to do so, it must not by the construction of such fence increase the danger to animals straying thereon. The principle enunciated in these cases is well illustrated in the following excerpt from the opinion in Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Co. v. Robinson, supra:

"There was at that time no law requiring the company to fence its right of way; but, if it was responsible for the maintenance of this inclosure, it was its duty to take proper precautions to prevent cattle from going within it. Left in the condition it was in, it was, as counsel characterizes it, a trap, from which cattle within it, when a train entered it from the west, had little chance of escape. An animal upon the track, frightened by an approaching train, and seeing a fence on either side, would naturally seek an outlet over the bridge, where it would be caught in the open spaces between the ties, and must inevitably be run upon if the train proceeded. In this state an owner of cattle may permit them to run at large; and surely, if a railroad company see fit unnecessarily to fence its right of way, and in doing this makes an inclosure so contrived that there is easy access to it by cattle at one point, and no escape at any other, it cannot be acquitted of blame when an accident occurs as the direct consequence of its act."

[1] After a further consideration of the findings of fact in this case, with the above authorities in view, we are of the opinion that the facts found by the trial court in this action do not bring this case within the rule followed by the courts in the cases just referred to. In the present action the court found:

That appellant's mules "entered upon said right of way and railroad tracks of said defendants through the opening made and left unguarded, as hereinafter set forth, in the fence so previously constructed and maintained by said defendant corporations along the southerly line of said strip of land and right of way, and proceeded along said right of way and along the railroad tracks thereon to a point where the right of way was fenced on both sides and where there was a precipitous rise in the ground on one side of said railroad tracks and a sharp decline on the other, and at which point said mules were struck by the locomotive of a freight train of said defendant corporations, rounding a curve just beyond in said railroad tracks, and two of said mules of plaintiff were thereby killed outright, and three of said mules received such injuries that they died therefrom, and one of said mules thereby received such injuries that it was crippled and greatly incapacitated for work."

There is nothing in this finding to indicate that the fence maintained by respondents along its right of way contributed in any material manner to the injuries sustained by appellant's mules. From anything that appears in the findings, the mules might have been killed in the manner in which they were in the absence of any fence whatever. They were on the track at the time they were struck by respondents' train at a point along the right of way, where "there was a precipitous rise in the ground on one side of said railroad tracks and a sharp decline on the other," and they were struck by said train "rounding a curve just beyond in said railroad tracks." Evidently they were unable to leave the railroad track by reason of the uneven character of the ground in the immediate vicinity of where they were struck by the train, rather than on account of the fence along the railroad right of way. In fact, as we understand the finding, as above quoted, the fence maintained by respondents was not in any way responsible for the mules being on the railroad track at the time when they were struck by respondents' train, nor did the fence in any manner prevent the escape of the mules from the danger they were in when the train approached. Had the right of way been unfenced, appellant's mules could have entered thereon, and they could have received a like injury to that which the court found they sustained after their entry thereon through the opening left in the fence by respondents. The fence, therefore, did not contribute either proximately or remotely to any injury received by the mules. It cannot be said, as it was in the cases above referred to, that the fence of respondents formed a trap or cul-de-sac into which animals straying onto the right of way and becoming frightened by an approaching train might be driven, and being unable to escape therefrom on account of the presence of the fence would be run over if the train proceeded. If the animals of appellant were in a place from which it was difficult or impossible to extricate themselves before they were struck by the approaching train, as we have already seen was the case, their dangerous predicament was not in any way attributable to the fence maintained by respondents. There was nothing except the precipitous character of the ground on either side of the track which prevented the mules from leaving the track on the approach of the train. They could have traveled along the track in front of the moving train, and in that way might have escaped, had not the train come suddenly upon them as it rounded a curve. It was expressly stipulated, however, that there was no negligence on the part of the train crew operating the train, the locomotive of which struck and injured the mules. As we view the case, there was nothing in the findings to indicate that the fence maintained by the respondents along their right of way in any way increased the danger to appellant's mules after they had strayed upon the respondent's right of way.

We are therefore satisfied that under the facts found by the trial court the opinion written by Mr. Presiding Justice Works and concurred in by Mr. Justice Craig and Mr. Justice Thompson, correctly disposes of the legal questions presented herein. It is adopted as the opinion of this court, and is as follows:

"This is an action for damages occasioned by the alleged negligence of the defendants. Plaintiff was the owner of six mules, five of which were killed and one of which was rendered worthless by being run down by one of defendants' trains. Defendants had judgment, and plaintiff appeals.

"Points arising on the appeal are presented upon the findings of the trial court. It was found, among other things, that defendants, at the time the mules were run down, were engaged in operating a railroad over a certain strip of land, which strip had been conveyed by deed to one of defendants as a right of way by two men of the name of Porter; that by the terms of the grant the grantee was required 'to construct and maintain a good and substantial fence on each side of said strip of land and right of way; that said defendant did thereafter, and before the accident to appellant's mules, 'construct and maintain such fence * * * as required by said grant'; that at the time of the accident appellant, 'as successor in interest by leasehold' of one of the Porters, 'was in the possession and useful occupation of certain lands lying close to, but not bordering upon, the said right of way, * * * and which lands belonged to' Porter 'at the date of said conveyance by him * * * of said right of way and constituted a portion of the lands through which said right of way had been granted'; that at the time of the accident to the mules the city of Los Angeles, having acquired the right to construct a certain aqueduct across the right of way of respondents, while 'in the course of the work of constructing said aqueduct * * * by and with the knowledge and consent of' respondents, 'and with their aid and co-operation, * * * did remove a large portion of said fence from the southerly line of said right of way, and did also remove a cattle guard from said right of way, leaving the northerly line * * * entirely fenced, and leaving the southerly line of said right of way and the railroad tracks thereon unfenced and open and without guards * * * and without any protection against the entry of stock thereon; that the aid and co-operation of' respondents 'in constructing said aqueduct consisted particularly of the work of removing said cattle guard and shifting said railroad tracks and maintaining the same * * * for the passage of trains during the course of said work'; that appellant was at the time the owner of the six mules, of the aggregate value of $1,800, 'which were on his said premises,' confined in a corral in which 'they had been impounded for the night by' appellant; that they broke therefrom 'and wandered out and along for a mile or more upon' a certain road 'to the point where said road formerly crossed said right of way and railroad tracks, at which point they had often been driven across said right of way and railroad tracks to a pasture beyond, and entered upon said right of way and railroad tracks * * * through the opening made and left unguarded, * * * in the fence so previously constructed and maintained along the southerly line of said * * * right of way'; that the mules then proceeded 'along the railroad tracks to a point where the right of way was fenced on both sides, and where there was a precipitous rise in the ground on one side of said railroad tracks and a sharp decline on the other'; and that at that point they were struck by the locomotive of a freight train of respondents, 'rounding a curve just beyond in said railroad tracks,' with the result already stated.

[2] "The present action is an old one; the complaint having been filed practically a year before the amendment to section 485 of the Civil Code (St. 1915, p. 1281), which is now in effect. Before the amendment, the section read, in part: 'Railroad corporations must make and maintain a good and sufficient fence on either or both sides of their track and property. In case they do not make and maintain such fence, if their engine or cars shall kill or maim any cattle or other domestic animals upon their line of road which passes through or along the property of the owner thereof, they must pay to the owner of such cattle or other domestic animals a fair market price for the same, unless it occurred through the neglect or fault of the owner of the animal so killed or maimed.' Because of the finding of the trial court that the land of which appellant was lessee lay close to but did not border upon, the right of way of respondents, appellant may not recover under this section as it formerly stood. It has been directly decided (Barbee v. Southern Pac. Co., 9 Cal. App. 457, 99 P. 541) that the relief afforded by the enactment may be resorted to only by a proprietor occupying lands abutting upon a right of way.

"There are many cases in other states holding, under the general law of negligence, that a recovery may be had from a railroad company under such circumstances as existed here. Respondents, after having constructed their fence along both sides of their tracks, it will be observed, removed a portion of the structure on one side, thus providing a means of ingress to the tracks; there being no means of egress therefrom except through the break which they had made. It seems that in this state, before section 485 was amended and under the opinion in the case above cited and other adjudications referred to in it, one whose animals crossed intervening lands on the way from his property to a railroad right of way and were there injured or killed, under the circumstances above stated, might not have recovered for the loss suffered. The remedy allowed by the section seems to have been exclusive.

[3, 4] "Appellant contends, however, that he is entitled to recover because of the breach by respondents of their covenant, in the deed by which they acquired the right of way, to erect and maintain a fence along the strip acquired. Granting for the sake of argument, without deciding, that the covenant was one running with the land, and that there is no legal objection against appellant, as a lessee and not a holder of title, availing himself of the covenant, we think relief must be denied him on other grounds. It is obvious that the covenant was made for the purpose of preventing ingress of live stock to the right of way from the property of the Porters from which it had been segregated or set apart by the grant. The contiguity of location which must have been contemplated by this purpose has been destroyed. This is evident from the finding of the trial court that the leasehold of appellant did not border upon the right of way but lay close to it. There was no finding as to the ownership of the land lying between the leasehold and the right of way, or as to the nature of the use to which it was being put, and as to those matters, under familiar rules of law, we are bound to make all possible assumptions which will uphold the decision of the trial court. Let us assume, then, that the intervening strip had been condemned as a right of way for a public highway which extended along the railroad right of way and across the entire body of land formerly owned by the Porters, thus entirely segregating the latter right of way from the entire tract on that side, and that at the time of the accident to the mules the public road had been built and was being used by the general public. Would not appellant be in the same situation with others of the general public if his mules emerged from the leasehold, got upon the public road, and thence upon the railroad right of way through the breach in the fence? We think he would. The covenant having been made for the purpose of insuring that live stock of the Porters or of their assignees should not emerge from their lands and thus enter, immediately, upon the right of way, we think it cannot be held to protect appellant from a loss occasioned by the entry of his mules upon the railroad right of way from a public highway. No authority is presented to us upon this question, and we know of none."

Judgment affirmed.

PRESTON, J. I dissent.

To my mind the findings are susceptible only of the construction that the mules in question were on the track because of the cul-de-sac, and that they were caught thereon because of their inability to get off the right of way.

The fact that at that particular spot the precipitous grounds may have prevented the mules from beating a hasty retreat into the fence does not alter the fact that they were in a trap.

There is no finding that there was room between the rails and fence for the accommodation of the stock, and, if there was, it would not be controlling. Mules in such a trap cannot be charged with negligence, nor can they be expected to exercise ordinary horse sense. Seeing the fence on either side, the on-coming train "stampeded" them, and they were killed as the result of such conditions. I may be speaking with some judicial knowledge of the habits of the mule.

LEMEN et al. v. EDMUNSON.

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1927.

1. Constitutional law $\S$ 56—Appellate jurisdiction of superior court, being derived from Constitution, could not be extended or restricted by statute (Const. art. 6, $\S$ 5; St. 1919, p. 1256, $\S$ 12).

Since appellate jurisdiction of the superior court is fixed by Const. art. 6, $\S$ 5, it could neither be extended nor restricted by St. 1919, p. 1256, $\S$ 12, authorizing appeals from orders of the real estate commissioner canceling a real estate broker's license.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 31—Real estate commissioner empowered to revoke license is not a "court" from whose order appeal may be taken to the superior court (Const. art. 6, $\S$ 5; St. 1919, p. 1256, $\S$ 12).

Real estate commissioner, who under St. 1919, p. 1256, $\S$ 12, is empowered to revoke licenses of real estate brokers, is not a court within Const. art. 6, $\S$ 5, which fixes appellate jurisdiction of the superior court, and appeals from commissioner's order canceling license to the superior court are a nullity.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Court (of Justice).]

3. Brokers $\S$ 42—Brokers could not recover commissions after cancellation of license where order canceling license was not stayed by attempted appeal to superior court (Const. art. 6, $\S$ 5; St. 1919, p. 1256, $\S$ 12).

Where the real estate commissioner, under St. 1919, p. 1256, $\S$ 12, revoked licenses of real estate brokers, there was no stay of the order by appeal to the superior court, since the commissioner was not a court from whose order appeal could be taken under Const. art. 6, $\S$ 5, to the superior court, and hence brokers could not recover commission for sale of lands after revocation of license and while attempted appeal was pending.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action by G. V. Lemen and another against J. A. Edmundson. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

George E. Clifford, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Dailey S. Stafford and Frank G. Falloon, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the defendant in an action brought by plaintiffs for a commission alleged to have been earned by them in negotiating a sale of real property for the defendant. The amended complaint alleged that plaintiffs were duly licensed real estate brokers in the county of Los Angeles; that on October 26, 1923, they entered into a contract with the defendant wherein and whereby the defendant agreed to pay them a commission in the event of the sale by them of certain of the defendant's property described in the contract; that on November 3, 1923, the plaintiffs effected the sale for which the commission is claimed and that the commission has not been paid. In his answer, the defendant, among other things, denied that plaintiffs were duly licensed real estate brokers, and alleged affirmatively that plaintiffs' licenses had been revoked by the real estate commissioner. At the trial, by an agreed stipulation of facts, it appeared that plaintiffs had been duly licensed real estate brokers; that, prior to the making of the contract which is the subject of the present controversy, the plaintiffs' licenses had been revoked by the real estate commissioner; that, subsequently and within the time provided by section 12, c. 605, Statutes of 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 1252), and pursuant to the provisions of that section, plaintiffs appealed to the superior court in and for Los Angeles county from the order of revocation; that during the pendency of the appeal the contract sued on was made, and the negotiations and sale of real property, if any were entered into and consummated, were completed in accordance with the terms of the contract; and that the appeal was subsequently dismissed by the superior court on the ground that it had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. On this stipulation of facts, the preliminary issue as to whether plaintiffs were duly licensed real estate brokers at the time of the contract and alleged sale was submitted to the trial court; and, from its judgment thereupon made and entered in favor of defendant, the plaintiffs have brought this appeal.

[1] Appellants contend that, inasmuch as section 12 of the statute referred to provides for an appeal from the order of the commissioner revoking a license and also provides for a stay of the order pending the appeal, their licenses remained unrevoked until the appeal was dismissed by the superior court. So far as material here, that section provides:

"* * * The decision of the said commissioner in suspending or revoking any license under this act shall be subject to review in accordance with the provisions of chapter one of title one of part three of the Code of Civil Procedure; and any party aggrieved by such decision of the commissioner may within ten days from the date of said decision appeal therefrom to the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county in which the person affected by such decision resides or has his place of business. * * *

"The decision of the commissioner shall not take effect until ten days after its date, and if notice of appeal and demand for transcript are served upon the commissioner in accordance with the provisions of this section, then such stay shall remain in full force and effect until decision upon appeal by said superior court. * * *

The appellants' contention is without support in the authorities. The Constitution of the state (article 6, § 5) fixes the appellate jurisdiction of the superior court. Such jurisdiction comes from the Constitution and not from the statute, and the Legislature can neither extend nor restrict it. Millsap v. Alderson, 63 Cal. App. 518, at page 532, 219 P. 469, 475, citing Chinn v. Superior Court of San Joaquin County, 156 Cal. 478, 105 P. 580. The language of the concurring opinion of Paterson, J., in the case of Tyler v. Presley, 72 Cal. 290, at page 293, 13 P. 856, 858, relied upon by the appellants, has no bearing on this case, for the reason that the order sought to be stayed in that case was made by the Supreme Court in proceedings to disbar an attorney, and the question of a stay arose on an application for a writ of mandate. The case of People v. Center, 54 Cal. 236, also relied upon by appellants, is not in point, because there the appeal was from the superior court to the Supreme Court.

[2, 3] Appellants urge further that, even if the statute providing for an appeal to the superior court be unconstitutional, the proceedings in the superior court were in effect a trial de novo, because evidence may be received by the court, and cites U. S. v. Ritchie, 17 How. 525, 15 L. Ed. 236. The language of said section 12, limiting the action of the superior court to a consideration and determination of the question only whether there has been an abuse of discretion on the part of the commissioner in making his orders, is clearly an attempt to give to the superior court appellate jurisdiction over the orders of the real estate commissioner. "While it is true that under the constitutional provision conferring appellate jurisdiction upon the superior courts the matters to which that jurisdiction on appeal shall pertain—to what extent and in what manner the proceedings or action of justices' or inferior courts may be reviewed—is not provided for, but is left solely to the determination of the Legislature, still an express limitation is imposed as to the character of tribunals whose proceedings may be reviewed in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, and it can be exercised in case of appeals from 'justices' or 'inferior courts' only. All the authority that is given to the Legislature, under the constitutional provision last referred to, is to provide the method and extent to which an appeal from these courts may be taken. It has no power to enlarge the tribunals from which it may be taken, because the constitutional provision has expressly declared of what those shall consist. The appeal to the superior court, when provided for by the Legislature, can only be from a court—either a justice or inferior court—and the right of appeal cannot be given from any other tribunal." Chinn v. Superior Court, supra. The real estate commissioner is not such a court. Brecheen v. Riley, 187 Cal. 121, 125, 200 P. 1042. The appeal being a nullity, there was no stay of the order by the purported appeal. See 2 Cal. Jur. p. 424, and cases cited.

Appellant calls attention to the case of Hale & Norcross Silver Mining Co. v. Fox, 122 Cal. 56, 54 P. 270, and contends that, because the superior court in the present case was forced to entertain the appeal on the question of jurisdiction, the order of revocation was stayed. In the Hale & Norcross Case, however, the appeal was from the superior court, a tribunal from which an appeal would lie in proper cases, and a writ of supersedeas was issued pending a determination of the appealability of the order appealed from. The case is not in point.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. HUGHES et al.
(L. A. 9029, 9415.)★

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 19, 1928.

1. Eminent domain ⇨134—Where acreage being condemned is reasonably adapted to subdivision, that fact should be considered in fixing value.

Where acreage being condemned by city under Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373), is reasonably adapted to purposes of subdivision, that fact should be taken into consideration in fixing value of property.

2. Eminent domain ⇨238(5)—Record held to show that both witnesses and trial court considered subdivision possibilities in fixing value of land being condemned.

Record on appeal held to show that both condemnor's witnesses and trial court took subdivision possibilities into consideration in fixing value of land being condemned by city under Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373).

3. Eminent domain ⇨134—Value of land being condemned was value as it stood, plus increased value due to suitability for subdivision, but value was not to be fixed by what could be obtained after subdivision.

Market value of tract of land being condemned by city under Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act. 6373), was value as it stood when its value was to be determined plus increased value due to suitability for subdivision into city lots, but value was not to be fixed by what could be obtained for lots after subdivision actually took place.

4. Eminent domain ⇨262(3)—Supreme Court assumes, in support of judgment, that trial court adopted correct theory in valuing land being condemned.

Supreme Court was bound to assume, in support of judgment, that trial court properly considered any increased value of land due to suitability for subdivision into city lots, in determining its value in condemnation proceedings under Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act. 6373).

5. Evidence ⇨142(1)—Testimony as to specific sales of land in neighborhood of that being condemned to establish value held inadmissible.

Admitting testimony of condemnor's witness on direct examination as to specific sales of land in neighborhood of that being condemned under Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373), in order to determine value, held error.

6. Eminent domain ⇨262(5)—Error in admitting testimony in behalf of condemnor held harmless, where there was much proper testimony of similar import and award was increased in reliance thereon, in part at least.

Error in admitting testimony in behalf of city condemning land under Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373), as to specific sales of land in neighborhood of that being condemned to establish value, held harmless, where there was much proper testimony as to specific sales on behalf of both sides to proceeding and award of damages was increased in reliance on such evidence in part at least.

7. Eminent domain ⇨150—Award in condemnation proceeding of $1,000 for improvement, which exceeded valuation in evidence by $120, held not excessive, where court personally viewed premises.

Award, in condemnation proceedings under Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373), of $1,000 for improvements by nursery company on 2½-acre tract, which exceeded valuation fixed by evidence by $120, held not excessive, where court personally viewed premises and improvements.

8. Property ⇨4—Statutes defining real property held merely declaratory of common law (Civ. Code, §§ 657, 658, 660).

Civ. Code, §§ 657, 658, 660, defining real property as including a thing attached to land by roots, as trees, vines, or shrubs, held merely declaratory of common law.

9. Eminent domain ⇨82—Nursery stock of lessee held interest in land for which condemnor was bound to pay, notwithstanding that lease authorized removal of nursery stock (Park and Playground Act of 1909; Civ. Code, §§ 657, 658, 660, 1013).

Nursery plants and trees growing in ground were interest in land in nature of improvement for which city condemning land under Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373) was bound to pay compensation, notwithstanding that lease from owner to lessee provided that nursery stock might be planted and grown by lessee for resale under Civ. Code, §§ 657, 658, 660, 1013.

10. Eminent domain ⇨155—Lessee rather than fee owner held entitled to award for nursery stock, in condemnation proceedings, where lease authorized removal of nursery stock by lessee (Park and Playground Act of 1909; Civ. Code, §§ 657, 658, 660, 1013).

Lessee rather than fee owner of land held entitled to award for nursery plants and trees growing in ground, in condemnation proceeding instituted under Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373), where lease from owner to lessee provided that nursery stock might be planted and grown for resale, under Civ. Code, §§ 657, 658, 660, 1013.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Action in eminent domain by the City of Los Angeles against Fred T. Hughes, Peder C. Pedersen, and others. From a judgment awarding damages, Peder C. Pedersen and others appeal. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in City of Los Angeles v. Pedersen, 255 P. 889.

Fred Mansur and L. B. Stanton, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and E. J. Delorey and Leslie K. Floyd, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This proceeding in eminent domain was instituted in August, 1924, by the city of Los Angeles, under the Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6373). Exceptions to the report of the referees were filed by defendants Peder C. Pedersen and Catherine Pedersen, owners of the land in question, and by defendants T. Ishikata and S. Inouye, doing business under the firm name and style of Hoover Nursery Company, who were the lessees. After a hearing on the exceptions before the court, judgment was rendered in favor of Peder C. Pedersen and Catherine Pedersen as owners in the sum of $19,816, subject to a judgment in favor of the Hoover Nursery Company for $2,945, as the value of the leasehold interest, and $1,000 for improvements constructed on the land by the nursery company, and subject also to the payment of a $3,000 mortgage on the property. The Pedersens and the Hoover Nursery Company have appealed separately, and two records are presented. Both appeals may properly be disposed of in one opinion.

Since the appeal of the Pedersens was taken, they have been paid the awards made by the court, and have filed satisfactions of judgment, expressly reserving, however, their claim for greater compensation.

On behalf of the appellants Pedersen, the owners, it is urged as grounds for reversal that the trial court adopted an erroneous rule in estimating the amount of compensation for the land; that the trial court committed error in admitting on direct examination evidence of the selling prices of land in the neighborhood; that the finding that the actual value of the improvements belonging to Hoover Nursery Company was $1,000 is contrary to the evidence; and that the errors committed on the trial were prejudicial to the right of these appellants to an award of just compensation. The main ground of reversal urged by appellant Hoover Nursery Company is that the finding of the trial court that the nursery stock, planted and growing in the ground, is personal property for which the nursery company is not entitled to compensation, is contrary to the law and the evidence, and that the court should have found the value thereof and awarded compensation therefor.

Appellants Pedersen owned lot 36 of Sunnyside tract in the city of Los Angeles, which was a part of the property sought to be condemned. This lot comprised $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land, which was leased to the Hoover Nursery Company and planted by it to nursery stock, consisting of trees, shrubs, and other plants. It was in evidence that other tracts of land in the neighborhood had been subdivided and sold as building lots for home sites. Counsel for these appellants sets forth in his brief the rules governing the estimation of compensation to be awarded in proceedings in eminent domain, including the definition of "market value." These rules are too well known to require repetition here or to warrant the citation of the many cases where in said rules have been enunciated or recognized. A comprehensive statement thereof, and the citation of the authorities supporting the same, are found in 10 Cal. Jur., at page 338 et seq.

[1, 2] It is of course well understood that, when acreage is reasonably adaptable to purposes of subdivision, this fact should be taken into consideration in fixing the value of the property to be taken. In other words, the value of the property at the time of the taking is to be determined, not only by the uses to which it is then put, but also by the uses of which it is reasonably susceptible. These rules are not challenged but, on the contrary, are recognized and relied upon by the respondent. These appellants assert that all of their witnesses adopted as a basis for their estimates the value of the land for subdivision and building purposes. The record supports the assertion, but the further claim of these appellants that the witnesses for the respondent did not adopt the same basis of valuation and that the court did not take into consideration the value of the land for the purpose of subdivision and sale as city lots is not supported by the record. The witness McGarry, who had been one of the referees, testified on behalf of respondent that in arriving at his estimate of the market value of the land he considered its value as a subdivision possibility, but not as an actuality. The witness Smith, the other of the respondent's witnesses who had served as a referee, when asked to give his estimate of the value of the land stated: "We figured this out on a basis for a subdivider to take this piece of property as it was." A number of times during the trial the court asked questions as to whether the subdivision possibilities had been taken into consideration by the witness in arriving at his estimate of the market value, and was assured that this had been done. The court also personally viewed the land, and had an opportunity to see its character as well as the development of the surrounding property.

[3, 4] If the argument of counsel for these appellants is intended to go one step further, and it is sought to establish that the value of the land must be estimated, not only on a basis of a subdivision possibility, but also on the basis of what the owners would be able to obtain for the lots after subdivision had actually taken place (and the argument is open to that interpretation), we are unable to agree, nor do the cases relied upon by these appellants support this contention. For example the test announced in Montana

Ry. Co. v. Warren, 6 Mont. 275, 284, 12 P. 641, 646, is that:

"The owner has a right to obtain the market value of the land, based upon its availability for the most valuable purposes for which it can be used, whether or not he so used it."

The same test is stated variously in other cases cited as follows:

"Its market value depends not wholly upon the use to which the owner is putting it, but upon the use or uses for which it is available at the time it was taken." Hooker v. Railroad Co., 62 Vt. 47, 49, 19 A. 775.

"* * * If the present value of the land taken was enhanced by reason of the adaptability thereof to some use to which they might be put in the future—as, for example, if land used only for farming purposes was so situated that it might be platted into city lots, and if its present value was thereby increased—such increased value was the proper basis for the assessment. We think this is a correct rule." Washburn v. Railroad Co., 59 Wis. 364, 378, 18 N. W. 328, 334.

"The real question was what the property was actually worth for any and all purposes for which it might be used." South Park Commissioners v. Dunlevy, 91 Ill. 49, 57.

"It appeared, on the cross-examination of the witnesses, that, in forming their estimate of the market value of the land, they had considered its adaptability for suburban residences. If such fact affected its market value at the time in question, it would properly enter into the consideration of the witnesses, and the jury also, in estimating such value." Sherman v. Railway Co., 30 Minn. 227, 229, 15 N. W. 239.

The Supreme Court of Kansas, in Chicago, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Davidson, 49 Kan. 589, 31 P. 131, reviewed the cases mentioned hereinabove, and on the authority of those cases, among others, affirmed a judgment of compensation entered on a verdict, approving the following instruction:

"In estimating the market value of the land, both before and after the condemnation, it will not be proper for you to make the estimate on what the land would have been worth had the land at that time, or prior thereto, been laid off or platted into lots and blocks as an addition to the city of Wellington, but you must consider the land as it was at that time, and with reference to the use that was then being made of the same, and all other uses that could reasonably be supposed from the evidence could be made of it thereafter, whether for farming purposes or for platting and laying the same off into lots and blocks as an addition to the city of Wellington."

Under all of the authorities, both in this state and elsewhere, the true basis for computing the market value of land sought to be condemned, in view of the evidence of its suitability for subdivision purposes, is its value as it stood on the date when, under the law, its value was to be determined, plus any increased value which it may have had in the market by reason of its suitability for subdivision into city lots. It may fairly be said, therefore, that the witnesses for both parties in this case were guided by the proper rules in the valuation of the land. And it must be assumed in support of the judgment that the court adopted the same theory in arriving at its conclusions. The opinion evidence as to values ranged from $13,958, which was the amount fixed by the board of referees, to $31,000. The fact that after the hearing on the exceptions and a view of the premises the court added $5,858, to the award of the referees indicates that the court was impressed by the showing of the availability of the property for subdivision purposes.

[5, 6] The ruling challenged by the appellants Pedersen as prejudicially erroneous was made by the court in the course of the direct examination of the respondent's witness Smith, who was asked by respondent's counsel: "Q. Now you have a list of any sales made there, that your figures are based on?" Objection was made to this evidence on direct examination of any specific sales, but the court stated that Mr. Smith "could tell what he knows about sales out there." This the witness proceeded to do. The ruling was erroneous, and the objection should have been sustained. C. P. R. R. v. Pearson, 35 Cal. 247, 262; Reclamation District No. 730 v. Inglin, 31 Cal. App. 495, 160 P. 1098; 10 Cal. Jur. p. 360. But we are not convinced that the ruling was prejudicial. Much testimony was properly given by witnesses for both sides as to specific sales in that vicinity, and the record indicates that the trial court increased the award in reliance, in part at least, on such evidence.

[7] The evidence in court as to the value of the improvements belonging to Hoover Nursery Company was only $120 less than the amount fixed by the judgment on this item. As the court personally viewed the premises, including the improvements, we cannot say that the award thereon was excessive.

[8-10] The contention of Hoover Nursery Company that the nursery plants and trees growing in the ground were, on the record presented, a part of the realty would seem to be well taken. Respondent contends, however, that, because the lease between the parties provided that nursery stock might be planted and grown by the nursery company for resale by it, such trees and plants acquired the character of personal property exclusively. The Civil Code provides:

"Sec. 657. Property is either: 1. Real or immovable; or, 2. personal or movable."

"Sec. 658. Real or immovable property consists of: 1. Land; 2. that which is affixed to land. * * *"

"Sec. 660. A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs. * * *"

These sections are merely declaratory of the common law. Growing trees, shrubs, and other plants were generally considered a part of the realty to which they were attached by their roots, and continued to be such until they were severed, when they became personal property. The occasion to declare trees, plants, crops, etc., to be personal property while they were attached to the land by their roots, was merely to apply a fiction of law in order to arrive at a just determination in particular cases. Trees and plants have thus been termed personal property in cases, such as cited by the respondent herein, where there has been an agreement between the parties to the effect that, though such trees, etc., be planted by one other than the owner, they shall nevertheless not become the property of the owner of the land. The Civil Code, § 1013, provides that, when a person affixes his property to the land of another, without an agreement permitting him to remove it, the thing affixed belongs to the owner of the land. It has often been held that property affixed to land which, as between the parties shall be deemed to be personal property, still retains its natural character of realty as to third persons. McNally v. Connolly, 70 Cal. 3, 11 P. 320; San Francisco Breweries v. Schurtz, 104 Cal. 420, 38 P. 92; Oakland Bank of Savings v. California Pressed Brick Co., 183 Cal. 295, 191 P. 524. The Hoover Nursery Company therefore had an additional interest in the real property sought to be condemned to the extent that it was the owner of the trees and shrubs planted and growing in the ground constituting an interest in the land in the nature of an improvement, and it was entitled to be compensated for this interest on the taking of the real property by the city. Under the evidence, the compensation for this interest in the land should go to the lessee, the Hoover Nursery Company, and not to the owners of the fee.

In view of the foregoing determinations, it is deemed unnecessary to discuss other points raised by the parties to these appeals.

The judgment as to the appellants Peder C. Pedersen and Catherine Pedersen is affirmed. The judgment as to the appellants T. Ishikata and S. Inouye, doing business under the firm name and style of Hoover Nursery Company, is reversed.

SCHROEDER v. BAUMGARTEKER.
(L. A. 8932.)★

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 12, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1002—Jury's finding on conflicting evidence that boys riding bicycle, struck by truck, were not contributorily negligent, held conclusive on appeal.

In action to recover damages for personal injuries, jury's finding on conflicting evidence that plaintiff and companion riding bicycle, struck by trailer on defendant's truck, were not guilty of contributory negligence, held conclusive on appeal.

2. Municipal corporations ⇐706(7)—Contributory negligence of child struck by automobile is usually for jury.

Whether or not children of 11 or 13 years of age who were struck by automobile were guilty of contributory negligence is usually a question of fact for the jury.

3. Appeal and error ⇐997(1)—Trial court's ruling that whether child struck by automobile trailer was contributorily negligent was for jury held conclusive on appeal.

In action for damages for personal injuries, where trial court ruled that whether child struck by trailer on truck was guilty of contributory negligence was a question of fact for the jury, ruling held conclusive on appeal.

4. Trial ⇐285—Instructions are always to be considered in view of circumstances of the particular case.

Instructions in all cases are to be measured as to their appropriateness and correctness by the particular facts and circumstances of the case in which they are given.

5. Trial ⇐295(6)—Where instructions fairly stated negligence law applicable, where trailer on truck struck boys on bicycle, incompleteness of certain instructions held harmless.

In action to recover damages for personal injuries resulting from plaintiff being struck by trailer on truck while riding bicycle with another boy, where instructions as a whole fairly stated the applicable law of negligence, incompleteness of particular instructions held harmless.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by Almund Schroeder, a minor, by G. W. Schroeder, guardian ad litem, against Frank Baumgarteker. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. T. Morrow and Henry L. Knoop, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bertrand J. Wellman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $4,000, rendered upon the verdict of a jury in an action to recover damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff, a boy of the age of 11 years, while engaged in riding a bicycle operated by his brother, who was of the age of 13 years at the time of the accident in question, which accident arose out of the fact that these two boys were struck by a trailer attached to a truck which was being driven by an employee of the defendant, and which truck and trailer approached the two boys from behind. The immediate cause of the accident apparently was the fact that the street along its course at and in the vicinity of the point of the collision was rough through the presence of ruts caused by vehicular traffic, and that the trailer attached to said truck, in passing over and along these ruts, swayed from side to side so far as to strike the two boys while they were riding along said street on the proper side thereof, and in such a position that they would have been safe but for the swaying of the trailer as the truck approached and was passing them from behind.

[1-3] The appellant devotes a large portion of his brief upon appeal to a discussion of the evidence in the case, and particularly to that portion thereof upon which he predicates an argument that the injured plaintiff and his brother, who was killed in the collision, were each guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. It is sufficient, in response to the appellant's contention in that regard, to say that the evidence with respect to the position and conduct of the two boys was in substantial conflict, and hence that the finding of the jury in that respect ought not to be disturbed upon appeal. But beyond this, and in response to the argument that the plaintiff, upon the state of the evidence, as the appellant views it, should be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, the current of authority is against that contention, and is strongly in favor of the more humane view that the question as to whether or not children of the ages of these two boys are to be held guilty of contributory negligence so as to prevent their recovery in an action of this character is, in most cases, a question of fact for the jury, and that in cases wherein the trial court, with the evidence and witnesses before it, has ruled that the question as to whether or not the injured child was guilty of contributory negligence was a question of fact for the jury, its ruling in that regard will not be disturbed upon appeal. Mayne v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., 179 Cal. 173, 175 P. 690.

[4, 5] The next contention of the appellant is that the trial court was in error in giving certain instructions to the jury. The two instructions which he quotes as subject to his objection are numbered XI and XIV, which read as follows:

"XI. Pedestrians and bicycle riders have the same right as truck and automobile drivers to the use of the street, and bicycle riders are chargeable only with such ordinary and reasonable care for their own safety as a prudent person of like age, intelligence, and experience would exercise under the same or similar circumstan-es, and the bicycle rider is not bound to assume that the drivers of trucks and trailers or automobiles will act otherwise than in a careful and prudent manner, and they have the right to assume that such drivers will drive at a speed not greater than reasonable and proper, having due regard for the traffic and the width and condition of the street; and you are instructed that it is unlawful to drive at any speed, no matter how slow, that endangers life, limb, or property of any person upon the street."

"XIV. If one is riding a bicycle in the street, he is not required by law to watch or look back for vehicles approaching from behind to avoid collision, or being run down from behind, but he has the right to assume that the vehicle approaching from the rear will not run him down, and that it will be driven in a careful and prudent manner, with due regard for the width and condition of the street, and that it will be so driven as not to endanger the life or limb of the bicycle rider."

The appellant cites as sustaining his contention that these instructions are erroneous the case of Starck v. Pacific Railway Co., 172 Cal. 277, 156 P. 51, L. R. A. 1916E, 58. An examination of this case and also of the other cases which the appellant relies upon as supporting his said contention will show that the circumstances in each of the cases, while such as to justify the ruling of the court that the instructions therein given were to be criticized, arose out of facts and circumstances entirely different from those presented in the case at bar. Instructions in all cases are to be measured as to their appropriateness and correctness by the particular facts and circumstances of the case in which they are given. Applying this rule to the particular facts and circumstances under which the foregoing instructions were given, we are satisfied that they are not subject to the criticism which the appellant directs against them; and while it may be true that they may not contain all the elements which should enter into instructions of this character, when they are examined in the light of the entire body of instructions which were given by the court to the jury, and which quite fully and fairly seem to state the law of negligence applicable to cases of this character, are not to be held so far erroneous or incomplete as to justify a reversal of the case.

As to the appellant's objection to the rulings of the court on the admission of evidence, we find upon a careful examination of the record that they are without substantial merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

TIFFANY & CO. v. SPRECKELS et al.
(S. F. 11791.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1927.

1. Contracts ⇨95(3)—Contract to which husband's assent is procured by threats against wife is unenforceable.

Rule that contract, procured by wrongful use of fear and threats, is illegal and voidable, applies when subject of threat is wife of person whose assent to an agreement is secured as a result of such threats.

2. Contracts ⇨99(3)—Finding that husband's agreement to pay for necklace purchased by wife was obtained by threats of criminal prosecution against wife, rendering contract void, held proper under evidence.

Evidence held to sustain finding that written agreement of husband to pay for necklace purchased by estranged wife was void and unenforceable because of threats against wife of criminal prosecution, and because made to prevent such prosecution, where husband's presence was obtained by cablegram stating wife from whom necklace had been stolen or embezzled was threatened with prosecution for fraud, unless satisfactory arrangements were made.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Appellate court may not disturb findings based on sufficient and practically uncontradicted evidence.

Where evidence is sufficient to support findings, and is practically uncontradicted, appellate court has no authority to disturb trial court's findings.

4. Contracts ⇨95(5)—Agreements of husband to pay for necklace purchased by wife, which were induced by communication threatening criminal prosecution against wife, held unenforceable, whether oral or written.

Where husband living apart from wife, was induced to go to England to make arrangement for payment of necklace purchased by wife because of cablegram sent him threatening criminal prosecution against her, agreements to pay for necklace stolen or embezzled from wife, whether agreements were oral or written, were unenforceable as against husband's estate.

5. Contracts ⇨188—Wife was not bound by agreement between her husband and her creditor, signed by husband alone, by which she was to pay debt and renounce child to husband in case of default.

Agreement between husband and wife's creditor, signed by husband only, providing for wife's payment of debt and payment by husband, in event of her default, in which case wife should renounce custody of child, was of no binding effect on wife.

6. Contracts ⇨71(3)—Creditor's agreement for any period to refrain from suit against wife is valid consideration for husband's agreement to pay wife's debt.

Agreement on part of husband to pay debt of wife is supported by valid consideration, if wife's creditor agrees for a period of time, no matter how brief, not to sue on its claim against wife.

7. Contracts ⇨71(3)—Actual forbearance to sue without any agreement does not constitute consideration.

Fact that creditor does in fact forbear to sue does not constitute consideration for another's agreement to pay, where there was no agreement on the part of the creditor to forbear suit.

8. Contracts ⇨71(3)—Written and oral agreements of husband living apart from wife to pay for necklace purchased by her, without promise of creditor to forbear suit, held without consideration, notwithstanding creditor's actual forbearance.

Written and oral agreements of husband living apart from wife to pay for necklace purchased by her, in event of her default in payment, held void for want of consideration, where there was no agreement on creditor's part to forbear suit against wife, notwithstanding creditor actually refrained from instituting legal proceedings.

9. Parent and child ⇨2(1)—Husband's agreement to pay wife's debt in consideration for wife's renunciation of child in event of her default held not to render contract void.

Agreement of husband living apart from wife to pay for necklace purchased by her in case of her default, in consideration of wife's agreement to renounce claim to custody of child if she defaulted, held not to render contract void, since parents may contract respecting custody of children.

10. Parent and child ⇨2(1)—Parents may contract with each other regarding custody of children, subject to court's supervision of child's welfare.

Parents have a legal right to contract with each other as to the custody and control of their offspring, subject to the control of the court in proceedings wherein the welfare of the child is involved.

11. Parent and child ⇨2(1)—Promise by one parent that other may have child's custody is sufficient consideration to support agreement of other parent.

As between parents, promise by one parent that the other may have the custody and control of their child is sufficient consideration to support an agreement on the part of the parent in whose favor the promise is made.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by Tiffany & Co. against John D. Spreckels, Sr., and Walter D. K. Gibson, as executors of the last will and testament of John D. Spreckels, Jr., deceased. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Knight, Boland & Christin, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, Dunne, Dunne & Cook and Dunne, Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. Action brought to recover upon a claim against the estate of John D. Spreckels, Jr., deceased. The claim was based upon an agreement whereby, it is contended, the deceased guaranteed the payment to appellant of the sum of 16,500 pounds, lawful money of the kingdom of Great Britain (equal to $80,350 in lawful money of the United States), being the cost price of a pearl necklace purchased of appellant by the wife of the deceased. It is undisputed that Mrs. Spreckels, on or about the 3d day of June, 1920, purchased from Tiffany & Co., at London, England, a pearl necklace, and agreed to pay therefor the sum of 16,500 pounds. The necklace was delivered to Mrs. Spreckels, and she signed a receipt therefor. Shortly thereafter representatives of Tiffany & Co. became apprehensive regarding the transaction, and requested Mrs. Spreckels to return the necklace until she could furnish satisfactory references for credit. Mrs. Spreckels in the meantime had delivered the necklace to a Mr. Barrett, who had sold it, appropriated the proceeds, and absconded. She was therefore unable to return the necklace to Tiffany & Co., nor was she able to pay for the same. At the time of the purchase of the necklace Mrs. Spreckels was residing in London, and had with her Geraldine, age four years, the daughter of herself and her husband, John D. Spreckels, Jr. Mr. Spreckels was residing in California. They had not been actually divorced, although they were then living separate and apart, and on March 17th of the following year an interlocutory decree of divorce between them was entered by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. On learning that Mrs. Spreckels was unable to return the necklace, Tiffany & Co. threatened to have her and Barrett prosecuted for conspiracy to defraud. As a result of conferences held immediately after Tiffany & Co. learned that Mrs. Spreckels was unable to return the necklace, in which Mrs. Spreckels and her solicitors met representatives of Tiffany & Co. and its solicitors, two cablegrams were dispatched to Mr. Spreckels in California. One of these cablegrams was signed by Mrs. Spreckels and the other by a Mr. Price, the managing clerk of Crosse & Sons, her solicitors. While these cablegrams were signed by the parties as just stated, they were framed in a large measure by the solicitors of Tiffany & Co., present at the conference. These cablegrams were sent June 18, 1920, and the one signed by Mr. Price was as follows:

"Your wife is implicated in connection with expensive jewelry alleged to have been obtained from Tiffanys by conspiracy and stolen from her. She is threatened with prosecution unless satisfactory arrangements are made and desires your presence or help for her protection, as she states she is penniless. Please cable."

The following is a copy of the cablegram sent by Mrs. Spreckels:

"To save me from criminal prosecution must have money or guarantee immediately. Have been drawn into this by a scoundrel who has bolted with the pearls. Consequences terrifying for me and disastrous to the family. For everyone's sake, cable or arrange with Tiffany, New York. Position desperate, keep silent to mother and for God's sake come over to me and Geraldine and help us to obtain redress from thief."

Spreckels received these cablegrams in California and, after replying to them, left for London immediately, arriving there about the 12th day of August, 1920. He immediately went into conference with Mrs. Spreckels and her solicitors and with representatives of Tiffany & Co. and their solicitors. He asked for, and was given, "the history of the whole matter concerning the pearl necklace." They discussed the chances of recovering the necklace or its value from Barrett, but finally concluded that he was so hopelessly involved that he could do nothing towards returning the pearls or their value, even if they were able to ascertain his whereabouts. A warrant for his arrest was issued, but it does not appear that it was ever served, probably for the reason that the officers were unable to apprehend him. In these conferences and interviews with the representatives and solicitors of Tiffany & Co., after his arrival in London, Spreckels made certain statements and admissions upon which appellant relies, in addition to the writing signed by him and later referred to, in support of its claim for a judgment in its favor in this action. A Mr. Feaveyear, one of the London managers of Tiffany & Co., testified that:

"J. D. Spreckels, Jr., then stated he proposed to go to Venice to see Mrs. Barrett, and to inform her that the necklace must either be restored to my firm or he would apply for a warrant for her husband's arrest, and, should the money or the jewelry not be forthcoming, he would then see what further steps could be taken to discharge the indebtedness to my firm."

Mr. Feaveyear also testified that on another occasion Mr. Spreckels "stated he was going to take his wife back to America, and, as she had a wonderful voice, and was a very clever dancer, she was to be trained for the stage and he would see she paid my firm's account off by installments." Mr. Fox, another representative of Tiffany & Co., testified:

"On the 15th September, Mr. Spreckels called at 221 Regent street and stated he wished to have an agreement prepared between his wife and himself for payment of the debt to us, and also as to the custody of their child, and he desired our solicitors to draw up this agreement."

The result of this interview was that Mr. Fox and Mr. Spreckels went to the office of Adam Burn & Son, solicitors, where there was prepared by said solicitors a certain writing in duplicate, one copy of which was signed by Spreckels and was left with Adam Burn & Son, and the other was retained by Mr. Spreckels. Neither copy was signed by Mrs. Spreckels. This writing was as follows:

"Memorandum of agreement made this twentieth day of September, one thousand nine hundred and twenty, between John D. Spreckels, Junior, of San Francisco, in the United States of America (temporarily residing in London), of the one part, and Syida Spreckels, his wife of the other part. Whereas the said Syida Spreckels on or about the third day of June, one thousand nine hundred and twenty, purchased from Messrs. Tiffany & Co. of 221 Regent street in the county of London, a pearl necklace for sixteen thousand five hundred pounds, which amount she is at the present time unable to pay, and whereas there have been various interviews between the parties hereto and the representative in London of the said firm of Tiffany & Company as to the manner in which the debt shall be discharged, now it is hereby agreed between the parties hereto:

"1. That she the said Syida Spreckels shall discharge the debt by payment to Messrs. Tiffany & Company of the sum of thirteen hundred and seventy-five pounds on the twenty-fifth day of December, one thousand nine hundred and twenty, and the balance by installments of thirteen hundred and seventy-five pounds each on the twenty-fifth day of March, the twenty-fourth day of June, the twenty-ninth day of September, and the twenty-fifth day of December in every year until the full amount of sixteen thousand five hundred pounds is paid.

"2. In the event of default being made a payment of any installment, the said John D. Spreckels agrees to accept full responsibility for and will discharge the said debt or so much thereof as shall remain owing and for this purpose will arrange direct with Messrs. Tiffany & Company.

"3. Should default in payment of any installment as aforesaid be made and the said John D. Spreckels be called upon to discharge the debt, then and in such case the said Syida Spreckels agrees to renounce all claim to the custody of their child Geraldine in his favour and will undertake not to approach or attempt to see the said child without his permission.

"4. It is further agreed between the parties hereto that one part of this agreement signed by the said Syida Spreckels shall be retained by the said John D. Spreckels and the part signed by the said John D. Spreckels shall be retained by the said firm of Tiffany & Company until the debt is discharged.

"John D. Spreckels, Jr.
"Witness to the signature of John D. Spreckels, Jr.: Roddam W. Burn, 6 Bell Yard, Doctors Commons, London, Solicitor."

The signing of this writing by Spreckels appears to have closed negotiations between the Spreckels and Tiffany & Co. Spreckels returned to California, where he met his death on August 8, 1921. Prior to this time, and on the 17th day of March, 1921, as we have before stated, an interlocutory decree of divorce had been granted the said Spreckels by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. His death, therefore, occurred before the entry of the final decree of divorce. Nothing was paid Tiffany & Co. for the necklace, and, after the appointment and qualification of the executors of his last will and testament, Tiffany & Co. presented its claim amounting to $80,350 against said estate for the purchase price of said necklace to the said executors, which claim was rejected, and within the time limited by the provisions of the Code this action was instituted on said claim against said executors to recover said amount of $80,350 from the estate of said deceased. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of the defendants in the action, and the plaintiff has appealed therefrom.

As stated by appellant in its brief, the issues raised by respondents at the trial were: First, that the agreement was one for the benefit of a third person, and therefore, under English law, was not enforceable; second, that the obligation evidenced by the agreement, if any, was secured by menace, coercion, and duress exercised by or on behalf of appellant. The conclusion we have reached in this case renders it unnecessary for us to decide the question whether the agreement relied upon by appellant was for the benefit of a third person, and therefore not enforceable under the English law, being the first issue above mentioned. We are satisfied that the assent by John D. Spreckels, Jr., to any agreement entered into by him, whether oral or written, to answer for the debt of Mrs. Spreckels, was procured by the wrongful use of fear, induced by the threats of appellant, its representatives and solicitors, to prosecute Mrs. Spreckels along with Barrett for conspiracy to defraud appellant out of said necklace of pearls in case said pearls were not returned, or satisfactory arrangements made for their payment. No citation of authority is necessary to support the proposition that a contract procured by means of threats of this character is illegal and voidable, and therefore unenforceable against the promisor. This principle of law is conceded by appellant. The leading case upon that subject in this state is the case of Morrill v. Nightingale, 93 Cal. 452, 28 P. 1068, 27 Am. St. Rep. 207, where this court said, on page 455 (28 P. 1069):

"The consent of a party to a contract must be free, and it is not free when obtained through duress or menace. Section 1569 of the Civil Code declares duress to consist in the 'unlawful confinement of the person of the party, or of the husband or wife of such party,' etc., or 'the confinement of such person, lawful in form, but fraudulently obtained.' Section 1570 provides, menace consists in a threat of the duress above specified, or of a threat of injury to the character of any such person. In this case there was no arrest and confinement, hence no duress; but the history of the transaction, as disclosed by the findings, clearly indicates threats of imprisonment upon a charge of embezzlement, which, in effect, necessarily were threats of injury to the character of defendant Nightingale, and consequently a menace. The court finds that the contract and notes were executed under the influence of such menace, and such being the fact, the defendant's free consent to the execution thereof was never gained. * * *

That case was approved by this court in the case of People v. Beggs, 178 Cal. 79, 84, 172 P. 152, 154, where the court uses the following pertinent language:

"If, instead of paying the two thousand dollars, Da Rosa under the circumstances shown to exist, had given his note and a mortgage securing the same, then, under the authority of the case cited, payment thereof could not have been enforced, the reason therefor being that execution of the security was procured by the wrongful use of fear induced by the threat to prosecute him for the crime out of which the indebtedness arose. If it be a wrongful use of fear in the one case, is it not likewise an equally wrongful use of fear in the instant case?"

[1] The above rule applies with equal force when the subject of the threat is the wife of the person whose assent to an agreement is secured as a result of such threats. 13 Corpus Juris, 404, § 325.

[2, 3] In the present action the trial court found as a fact that the writing of September 20, 1920, was signed by John D. Spreckels, Jr., because of said threats and to save his wife from criminal prosecution threatened by appellant. That the evidence was sufficient to support this finding we think must be conceded. The two cablegrams already referred to and which were practically prepared by the solicitor of appellant, can have no other meaning or significance. The evidence shows without conflict that they were sent only after the insistent demands by the representatives of appellant that Mrs. Spreckels communicate with her husband for assistance, and their contents is a correct reflection of appellant's attitude both before and after the cablegrams were sent.

In addition to these cablegrams, the evidence of Mr. Crosse, solicitor for Mrs. Spreckels, and of his managing clerk, Mr. Price, shows that repeated threats were made by Mr. Burn, appellant's solicitor, that Mrs. Spreckels would be arrested for conspiracy to defraud his client, unless the necklace was restored or satisfactory arrangements made for the payment thereof. Mr. Price testified that:

"The first conversation was on the 17th of June, 1920, at the Washington Hotel, Curzon street, London, with a representative of Messrs.

Tiffany's, whose name I do not know, and Mr. R. W. Burn, their solicitor. The whole position was discussed, and Mr. Burn urged Mrs. Spreckels, who was present, to communicate with her husband for assistance. He informed me that, failing satisfactory arrangements being made, they would have no alternative but to prosecute Barrett and Mrs. Spreckels for alleged conspiracy. After discussing the matter with Mrs. Spreckels she ultimately consented to do so, although it was against her wish."

It will be noted that this conversation took place on June 17th, and the cablegrams were sent on the following day. Mr. Price further testified in answer to interrogatory No. 16:

"A. Yes; I repeat what I have above stated, that they said they would prosecute Barrett and Mrs. Spreckels. * * *

"Interrogatory No. 24: Referring to page 4 of said Exhibit B, please state who, if any one, informed you that they had instructions from Messrs. Tiffany to apply for a warrant for the arrest of both Barrett and Syida Spreckels. A. Yes; I was informed by Mr. R. W. Burn.

"Interrogatory No. 25: Please state the name of the person who made said statement to you, and the date on which it was made. A. Mr. Roddam W. Burn. The date was the 17th June, 1920, and on later days on the telephone."

Mr. Crosse testified:

"The claim made by Messrs. Tiffany & Co. was for the return of the jewels or payment of £16,000, and in default of either of those things they would prosecute Mrs. Spreckels. * * * it was at Messrs. Tiffany's office in Regent street, London. I cannot remember who was there, except that Mr. Roddam W. Burn, the solicitor, was there; but I think there were about half a dozen representatives of Messrs. Tiffany present. The conversation was what I have already stated in my answer to interrogatory No. 14, that, unless satisfactory arrangements were made, they would prosecute Mrs. Spreckels.

"Interrogatory No. 17: If you had more than one conversation with Adam Burn & Son, or Roddam W. Burn, please state whether any of them were by telephone. A. Yes; I did have several conversations by telephone with Messrs. Roddam Burn & Son, or Roddam W. Burn, the principal, all of which were to the same effect. * * * On the 22d June, and 2d, 3d, 5th, 6th, and 15th July there were conversations, the effect of all of which was that, if satisfactory arrangements were not made to settle the debt, they would prosecute Mrs. Spreckels. * * *

"Interrogatory No. 24: Referring to page 4 of said Exhibit B, please state who, if any one, informed you that they had instructions from Messrs. Tiffany to apply for a warrant for the arrest of both Barrett and Syida Spreckels. A. It was Mr. Roddam W. Burn who informed me to that effect.

"Interrogatory No. 25: If your response to interrogatory No. 24 is in the affirmative, please state the name of the person who made said statement to you, and the date on which it was made. A. This was on the 13th September, 1920, at Messrs. Tiffany's office in Regent street, London. It was Mr. Roddam W. Burn."

The evidence further shows that on the arrival of John D. Spreckels, Jr., in London, he asked for a "history of the whole matter concerning the pearl necklace," and he was given "full details and particulars." It can hardly be imagined that in a rehearsal of the history of the events surrounding the purchase, loss, and attempted recovery of the necklace mention would not have been made of the frequent and repeated threats of appellant to prosecute Mrs. Spreckels, unless arrangements were made satisfactory to appellant to settle the debt incurred in the purchase of the pearls. These threats were stressed in the two cablegrams sent to Spreckels, and were undoubtedly depended upon, by all parties concerned in preparing or sending them, to move Spreckels to come to his wife's assistance. The knowledge that his wife, with their minor daughter in her possession, was liable to be made the subject of a serious criminal prosecution, was undoubtedly the impelling cause which sent John D. Spreckels, Jr., to London to render them help and assistance. And, when the evidence shows that "full details and particulars" of the transaction were given him on his arrival, the only reasonable inference to deduct from such evidence is that he was fully advised of the determined purpose of the appellant, expressed on various occasions to Mrs. Spreckels and her solicitors, to hold Mrs. Spreckels criminally liable for the loss of the pearls. Spreckels was in no way responsible to appellant for the purchase price of the pearls, either legally or morally, much less was he in any way liable for their loss. He showed no particular concern for the mere business affairs of his wife. The parties were estranged, and had been living apart for some time, and he may have looked upon any mere financial transaction to which she was a party with unconcern and indifference. He was, however, naturally solicitous of the good name of himself and family, and would desire to protect it from the disgrace that would result from a criminal prosecution of one of its members. Besides, his daughter of tender years was with her mother, and the arrest and imprisonment of the mother might result in most serious consequences to the child. It was these considerations, as shown by the evidence, and these alone, in our opinion, which prompted John D. Spreckels, Jr., to make the oral and written agreements by which, the appellant now claims, he obligated himself to answer for the debt of his wife.

[4] Appellant contends that, even if, at the inception of his connection with this affair, the threats of prosecution influenced Spreckels' action, yet three months intervened between the sending of the cablegrams and the signing of the agreement on September 20th, during which time, appellant claims, the evidence shows that no suggestion was made by any person that Mrs. Spreckels would be prosecuted. Conceding this last statement to be true, it was for the trial court to determine the weight and effect of the cablegrams upon the mind of Spreckels at the time he signed the writing or made the oral promises relied upon by appellant. Besides, as we have already shown, Spreckels, on arriving in London on the 12th day of August, 1920, was fully informed of all the details and particulars relating to the necklace. Furthermore, the testimony of Mr. Crosse, the solicitor of Mrs. Spreckels, shows that Mr. Burn, representing appellant, stated to him on September 13, 1920, just seven days before the written agreement was signed, that he had instructions from Tiffany & Co. to apply for a warrant of arrest of both Barrett and Syida Spreckels. It is only reasonable to conclude that Mr. Crosse communicated this statement to his client, and she in turn communicated it to Spreckels. Particularly are we justified in drawing this conclusion from the evidence when the sole purpose of Mrs. Spreckels in sending for her husband, and of the latter in traveling from California to London, was to forestall any criminal proceeding against his wife. As we have already stated, the foregoing evidence as to the threats of prosecution made by the representatives of the appellant against Mrs. Spreckels is uncontradicted. Two of these representatives of appellant, Mr. Fox and Mr. Feaveryear, who, with Mr. Burn, the solicitor, acted for appellant in practically all of its dealings with Mrs. Spreckels, were witnesses in this case; their evidence having been taken by means of depositions. Neither of them denies any of the statements made by respondent's witnesses as to the nature of the threats or that such threats were made as testified to by respondent's witnesses. Mr. Burn, who probably could have thrown more light upon the subject than any one else on behalf of appellant, does not appear to have been a witness in the action. Just why he was not made a witness, or his deposition was not taken, the record fails to disclose. The trial court having found that the assent of Spreckels to the agreement, which is the basis of this action, was procured by means and as the result of threats made by appellant to prosecute Mrs. Spreckels, and the evidence in support of such findings being not only sufficient, but practically uncontradicted, this court has neither the authority nor the inclination to disturb the action of the trial court in this regard. There is some claim made by appellant, in discussing other questions arising on this appeal, that, besides the writing of September 20, 1920, Spreckels made oral promises that he would pay the claim of Tiffany & Co. against Mrs. Spreckels, and that, even if he is not bound by said writing, he is liable under his oral promises. In so far as these oral statements, or any oral agreement arising out of them are concerned, the oral agreement is in no better position than the written agreement, when considered in reference to the threats of prosecution made by the appellant. Any agreement made by Spreckels, either oral or written, the testimony in this case discloses, was made as the result of said threats of criminal prosecution against Mrs. Spreckels.

[5-8] There is another reason in our opinion why the agreement made by Spreckels was without binding effect upon him or upon his estate, and this is that there was no valid consideration to support any agreement, either written or oral, made by him. In the first place, as we have already seen, the writing claimed by appellant to be an agreement was not signed by Mrs. Spreckels, and it is doubtful whether she ever knew that it had been signed by her husband and delivered to appellant. Whether she knew of its existence or not, there is no evidence that she ever assented to it or agreed to any of its terms. It necessarily follows that the agreement had no binding effect upon Mrs. Spreckels, and therefore between her and Spreckels it was merely a "scrap of paper." If it be considered as an agreement for the benefit of Tiffany & Co., there is still no consideration to support such an agreement. Tiffany & Co. parted with nothing of value; neither did it suffer any detriment by any transaction had between it and John D. Spreckels, Jr. There is no semblance of a claim that it parted with anything of value in consideration of any contract or agreement made by Spreckels. The only possible claim it can make is that it suffered a detriment by forbearing to sue Mrs. Spreckels for the purchase price of the pearls, and agreeing to accept payment of their purchase price in installments as set out in the writing signed by Spreckels. Had Tiffany & Co. by any valid agreement bound itself not to sue upon its claim against Mrs. Spreckels for a period of time no matter how brief, in consideration of Spreckels agreeing to pay its claim against Mrs. Spreckels, such an agreement on its part would have been sufficient to support Spreckels' engagement to pay their claim, provided his assent thereto had not been gained by reason of threats of prosecuting Mrs. Spreckels. Whelan v. Swain, 132 Cal. 389, 64 P. 560; Humboldt Sav., etc., Soc. v. Dowd, 137 Cal. 408, 70 P. 274. There is no evidence, however, of any such an agreement by Tiffany & Co. The writing of September 20, 1920, was prepared by the solicitors of Tiffany & Co. and contains no references to any engagement by Tiffany & Co. to extend the time of payment of their claim against Mrs. Spreckels or to accept the agreement of the Spreckels to pay the same in installments. So far as this writing affected the rights of Tiffany & Co. to proceed against

Mrs. Spreckels, it (Tiffany & Co.) could have instituted action the day the writing was signed against Mrs. Spreckels to recover the purchase price of the pearls. The fact that it did forbear to sue without any agreement of forbearance does not constitute a consideration. Estate of Thomson, 165 Cal. 290, 131 P. 1045; Commercial Bank v. Redfield, 122 Cal. 405, 55 P. 160, 772; Shadburne v. Daly, 76 Cal. 353, 18 P. 403. The agreement, therefore, on the part of Spreckels to pay the claim of his wife, and this applies to any oral promises made by him as well as to the purported written agreement, was without any consideration, and imposed no obligation upon him or upon his estate to pay the same. Chaffee v. Browne, 109 Cal. 211, 41 P. 1028; Lagomarsino v. Giannini, 146 Cal. 545, 80 P. 698. As was said in the former of these cases, quoting from Bayler v. Commonwealth, 40 Pa. 37, 80 Am. Dec. 551, where the wife had assumed to secure her husband's indebtedness under circumstances similar to those in the present action:

"No new consideration was given at the time it was executed. The wife received nothing, the husband received nothing, the creditor parted with nothing. The instrument was, therefore, no more than a collateral security given for an old debt of the husband."

[9-11] The further contention is made by respondents that, even if the written agreement of September 20, 1920, between Spreckels and wife were in all other respects legal, the agreement is rendered invalid by reason of the nature of the promise of Mrs. Spreckels contained therein "to renounce all claim to the custody of their child Geraldine in his (Spreckels') favor," the sole consideration of Spreckels' agreement to her to accept responsibility for the payment of appellant's claim. This contention, we think, cannot be sustained. Parents have a legal right to contract with each other as to the custody and control of their offspring. Sargent v. Sargent, 106 Cal. 541, 39 P. 931; Anderson v. Anderson, 56 Cal. App. 87, 204 P. 426; Van der Vliet v. Van der Vliet [Cal. Sup.] 254 P. 945. This right, however, is subject to the control of the court in proceedings wherein the welfare of the child is involved. Black v. Black, 149 Cal. 224, 86 P. 505. But, as between the parents themselves, a promise by one parent that the other may have the custody and control of their child is legal, and is a sufficient consideration to support an agreement on the part of the parent in whose favor the promise is made.

The written agreement, and any oral agreement made by Spreckels to accept responsibility of his wife's debt to appellant, for the reasons that the same were procured by menace, and are unsupported by any valid consideration, are invalid and unenforceable against the estate of said deceased.

The judgment is affirmed.

IVANCOVICH v. BERTOSSI. (S. F. 11682.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1927.

1. Sales $\S$ 181(12)—Evidence, in action for breach of contract to sell wine, held to sustain finding for defendant on theory wine became unmerchantable because of buyer's attempt to blend wines.

In action by assignee of contract for sale of wine to recover against seller for breach, because of wines being sour and unfit for beverage purposes, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding in favor of defendant on theory that wine became unmerchantable by reason of buyer's act in attempting to blend different wines after purchase.

2. Sales $\S$ 284(1, 2)—Delivery to buyer of possession of wine for purpose of preparing it for resale, in which process it deteriorated, held sufficient compliance with warranty requiring delivery free from commercial defects.

Where buyer of wine under contract, requiring delivery free from any commercial defects, took possession of the wine by agreement for purpose of preparing it for resale and shipment, and wine was caused to deteriorate and spoil as result of his treatment, there was sufficient compliance with warranty.

3. Set-off and counterclaim $\S$ 59—Personal judgment on counterclaim based on contract will not lie against assignee of such contract suing for breach.

Where buyer, in contract for sale of wine, had assigned cause of action for an alleged breach to another, a personal judgment for amount of damage sustained by seller as alleged in cross-complaint for breach of such contract will not lie against assignee.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 1071(6)—Neither party can complain of failure to make finding which would not have benefited either.

Where neither appellant nor respondent would have been benefited by certain finding, neither party can complain of court's failure to make such finding.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Ross Campbell, Judge.

Action by George J. Ivancovich against Angelo Cassani, for whom Nonie Bertossi, as executrix, was substituted after his death, and wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edwin T. McMurray, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Geary & Geary, of Santa Rosa, and James L. Atteridge, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. This action was brought to recover damages, which the complaint alleges the plaintiff's assignor sustained by the breach of a certain contract for the purchase and sale of two lots of wine described in said contract. This contract was dated December 17, 1918, and was signed by Angelo Cassani, the then owner of the wine, who was also the original defendant in this action. Upon his death, subsequent to the commencement of this action, the executrix of his will was substituted as defendant in his stead. By this contract Cassani agreed to sell G. B. Cella, of New York City, two lots of wine "in good condition, and without commercial defects," one consisting of about 82,000 gallons then in the Mt. Olivet winery, belonging to Cassani, and the other lot consisting of about 87,000 gallons, then in his Santa Rosa winery, both of said wineries being located in Sonoma county, in this state. The price of the wine was 51 cents per gallon for that in the Mt. Olivet winery and 50 cents per gallon for that in the Santa Rosa winery. The purchaser agreed to pay for the wine "f. o. b." at the respective wineries, "invoice and bill of lading to be sent and paid at sight in San Francisco, Cal." $10,000 was paid on the contract at the signing thereof, to be applied on final shipment. The wine was all to be taken within 90 days from date of contract. Barrels, revenue stamps, and lumber were to be paid for by purchaser, who was also to provide all necessary labor for filtering wine, in case purchaser desired same to be filtered. The wine was to be loaded on board cars at depot, ready and complete for shipment by seller. Before the signing of the contract, Cella visited both wineries and took samples of all the wine contained therein, and the contract of sale provided that the quality of the wine sold should be of a quality "same as sample submitted." On January 20, 1919, this contract was sold and assigned by Cella to Louis H. Mooser, Jr., doing business under the name of Mooser & Co., of San Francisco, who thereafter carried on with Cassani all transactions regarding the wine covered by the contract. Louis H. Mooser, Jr., prior to the commencement of this action, assigned his rights of action on said contract to the plaintiff herein. The foregoing facts were set forth in plaintiff's complaint, together with the further facts that said Mooser, within the 90 days provided in said contract, as the limit within which said wine might be taken, had detailed tests made of said wine, and that said tests showed that said wines and all portions of the same were not in good condition, and were not without commercial defects, but, on the contrary, said wines were by said tests shown to contain volatile acids far in excess of the proportion or percentage which would permit the sale of the same in good condition, and in such proportion and percentage as would prevent the sale of said wines in good condition; that said Mooser, for this reason, rejected said wines, and notified Cassani of his said refusal. It is then set forth in said complaint that, on account of Cassani's refusal to comply with said contract, said Mooser was damaged in various sums, including said sum of $10,000 paid by Cella to Cassani at the execution of the contract, and which amount Mooser had paid to Cella at the time of the assignment of the contract by Cella to Mooser. To this complaint the defendant Cassani filed an answer and cross-complaint in which he denied that there was any defect in the wine when sold or at any time thereafter until "said Mooser was permitted by this defendant to blend said wines, and otherwise manipulate and change said wines; that such manipulation and blending of said wines so made by said Mooser changed the said wines so that they were different in quality and composition from what they were when said Mooser took charge thereof, and any deterioration in the quality of said wines was occasioned solely by the acts of said Mooser performed in and about said wines." Cassani in his answer denied that Mooser was damaged by reason of any act on his part, and alleged in his cross-complaint that, by reason of Mooser's action in manipulating and blending the wine, and thereby causing it to deteriorate, he was damaged in a sum largely in excess of $10,000. The court found in favor of the defendant, and rendered judgment that plaintiff take nothing by his said complaint, and that defendant recover her costs.

Practically the only point involved in this appeal is whether the findings are supported by the evidence. The following facts are disclosed by the evidence: The wine in question was manufactured and produced by Cassani in his two wineries in Sonoma county, and was the entire output of these wineries for the year 1918. Cella, an experienced wine man from New York, visited Cassani's wineries three or four times before entering into the agreement to purchase the wine. At these several visits he took samples of the wine from each of the tanks or vats in which it was stored. These he tasted and tested. Whether he "tested" the wine other than by tasting it is not clear from the record. After taking the samples and tasting and testing them, he returned to Cassani's place of business, and on December 17, 1918, entered into the agreement of sale, and paid the sum of $10,000 on the purchase price. This contract he sold on January 20, 1919, to Mooser. Shortly after Mooser bought the contract from Cella, and before the wine was blended by Mooser, the latter directed Cassani to ship a carload of this wine from the Santa Rosa winery to Cella in New York. This shipment of wine, consisting of about 6,000 gallons, was shipped to Cella at New York, and paid for by Mooser. No complaint was ever received by Cassani from Cella or from Mooser or from anybody else as to the character and quality of this wine so shipped by Cassani to Cella at New York City.

About February 4, 1919, Mooser sent men to the Santa Rosa winery to blend the wine. This took about a month. The wine in the Mt. Olivet winery was not blended, and it does not appear that Mooser ever made any objection that it was not up to the requirements of the contract. Mooser had the wine in the Santa Rosa winery analyzed by a chemist, and these analyses showed an excess of volatile acid which rendered the wine sour and unfit for beverage purposes. The action was tried some four years after the events happened, and the witness who testified to procuring the samples stated that he procured the samples somewhere between the 17th day of December, 1918, the date of the contract of purchase, and the 10th day of March, 1919. As we have already seen, the blending of the wine in the Santa Rosa winery began on February 4, 1919, and it took about a month to complete the work. The analyses of the wine were made on or about March 10, 1919. Cassani testified that Mooser sent a party to the winery to get samples of the wine, and that this was after the wine had been blended. The trial court undoubtedly concluded from the evidence that these samples of wine were taken after the wine had been mixed and blended by Mooser, and we cannot say from the state of the record upon this subject that the trial court was not justified in arriving at this conclusion. There is no conflict, however, in the evidence that the wine in the Santa Rosa winery, after it had gone through the process of blending, was sour and of little commercial value for beverage purposes. The evidence is clear that the blending of the wine was done by Mooser, and, if there were any deleterious results therefrom, Mooser himself was alone responsible therefor. The blending of the wine was for the purpose of making the whole output of the winery of a uniform color and quality, and the process of blending consisted simply of pouring together the wine contained in two or more tanks or vats, and making one lot of the whole before it is drawn out again either into the vats or in barrels for shipment. While this process does not necessarily tend to deteriorate the wine, yet the evidence of experts produced at the trial was to the effect that in blending wines there were a number of contingencies that might arise which would affect the quality of the wine after it was blended. As one witness said:

"If your hose and other implements in the winery are not clean, if they are not thoroughly washed out, it will affect even a sound wine. The sound wine can be spoiled by using hose and material that are not cleaned or properly cleaned. But sound wine blended will remain a sound wine, but tanks in the winery differ."

This same witness testified that a tank of unsound wine, when blended with other wine in the winery, might absolutely spoil the whole lot. While there was no direct evidence that any of the wine in the Santa Rosa winery was unsound before the blending process took place, the owner of the winery, Cassani, who was an experienced man, testified that he disapproved of mixing the white or muscat wine with the Zinfandel. It appears that practically all of the wine in the Santa Rosa winery was Zinfandel wine, but there was a small lot of white or muscat wine in this winery. The testimony of Cassani as to this incident was as follows:

"Q. When you say blend and mix, you mean they dumped the wine from one tank into wine in another tank? A. Yes, they mixed it all up, you know. Q. That was for the purpose of making the type of wine that they wanted? A. Making one kind of wine; that is all. Q. I see. A. When they say they going to put in that white wine, I says, 'Gentlemen, I don't care for me what you doing, but you spoil the Zinfandel wine by putting in that.' Q. What did they mix with the Zinfandel? A. Yes; they did. Q. I say, what did they put in with Zinfandel? A. White wine, muscat, you see, that gave a bad smell; that is why I had to sell my wine cheaper to get rid of it."

[1] There was testimony of experts produced by the plaintiff who testified, contrary to the statement of Cassani, that the mixing of white or muscat wine with Zinfandel wine would spoil the latter. Yet the trial court was not bound to accept their evidence, and it may well have rejected their statements and concluded in accordance with the views of Cassani that by mixing or blending the two kinds of wine the whole was spoiled. There was ample evidence to show that the wine was sound and free from commercial defects on the 17th day of December, 1918, when the contract of sale was entered into. Both Cassani and the witness Buzzzi, who had worked for Cassani in making the wine, and who also was employed by Mooser to help blend the wine, testified that the wine was in good condition when sold. Cella, the purchaser, only a day or so before he purchased the wine, tasted the wine, and took samples of it for testing. A short time after the purchase, but after Mooser had obtained an assignment of the contract, a carload of the wine was shipped to Cella at New York City, and no objection was ever made as to the quality of the wine shipped. This evidence was sufficient to justify the trial court in finding that the wine before blending was sound and free from commercial defects. It is admitted that, after the wine was blended, it was sour and unfit for beverage purposes. When we consider the evidence of Cassani that mixing the white or muscat wine with the Zinfandel wine would spoil the mixture, together with the other evidence in the case as to the unfavorable results that might result from the blending of wine by the use of a hose or other implements not properly cleaned, we are of the opinion that it was not an unreasonable conclusion or inference for the trial court to draw that the inferior quality of the wine and its unmerchantable character after it was blended was due entirely and solely to the acts of Mooser and his employees in the mixing or blending of the wine. The evidence, therefore, was sufficient to sustain and justify the findings of the trial court in favor of the respondent.

[2] Appellant also contends that the findings do not support the judgment. In this connection he claims that, as the contract of sale warranted the wine to be sound and free from any commercial defects, this warranty referred to the time of delivery, and not simply to the time of purchase. Appellant's position appears to be that, although the wine may have been sound when purchased, yet if it were not in that condition at the time it was to be delivered under the contract, the warranty had not been kept. There is no merit in this contention in view of the facts of this case. While there may not have been an actual delivery of the wine under the contract, so as to entitle the seller to demand payment therefor, yet by an agreement of the parties Mooser took possession of the wine for the purpose of preparing it for resale and shipment, and, while in such possession, and as a result of his treatment of the wine, it was caused to deteriorate and spoil. The inferior quality of the wine, due to the acts of Mooser, cannot be chargeable to the respondent. The fact that the wine was not, at the time fixed for delivery, up to the standard required by the contract of sale, was due entirely to the acts of Mooser. The appellant cannot, therefore, complain of the failure of the wine to meet the requirements of the warranty at that time.

[3, 4] Appellant also claims that the finding, under the allegations of the cross-complaint, that defendant was damaged in excess of $10,000 by the failure of Mooser to accept and pay for the wine according to the contract, was indefinite, and that "defendant is entitled to a judgment for the actual amount of damage suffered." The court found that, upon Mooser's refusal to accept and pay for the wine, Cassani was compelled to sell the wine and did so at a loss of more than $10,000, which amount the court offset against the payment of $10,000 made by Cella to Cassani on the execution of the contract. As Mooser had assigned his cause of action to the appellant, the trial court rightly concluded that a personal judgment for the amount of damage sustained by the respondent for the breach of the contract by Mooser would not lie against Mooser's assignee, the appellant herein, and refused to award such a judgment. But, as the appellant had sought to recover the $10,000 paid by Cella at the execution of the contract, the trial court did go into the merits of respondent's claim for damages, and found that such claim was in excess of the said sum of $10,000, which appellant sought to recover from respondent. Appellant cannot complain that the court failed to fix a definite amount in which respondent was damaged, so long as the amount found was in excess of the amount which appellant was claiming from respondent, and which appellant would have been entitled to recover had not respondent sustained damages by reason of Mooser's failure to carry out the contract. Had the trial court found and fixed definitely the amount of damage sustained by respondent in excess of the sum of $10,000, neither the appellant nor the respondent would have been benefited by such a finding. Neither party can therefore complain of the court's failure to make such a finding.

A number of other objections to the judgment have been advanced by appellant in his brief, all of which have been considered by us, and, after such consideration, we are of the opinion that they are without merit. A detailed discussion of them would serve no useful purpose, as they involve matters of no special legal significance.

COULTER v. HOWARD. (L. A. 8883.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1927.

1. Brokers $\S$ 43(3)—Provision in landowner's escrow offer to sell held "note or memorandum" sufficient to bind her for broker's commission (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1624; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1973).

Where landowner was sued by broker for commission on real estate transaction in which the landowner had placed an offer in escrow, which, in general, except as to commission statement, complied with an agreement previously signed by her son, without authority, allowing 5 per cent. commission to broker for selling, held that the offer was a sufficient "note or memorandum" within Civ. Code, $\S$ 1624, and Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1973, relative to land sale commission contracts being required to be in writing to bind landowner for commission upon her refusing to comply with offer after broker had secured a buyer.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Memorandum.]

2. Contracts $\S$ 76—Real estate broker's services, rendered under void contract or voluntarily, will support subsequent written promise to pay therefor.

The fact that a real estate broker has rendered services to a landowner in selling real estate under a void contract or voluntarily will, in view of Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 2310, 2311, support a subsequent written promise by the landowner to pay for the services.

3. Brokers $\S$ 63(1)—Commission of realty broker, who obtained buyer, held due as of date vendor repudiated, though brokerage contract provided for payment from proceeds.

Where the contract between a landowner and a real estate broker provided for the broker's payment of commission for land sale at the close of an escrow and then only out of funds payable to the landowner under such escrow, held, in broker's action for commission after the landowner had refused to convey upon the broker's procuring a purchaser, that the commission was due as of the date of the vendor's repudiation.

4. Brokers $\S$ 63(1)—Law requires good faith of vendor who has placed real estate with broker for sale and doing of no intentional preventative act.

The law requires good faith of owner who has placed his land in the hands of a real estate broker to sell and the doing of no intentional act to discourage, embarrass, or prevent the completion of the sale.

5. Brokers $\S$ 51—That real estate broker did not bring parties together personally is immaterial on question whether broker produced ready, able, and willing buyer, where broker dealt with landowner's agent.

In suit by a real estate broker for his commission upon the landowner's repudiation of the brokerage contract and refusal to sell, the fact that the real estate broker did not bring the owner and prospective purchaser together personally, but that the broker dealt with an agent of the owner, held immaterial as to broker's right to commission for producing a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase.

6. Brokers $\S$ 86(1)—In broker's action for realty commission, evidence held to show purchaser's payment was made during time allowed and before vendor's repudiation, entitling broker to commission.

In a broker's action for real estate commission, evidence held to show that the purchaser made the required payment during the period permitted therefor by the sale's agreement, so as to entitle broker to commission, although vendor subsequently repudiated agreement and it was not completed.

7. Brokers 54—Broker producing purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase realty during life of brokerage contract held entitled to commission.

Where a real estate broker produced a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase real estate on the owner's terms during the life of the brokerage contract and before cancellation of escrow, he was entitled to his agreed compensation, though vendor refused to consummate contract and canceled escrow.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by F. Bradley Coulter against Julia O. Howard. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

N. B. Nelson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This is an action by a duly licensed real estate broker for a commission of 5 per cent. upon the purchase price named in a certain real estate transaction. Defendant had judgment against plaintiff, from which she has taken this appeal.

The only serious question in the case, and the only one which need be discussed, is the contention of appellant that certain material findings are, as a matter of law, contrary to the evidence. The substance of the findings in question is as follows: First, that no written evidence of the employment of plaintiff by defendant is shown, and the statute of frauds is therefore not satisfied; and, second, that appellant failed to produce a purchaser ready, able, and willing who offered to buy defendant's property upon the terms imposed by her. Our investigation of the record convinces us that appellant is correct in her contention and that said questioned findings are entirely without support in the evidence; this appearing as a matter of law.

The facts are substantially as follows: Defendant, a widow, owned a lemon orchard of 20 acres near Santa Monica in Los Angeles county, which she was willing to sell, with certain reservations and upon certain terms of payment, at a purchase price of $3,000 per acre, or a total of $60,000. Plaintiff, a licensed broker, was interested under a verbal contract with her in finding a purchaser on said terms. Pursuant to this verbal arrangement plaintiff found a prospective purchaser in one B. O. Driver, which fact was communicated to defendant. Later, and on June 21, 1923, one Ray Howard, the son of defendant, assumed the authority to act for his mother, and attempted to give in his own name to plaintiff a three-day listing contract for sale of said property on said terms, promising in consideration of the services of plaintiff to pay her a 5 per cent. commission on the selling price. Accordingly, within the time limit specified, plaintiff induced said B. O. Driver to make an offer in writing to purchase said property at said price of $60,000, payable in installments on certain specified dates. This offer was drafted at the First National Bank of Santa Monica by some officer of the bank. The bank was to act as escrow party for both vendor and vendee in the contemplated real estate transaction. Later, and on the 22d day of June, 1923, defendant herself appeared at said bank and also signed a separate written offer to sell said property, specifying the terms of sale. In so far as said terms are here material they were as follows:

"Escrow Instructions.

"Santa Monica, Cal., June 22, 1923.

"The First National Bank in Santa Monica, Cal.: I will hand you deed executed by Julie C. Howard, a widow, to Bert O. Driver of lots 7-8-9-10. * * * Reserving all subterranean waters on lots 9 and 10 which you are authorized to deliver to buyer or his representatives, upon payment to you by July 1st, 1923, for account of parties executing the instrument the sum of \$10,000 from which you may deduct your $\frac{1}{2}$ to be escrow charges and charges for usual form guarantee dep. by limiting liability to \$60,000 and from which you may 5-6/25/23 also pay all incumbrances on said property. Procure mtg. for \$50,000 payable \$5,000 on or before 90 days—balance in 4 equal annual payments. * * * This sale is made subject to satisfactory conditions and arrangements being made with the city of Santa Monica in regards to domestic water and sewer service. * * * Pay F. Bradley Coulter a commission of \$ 5% at close of escrow but only out of funds then due and payable to me out of this escrow. * * * Time is declared to be the essence of these instructions. If you are unable to comply with these instructions within the time specified, said instruments shall be returned to me on my written demand; but in the absence of such demand you will proceed to comply with these instructions as soon as possible thereafter. * * *

The prospective purchaser paid, as hereinafter explained, $500 to the escrow bank pursuant to his offer and thereafter proceeded to make his arrangements with the city of Santa Monica for city water and sewerage connections for said property. These arrangements were satisfactorily completed with said city on June 25, 1923. From and after the completion thereof the evidence shows that the purchaser was ready, willing, and able to complete the purchase of said property and thereafter, to wit, on or about the 27th day of June, 1923, having just learned from inspection of the escrow offer signed by defendant that said document had been interlined to require the payment of $5,000 on June 25, 1923, he immediately gave a check to said bank for $4,500, which completed said $5,000 payment. His check for $4,500 was introduced in evidence. It bears date of June 27, 1923, and is marked "Paid" on June 28th. Defendant, however, having learned on or about said 25th day of June that the purchaser had not made the additional payment, proceeded with the intention of repudiating the transaction with him, and on or about June 27, 1923, made a contract with one Blair for the sale of said property at a purchase price of $64,000. Thereafter, and on the 28th day of June, defendant called at said bank and signed and delivered to it a writing in the words and figures following:

"* * * Santa Monica, Cal. June 28, 1923.

"The First National Bank in Santa Monica, Cal.—Gentlemen: Regarding the escrow in your bank concerning lot 7—8—9 & 10. * * * Mr. Driver, purchaser, we hereby notify you to cancel the escrow and return Mr. Driver the $500.00 he has deposited, owing to his failure to comply with the conditions we specified regarding the depositing $4,500.00 additional money by Monday, June 25.

"Yours truly,

Julie C. Howard."

Later, and on July 10, 1923, the money deposited by Mr. Driver was refunded to him and the sale to him was, of course, never completed. The further evidence in the case and the contentions of the parties with respect thereto will be discussed in connection with the law points involved herein.

[1] The first question to be answered is: Did the writing signed by defendant directing the escrow party to pay to plaintiff a 5 per cent. commission at the close of the escrow and out of the funds then due and payable to her, when taken in connection with the facts shown, satisfy the statute of frauds? It must be noted in this connection that a verbal contract of employment was made between defendant and plaintiff. It must also be noted that a written contract executed by the son of defendant was made with plaintiff, and under the evidence there is no escape from the conclusion that defendant well knew of its contents and acted pursuant to its terms in signing at the bank and in the presence of a representative of defendant the escrow offer to sell above noted. Those escrow provisions followed substantially the terms embodied in the writing executed by defendant's son, written authority in whom she disclaimed. In the light of these facts the provision in the escrow offer must be held to be a "note or memorandum" of the contract which is all the law requires. Civ. Code, § 1624; Code Civ. Proc. § 1973.

[2] We agree fully with the language of Muir v. Kane, 55 Wash. 131, 104 P. 153, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519, 19 Ann. Cas. 1180, as follows:

"The moral obligation to pay for services rendered as a broker in selling real estate, under an oral contract where the statute requires such contract to be in writing, is just as binding as is the moral obligation to pay a debt that has become barred by the statute of limitations, and there is no reason for holding that the latter will support a new promise to pay while the former will not. There is no moral delinquency that attaches to an oral contract to sell real property as a broker. This service cannot be recovered for, because the statute says the promise must be in writing, not because it is illegal in itself. It was not intended by the statute to impute moral turpitude to such contracts. The statute was intended to prevent frauds and perjuries, and, to accomplish that purpose, it is required that the evidence of the contract be in writing; but it is not conducive to either fraud or perjury to say that the services rendered under the void contract, or voluntarily, will support a subsequent written promise to pay for such service."

See, also, Carrington v. Smithers, 26 Cal. App. 460, 463-464, 147 P. 225.

In this connection the language of Johnson v. Krier, 59 Cal. App. 330, 332, 210 P. 966, 967, is in point, to wit:

"In the present case the agreement to pay commission was not reduced to writing before the rendition of the services by the plaintiffs, but after plaintiffs had procured the purchasers the oral agreement was ratified in writing, and so the bar of the statute of frauds was removed."

In said cause the defendant had written on the back of the contract of sale and purchase the following words:

"I hereby agree to pay Johnson and Temple a commission of $2,000 for the making of the within sale [dated and signed]."

See, also, Civ. Code, §§ 2310 and 2311.

The question here under consideration was not fairly involved in the case of Irwin v. Klimper, 56 Cal. App. 434, 205 P. 714. Neither do we consider what is there said to be necessarily opposed to the holding here announced.

[3, 4] Respondent next asserts that, conceding the writing signed by her to be sufficient under the law, nevertheless the sum was not to be paid until the close of the escrow and then only out of funds payable to her thereunder. This would undoubtedly be true if she were free from fault in the premises. Jennings v. Jordan, 31 Cal. App. 335, 160 P. 576, and Brion v. Cahill, 34 Cal. App. 258, 262, 165 P. 704. But, prior to the time provided for completion of the transaction, respondent not only sold the property to another with intent to repudiate the transaction with Mr. Driver, but she actually served notice of attempted cancellation of the whole transaction. The law will not lend an ear to such contention on her part; therefore the payments provided will be held due as of the date of repudiation. The law requires of the vendor good faith and the doing of no intentional act to discourage, embarrass, or prevent the completion of the purchase. See Realty Bonds, etc., Co. v. Point Richmond, etc., Co., 171 Cal. 238, 152 P. 433; Ratzlaff v. Trainor-Desmond Co., 41 Cal. App. 586, 183 P. 269; Miller v. Lerdo Land Co., 52 Cal. App. 662, 677, 199 P. 1073.

[5] The last contention of respondent is that plaintiff failed to produce, within the time prescribed, a purchaser, ready, able, and willing to carry out the transaction upon the terms imposed by her. The first point stressed by respondent is that she and the purchaser, Driver, never met personally. We can see no force whatever in this suggestion, as the bank was created her agent, and her acts and conduct through and with such agency must be held to be as binding upon her as though personally done, and the negotiations by the purchaser with the bank concerning this transaction must be held to be negotiations with her. Umphray v. Hufschmidt, 73 Cal. App. 140, 146, 238 P. 749.

[6] Respondent claims also that the evidence is in conflict as to the time of repudiation or cancellation of the transaction with respect to the payment of the $4,500 by the prospective purchaser. In our view of the evidence, however, there is no conflict upon this point. The escrow officer of the bank, Margaret Collins, testified that $500 was paid in at the time the escrow was signed by Mr. Driver; that she also recalled $4,500 being paid into the same escrow; that said $4,500 was paid on the same day that the cancellation order was placed with the bank, but before it was placed with them, that is, that the $4,500 was placed with her in the bank in escrow before said cancellation order was handed to her. The purchaser's check, as above noted, was dated June 27th, stamped "Paid" June 28th, and the cancellation notice was also dated June 28th, so the most that could be said would be that the payment and repudiation notice were made on the same day, but this would not be sufficient to raise a conflict as to the date of payment. While it is true that the defendant and her son testified that the repudiation notice was filed before the money was paid in, nevertheless this testimony coming from them must necessarily be hearsay, as the fact and hour of payment could have been known only to the bank and to the intended purchaser. We therefore conclude that the evidence is without conflict that the payment was made prior to the cancellation notice. This act was clearly permissible under the terms of the escrow signed by defendant, by which the purchaser was permitted to pay the money at any time prior to cancellation in writing of the escrow offer.

In this connection it is contended also that the purchaser never fully agreed to the restrictions made by the defendant with respect to subterranean waters. Reference is made to statements of said purchaser during the negotiations, but a fair construction of the evidence shows that such statements referred to the unwillingness of the purchaser to buy unless and until the city of Santa Monica should agree to furnish water and sewerage to the property, and, when an agreement was reached with the city on the question, no other conditions respecting water were insisted upon by the purchaser. In other words, it is clear that after June 25th, when the city acted with respect to the water, there was from that time on no objection on the part of the purchaser respecting the water situation.

The ability of the purchaser to pay for the property is not disputed, and, except for the matters above noted, there is no other contention as to his lack of ability, willingness, readiness, and offer to purchase. Defendant, therefore, having refused on her part to carry out the transaction, and having deliberately repudiated the same by making a contract to sell the property to another, there is in reality no equity whatsoever in her position, and it may well be doubted whether she had a right, on June 28th, to cancel the escrow after having herself first repudiated it by contracting, on June 27th, to sell the property to another. Plaintiff, therefore, on this record, clearly earned her commission.

[7] It is not necessary that a binding contract be executed by the purchaser. It is only necessary that he be ready, able, willing, and offer to purchase. The rule in this respect has been often stated:

"It is also established law in this state that a written contract between the seller and the purchaser is not essential to the recovery of the broker's commission if he has produced to the seller a purchaser who is ready, willing, and able to purchase upon the terms proposed by the seller and who has agreed to those terms and is willing and offers to enter into a binding written contract. The broker has performed his duty and has earned his commission regardless of whether a written contract is actually entered into or whether the sale is ever consummated by the delivery of the property and the payment of the purchase price." Twogood v. Monnette, 191 Cal. 103, 107, 215 P. 542, 543.

See, also, to the same effect, Umphray v. Hufschmidt, supra; Frank Meline Co. v. Kleinberger, 77 Cal. App. 193, 246 P. 136; Ford v. Cotton (Cal. App.) 256 P. 301; and numerous other cases.

It has also been well said:

"Whether the sale was prevented by the failure of perfect title or by the mere will of the vendor makes no difference. In either case the compensation had been earned by the agent. Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144 (28 P. 857); Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306-311; Justy v. Erro, 16 Cal. App. 519-522, 117 P. 575; Neilson v. Lee, 60 Cal. 555; Stanton v. Carnahan, 15 Cal. App. 527-529, 115 P. 339." Purcell v. Firth, 175 Cal. 746, 750, 167 P. 379, 381.

"Second, the law as to this contract is no different from the law as to brokers' contracts generally; that is to say, where the contract fixes the broker's right to remuneration upon his sale, if he shall produce a purchaser able and willing to buy, he has performed his part of the contract, and the owner's liability for his compensation or commission is complete, and cannot be avoided by any arbitrary or wanton refusal to consummate the sale." Merriman v. Wickersham, 141 Cal. 567, 570, 75 P. 180, 181.

The findings made by the court in the respects above noted being as a matter of law contrary to the evidence, the judgment is reversed.

NERSKI et al. v. HAMMOND LUMBER CO.
(L. A. 8924.)★

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 12, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⇨907(3)—Where appeal involving interpretation of contract is presented on judgment roll alone, appellate court must assume evidence justified trial court's interpretation of uncertainty.

Where appeal involving interpretation of contract is presented on the judgment roll alone, without a bill of exceptions and without any evidence, appellate court must assume that legal evidence was received, which explained the contract and justified the court's conclusion, notwithstanding uncertainty appears on the face of the contract.

2. Tender ⇨22—To enforce rights which would have expired without tender of payment, complaint should show plaintiff is ready and able to pay.

To enforce rights which would have expired, but for a tender of payment, it should appear from plaintiff's complaint that he is ready and able to make payment.

3. Mortgages ⇨605—Where plaintiff's rights to reconveyance of trust deed depend on tender, allegations of readiness and ability to pay will preserve them, without deposit in court.

In action to obtain reconveyance, release and discharge of a deed of trust, where plaintiff's rights depend on tender, allegations of readiness and ability to pay will preserve his rights, without the necessity of depositing money in court when he files his complaint.

4. Mortgages ⇨621—Judgment ordering reconveyance of trust deed on plaintiff's payment of amount due need not necessarily limit time for payment.

In action to obtain reconveyance, release and discharge of deed of trust, judgment directing such reconveyance is not fatally defective, because it fails to provide that plaintiff must pay amount due within a specified period of time to obtain benefits of judgment.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by J. L. Nerski and others against the Hammond Lumber Company to compel reconveyance of deed of trust. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank J. McDougal, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. This is an appeal on the judgment roll alone from a judgment of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, directing defendant, Hammond Lumber Company, upon receipt of $700 from the plaintiffs, or any of them, to reconvey, release, and discharge a deed of trust executed by plaintiffs W. P. Dyer and Katie Dyer, his wife, in favor of defendant, as security for the payment of $1,500. The court found that plaintiffs were entitled to a reconveyance upon payment of the lesser sum of $700, under and by virtue of a written agreement between plaintiff W. P. Dyer and said Hammond Lumber Company, entered into subsequent to the execution of the deed of trust. The interpretation to be given said agreement is the matter here at issue. Plaintiffs J. L. Nerski and Monana I. Nerski are purchasers from the Dyers of said real property described in the deed of trust, and assignees of all rights of the Dyers under said agreement.

It appears from the allegations of the complaint, all of which were found by the court to be true, and from the findings, that plaintiff W. P. Dyer and his brother, Robert R. Dyer, copartners doing business under the firm names of Dyer & Dyer Lumber Company and Dyer Construction Company, were purchasers of large quantities of building materials from defendant. As collateral to secure payment of the indebtedness of the partnership to the lumber company then existing or thereafter to arise, plaintiffs W. P. Dyer and Katie Dyer, his wife, on May 12, 1924, executed a deed of trust on real property owned by them, which recited that it was given to secure payment of $1,500 of said indebtedness. Soon thereafter the partnership "got into business difficulties," and it was decided by the defendant, who was the largest creditor, and by the other creditors, that they would undertake to make arrangements with the copartnership, whereby plaintiff W. P. Dyer should retire from the copartnership and relinquish his entire interest therein to his copartner, Robert R. Dyer, who should thereafter conduct the business under the control of a creditors' committee. As a result of their negotiations the agreement here before us for interpretation was executed by W. P. Dyer and the Hammond Lumber Company. Said agreement is as follows:

"In consideration of the following agreement W. P. Dyer hereby agrees to release Dyer and Dyer Lumber Company from any claims that he may have against the partnership and he does hereby relinquish all his right, title, and interest in the partnership to Robert R. Dyer:

"The Hammond Lumber Company will agree that they will not take any action whatever on that certain trust deed made in favor of Hammond Lumber Company and signed by W. P. Dyer and Mrs. Kate Dyer, his wife, for a period of six months from date hereof; it being understood and agreed that, when they have [been reimbursed for the $700, for which they stand] guaranteed to the McCleary Lumber Company, and which the Hammond Lumber Company will pay, they will agree to surrender to the said W. P. Dyer the said trust deed, upon receipt of the $700 when received pro rata from the business or paid by W. P. Dyer. [The words above in brackets were undoubtedly inadvertently omitted from the contract as set out in the findings. They are included, however, in the answer, and no point is made that the contract did not contain the bracketed words.]

"It is not the intention of this agreement that the Hammond Lumber Company will apply the first moneys received, in payment of the above-mentioned $700, but only such part of such moneys as the pro rata applicable to said amount bears to the whole Hammond Lumber Company account, or $60 for every $1,000 received by H. L. Company.

"Signed this 5th day of August, 1924."

[1] The contract is loosely drawn, and is lacking in definiteness and certainty as to the mutual obligations of the parties sought to be bound by it. This state of uncertainty is chargeable against the appellant, inasmuch as its agent prepared the contract. The case is presented on the judgment roll alone, and we are neither assisted by a bill of exceptions nor a single line of evidence. Such being the case, we must assume, even though uncertainty appears upon the face of the contract, that legal evidence was received by the court which fully explained the transaction and justified the court's conclusion.

[2-4] Appellant also contends that the judgment directing a reconveyance upon payment to appellant to $700 should have specified a limit to the time within which said sum should be paid and the reconveyance obtained. It is unnecessary for us to here consider or decide whether the tender of the $700 within the time required by the contract and appellant's refusal to accept it would discharge the lien of the deed of trust (Civ. Code

Cal. §§ 2905, 1504; 24 Cal. Jur. 534), with the result that respondents would be entitled to the reconveyance of the property without the payment of any sum whatsoever, for the reason that the action has been tried upon the theory that payment of the amount required by the contract of August 5, 1924, remained a condition precedent to the right to obtain a reconveyance even after tender and refusal of the defendant to accept it.

Respondents in their complaint prayed that the court direct a reconveyance of the deed of trust upon payment of the sum required by the contract, and they have not appealed from the judgment making reconveyance conditional upon payment to appellant of $700. Where an attempt is made to enforce rights which would have expired, but for a tender of payment, it should appear from the complaint that plaintiff is ready and able to make payment, and such readiness and ability, without a deposit in court at the time of the filing of the complaint, is, under modern practice, sufficient to preserve the rights of plaintiff. Since continued ability and readiness on the part of the plaintiff to pay the amount previously tendered is required, it is the practice to provide in the judgment that plaintiff must pay such amount to the defendant within a period of time specified by the court if he would avail himself of the fruits of the judgment. The failure to so provide is not fatal, however, for the defendant may, at any time after the entry of the judgment, tender to plaintiff performance of the act which the court has directed him to perform, and if the plaintiff then refuses to accept the offer of performance and to pay the amount specified in the judgment, he thereby manifests a lack of readiness and ability to pay the amount previously tendered which precludes him from thereafter enforcing the judgment, and the defendant upon an application to the court may obtain a judicial determination of such fact. In the instant case, however, we deem it advisable, in the interests of clarity and convenience, to modify the judgment hitherto entered, by providing that plaintiff shall be allowed 10 days after the going down of the remittitur herein to tender the $700 and obtain a reconveyance and release of the deed of trust.

As so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

INDEPENDENCE INDEMNITY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA. (L. A. 10001.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 4, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 2, 1928.

1. Master and servant ⇨361—One having both general and special employer may look to either or both for compensation for injury sustained in special employment (Workmen's Compensation Act).

Under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), one having both a general and a special employer may, when injury is sustained in the special employment, look to either the general or special employer for compensation.

2. Master and servant ⇨361—Right to control employee's activities gives rise to status of special employer, making him liable for injuries sustained in employment (Workmen's Compensation Act).

For liability to attach to a special employer, under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), the injured person must have been at the time of his injury subject to the direction and control of such special employer, since it is the right to control and direct the activities of the employee that gives rise to the status of special employer.

3. Master and servant ⇨417(7)—Findings of Industrial Accident Commission are reviewable only in so far as they have been made without evidence (Workmen's Compensation Act).

The findings of the Industrial Accident Commission, under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), are subject to review only in so far as they have been made without any evidence whatever to support them.

4. Master and servant ⇨361—Railroad's section crew members held "special employees" of moving picture company during period consumed in filming pictures (Workmen's Compensation Act).

Where a moving picture filming company hired from a railroad company a section crew to use in the filming of certain scenes, held, that the members of the section crew were, within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), special employees of the filming company during the period consumed in taking pictures.

5. Master and servant ⇨361—Mere payment of wages is insufficient to establish that recipient is servant of one paying same.

The mere payment of wages or salary is insufficient to establish that the recipient thereof is the servant of the one paying the same.

6. Master and servant ⇨361—Moving picture company's payment for time held not proof section crew was in company's employ during return to railroad work (Workmen's Compensation Act).

In a proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended) to recover compensation for the death of a railroad section hand, alleged to have been in the special employ of a moving picture filming company at the time of his injury resulting in death, held, that the picture company's having paid the railroad company for the time consumed in the crew's returning to railroad work after dismissal by the picture director was not, in itself, sufficient to establish that at the time of decedent's death he was in the special employ of the filming company.

7. Master and servant ⇨405(2)—Evidence held not to show railroad section hand was in special employ of moving picture company while returning after filming picture (Workmen's Compensation Act).

In a proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended) to recover for death of a railroad section hand, killed while returning from special employment with moving picture filming company, evidence held not to show that at the time of the accident the deceased was in the special employ of the filming company.

Shenk, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act for the death of Leo Loya, brought on behalf of his father and son, and opposed by the William Fox Vaudeville Company, alleged special employer, and the Independence Indemnity Company, insurer. An award was made by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the insurer brings certiorari to review the commission's award. Award annulled, and cause remanded to the commission for further proceedings.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal, 257 P. 107.

Rehearing denied; SHENK and LANGDON, JJ., dissenting.

Floyd T. Scheidell, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Certiorari to review an award of the respondent Industrial Accident Commission. An application for adjustment of claim was filed with the respondent commission on behalf of the father and dependent minor son of one Leo Loya, deceased. At the time of his death on January 3, 1926, the deceased was in the employ of the Southern Pacific Company as a member of a section crew operating upon the lines of said railroad in the vicinity of Los Angeles. After hearing it was found that the Southern Pacific Company was the general employer of the deceased, and that the Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company was the special employer for whom he was rendering service when fatally injured. Petitioner, as insurance carrier of the Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company, was thereupon directed to pay the death benefit awarded to the minor son of deceased. No award was made in favor of the father, for it was found that he was neither wholly nor partially dependent upon the deceased for support. In this proceeding we are confronted by the question of whether or not the evidence adduced upon the hearing before the respondent commission warrants and supports the finding of the relation of special employer and special employee at the time of the accident as between the Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company and Loya, the deceased. If this finding is without support in the record the order directing petitioner, as insurance carrier of the Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company, to pay the death benefit would be in excess of the commission's jurisdiction.

It appears from the transcript that on the morning of January 3, 1926, the crew of laborers of which Loya was a member proceeded under orders of the Southern Pacific Company from their home base at Saugus, which lies between Los Angeles and Castaic, to Camulos, beyond Castaic, where they assisted in clearing a wreck on the line. This work having been completed, the crew returned to Castaic and at approximately 1:30 p. m. of that day reported to the Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company, then on "location," for the filming of moving pictures. To secure certain train scenes necessary to the completion of the picture being filmed the Fox Company had previously arranged with the Southern Pacific Company to have present at Castaic a special moving picture train together with a gasoline operated motorcar to be used to transport the camera during the filming operations. As stated, this latter car with its crew reported at Castaic about 1:30 p. m. to the agents of the Fox Company. The filming of the desired scenes consumed the greater part of the afternoon. At approximately 4 p. m. the crews of both the train and smaller car were dismissed by the assistant director of the film company. The latter crew, apparently under direction of the section gang foreman, thereupon proceeded toward Saugus, the home base. In some manner the small car became derailed during this trip, and the deceased was thrown to the ground. The injuries received were such as to almost immediately cause his death. At or about the time arrangements were made for the use of the railroad facilities the film company, through an agent, executed a written instrument purporting to be an indemnification agreement whereby the Fox Company agreed, in part:

"To pay for any injury or damage that may occur to the property of the Southern Pacific Company or its employees through the use of its property by the undersigned which may be sustained by reason of any cause whatsoever, reasonable wear and tear excepted."

Issue has arisen herein as to the validity and effect of this agreement. With the merits of this dispute we are not concerned, for the conclusion we have reached renders it unnecessary that we pass upon the validity of said agreement.

[1] The sole question presented herein would seem to be whether the deceased at the time of his death was in the special employ of the Fox Company so as to render its insurance carrier, petitioner, responsible, under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831 as amended). It is now well settled in this state that an employee may at the same time be under a general and a special employer. Famous Players Lasky Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, 194 Cal. 134, 136, 228 P. 5, 34 A. L. R. 765; Employers' L. A. Corp. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 179 Cal. 432, 438, 177 P. 273; Diamond Drill Contracting Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 199 Cal. 694, 697, 250 P. 862. The case of Famous Players Lasky Corp. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, points out that such employee may, so far as the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act are applicable, look to the one or to the other of such employers, or to both, for compensation for injuries due to occupational hazards. See, also, Employers' L. A. Corp. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra; Pruitt v. Industrial Accident Commission, 189 Cal. 459, 209 P. 31; De Noyer v. Cavanaugh, 221 N. Y. 273, 116 N. E. 992.

[2] The authorities would seem to indicate, however, that for liability to attach to the special employer the injured person must have been at the time of the accident subject to the direction and control of such special employer, for it is this right to control and direct the activities of the employee that gives rise to the status of special employer. Famous Players Lasky Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra; Employers' L. A. Corp. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra; Stacey Bros., etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 197 Cal. 164, 169, 239 P. 1072; Scribner's Case, 231 Mass. 132, 120 N. E. 350, 3 A. L. R. 1178; De Noyer v. Cavanaugh, supra; Pigeon v. Employers' L. A. Corp., 216 Mass. 51, 102 N. E. 932, 933, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 737; Coughlan v. City of Cambridge, 166 Mass. 268, 44 N. E. 218, 219.

In the case of Famous Players Lasky Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, it is declared that:

"Where either by the terms of the contract or during the course of its performance the employee of the alleged independent contractor comes under the control and direction of the other party to such contract and suffers injury in the course of and in consequence of such direction and control, the relation of both general and special employer may be held to exist, and the injured employee has been held entitled to compensation from both the general and the special employer." (Italics added.)

The opinion in that case also quotes approvingly from De Noyer v. Cavanaugh, supra, wherein it is stated:

"If the men are under the exclusive control of the special employer in the performance of work which is a part of his business, they are, for the time being, his employees." (Italics ours.)

We cannot accept the contention advanced by counsel for the respondent commission that the "facts in the case at bar are almost four square with those presented in the case of Famous P. L. Corp. v. I. A. C.," supra, for in that case it very clearly appears that the claimant was injured while performing under the immediate direction of the agents of the film company and during the actual filming of scenes. It is readily apparent, therefore, that at the very time of the accident there involved the relationship of special employer and employee existed and the award against the special employer was proper. The case of Employers' L. A. Corp. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, approves the following test:

"In determining whether, in a particular act, he is the servant of his original master or of the person to whom he has been furnished, the general test is whether the act is done in business of which the person is in control as a proprietor, so that he can at any time stop it or continue it, and determine the way in which it shall be done, not merely in reference to the result to be reached, but in reference to the method of reaching the result. * * * The test is whether, in the particular service which he is engaged to perform, he continues liable to the direction and control of his master, or becomes subject to that of the party to whom he is lent or hired."

Following a review of the authorities the case of Stacey Bros., etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, states that:

"The real test of what constitutes special employment may be said to be found in the character of the control and supervision exercised by the alleged special employer over the work and the employee engaged in the doing of the same."

[3] With these principles before us we experience no hesitancy in declaring to be without support in the record the finding to the effect that the relationship of special employer and employee existed as between the Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company and the deceased at the time of the accident. Of course, the findings of the Industrial Accident Commission are subject to review only in so far as they have been made without any evidence whatever in support thereof. Southern Pacific Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 177 Cal. 378, 170 P. 822; Dearborn v. Industrial Accident Commission, 187 Cal. 591, 203 P. 112; Elk Grove Dist. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 34 Cal. App. 589, 590, 168 P. 392. Our examination of the record has failed to disclose any evidence tending to show that the Fox Company or its agents had or exerted any right of control or direction over the section crew on its return trip to Saugus. H. E. Pierson, district passenger agent of the Southern Pacific Company, called on behalf of said company, and in response to a question whether the deceased was rendering any service to the film company at the time of the accident, testified that he could not say, and that deceased "was en route home from the Fox Company having performed services; we will put it that way." Again, he testified that deceased "had been employed in the afternoon by the Wm. Fox Company." (Italics added.) The agents of the Fox Company very definitely testified that their work was finished at about 4 p. m., and that they "dismissed" both the train and section crew. There is absolutely nothing in the record before us to indicate that the agents of the film company either directed the crew to return to Saugus or exerted any control over their trip to that point. In fact, the record would seem to indicate that upon dismissal the section crew no longer remained subject to the control of the film company.

[4] Under these circumstances it must be held that the commission exceeded its jurisdiction in determining that the film company continued in the status of special employer subsequent to such dismissal and relinquishment of the right of direction. We are not to be understood as holding, however, that at no time did the film company occupy the status of special employer. In our opinion, that relationship sprung into existence and continued in force all during that period consumed in the filming of the pictures. In other words, from the time the crew reported to the Fox Company at approximately 1:30 p. m. and until about 4 p. m., when they were dismissed, they were in the special employ of the film company and the general employ of the Southern Pacific Company. If at any time during that period the deceased had been injured the commission unquestionably would have had jurisdiction, under the authorities, to award compensation as against either the general employer or the special employer, or both. But, as stated, upon its dismissal of the section crew at 4 p. m. the Fox Company ceased to occupy the status of special employer, and the award against its insurance carrier, petitioner herein, was without warrant and not within the jurisdiction of the commission.

[5, 6] The only evidence which might seem to lend support to the contention that the deceased at the time of his death was still in the special employ of the Fox Company is in the form of a bill, introduced in evidence, presented by the Southern Pacific Company and paid by the Fox Company. Certain witnesses called by the Southern Pacific Company testified that the amount stated in the bill represented, among other things, the time consumed by the section crew in returning to the home base at Saugus. It is argued that the payment of this bill by the film company is evidence that it regarded the deceased as an employee at the very time he met with his death. With this conclusion we cannot agree. The film company produced witnesses who testified, in effect, that the bill was paid without exact knowledge of its import and merely to satisfy the claim presented by the railroad company. This being so, it can hardly be said that the payment of the bill constituted an admission upon the part of the film company that the deceased was at the time of the accident in its special employ. Moreover, it has been held that the mere payment of wages or salary, of itself, is insufficient to establish that the recipient thereof is the servant of the one paying the same. Arnett v. Hayes Wheel Co., 201 Mich. 67, 166 N. W. 957, 959.

[7] From what has been said it is apparent that the deceased was not in the special employ of the Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company at the time he met with his untimely death. It becomes unnecessary therefore to pass upon the validity or invalidity of the indemnification agreement, above referred to, for its execution was intended to place upon the Fox Company only such liability as might accrue or attach pending its special use of the Southern Pacific Company's employees. In other words, the indemnification agreement was intended by the parties to relieve the railroad company of responsibility under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act only while the film company exercised some measure of control over the employees of the former. As the accident causing the deceased's death occurred subsequent to the termination of the special employment, the Southern Pacific Company, as general employer, was, in our opinion, the one upon whom the burden of liquidating the award should have been placed. This conclusion precludes the necessity of determining whether, in a proper case, it is obligatory upon the commission to give effect to an indemnification agreement existing between a general and a special employer, assuming the same to have been properly executed. Of course, the commission has power to determine all questions of law and fact upon which liability depends. Federal, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 190 Cal. 97, 103, 210 P. 628.

For the foregoing reasons, the award is annulled and the cause remanded to the respondent commission for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

SHENK, J. I dissent. The Industrial Accident Commission found that the Wm. Fox Vaudeville Company was the special employer of Loya at the time of his fatal injury and rendered an award solely against the petitioner, which is the insurance carrier of that company. In my opinion, the findings of the commission and the award were amply supported by the evidence. The section crew of which the deceased was a member was sent out from Saugus to "location," with instructions to follow the directions of the Fox Company in handling the motorcar from which the deceased was thrown to his death. When the day's work was completed the crew, including the deceased, was sent back to Saugus to the home base on this same motorcar. It was on the return trip to Saugus that the accident occurred. It was the duty of the deceased to assist the Fox Company and return the motorcar to the general employer at Saugus. Until the motor was so returned the deceased was rendering service incidental to the work of the Fox Company in carrying on its work, and until such return the deceased was using the instrumentality provided by the Fox Company in going to and from "location." In this respect the case comes within the rule approved by this court in Makins v. Industrial Accident Commission, 198 Cal. 698, 247 P. 202, 49 A. L. R. 411, wherein it was said, on page 701 (247 P. 203):

"The rule is well settled that an employee, in going to work, comes under the protection of the act when he enters the employer's premises or upon the means provided for access thereto, though the premises and such means of access are not wholly under the employer's control or management."

The main opinion holds that under the evidence the motorcar and its crew had been dismissed and returned wholly to the sphere of the general employer. It applies, in effect, the "going and coming" rule to the situation, but loses sight of the well-established exception to the general rule approved in the Makins Case with supporting authorities. There are two sufficient reasons why the holding of the main opinion on this branch of the case is untenable. First, the evidence was conflicting as to whether the control of the crew on the part of the Fox Company ceased before the crew reached Saugus. There was documentary evidence that the Fox Company actually paid for the service of the crew of which the deceased was a member, until the crew arrived in Saugus. When the main opinion places over against the documentary evidence the oral statements of the witnesses for the Fox Company that the bill for such services was paid without exact knowledge of its import, this court is placing itself in the position of weighing the evidence, a function left entirely to the commission under the law. And, secondly, the "going and coming" rule was not invoked by the Fox Company before the commission, either by pleading or otherwise, on the original hearing or on rehearing. Under sections 18(a) (St. 1923, p. 438) and 64(c) of the act, this defense was waived.

There is a sufficient reason why the award might properly be affirmed as an award solely against the petitioner. The insurance policy executed by the petitioner contained a provision whereby the petitioner agreed with the Fox Company to pay to any person entitled thereto under the Workmen's Compensation Law the entire amount due or to become due to such person because of any application for compensation accepted by the Fox Company. In its contract with the general employer in this case, the Fox Company agreed in writing to hold the general employer harmless from any liability for injury or damage from any cause which might accrue to the employees of the general employer during the progress of the work of the Fox Company. The commission undoubtedly relieved the general employer from its liability as such by reason of this contract. And I think the commission was justified in so holding. The main opinion refuses to pass upon the effect of this contract, deeming it unnecessary to do so. I fail to see why this contract should not be given force and effect. The contention of the petitioner that the contract was not executed with the requisite authority should not be sustained. The contract was signed in the name of the company under its corporate seal by an agent of the company having to do with the ordering of equipment and men, and by the same man claimed by the petitioner to have dismissed the crew at "location." Furthermore, it was stipulated that this same man had authority from the Fox Company to engage the equipment which would include the small car from which the deceased fell. The petitioner is in no position to complain of the effect of such contract, for it expressly agreed to indemnify against liability assumed, as here, by the Fox Company. Brooks v. A. A. Davis & Co. (Okla. Sup.) 254 P. 66.

PEOPLE v. KIRSCH. (Cr. 1499.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 17, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 15, 1928.

1. Sales ⇨212—Title passed to junk sold for cash on segregation and identification, irrespective of subsequent weighing.

Title to junk material, under contract providing for cash payment on receipt of delivery, passed to buyer making cash payment as soon as goods sold were segregated and property was thereby definitely identified, irrespective of subsequent weighing and of juggling weighmaster's tickets, of which buyer was accused.

2. Larceny ⇨7—Junk dealer receiving delivery of definite junk material purchased was not guilty of larceny in alleged subsequent removing of part of load and juggling weighmaster's tickets.

Alleged juggling of weighmaster's tickets and passing of ticket for lighter load of junk sold after unloading part of load and reweighing held not to constitute larceny on part of junk dealer, where acts were committed after delivery had been made of identified goods, since segregation and identification passed title.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

A. Kirsch was convicted of larceny, and he appeals. Reversed.

Paul W. Schenck, of Los Angeles, and Clifford K. Fitzgerald, of San Diego, for appellant.

Stephen Connell, Dist. Atty., of San Diego, for the People.

YORK, J. Appeals from judgment of conviction on the verdict of the jury finding the defendant guilty of grand larceny under count 4, and guilty of petit larceny under count 10, of an indictment returned by the grand jury of San Diego county originally containing 12 counts charging the defendant with larceny, false pretenses, and embezzlement, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

To simplify the matter, there were four transactions which were charged in three separate ways and in that way making up the twelve counts of the indictment. The court sustained a demurrer to counts 2, 5, 8, and 11 (the false pretense counts), and overruled the demurrer as to the remaining eight counts. The defendant entered a plea of not guilty to the remaining counts, and was found guilty of grand larceny under count 4 and guilty of petit larceny under count 10.

The very voluminous transcript and the lengthy briefs filed would make the matter appear to be more complicated than it really is. The defendant was the vice president of a company buying certain junk. The evidence clearly shows that by the juggling of weighmaster's tickets by the defendant in the one instance, and the unloading of part of one load after weighing and the reweighing of the remaining portion, and the passing by the defendant of the ticket for this lighter load as a ticket for the full amount received, the defendant succeeded in fixing it so that his company would pay less than the actual amount of the value of the material received as fixed by the contract in the amounts and to the extent as charged in indictments Nos. 4 and 10, on which indictments he was convicted of larceny. The defendant did not testify at the trial.

Portions of the agreement for the sale of this junk material between the Western Electric Company and the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company in the first instance, whereby the right was given to the Western Electric Company to purchase or to sell for and on account of the telephone company all of the junk material accumulated at certain plants within the state, including San Diego, are in the record. The Sugarman Iron & Metals Company entered into a contract with the Western Electric Company agreeing to purchase certain of said junk, evidently the parties considering that the Western Electric Company was the agent of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company, although it makes such contract in its own name. This contract provided for a bond of $60,000, to protect the Western Electric Company and guarantee to the Western Electric Company "the faithful performance of the contract," the Sugarman Company to pay upon receipt of invoice. The Sugarman Company then made the agreement with the defendant's company, the Amalgamated Metals Corporation, of which the defendant was vice president, by which contract it was provided that the junk material was to be purchased by his company at a price to be ascertained, and said contract provided:

"It is further understood and agreed that prompt cash payment will be made to the party of the first part immediately after receipt of any deliveries made to the party of the second part."

It is contended by appellant that the crime of larceny was not committed under the facts shown, because title to the property had passed to the defendant (or rather, to his company) before the taking and carrying away.

[1, 2] The contracts provided for the segregation of the material in the yards of the telephone company at San Diego. Not only was this segregation made, but an actual physical delivery was made to the defendant either for his company or the Sugarman Iron & Metals Company. The record is somewhat cloudy on this question, as he signed receipts, "The Sugarman Iron & Metals Company, by A. Kirsch," and these receipts ran to the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company, while the record discloses the fact that he was claiming to receive the same for the Amalgamated Metals Corporation. The deliveries having been thus made to the defendant under these contracts, we will have to hold that title had passed to the defendant's company as soon as a segregation of the goods sold was made and the property thereby definitely identified. See Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 18 P. 248, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199. We quote from pages 217, 218 (18 P. 251) of that decision:

"So far as concerns the proposition that where weighing or measuring is necessary to the identification of the goods, the title does not pass until they have been weighed or measured, the American cases are generally in accord with the above rule (citing cases).

"In California the cases are to the same effect. See Horr v. Barker, 8 Cal. 608; McLaughlin v. Piatti, 27 Cal. 463; Caruthers v. McGarvey, 41 Cal. 15. Some of the American cases are not in accord with the rule laid down by Mr. Benjamin in this: That if the goods are identified, it does not matter that weighing or measuring is necessary to ascertain the price or the quantity. And this seems to be the law in California. For the Civil Code contains the following: 'Sec. 1140. The title to personal property, sold or exchanged, passes to the buyer whenever the parties agree upon a present transfer, and the thing itself is identified, whether it is separated from other things or not.'

"This section does not dispense with identification. On the contrary, it requires it. It only dispenses with segregation when the property is otherwise identified. Therefore where the identification consists in the segregation, weighing, or measuring, they are still necessary."

All of the acts of the defendant charged in the two counts of the indictment on which he was convicted were done by him after such physical delivery of the goods to him. In view of our decision on the one point herein discussed, it is not necessary to discuss the other points raised.

The judgments and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

STEVENS v. WEISBAUM et al. (Civ. 5006.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 19, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 16, 1928.

1. Pleading §433(7)—Inferential allegation of assignment of claim sued on held sufficient as against attack after judgment.

In action on assigned claim of salary due from corporation against executrix of deceased stockholder, complaint not demurred to, although not directly alleging assignment but mentioning former owner of claim as plaintiff's assignor, held sufficiently to allege assignment as against attack after judgment.

2. Corporations §238—Stockholder held liable on corporation's default for proportion of employee's salary falling due after becoming stockholder.

Party becoming stockholder after corporation hired employees by month held liable on corporation's default for payment in proportion to his stock of salaries becoming due after he became stockholder, but not before such time.

3. Set-off and counterclaim §34(1)—In corporate employee's action against stockholder's estate for salaries, debt of corporation paid by estate unrelated to transaction could not be set off.

In action to hold stockholder's estate liable for salaries of corporation's employees, alleged counterclaim based on estate's payment of corporation's debt, not shown to represent indebtedness growing out of same transaction or to be related thereto, could not legally be set off.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by H. G. Stevens against Jane B. Weisbaum, as executrix of the estate of Harry L. Weisbaum, deceased, to enforce a stockholder's liability. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Sebald L. Cheroske, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bicksler, Smith & Parke, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. The plaintiff and respondent instituted this action against the executrix of the estate of Harry L. Weisbaum, deceased, alleging that from January 21, 1921, to July 31, 1921, plaintiff was employed by the H. G. Stevens Company, a corporation, at an agreed salary of $200 per month, of which but $47 had been paid, and that he advanced to the corporation $100, none of which sum had been repaid; that one C. C. Stevens, "plaintiff's assignor," was employed by said corporation from February 1, 1921, to July 31, 1921, at an agreed salary of $100 per month, of which amount but $20.51 had been paid. It was further alleged in the complaint that Harry L. Weisbaum was a stockholder of the corporation mentioned, and that his proportionate liability as such stockholder for the salaries remaining unpaid was $751 and $570, respectively; that Weisbaum died testate on June 3, 1921; and that the plaintiff had duly presented to the executrix of his estate proper claims for said amounts, each of which was rejected, and judgment was prayed therefor.

The defendant and appellant by answer denied the existence of the corporation, the employment of said parties, and the indebtedness, affirmatively alleging that the corporation applied to the commissioner of corporations for a permit to issue 4,000 shares of stock, 1,000 each to the plaintiff H. G. Stevens, C. C. Stevens, Benjamin L. Frank, and Harry L. Weisbaum, since deceased, but that these proceedings had not at the time of the latter's death been completed; that the "corporation was suspended" on March 4, 1922, for failure to pay the state license and franchise taxes; that the two Stevenses were actually liable with the defendant for any moneys due the plaintiff or "his assignor"; and by counterclaim appellant alleged that the corporation incurred an indebtedness amounting to $1,062.46, of which $683.83 had been paid by said estate, and prayed that the Stevenses' proportionate share of such liability be set off against any judgment that might be rendered in favor of the plaintiff.

The trial court found generally that all of the allegations of the complaint were true, and specifically found that there were issued to Weisbaum on February 17, 1921, 425 shares, February 26, 1921, 200 shares, and March 8, 1921, 200 shares of the capital stock of the corporation in question; and that on February 11, 1921, there was issued one share of stock to each of the three other persons named in the pleadings; that the plaintiff had been paid his salary to April 15, 1921, and that his assignor had received $20.51 on account of the February services, and that the plaintiff had also been paid $47 on account of salary earned after April 15. The trial court rendered judgment for the full amount of $751 in favor of the plaintiff and $535 to his assignor, against the estate, and the defendant appealed. We think the judgment was excessive.

[1] There is no direct allegation in the complaint, nor did the court find, that the claim of C. C. Stevens had been assigned to the plaintiff; this party is mentioned several times in the complaint and answer as "plaintiff's assignor," and appellant in her pleadings demands an apportionment of any indebtedness as against "plaintiff or his assignor," in the event that one should be found to exist. No demurrer was filed by the defendant, and the assignment will therefore be inferred from the language of the complaint quoted, which under the circumstances of this case is sufficient. It has been held that in the absence of special demurrer an inferential statement of such facts, although not commended, will, after judgment, be sustained as a sufficient allegation for the purposes of trial. Estate of Behrens, 130 Cal. 416, 418, 62 P. 603; Williams v. Ashe, 111 Cal. 180, 43 P. 595; Amestoy v. Electric Rapid Transit Co., 95 Cal. 311, 30 P. 550. The plaintiff's right to maintain an action for the amount alleged to be due C. C. Stevens must therefore be upheld on appeal.

[2] It is contended that the estate was not liable for any amount and hence that the judgment must be reversed, because, it is asserted, Harry L. Weisbaum was not a stockholder at the time the contracts of employment were entered into. It appears that respondent was employed on January 21, 1921, and that C. C. Stevens, his assignor, was employed on February 1, 1921; whereas, Weisbaum acquired his stock in the amounts and upon the dates heretofore noted. However, allowing credit for the amounts found to have been paid on account of salaries, the plaintiff was personally compensated at the rate of about $6.70 per day after April 15 (at $200 per month), or until April 22, 1921, while his assignor commenced February 1, and had received $20.51. The deceased, who held all of the issued capital stock except three shares, became a stockholder on February 17, 1921. Appellant's theory is that although the employees were engaged at stipulated monthly salaries, that fact did not create a month to month service, but that since there was no showing as to when it should terminate, the contract of employment was in each instance a continuous one, commencing before the decedent became a stockholder, and that he was not bound thereby upon a stockholder's liability to contribute toward any portion of the salaries. But it has been held otherwise in this state. In Shuler v. Corl, 39 Cal. App. 195, 178 P. 535, it appeared that the plaintiff was employed under a written stipulation that she should work "for as long a period as the plaintiff should choose to work for defendant, whether a month or years." It was there held that the plaintiff's employment was literally for life unless she chose to terminate it, but that "the various sums of money which would become due to plaintiff would accrue at the end of each month during the period of her employment," so that, the action having been founded upon a contract made outside the state, the statute of limitations would bar each monthly amount, as it in turn passed beyond the two-year period.

Here, as there, at the end of each period of one month from the commencement of the service, the respective sums of $200 and $100 became due to the employees, and became an added obligation of the corporation. Plaintiff was not employed at the rate of $2,400 per annum, payable in equal monthly installments, nor was his assignor so employed. There is no analogy between the facts here presented and those of cases cited by appellant, where a corporation ordered a quantity of goods, and assumed an obligation to purchase them, but they were in fact not delivered until after one from whom it was subsequently sought to collect had become a stockholder. In the latter instances the whole obligation arose and became an existing agreement to pay the total sum, although the contract may not have been fulfilled, and payment may have been delayed, until a later date; whereas, in the instant case nothing was due when the agreement was made, and each successive monthly sum became an obligation only as services were performed, from month to month.

We think, however, that the trial court was in error in allowing the full amount to each employee, since the deceased did not become a stockholder until February 17, 1921; whereas, plaintiff's assignor commenced February 1, 1921, and was paid for about five days in that month. Weisbaum was not a stockholder at the time the February obligation was contracted for, or earned, but on March 1, when the succeeding month began, he held 625 shares, and the other stockholders held one share each, upon which respective holding each became liable for his proportion of the unpaid amount due C. C. Stevens for salary. In April, 1921, Weisbaum held 1,000 shares, and he and the other stockholders holding one share each became proportionately liable for the fractional month's salary due the plaintiff from April 15 to April 21, plus the $100 loaned by the plaintiff, and less $47, as well as for the full month of April's services rendered by the latter's assignor. For the succeeding months of May, June, and July the four stockholders would be liable in like proportions for the salaries of said employees.

[3] As to the counterclaim asserted by the appellant, there is no showing that the $683.-83 represented an indebtedness growing out of the same transaction, or that it bore any relation whatsoever to the employment of the Stevenses. It could not legally be set off against any judgment rendered in this action.

The judgment should be modified in accordance with the foregoing, and as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

87 Cal. App. 758

SANTOS et ux. v. SCHARZ. (Civ. 6021.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 23, 1927.

1. Pleading $\S$ 18—Allegation that plaintiff was thrown violently to ground, causing injury to hips and lower back, resulting in miscarriage, held sufficiently certain.

Complaint in action for injuries from automobile collision, alleging that plaintiff was thrown violently to hard pavement causing her to be injured across hips and lower back about the body, so that miscarriage resulted, was sufficiently certain; it being a matter of common knowledge that such a result would be intimately associated with any violent injury to the body, particularly portions of body described.

2. Damages $\S$ 177—Evidence of cost of repair of automobile held admissible to determine whether diminution in value was less than cost of repair.

In action for damages to automobile from collision, testimony as to cost of repairing automobile was properly admitted as proof of extent of plaintiff's damages, since such cost is necessary in determining whether diminution in value of automobile (which is proper measure of damages unless cost of repair is less), is less than cost of repair.

3. Damages $\S$ 185(1)—Evidence held sufficient to show connection between injuries received by plaintiff in automobile collision and subsequent miscarriage.

In action for injuries from automobile collision, evidence held sufficient to show connection between injuries received by plaintiff and subsequent miscarriage.

4. Appeal and error ⚡757(3)—Sufficiency of evidence to support finding of defendant's negligence will be assumed, where defendant fails to present any evidence on question.

Where defendant appellant, in automobile collision case, nowhere in brief presents any evidence as to his negligence, appellate court is entitled to assume that there was evidence sufficient to support finding of defendant's negligence.

5. Trial ⚡395(2)—Finding on issue of contributory negligence held not so indefinite and unintelligible as to require reversal.

Finding on issue of contributory negligence, which was drawn evidently to controvert allegations of answer wherein contributory negligence of plaintiff was set up, held sufficiently definite as to preclude justification for reversal, though ambiguity resulted from the so-called "and or" method of denial.

6. Municipal corporations ⚡705(10)—Plaintiff's failure to signal before starting held not contributory negligence as matter of law, where it contributed in no way to collision (Motor Vehicle Act, § 130, as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15a),

Even though plaintiff suing for injuries from automobile collision violated Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553), § 130, as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15a, in failing to signal before moving into street intersection, she was not thereby guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, in view of evidence that failure to give signal could not, under the circumstances, have contributed in any way to the collision.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; H. B. Brown, Judge.

Action by J. P. Santos and wife against R. E. Scharz. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Cooley & Gallagher, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John W. Sullivan, of San Jose, for respondents.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. This is an action brought by J. P. Santos and Mary Santos, his wife, for damages alleged to have been sustained by them as the result of an automobile collision.

The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury. Judgment went for plaintiffs, and thereafter the court denied defendant's motion for a new trial. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

Errors relied upon by appellant are embraced in five specifications:

[1] (1) The court erred in its order overruling the demurrer of defendant to the complaint of plaintiffs. The complaint alleges: That the automobile of defendant violently struck and injured plaintiff Mary Santos, causing her to be violently thrown to the hard pavement of the ground, rendering her unconscious, and causing her to be bruised, and injured about her body, black and blue marks being inflicted upon the hip and left leg and across the hips and lower back, and bruises being inflicted on the head, and so injured her physically that a miscarriage was caused, and as a result thereof "the said unborn child passed from her body and died, and as a result plaintiffs lost said unborn child."

Defendant, by special demurrer based upon the ground of uncertainty, complained of the allegations just quoted upon the ground "said complaint is uncertain, in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom how Mary Santos was so injured physically that a miscarriage was caused," and "said complaint is uncertain in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom what alleged injuries or injury caused any alleged unborn child to be lost by plaintiff."

Summarizing the allegation assailed, it states therein that plaintiff Mary Santos was thrown violently to the hard pavement of the ground, causing her to be injured about the body, evidenced by black and blue spots across the hips and lower back, and was so injured physically that a miscarriage resulted. We deem the allegation sufficiently certain. The allegations must be read as a connected whole. It would go beyond the requirements of good pleading to insist that a minute and anatomically accurate detail of the effect on each organ of the body be set forth. It is a matter of common knowledge that a result such as is here alleged would be intimately associated with any violent injury to the body and particularly the portions of the body described. Appellant cites the following cases in support of his contention: Fort Worth Railway v. Morrison, 58 Tex. Civ. App. 74, 123 S. W. 212; San Antonio Ry. Co. v. Adams, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 102, 24 S. W. 839; Shaddock v. Alpine Plank-Road Co., 79 Mich. 7, 44 N. W. 158; Kinsella v. Riesenbergs, 124 App. Div. 322, 108 N. Y. S. 876.

The cases cited have little, if any, application to the instant case. The principle announced in each of these cases, however, is that the allegations should fairly inform the defendant what he is charged with. The general rule is cited in Cyc. vol. 29, p. 569, as follows:

"The nature of injuries should be stated with as much reasonable certainty as their character and nature permit so as to advise the opposite party what character of proof to expect and what the extent of injuries and basis of injuries were."

Appellant cites many cases, and bases his argument upon a line of authority from other jurisdictions to the effect that, if a plaintiff alleges his injuries as bruises and cuts, he cannot prove the loss of a limb. We might accept these authorities and still be far afield in the present inquiry. We have been cited to no authority, nor do we think any can be found, wherein a pleader, after setting forth that his injury consisted of a fractured limb, would be required to go further and allege just exactly how the entire anatomical structure was affected to bring about that result. As indicated, we find no merit in appellant's point.

Appellant states that there were other specifications of uncertainty, but that he does not deem it necessary to mention each one of those specifications, as they are all based upon the same argument, and that, if he is correct in one, he is correct in all. Therefore we see no necessity of further discussing the alleged errors in the court's ruling on the demurrer.

[2] (2) A witness Albertson was called by plaintiff to prove the extent of damage suffered by reason of injury to the automobile of plaintiffs. This witness testified that the cost of necessary repairs to the automobile was $65. Defendant objected to this line of testimony, and upon its admission promptly moved to strike it out, which motion was denied. The court allowed plaintiff for damage to the automobile accordingly the sum of $65. It is defendant's contention here that the proper measure of damages is the difference in the value of the automobile immediately before and after the injury. This is the accepted measure of damages, with the proviso, however, if the injury be capable of repair at an expense less than the diminution in value of the property as injured, the damage is limited to the cost of making such repair. Kincaid v. Dunn, 26 Cal. App. 686, 148 P. 235; Rhodes v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 51 Cal. App. 569, 574, 197 P. 392. Here there was a complete lack of evidence even remotely tending to show what was the diminution in value, if any. However, it is fair to assume that an automobile injured as the evidence shows this one to have been would have suffered some damage, and we cannot arbitrarily assume that the diminution in value was of a lesser amount. In Rhodes v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., supra, the court says:

"Whether or not the plaintiff was actuated in presenting her proof by an erroneous idea as to the proper measure of damages to apply is not important, for, if the amount of the repair bill considered alone was not the true and exclusive measure to apply in the ascertainment of the damages plaintiff had suffered, it was incumbent upon the defendant to have offered proof showing that the diminution in value on account of the injury would be less than the cost of such repairs; thus limiting the damages to a sum not greater than such diminution in value."

In cases of this sort, under the rule it is necessary to show the cost of repair. Otherwise, how could it be determined whether or not the diminution in value was less than the cost of repair. Plaintiff did show the repair cost and stopped. Defendant offered no testimony on the subject. We are content to accept the rule announced in Rhodes v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., supra.

[3] (3) Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision or judgment. Appellant urges that there is no evidence showing that the condition of Mrs. Santos, plaintiff, was brought about by the accident. In other words, no connection is shown between the miscarriage and the injuries received.

The law does not require demonstration. The evidence shows that plaintiff Mrs. Santos, though not a robust person, was enjoying good health, free from pain or aches of any sort, and for her type normal; that in the accident she was thrown violently to the pavement and rendered unconscious; that thereby she was bruised and hurt about the body, particularly the legs, back, and abdomen; that immediately thereafter great quantities of blood passed from her body, and in two days an unborn child was aborted, the fetus being in a stage of development approximated as two months. The testimony of a duly qualified physician, called by plaintiffs, on this subject, is as follows:

"I am not trying to speak of her general condition. I am trying to tell you the miscarriage, that what other trouble she had had nothing to do in this case; that the injury was the only thing that had to do with the miscarriage condition, or at least was enough to produce it."

The subject is of a delicate nature and requires no further detail. The facts shown clearly indicate the sufficiency of the evidence to support the decision and judgment on the point.

[4] (4) The next contention of appellant in his attack upon the sufficiency of the evidence is that there is no evidence at all showing or from which may be inferred any negligence on the part of defendant. It is urged that the evidence discloses the fact of a collision and nothing more. It is the claim of appellant that the mere happening of an accident such as this does not afford the slightest evidence that either party was negligent, and that the presumption is that defendant's automobile was being driven in a lawful manner and free from negligence, and this presumption prevails unless it is controverted by other evidence.

Appellant contents himself with this declaration of legal principles, and nowhere in his brief or in any supplement thereto do we find any of the evidence presented. Hence, we are entitled to assume that there was evidence sufficient to support the finding of defendant's negligence. Dahlberg v. Dahlberg (Cal. Sup.) 260 P. 290; Jeffords v. Young, 197 Cal. 224, 229, 239 P. 1054; Estate of Berry, 195 Cal. 354, 233 P. 330. We have, however, examined the typewritten transcript, and find sufficient evidence to support the judgment.

[5] Appellant's next claim of error is predicated upon the trial court's finding on the issue of contributory negligence. He contends that the finding on that issue is indefinite and unintelligible. The finding on the issue reads as follows:

"That said Mary Santos was not careless or negligent in or about the matters or things in her complaint set forth, and that said carelessness or negligence, or any carelessness or any negligence did not consist in part, or did not exist at all, or consist at all in that she negligently drove or operated, and or did not negligently drive or operate an automobile over and across the intersection of Trimble road and the Oakland highway, or without the exercise of ordinary care for her own safety or protection, or that said negligence, or any negligence, or any negligence of Mary Santos was a proximate cause or any cause of the damage or collision complained of."

The finding was drawn evidently to controvert the allegations of the answer wherein the contributing negligence of plaintiff was set up. Some ambiguity usually results from the so-called "and or" method of denial, but on the whole we think the finding sufficiently definite as to preclude any justification for a reversal of the judgment on the ground set forth.

[6] (5) Lastly, appellant asserts that the plaintiff Mary Santos was guilty of contributory negligence which was a proximate cause of the collision complained of. Appellant claims that the testimony of plaintiff shows that she had stopped her car for a brief period of approximately fifteen seconds before entering the intersection wherein the collision occurred; that before starting her automobile she did not first see that such movement could be made in safety, and she did not give any signal plainly visible to the driver of defendant's car of any intention to start her automobile, and in fact gave no signal of any kind.

Passing entirely the question of the length of time the car was stopped, and the fact that the time of delay was used by plaintiff in looking for passing vehicles to insure her safe crossing, we may concede that her failure to signal did constitute a violation of section 130 of the Motor Vehicle Act (as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15a), which section reads as follows:

"The driver of any vehicles upon a public highway before starting, turning or stopping such vehicles shall first see that such movement can be made in safety, and if it cannot be made in safety, shall wait until it can be made in safety; then, if the operation of any other vehicle may reasonably be affected by such movement, the driver shall give a signal plainly visible to the driver of such other vehicle of the intention to make such movement."

The weak point of appellant's argument is that he fails to connect up even in the slightest degree, this negligence of plaintiff with the defendant or with the collision. Appellant, who was the driver of the automobile which collided with plaintiff Mary Santos, testified that he first saw her car about 125 feet from the point of impact, at which time he himself was 200 feet from the said point of impact. When appellant first saw the car of plaintiff Mary Santos she was traveling at the rate of 15 miles per hour, and he was looking right at her, and she never stopped until the collision. The wife of appellant gave like testimony. From this it is obvious that any negligence of the plaintiff Mary Santos in failing to give a signal before starting could not under any circumstances have contributed in any way to the collision.

There is abundant evidence to show that plaintiff Mary Santos stopped her car before entering the intersection for the express purpose of determining whether or not she could proceed in safety, and that when she entered the intersection the car of appellant was distant some 1,100 feet. The testimony of plaintiff Mary Santos likewise was to the effect that her automobile was partially off the intersecting highway when struck, and that at the time she was driving approximately at a speed of 15 miles per hour.

Appellant, by a process of mathematical deduction, argues that the physical conditions almost demonstrate the negligence of plaintiff. However, as is usual in such cases, the argument, instead of resulting in a demonstration, only serves to sharpen the conflict. We cannot say, from an examination of the entire record, even beyond the point urged by appellant, that plaintiff Mary Santos was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

It is to be observed that we have made no attempt to include herein all of the facts. To do so would add nothing to the present opinion, nor could a detail of further facts in any way illustrate the points involved. Such facts as are important to the contentions of appellant have been cited, and these are the only facts presented by appellant as necessary to the points he makes.

The judgment is affirmed.

MURR et al. v. COHN. (Civ. 5974.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 12, 1927.

- 1. Appeal and error §1071(3)—Quieting title §37(1)—Where answer in action to quiet title to personal property contained denials, affirmative allegations were unnecessary, and whether evidence supported findings on answer's affirmative allegations of title in defendant was immaterial.

In action to quiet title to personal property, where answer contained denials, it was unnecessary for defendant to put in affirmative allegations setting up title in himself, and whether evidence supported findings based thereon was immaterial on appeal.

- 2. Landlord and tenant §161(1)—Tenant held entitled to remove portable gasoline station and pump (Civ. Code, § 1019).

Under Civ. Code, § 1019, although lease was silent as to contemplated use of property and placing structures thereon, tenant had right to remove portable gasoline station and pump put thereon by him.

- 3. Landlord and tenant §161(1)—Tenant using premises for gasoline filling station held entitled to remove tank.

Although lease of premises was silent as to contemplated use and right to remove articles placed thereon, in view of fact that at execution of lease landlord knew tenant intended to establish gasoline filling station, tenant had right to remove gas tank, where soil could be dumped back into hole and there would be no injury to lot.

- 4. Quieting title §44(3)—Evidence that tenant was to leave certain articles installed on premises held insufficient to render erroneous judgment quieting title to articles in tenant (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 2).

In tenant's action to quiet title to personal property against landlord, regardless of admissibility under Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 2, of testimony by attorney drawing lease that tenant agreed to leave on premises certain improvements which would be part of consideration, evidence relating to such agreement held insufficient to render judgment quieting title to such personal property in tenant error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by Nicolas Murr and another against Simon Cohn. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. F. Blackstock, of Oxnard, for appellant.

Durley & Downes, of Oxnard, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs commenced an action against the defendant to quiet title to certain personal property. The defendant answered, and a trial was had in the trial court before the court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiffs, and the defendant has appealed.

The defendant owned lots 18 and 19 in block K of the city of Oxnard. He leased the lots to the plaintiffs for a period of five years. At that time the lots were wholly vacant. When the plaintiffs entered into possession, they placed on the property "one field portable gasoline station, one gasoline air pump, and one gas tank." The station was put in place by laying pieces of 2x4, making a rectangular frame, and resting it on the surface of the ground. Thereafter concrete was poured into that frame, covering the space of ground inclosed with concrete four inches deep. The station was set on top, the outside walls of steel rested on the 2x4 and were nailed thereto. The pump was placed on a concrete pier, which was also constructed on top of the surface of the ground. The tank was sunk into the ground about 7 feet deep. After the plaintiffs had been in possession, they negotiated a sale of the three items mentioned to T. E. Davis. Later the defendant asserted that the several items had become a part of the realty and he had become the owner thereof.

[1] On this appeal the defendant makes six several attacks on the findings, claiming that they are not sustained by the evidence. The first two attacks are addressed to two findings that are entirely without the issues made by the pleadings. The third and fifth attacks are addressed to the findings in response to the allegations of the complaint, which are to the effect that the plaintiff is the owner of the property and the defendant asserts a claim that is without right. The fourth and sixth attacks are addressed to the allegations of the defendant's answer, in which he pleaded affirmatively title in himself. As the answer contained denials, it was unnecessary for the defendant to put in the affirmative allegations, and findings thereon are immaterial. If the third and fourth attacks are not well founded, the judgment should be affirmed. As the rights and liabilities of both parties rest on the relation of landlord and tenant, it is equally clear that, if the plaintiffs were the owners, then the defendant was not the owner, and therefore it becomes necessary to consider only the third attack, which is the contention that the fifth finding is not sustained by the evidence. That finding is the one which finds that the plaintiffs were the owners of the property.

The plaintiffs and the defendant entered into a written lease; that lease was wholly silent as to the fact that the plaintiffs intended to use the property for a filling station or that they intended to place any structure thereon, and, if they did so, what would be the rights and liabilities of the parties. It is suggested by the defendant that one paragraph is pertinent to this dispute. That paragraph is as follows:

"And the lessees expressly agree that at the expiration of the term of this lease, or sooner termination thereof, they will quit and surrender the said premises, leaving the same in as good condition as they now are, reasonable wear and tear thereof and damage by the elements excepted."

[2, 3] The plaintiffs adopt the same contention and say that they intended to do just exactly what is stated in the paragraph quoted. The plaintiffs had the clear right to remove the station and the pump. That right is statutory. Civ. Code, § 1019; Gosliner v. Briones, 187 Cal. 557, 204 P. 19. As to the tank, the case is not quite so clear. Nevertheless, it is free of doubt. The plaintiffs had the right to remove it. It never became a part of the defendant's realty (Hendy v. Dinkerhoff, 57 Cal. 3, 40 Am. Rep. 107; Jahnke v. Jahnke, [Cal. App.] 253 P. 752), when it is considered that before the execution of the lease the lots were vacant, that at the time the lease was executed the defendant was informed to what use the plaintiffs intended to put the property, and that, upon the tank being removed, the soil can be dumped back into the hole in such a manner and to such an extent that there will be no injury whatever to the vacant lot.

It is conceded by both parties that, in determining the question involved by this appeal, a controlling criterion is the intent of the parties. No part of the record is cited which shows or tends to show that, after the termination of the lease, the tank was to become an "integral part of the premises."

[4] No fraud or mistake was alleged, and no reformation was asked, but on the trial of the case the attorney for the defendant took the stand and testified that, when the terms of the lease were under discussion, it was stipulated between the parties that the plaintiffs would place and leave on the premises certain improvements, the cost of which would be a part of the consideration. Later that testimony was stricken out. The defendant assigns that ruling as error, and contends that, under the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 1902, Code of Civil Procedure, he was entitled to show the true consideration. The plaintiffs reply that to allow, under that claim, such proof as was offered, would be in effect to allow the defendant to prove covenants which are not even mentioned in the lease. In support of their position, the plaintiffs cite Harding v. Robinson, 175 Cal. 534, 542, 166 P. 808. The citation is clearly in point.

Still addressing ourselves to the subject-matter of the last point, the testimony given and stricken out will now be considered from another point of view. The substance of the testimony stricken out was as follows:

"In the month of April, 1923, Mr. Cohn asked me to prepare a lease for the plaintiffs. Mr. Cohn and Mr. Nicolas Murr came to my office and were there for a considerable length of time discussing the general terms of the lease. Mr. Cohn did not want to make a five-year lease, objecting that the term was too long. He wanted to charge more than $75 a month—something over $100. Mr. Nicolas Murr contended that Mr. Cohn ought to lease him the property for five years at $75 a month, because, if the plaintiffs put up the oil station, at the expiration of the lease they would not have any use for it, and that they would leave it there."

Taking this testimony most strongly against the plaintiffs, there is not an intimation that the defendant would have the slightest title until the end of the term. Again, weighing the testimony in the same light, it would result that the minds of the parties never met, and therefore that the defendant obtained no title. This is so because there was not a word spoken regarding the nature of the fixtures to be installed, the material that they would be made out of, the size thereof, or the cost thereof. The terms of the agreement are so indefinite and uncertain that it is impossible to ascertain what promise was being made and what promise was being accepted.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

HOUGHTON v. PICKWICK STAGES, NORTHERN DIVISION.*
(Civ. 3332.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 19, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 16, 1928.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 1046(1)—Permitting jury to view automobile involved in collision, though parts were missing, held not prejudicial to defendant, whose liability was not increased thereby (St. 1923, p. 560, $\S$ 131).

Permitting jury to view automobile which had collided with bus held not to have prejudiced defendant bus company on theory that missing door would have shown that automobile had toppled into bus rather than that bus had collided head-on with automobile, where if automobile arrived at intersection first, as jury concluded, under St. 1923, p. 560, $\S$ 131, bus company's liability would be the same in either event.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1026—To warrant reversal for error it must appear affirmatively that there has been a miscarriage of justice.

Mere fact that error is made to appear does not present a case for reversal, but it must appear affirmatively after an examination of the entire cause including evidence, from the nature of the error itself, that there has been a miscarriage of justice.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1170(9)—Instruction that drivers of bus colliding with automobile were interested witnesses, though erroneous, held not to have resulted in miscarriage of justice (Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½, 19).

Instruction in action for collision between automobile and bus, that bus drivers were interested witnesses, which interest should be considered in determining their credibility, though in contravention of Const. art. 6, $\S$ 19, held not to have resulted in miscarriage of justice requiring reversal under section 4½, in view of incredible testimony of one of drivers and undoubted interest of driver actually driving bus.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Viola Houghton against the Pickwick Stages, Northern Division. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert and B. P. Gibbs, both of Los Angeles, and Sarau & Thompson, of Riverside, for appellant.

Culbert L. Olson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff had judgment against the defendant in the sum of $10,000 for personal injuries suffered in a collision between a Ford coupé in which the plaintiff was riding and one of the stages belonging to the defendant. No question is presented as to the amount of damages. The record shows that the plaintiff was seriously injured and left a cripple for life. The facts disclosed by the testimony are as follows: On the 21st day of April, 1924, the plaintiff was riding in a Ford coupé with Thomas E. Bradley and Mrs. Eleanor Bradley. The Ford coupé had but one seat, and all three persons just named were seated thereon, the plaintiff being to the right. The Ford coupé was owned by Mr. Bradley and was being driven in a westerly direction on that certain street known as and called Industrial street in the city of Los Angeles. At approximately the same time a stage belonging to the defendant corporation was being driven in a southerly direction on a certain other street in the city of Los Angeles known as and called Mill street, the two streets just named intersecting each other. The collision occurred at a point approximately 10 feet westerly of the center of the intersection of said streets.

At the time of the collision herein referred to, section 131 of the Motor Vehicle Act, as amended in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 560), read as follows:

"A vehicle entering an intersection of public highways at a lawful speed shall have the right of way over a vehicle approaching from its left unless such vehicle approaching from the left shall have first entered into such intersection at a lawful speed in which event the vehicle on the left shall have the right of way."

The testimony of the plaintiff and of the two other persons occupying the Ford coupé was to the effect that the Ford was being driven at a speed of about 12 miles per hour; that when the Ford coupé entered the intersection of Industrial street and Mill street, the stage was several feet north of the north line of the intersection; that as the Ford continued on westerly across the intersection to a point west of said intersection, the stage, traveling at a speed of about 30 miles per hour, came into the intersection and smashed into the Ford coupé before the driver of the coupé could do anything to avoid a collision. The front part of the stage struck the right-hand side of the coupé on which the plaintiff was sitting, breaking the door and generally smashing the entire right-hand side of the coupé. The complaint and the testimony set forth the injuries suffered by the plaintiff, but as no point is made as to the damages, a recital of plaintiff's injuries is omitted. The momentum of the stage carried the coupé to a point south of the south line of Industrial street, and there came to a stop. On the part of the defendant the bus driver testified that the stage traveling at about 15 miles per hour first entered the intersection; that at the time the stage entered the intersection the Ford coupé was at a point from 20 to 25 feet east of the east line of Mill street, and was traveling at a speed of between 25 and 30 miles per hour; that as the coupé came westerly across the intersection, the wheels of the coupé ran on both sides of the "button" in the center of the intersection, or, as witnesses described it, the coupé straddled the button; and that at a point just west of the intersection, the Ford coupé was turned quickly to the left as if to avoid a collision, and that the Ford toppled over upon the hood, bumper, and left fender of the stage.

The wrecked Ford was taken into the possession of the defendant immediately following the accident, and to a garage maintained by it near the scene of the collision. It remained in this place for about two weeks, and then was removed to an open lot immediately adjoining a garage belonging to the defendant, where it remained until it was placed upon a truck and hauled to the courthouse for purposes of inspection during the trial. It appears that the coupé was in plain view of the defendant during all the time after the accident up to its removal to the courthouse, as just stated. The Ford was moved once about 20 feet in its storage place during the time between the accident and the date of its inspection at the trial, and also was loaded upon a truck and taken to the courthouse for inspection, as above stated. It appears that the left rear wheel, the spokes of which were broken, was removed from it either during the time it was in the defendant's yard or in the storage yard, and other wheels which did not belong to the car were put on it to hold it up. What was left of the right-hand door, which at one time was lying inside the car where it had been driven by the collision, was missing. Some other little changes as to the lining of the car appear also to have taken place. Testimony was introduced by the parties as to the condition of the Ford coupé immediately after the collision, and also as to the changes that had been made in its condition. After all this had been done and after the defendant had introduced considerable testimony as to the condition of the car and photographed as to its condition, the court permitted an inspection of the coupé.

[1] The assignments of error presented for our consideration are two in number: First, that the court erred in permitting the jury to view the Ford coupé; second, that the court erred in instructing the jury that the bus driver and the employees of the defendant were interested witnesses, etc. The objection that the court erred in permitting an inspection of the coupé is based upon the theory of the defendant that the Ford coupé, by reason of the driver having turned sharply to the left, was caused to topple over upon the front of the Pickwick stage, and that the stage did not run into the Ford coupé, and that a certain indentation on the door of the Ford coupé substantiated their theory. No argument is presented upon said appeal that the jury was wrong in coming to the conclusion that the Ford coupé first entered the intersection, though the testimony of the defendant's two bus drivers is set forth in which they state the contrary. If the Ford coupé first entered the intersection, it had, under the provision of the Motor Vehicle Law as that law existed at the time of the collision, the right of way across that intersection, and the driver of the Ford coupé had the right to assume that the driver of the bus would observe that law, and if, as stated by the defendant's witnesses, the driver of the Ford coupé, in order to avoid a direct or other collision with the stage, essayed a sharp, left-hand turn and thereby the Ford coupé was toppled over against the front of the stage, the responsibility of the defendant would be exactly the same as though the collision had been head-on. The fact that the driver of the coupé attempted to avoid the collision when he became aware of the fact that danger was impending and imminent, and that the bus driver had not regarded the law but was coming across the intersection at a rate of speed which indicated that the stage could not be stopped, does not lessen the defendant's liability in any particular. The whole argument, based upon the assumption that the coupé toppled over before it was hit by the bus, is absolutely without any merit whatever if the premises are correct that the coupé first entered the intersection. It therefore follows that no error on the part of the court could or can be predicated on the fact that an inspection of the Ford coupé was permitted. The fact that the bus hit the Ford or the Ford toppled against the bus had no bearing whatever upon the right of way. It did bear upon the question as to whether the driver of the Ford coupé endeavored, in a perilous situation, to avoid the collision, or at least avoid a direct hit. During the course of the trial the defendant exhibited five photographs of the Ford coupé, which we cannot produce in this opinion, but an inspection of which shows that after having been introduced and shown to the jury, an inspection of the car by the jury could not have had any effect whatever. The photographs to which we have referred show the Ford coupé to be almost a complete wreck. In fact, the Defendant's Exhibit No. 6, showing the side of the Ford coupé on which the plaintiff was riding, leaves just one question in the mind of the jury, and that is how any one could be in that position and escape with his life. Photographs introduced as exhibits such as we have herein referred to, which can be appreciated only by an inspection, could leave no possible ground for any prejudice arising from an inspection of the car, even though the parts thereof to which we have referred were missing.

[2, 3] The instruction, the giving of which is predicated as error, is as follows:

"In weighing the evidence, you are to consider the credibility of witnesses who have testified before you; you are the sole and exclusive judges of their credibility—their conduct, their character, as shown by the evidence; their manner on the stand; their relation to the parties, if any; their interest in the case; their bias and prejudice, if any; their degree of intelligence; the reasonableness or unreasonableness of their statements; and the strength or weakness of their recollection may be taken into consideration for the purpose of determining their credibility. This instruction, like all instructions, applies not only to one side but to both sides. Attorneys refer to the interest of witnesses on the other side. If there are interested witnesses or relatives on the side of the plaintiff, you should consider that in determining their credibility, but you should not on that account solely disbelieve their testimony. On the other hand, the bus driver and the employees of the defendant were interested witnesses, and the same rule applies to them, and only the same rule, that you should not on that account alone disbelieve their testimony, but should consider their interest in determining their credibility. A witness is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which the witness testifies, by the character of his testimony, his motives, or by contradictory evidence.”

The asserted prejudicial part of the instruction reads:

“On the other hand, the bus driver and the employees of the defendant were interested witnesses, and the same rule applies to them, and only the same rule, that you should not, on that account alone, disbelieve their testimony, but should consider their interest in determining their credibility.”

The point is made that the court, in instructing the jury that the driver and employees of the defendant were interested witnesses, transgressed the exclusive province of the jury and instructed the jury upon a question of fact in contravention of section 19 of article 6 of the Constitution, which provides that: “Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law.” In support of this instruction the respondent cites, first, the case of Ellis v. Lakeshore & M. S. R. Co., 138 Pa. 506, 21 A. 140, 21 Am. St. Rep. 914, where it was held that the trial court properly called attention to the fact that the engineer and fireman of the train were interested witnesses, although not affected peculiarly by the verdict. The action involved damages suffered by the plaintiff at a railroad crossing.

In the case of People v. Bush, 71 Cal. 602, 12 P. 781, the following instruction was approved:

“In this case, Maude and Cora Parsons, nieces of the defendant, have been examined as witnesses in behalf of the defense. This is their right. It is proper, however, for the jury to bear in mind the relationship between them and the defendant, and the manner in which they may be interested by your verdict, and the very grave interest they must feel in it; and it is proper for the jury to consider whether their position and interest may not affect the credibility or color of their testimony.”

In Konig v. Lyon, 49 Cal. App. 113, 192 P. 875, the following instruction was approved:

“The plaintiff as a matter of course is interested in the case. You will simply consider that fact, and the same with the driver of the truck. He is interested on his side of the case and you can consider it in determining his credibility.”

In this case, however, the jury was not told that the driver was interested in the case, but was interested in his side of the case. The case involved an automobile collision between a bicycle and a truck. It is also stipulated in that case that the driver of the truck was in the employ of the defendant, and it of course appeared that if he was negligent in the management and operation of the truck being driven by him at the time of the collision, the responsibility of his employer depended, as a matter of law, upon his responsibility, whether the truck driver was or was not made a party to the action.

In the case of People v. Bernal, 40 Cal. App. 358, 180 P. 825, cited as an authority supporting the instruction given to the jury in this case, the trial court instructed the jury that:

“In judging the credibility of a witness, whether such witness be the defendant, the prosecutor, or any other witness produced on either side, you may consider the interest and relation of such witness in and to the case.”

To the same effect is the decision in the case of People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 531, 66 P. 794. As to the impropriety of giving such instructions, we may cite the case of People v. Maughs, 149 Cal. 253, 86 P. 187, where an instruction in this language was condemned:

“Where the defendant offers himself as a witness, in determining his credibility, it is proper to take into consideration the consequences, inducements, and temptations which would ordinarily influence a person in his situation.”

In Huyck v. Rennie, 151 Cal. 411, 90 P. 929, the court, with reference to such instructions, uses the following language:

“It is unnecessary to cite authorities to the point that, in this state, where, under the constitutional provision, judges are prohibited from charging juries as to the facts, it is improper for the court in its instructions to select testimony of particular witnesses as entitled to special weight or consideration. Similarly, it is improper to indicate that less regard is to be paid to the testimony of one witness than to that of another.”

That the trial court went beyond its province in instructing the jury that the employees of the defendant were interested witnesses seems to us very clear, but that does not, in and of itself, warrant a reversal of the judgment in this action. Just how far a trial court may go in instructions and an appellate court required to uphold the judgment under the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution cannot be so definitely limited or stated in language as to make a rule promulgated for one case applicable to every other case. The case at bar differs somewhat from the ordinary run of actions, in that the instruction given apparently runs counter to a section of the state Constitution, and just how far such an instruction may go without necessitating a reversal is not made clear by anything called to our attention by counsel in this case. In People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 130 P. 1042, the majority of the court, in considering a like question, used the following language:

"But it does not follow that every invasion of even a constitutional right necessarily requires a reversal. It may well be that the court, after examining the 'entire cause, including the evidence,' is of the opinion that the error complained of, whatever its character, has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The mere fact that the assignment of error is based upon a provision of the Constitution is not conclusive."

Again, in Estate of Baird, 173 Cal. 617, 160 P. 1078, a case where the court had substituted itself for the jury, we find the following:

"But where the error is so grave as the unauthorized substitution of the court for a jury as the tribunal to hear the evidence and determine the facts, we cannot, as a general rule, say that the scheme in force in this state for the administration of justice has not miscarried. [Citing People v. O'Bryan, supra.] Doubtless there may be cases so devoid of merit, or so wanting in proof of some essential fact, that the judgment of the lower court to that effect should be upheld even in the face of such an error."

Other cases might be cited where similar views are expressed, a summary of which may be stated in the following words: The mere fact that error is made to appear does not present a case for reversal, but it must appear affirmatively, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, from the nature of the error itself, that there has been a miscarriage of justice. See cases cited in People v. Attema, 75 Cal. App. 642, 243 P. 461. Again, the alleged error in this case does not go to the denial of a fundamental right, such as was presented for our consideration in the case of People v. O'Connor, 254 P. 630, and in the cases there cited. While the court did instruct the jury as to a question of fact, it did not take away from the jury the right to pass judgment upon all the facts involved. So far as the driver of the appellant's bus was concerned, any jury possessing ordinary common understanding would know that the bus driver was vitally interested in the result of the action, because it was upon his alleged negligence that his employer was being sued for damages, and the jury would know that the defendant could not be held liable without first holding that the bus driver was guilty of negligence, which made him such an apparent interested party that the statement of such fact by the court added nothing whatever to the knowledge already possessed by the jury. Practically the same may be said of the defendant's driver who was accompanying the defendant's driver of the bus involved in this collision. He and the driver who was actually driving the bus had taken the vehicle to a public scales in order to have it weighed, and were returning therewith to a garage maintained by the defendant. The only difference in the situation between the two drivers consisted in this: That one certainly might have been made liable for damages in the event that his employer was legally liable. The other, possibly, might not have been so held, but his position put him in the same class of an interested witness in behalf of his employer, and the jury, without the instruction of the court, would doubtless have so classified him. Again, an examination of the testimony of the defendant's driver who was accompanying the driver of the bus will show that if the jury absolutely disregarded his testimony, it did not tend in any way to a miscarriage of justice. As the testimony of this witness appears in the transcript, it shows upon its face that it is incredible. This witness testified that he was sitting on the left-hand side of the bus that the witness Archer was driving. "The driver sat to my right and in front of me. The stage was running about 20 miles an hour, and was being driven about 7 feet from the right-hand curb of Mill street, as it was going south. I first noticed the Ford coupé when the stage was possibly 6 feet past the curb line of the intersection. At that time the stage was moving about 15 miles an hour. When I first saw the Ford coupé it was about 20 feet east of the east curb line of Mill street, and was traveling about 25 miles an hour. At about the center of the intersection the stage turned a little to the right. At that time the Ford was about 30 feet east to our left. The Ford coupé straddled the manhole in the center of the intersection. The Ford then turned to the south. The machines did not come together. When the Ford turned to the south, the left wheels left the pavement and the Ford tipped over onto the bus. At that time the Ford was traveling about 15 miles an hour. After the cars came together the stage traveled about 10 feet." The measurements of the intersection involved in this action show that its dimensions are 40x40 feet, that being the width of both streets involved between the curb lines. The testimony in the case shows that the collision occurred about 10 feet west of the center of the intersection. According to the testimony of the witness, whose statements are here being analyzed, the Ford straddled the manhole in the center of the intersection (other witnesses described this center as being marked by a button), and that the collision occurred after the Ford had passed the center of the intersection. Thus, the Ford, if it was 20 feet east of the east line of Mill street, had to travel at least 50 feet before reaching the point of the collision, while the bus, if at the time the Ford was 20 feet east of the east line of Mill street was 6 feet south of the north line of Industrial street, had to travel only about 12 feet to reach the point of the collision. Industrial street was only 20 feet from the curb line to the center line. Excluding the 6 feet that the bus was projecting south of the north line of Industrial street leaves only 14 feet, and if the Ford coupé straddled the manhole at the center of the intersection, at least 2 feet of the machine would be north of the center line, which would reduce the traveling distance of the bus another 2 feet, leaving only 12 feet for the bus to travel while the Ford was traveling 50 feet. Thus, if the bus was traveling, as stated by the witness, about 15 miles per hour, the Ford coupé, having a trifle over four times the distance to cover in order that a collision might take place, must have been traveling from 60 to 65 miles an hour. In the face of such incredible testimony when applied to the facts, it cannot very well be perceived how any error of the court in instructing the jury that the witness was interested could result in a miscarriage of justice. Again, this witness testified that the stage stopped in about 10 feet after the collision. The physical facts as disclosed by the testimony of all the other witnesses shows that the Ford coupé was carried by the bus, or pushed by the bus, to a point about 10 feet south of the south line of Industrial street. The only support of the testimony of this witness presented to us is the untenable argument of appellant that liability is lacking because the sharp turning of the Ford to the left to prevent a head-on collision caused the Ford to topple over to the right, and it was then that the collision occurred.

It may be further stated that if the instruction set forth herein tended to discredit defendant's witnesses, it had the same effect upon the witnesses for the plaintiff. None but relatives testified in her behalf. The relatives and the two drivers were the only witnesses as to who had the right of way.

Being satisfied from the whole record that no error was committed in allowing the jury to view the wrecked Ford, and that the alleged error of the trial court in giving the instruction set out in this opinion did not result in a miscarriage of justice, and could not have had any influence upon the jury whatever, the judgment is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 22, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 20, 1928.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨86(2)—Giving of notice by lessee of acceptance of option of renewal fixes rights of parties, notwithstanding failure to agree as to rental under method stipulated.

Where lessor has granted option of renewal on condition that notice be given prior to expiration of term and fixing of rental is not made condition precedent, giving of notice is, in effect, an acceptance, and on such acceptance, rights of parties become fixed as to renewal, even though parties have agreed on method for determining rental and such method fails of its purposes.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨83(2)—Lease recitals as to rental, acceptance of option to renew, and punctual performance held conditions precedent to exercise of option, where preceded by word "provided."

Where lease gave lessee option to renew lease subject to conditions of punctual performance of lease, and acceptance of option by writing, and agreement as to rent, each condition being preceded by the word "provided," such conditions were conditions precedent, since word "provided" always implies a condition unless subsequent words change it to a covenant.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇨83(2)—Condition precedent that parties agree on rental before renewal of lease must be performed within term of original lease.

Where provision in lease as to rental was a condition precedent to renewal of lease, as distinguished from extension of term, condition requiring agreement as to rental must be performed prior to expiration of term of original lease.

4. Evidence ⇨413—Conversations surrounding execution of contract are introduced only to explain uncertainties and ambiguities in contract.

Testimony of conversation surrounding execution of contract is never introduced for purpose of varying its terms, but only for purpose of explaining uncertainties and ambiguities therein.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇨291(1)—Three days' notice by landlord to quit was unnecessary, where notice was given day after expiration of term (Code Civ. Proc. § 1161).

It was not necessary for landlord to give tenant 3 days' notice to quit, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, as prerequisite to maintenance of action in unlawful detainer, where landlord did give notice upon the day after expiration of term requiring tenants to vacate, since nothing could be added by such 3 days' notice.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Action by Celia Streicher against Max Heimburge and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Arthur F. H. Wright, Adam Thompson, and Gordon Thompson, all of San Diego, for appellants.

Haines & Haines, Wright & McKee, and C. M. Monroe, all of San Diego, and Arthur Joel, of San Francisco, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This action in unlawful detainer resulted in a judgment for restitution of the premises and damages for its detention in the sum of $3,580.57, which sum was not trebled, and from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

Briefly, the facts are as follows: Plaintiff's predecessor in interest, Bryant H. Howard, and the defendants executed a lease covering the ground floor and basement of the Dalton building, in San Diego, which lease by its terms commenced December 1, 1920, and ended on the 30th day of November, 1925. Paragraph 20 of the lease contained an option giving to the defendants the right to renew the lease for an additional term of 5 years in the following words:

"Provided, and upon condition that the lessees and their successors in interest have at all times faithfully and punctually performed each and all of the covenants and conditions of this lease on the part of the lessees, the lessor grants to the lessees, and their successors in interest, the right or option to renew this lease for an additional term of 5 years, upon the same covenants and conditions as are herein contained, except as modified by this paragraph, and except further that there shall be no right or option to further renew or extend this lease, provided that this option is accepted by a writing delivered to the lessor by the lessees, or their successors in interest, at least 6 months prior to the expiration of the term of this lease, and provided further that the rent to be paid is agreed upon as follows: The parties are to agree in writing upon the rent to be paid during such renewed term, if they are able to do so. If within 30 days after the acceptance of this option on the part of the lessees, by the delivery of the written acceptance aforesaid, the parties are still unable to agree upon the rent to be paid, then the lessor or his successor within 10 days shall, in writing, appoint an appraiser, and the lessees or their successors within 10 days shall, in writing, appoint an appraiser, and the two appraisers so appointed shall determine the rent to be paid for said time. Or, if the two appraisers so appointed are within 10 days unable to agree upon said rent, then they shall, in writing, immediately appoint a third appraiser, and the majority of the three so appointed shall determine said rent. If either of the parties fail or refuse to appoint an appraiser within the time aforesaid or within 10 days after new appraisers should be appointed by the parties as next provided, then the other party shall appoint both appraisers, who shall determine the amount of said rent; or, if the appraisers so appointed are unable to agree within the time aforesaid, and they fail or refuse to appoint a third appraiser as aforesaid, or if they appoint a third within that time, but a majority of the three refuse or are unable to agree within 10 days, then the parties within 10 days thereafter shall each, in writing, appoint a new appraiser, and the two so selected shall determine said rent, or if they are unable to do so, they shall appoint a third appraiser as aforesaid, and the majority of the three so appointed shall determine said rent; and this process of appointing and reappointing appraisers shall be continued, within the time and in the manner aforesaid, until either the parties themselves or appraisers for them determine the amount of said rent. The appraisers so appointed shall in all instances be business men of said city of San Diego, and shall reduce to writing and deliver to each party a statement of the amount of rent determined upon."

Within the time provided and on May 6, 1925, defendants notified the plaintiff of their election to exercise the option to renew the lease, but they were not able to agree with her upon the amount of rental to be paid therefor. Thereafter plaintiff and defendants appointed ten successive pairs of appraisers, who were unable to agree upon the rental to be paid, and also to agree upon a third appraiser. The amount of the rental therefore was never fixed by agreement of the parties or by determination of the arbitrators. On December 1, 1925, the plaintiff notified the defendants to remove from the premises "not later than December 31, 1925." The lease contained a clause as follows:

"It is agreed further, should the lessees, or either of them or any of their successors in interest, hold over the leased premises, or any part thereof, after the expiration of the term of this lease, unless otherwise agreed in writing, that such holding over shall constitute a tenancy from month to month only, and that the lessees shall pay the then reasonable value of the use and occupation of the leased premises, which shall not be less, however, than the rent to be paid for the last month under this lease."

[1] Appellants' principal contention is that upon the giving of the notice of their exercise of the option they became vested with a leasehold interest running for a new term of 5 years; that where the mode adopted by agreement of the parties for the fixing of the rental for the new term fails in the accomplishment of that purpose equity will establish a reasonable rental therefor. Abundant authority may be cited to the general proposition of law that, where the lessor has granted an option to the lessee of renewal upon the condition that notice be given prior to the expiration of the term, the giving of the notice is in effect an acceptance of a continuing offer on the part of the lessor (Nutmeg Park Driving Corp. v. Fiske, 81 Conn. 463, 71 A. 499), and that upon such acceptance the rights of the parties become fixed, in so far as renewal is concerned, even in those cases where the parties have agreed upon a method for the determination of rental in case of their failure to agree, and this is true even though the method adopted fails of its purpose. It will be noted, however, that such is true only in those cases where the fixing of the rental is not made a condition precedent, and further it should be observed that the authorities have not always carefully drawn the distinction between the right of renewal of the lease and the right to an extension of the term. In determining whether the parties intended that the lessees should be entitled to the renewal only upon the condition that the rental were fixed prior to the expiration of the term, it becomes important to notice the distinction in results between the right of renewal such as is provided for in the agreement under consideration and the right to an extension. In Shamp v. White, 106 Cal. 220, 39 P. 537, a lease was involved which granted the lessee an option to renew the lease without providing specifically that notice of its exercise should be given prior to the expiration of the term. The court says:

"The contract here expressed was one for a renewal of the lease, and not one for an extension of the term, despite the language subsequently used—'at the expiration of this lease, if not extended as heretofore mentioned, the party of the second part will quit,' etc. The distinction becomes important for this reason: Being a lease with a privilege of renewal, it was incumbent upon the lessee desiring to exercise his option to give notice of his election before the expiration of the original term; while, if the lease had provided merely for an extension, his remaining in possession (no specific form of notice having been required) would have been sufficient notification of his decision. Renoud v. Daskam, 34 Conn. 512; Delashman v. Berry, 20 Mich. 292, 4 Am. Rep. 392; 1 Taylor on Landlord and Tenant, § 332; 2 Wood's Landlord and Tenant (2d Ed.) 947; 6 Lawson's Rights, Remedies, and Practice, § 2833."

To the same effect, see Robertson v. Drew, 34 Cal. App. 143, 166 P. 838; Loeffler v. Wright, 13 Cal. App. 224, 109 P. 269; Andrews v. Marshall Creamery Co., 118 Iowa, 595, 92 N. W. 706, 60 L. R. A. 399, 96 Am. St. Rep. 412.

And likewise it has been held that payment of rent and performance of other covenants of a lease during the full period of the original term are conditions precedent to the exercise of the right of renewal. Behrman v. Barto, 54 Cal. 131.

Like performance of other conditions which may have been agreed to by the parties is required. In the case of Stout v. North, 211 Mo. App. 245, 242 S. W. 119, the lease gave the lessee the right of renewal of the lease upon the same terms and conditions at his option, and one of the terms was that the rental for the original term was to be secured by a note "approved by" the lessor, it was held that it was necessary for the lessee to secure the rental for the new term by a note "approved by" the lessor before the lease was renewed. (Italics ours.) It is there said:

"A general covenant to renew is indivisible and must be exercised in its entirety. 16 R. C. L. § 388, p. 885. Consequently, in this case, as already stated, mere notice of an intention to stay, and thereafter holding over without doing anything else, are not sufficient to call the renewal into existence. * * * Unless all the terms and conditions of the renewal privilege have been complied with, she" (the lessor) "is not compelled to further accept defendant as a tenant. Compliance with only a part, but not all, of the terms and conditions of the renewal privilege, leaves him in no better situation than if none had been complied with. It is held that even though the time for the exercise of the election to renew is not expressly limited, the lessee must nevertheless exercise his election to do so before the expiration of the term. 16 R. C. L. § 396, p. 893; 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 692. In the case of Renoud v. Daskam, 34 Conn. 512, it was held that a failure to exercise the privilege of renewal during or at the expiration of the first term entitled the lessor to insist upon the termination of the tenancy, and that an offer to comply made two days after the expiration of the first term was too late and did not entitle the lessee to relief even in equity. In I. X. L. Furniture [& Carpet Installment], etc., House v. Berets, 32 Utah, 454, 91 P. 279, a similar ruling was made. Consequently, the fact that after the expiration of the first term, and after the time when the renewal term was to begin, and after plaintiff had begun steps to put defendant out, he then sought to arrange at the bank for the rent of the next year and invited plaintiff to meet him there and settle with him as to such rent, can have no efficacy in affecting or changing the status that then existed between them."

To the same effect, involving another lease providing for security, is the case of McFadden v. McCann, 25 Iowa, 252.

It has also been determined that where the lease grants the right of a new lease, the lessor to be notified of the election of the lessee, and then says, "provided that they pay as high a rent as is offered by other parties," that the latter provision is a condition which must be met before the lessees become entitled to the new lease, even though the offer made by the "other parties" is under circumstances such as to raise "a strong suspicion" that it was not made in good faith. Bettens v. Hoover, 12 Cal. App. 313, 107 P. 329.

[2, 3] It will be observed in the paragraph quoted from the lease under consideration that the parties by appropriate words made faithful and punctual performance of the lease during the original term the first condition of "the right or option to renew this lease for an additional term of 5 years, upon the same covenants and conditions." They introduced this condition by the use of the word "Provided," which word is generally employed to introduce a proviso, and which proviso, it has been said "always implies a condition unless subsequent words change it to a covenant." Stockton v. Weber, 98 Cal. 433-440, 33 P. 332, 334, quoting Bouv. Law Dict. p. 2761, title "Proviso." Again, the second condition precedent is introduced by use of the same word, "provided that this option is accepted by a writing," etc. The natural and logical sequence would be, if the parties intended to agree that the fixing of the rental should also constitute a condition precedent, to likewise introduce that subject in similar fashion. And so they did by saying, "And provided further that the rent to be paid is agreed upon as follows." We fail to see how their meaning might have been made more clear except possibly they had added the words "prior to the expiration of the term hereby granted" after the word "upon." But as we have already observed, where the right is for a renewal of the lease as distinguished from an extension of the term, the law provides that the conditions must be performed within that time. Counsel strenuously urge the application of the authority of Kaufmann v. Liggett, 209 Pa. 87, 58 A. 129, 67 L. R. A. 353, 103 Am. St. Rep. 988, to the facts of this case. Two quotations from that opinion are sufficient to show the distinction:

"It will be noticed that here is a direct and positive grant of the right of renewal. It is not left to be determined by anybody else, but is definitely settled by the parties."

And again:

"If the right to renewal had been intended to depend upon the rent being fixed in advance, it would not only have been the easiest but most natural thing to have said so."

[4] The conclusion reached on this branch of the case disposes of the error assigned by appellant in the rejection of testimony sought to be introduced by the defendants consisting of conversations had between the defendants and plaintiff's predecessor in interest, Eryant H. Howard, relative to the draft of the lease. There is no uncertainty or ambiguity in the terms of the lease, and therefore any evidence introduced concerning the intent of the parties other than that expressed in the writing could have no other effect than to vary the terms of the contract. Testimony of conversations surrounding the execution of a contract is never introduced for the purpose of varying its terms but only for the purpose of explaining uncertainties and ambiguities therein. Balfour v. Fresno

[5] It is also asserted by appellants that it was necessary for the plaintiff to have given the defendants a 3 days' notice to quit as a prerequisite to the maintenance of an action in unlawful detainer. He specifically relies upon clause 13 of the lease, heretofore quoted, which provides, if the lessees hold over after the expiration of the term, "that such holding over shall constitute a tenancy from month to month only." It must be borne in mind that plaintiff did give a notice to defendants upon the next day after the expiration of the term requiring them to vacate. We fail to see how anything could be added to this notice, for the reason that on December 1, 1925, there was nothing which defendants could do, no covenant which they could perform, which would entitle them to remain in possession. In determining a somewhat similar argument in the case of Buhman v. Nickels & Brown Bros., 1 Cal. App. 266, 82 P. 85, the court says:

"The law neither does nor requires an idle act, and it would certainly be idle to require 3 days' notice to quit, in view of the express stipulation of the parties and plaintiffs' compliance therewith. The defendant could not, by any act or acts, prevent the lease from lapsing, and under such conditions no further notice was required. Code Civ. Proc. § 1161; Harloe v. Lambie, 132 Cal. 135, 64 P. 88; Earl Fruit Co. v. Fava, 138 Cal. 76, 70 P. 1073; Kelly v. Teague, 63 Cal. 68."

And again in Bettens v. Hoover, supra, it is said:

"The complaint does not attempt to state a cause of action for unlawful detainer by a lessee after default in the payment of rent, but is framed upon the theory that defendant is holding over, without the consent of the landlord, after the termination of his term. In such a case the 3 days' notice, provided for in subdivision 2 of section 1161, Code of Civil Procedure, is not required. Earl Orchard Co. v. Fava, 138 Cal. 76, 70 P. 1073."

The authority relied upon by appellants, to wit, Martin v. Splivalo, 56 Cal. 128, is not in point here, for the reason that the court was there considering a tenancy at will, and here we are concerned with a holding over after expiration of the term by lapse of time, which the landlord was diligent to see did not ripen into an estate of any character.

Judgment affirmed.

NORTHRUP et al. v. COHN et al.
(Civ. 3384.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 30, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇐1015(2)—Trial court's grant of new trial on ground evidence does not justify verdict is conclusive on appeal, where evidence substantially conflicts.

Where trial court grants new trial on ground that evidence is insufficient to justify verdict, determination of trial court that verdict is against weight of evidence is conclusive on appeal, where there is substantial conflict in evidence.

2. New trial ⇐72—Evidence held to warrant inference of plaintiff's negligence in running in front of automobile, justifying court's grant of new trial.

Evidence held sufficient to warrant inference that plaintiff negligently ran in front of defendant's automobile and that such negligence was proximate cause of accident, warranting trial court in granting new trial on ground evidence was insufficient to justify verdict.

3. Appeal and error ⇐1015(3)—New trial ⇐72—Trial court in deciding motion for new trial can pass upon weight of evidence, and its determination is conclusive.

Where it cannot be said, as matter of law, that evidence is insufficient to justify verdict for plaintiff, but on other hand it cannot be held, as matter of law, that evidence is insufficient to justify verdict for defendant, trial court deciding motion for new trial is not bound even by substantial conflict in evidence, but has power to pass upon weight thereof, and its determination that justice requires new trial is conclusive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Otis Northrup and another against M. M. Cohn and another for damages for personal injuries. Judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order granting a new trial plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. P. Michael Narlian and Harold N. Nuzum, both of Los Angeles, and Joseph N. Beardslee, for appellants.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff Jennie Northrup was struck and severely injured by an automobile driven by defendant M. M. Cohn, and this is an action for damages on account thereof. The parties named will be referred to herein as the plaintiff and the defendant, respectively. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and judgment was entered thereon in her favor. In due time the defendant gave notice of intention to move for a new trial on many specified grounds, including that of "insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict." The court granted the motion "upon all the grounds stated in the notice of intention to move for a new trial." This appeal is from the order granting the motion.

[1, 2] Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, the determination of the trial court that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence is conclusive on appeal. Rosenberg v. Moore, 194 Cal. 392, 396, 229 P. 34. In this case the evidence is in substantial conflict, and therefore no ground for a new trial need be considered except that of the insufficiency of the evidence.

At the time of the accident the defendant was traveling north along the east side of Moneta avenue in Los Angeles. While the plaintiff was crossing from the west side to the east side of the avenue she was struck by the right front fender of defendant's automobile, and her alleged injuries were caused by the impact. She testified that she "was crossing right at the intersection" of Forty-Fifth street and Moneta avenue, but other witnesses testified that she was crossing 40 or 50 feet north of the intersection. She testified that she knew that Moneta avenue "was a very heavily traveled street"; that as she crossed the avenue she looked to the north until she reached the car tracks, there being double street car lines along that avenue; that she then looked south; that when she had reached the center of the avenue she saw defendant's automobile "half way up the next block" to the south; that when she had crossed the north-bound car line she "started to run" and ran as fast as she could for about 14 feet to the point where she was struck; that as she ran she continuously looked at defendant's automobile; that, the automobile did not swerve from its course, but "came right straight." She further testified as follows:

"Q. When you were in the middle of the east side of the street and saw it coming at the south side, why didn't you stop? A. Because he didn't stop. * * *

"Q. I know, but I am asking you when he didn't stop why didn't you? A. I thought if I ran hard enough I would escape.

"The Court: Were you trying to beat him to it? A. I was. * * *

"Mr. Nuzum: Did you try to cross all the way in front of the automobile, or did you try to get out of the way of the automobile? A. Tried to get out. * * *

"The Court: You understood my question perfectly, did you? A. Yes. I thought you meant when I saw it away over I started to run to beat it."

The accident occurred between 8:30 and 9 o'clock in the evening. Some of the witnesses, including the defendant, testified that the speed of his automobile at the time of the accident was about 15 miles an hour. The defendant testified that the plaintiff was "within 1 foot of the front fender" when he first saw her; that he did not see her sooner "because when I saw her in front of my machine she was running, and being there was traffic in both directions very thickly, it was almost impossible to see any one darting out from under a machine in front of yours;" that he stopped his automobile within 2 feet from the point of collision. Another witness, who was riding in the rear seat of the defendant's automobile, testified:

"We slowed down because there were machines in front of us. * * * I know that there was one directly in front of us."

There is other evidence much more favorable to plaintiff.

[3] The foregoing evidence is sufficient to warrant the inference that the plaintiff negligently ran in front of the defendant's automobile, and that such negligence was a proximate cause of the accident. Of course, it is not intended to express any opinion as to the weight of the evidence. It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, but, on the other hand, it cannot be held as a matter of law that the evidence is insufficient to justify a verdict in favor of the defendant, and, since the trial court in deciding a motion for a new trial is not bound by even a substantial conflict in the evidence, but has the power to pass upon the weight thereof, its determination that justice requires a new trial is conclusive.

The order is affirmed.

PAUL v. SALISIAN et al. (Civ. 5385.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 21, 1927.

1. Sales $\S$ 441(3)—Evidence in action for breach of warranty of title held to sustain finding that defendants were sole owners of raisins sold to plaintiff.

In action to recover purchase money paid for raisins in counts for breach of warranty of title and quality and for money had and received, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that defendants, sellers, were sole owners of raisins and that raisin association did not have title to them when sold to plaintiff, especially where plaintiff failed to show evidence requiring a different finding.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 909(5)—As respects contract not in record authorizing defendants to sell raisins, reviewing court will assume trial court properly construed its terms.

As respects contract under which defendant had previously sold raisins to association which rejected them and consented to their sale by defendants, since it was not printed in the record, it must be assumed that trial court, in finding defendants had title, had entire contract before it, and, with no showing to contrary, reviewing court will assume trial court properly construed its terms.

3. Trial $\S$ 396(6)—Finding that buyer should not have yielded possession of raisins to marketing association was immaterial, where seller was not responsible for what happened after title passed.

In buyer's action against seller for breach of warranty of title and quality of raisins and for money received by seller, where plaintiff alleged that raisins were delivered to packer and immediately rejected and were thereafter taken from packer by raisin association under claim of title from seller, finding that seller had title was not erroneous because court found that buyer should not have yielded possession to association without legal proceeding, where title had passed to buyer and seller was not responsible for what occurred thereafter.

4. Sales $\S$ 268(1)—Buyer knowingly buying raisins of inferior quality from seller having title could not rescind and recover money paid.

Where buyer knowingly bought raisins of inferior quality from seller having title, he could not rescind contract because he had made a bad bargain and sue for breach of warranty of quality and title and to recover purchase price paid, especially where there was no fraud or misrepresentation by seller.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by Irven Paul against A. S. Salisian and others. From a judgment for plaintiff in an amount less than he complained for, he appeals. Affirmed.

K. Ohanian and Percy Church, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Carl E. Lindsay and K. Kuyumjian, both of Fresno, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to recover $2,779 purchase money paid defendants under a written contract for the sale of a quantity of raisins. Judgment went for plaintiff in the sum of $1,000, from which he appeals on a typewritten record.

The complaint was framed in two counts—one to recover for breach of warranty of title and of quality, and the other a common count for money had and received. It was alleged that on February 20, 1924, the parties executed a written agreement for the sale of approximately 55 tons of raisins at 3¼ cents a pound, which defendants represented to be their sole property and to be in good and merchantable condition; that the raisins were delivered to the Foley packing house on February 24th and 25th in a spoiled, deteriorated, and wet condition; that plaintiff immediately notified defendants in writing of the condition of the raisins, that the same were rejected and held by the packing house subject to defendants' disposal; that after the rejection of the raisins they were taken from the packing house by the Sun Maid Raisin Growers' Association under claim of paramount title. In the answer it was denied that any representations as to title or quality were made to plaintiff, and in this connection it was alleged that, prior to the sale, the raisins had been under contract to the raisin association, but that the association had released them and consented to this sale; that, after the delivery to plaintiff, the association took possession of the raisins at the instigation of plaintiff and paid defendants $1,000, which they held for the use and benefit of plaintiff. On the issue of quality it was alleged that there were some damaged raisins delivered, but that plaintiff, at the time of the purchase, knowing the condition of the raisins, mixed the good with the bad and became responsible for his inability to market them.

Evidence was offered to show that a portion of the raisins sold to plaintiff had been delivered to the raisin association about two months prior to the date of the contract involved in this action; that these raisins had been rejected by the association; and that an oral release and consent was given to defendants to sell them outside of the association. It was also shown that plaintiff personally inspected the raisins before the sale and requested defendants to mix the wet with the dry; that he then indorsed upon the contract the words "All inspected," and accepted delivery at the place designated. When he was informed at the packing house that the raisins could not be stemmed at a profit, he gave defendants written notice of rescission of the contract and had the raisins placed outside of the packing house to be held at the risk and disposal of defendants. An agent of the raisin association had them removed to the association's packing house and paid the defendants $1,000, which sum they deposited in court for the use of plaintiff.

[1, 2] The trial court held that defendants were the sole owners of the raisins, and that the raisin association did not have paramount or any title to them when sold to plaintiff. This finding is attacked on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence. We have referred to some evidence supporting this finding and this is sufficient particularly when plaintiff has failed to show any evidence which would require a different finding. He has referred to a portion of the contract between defendants and the raisin association, but he has not printed the contract in his record on appeal. We must assume that the trial court had the entire contract before it, and, with no showing to the contrary, we will assume that the court properly construed its terms.

[3] It is argued that the trial court erred in finding that appellant should not have yielded possession to the raisin association without legal proceedings. It would make no difference if the finding were not supported by the evidence as it was not essential to the judgment. Title passed to appellant on delivery to the packing house at his request. What occurred thereafter was a matter between appellant and the raisin association, for which respondents were in no way responsible.

[4] It appears from the record that appellant bargained for the purchase of the raisins after he had fully inspected them and found some to be wet and of inferior grade; that after the delivery he discovered that he had made a poor bargain and gave written notice of rescission on the ground of breach of warranty of quality; that he then permitted the raisin association to take possession (at his own instigation, or, at least, without objection); and that he then elected to sue on the contract for breach of warranty of title. There was no fraud or misrepresentation on the part of respondents, but appellant received just what he bargained for. He has failed to show any ground upon which he can charge the subsequent loss of possession to respondents and his appeal is entirely without merit.

Judgment affirmed.

Ex parte TRAUGER. (Cr. 1594.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 28, 1927.

1. Habeas corpus $\S$ 92(1)—Insufficiency of evidence to warrant conviction cannot be considered in habeas corpus.

In a habeas corpus proceeding, the question of insufficiency of evidence to warrant conviction cannot be considered.

2. Intoxicating Liquors $\S$ 222—Complaint for unlawful possession of liquor need not negative exceptions which would make possession lawful.

Complaint charging unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor need not negative any of exceptions which, if they existed, would make possession lawful.

Original application by George Trauger for writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the sheriff of Tulare county to secure release from custody. Petition denied.

John Preston King, of Lindsay, for petitioner.

CONREY, P. J. In the petition it appears that in a justice's court in the county of Tulare a complaint was filed, wherein petitioner was charged with unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor, a misdemeanor. He pleaded not guilty, and was tried and convicted.

[1] The evidence was in the form of certain stipulations of fact. Petitioner claims that the court was without jurisdiction to render its judgment against petitioner, and that the imprisonment (for nonpayment of the imposed fine) is illegal, in this, that the mere possession of intoxicating liquor is not a crime, but that it must be charged and proved that the possession was accompanied by some unlawful intent. In a habeas corpus proceeding the question of insufficiency of evidence to warrant conviction cannot be considered. In re Jacobs, 175 Cal. 661, 166 P. 801; In re Horr, 177 Cal. 721, 171 P. 801; In re Williams, 183 Cal. 11, 190 P. 163.

[2] The case is thus reduced to the point where the only question relates to the sufficiency of the complaint to charge the commission of a misdemeanor. There is nothing in the petition to indicate that the complaint failed in any essential element required in charging the commission of a public offense. Where the charge is that of unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor, it is not necessary to negative any of the exceptions which, if they existed, would make the possession lawful. People v. Cencevich, 64 Cal. App. 39, 44, 220 P. 448.

SAMPSON v. DRAEGER. (Civ. 3374.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 29, 1927.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1928.

Specific performance ⇨41—Specific performance could not be ordered against land purchaser who signed no instrument nor took possession under contract, though part payment made (Civ. Code, § 1741).

Where a real estate broker had, by the owner's permission, sold land to defendant, but defendant had neither signed any instrument, although he had accepted a receipt upon making part payment, nor had he taken possession under the contract, held, in suit by one coming into possession of the broker's contract rights on the broker's death, that such a situation did not, because of Civ. Code, § 1741, warrant a court's ordering specific performance of the contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Suit by Stewart B. Sampson against Otto Draeger. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. E. Borton and James Petrini, both of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Wiley & Harvey, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant, Otto Draeger, from a judgment entered against him in the sum of $2,700, in an action to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate.

The facts are not in dispute, and can thus be briefly stated: Alex Kirkpatrick and others were the owners of 160 acres of land in Kern county, Cal., the title to which stood in the name of Kirkpatrick, as trustee. W. A. Sampson was a duly licensed real estate broker, residing near the land. On February 27, 1920, W. A. Sampson wrote a letter to Kirkpatrick, who resided in Los Angeles, Cal., and said in part:

"I have good reason to believe that if you and your associates will promptly give me authority to sell the west half of section 27, at $80.00 per acre, I can line up local parties to take the land on terms. * * * [Here follows terms.] In the event the foregoing is approved, and I line up responsible parties to take over the land and make improvements as stipulated, I will expect five per cent. commission. * * *"

To this letter Kirkpatrick replied:

"Replying to your favor of February 27th, in which you ask for authority to sell the west half of 27 on terms stated, will say we will sell on terms for you, viz.: A contract of sale for $80.00 per acre land clear. * * *"

Kirkpatrick made no mention of the 5 per cent. commission demanded by Sampson. There were no other writings between these parties, but Kirkpatrick later came to the land and talked the matter over with Mr. W. A. Sampson, and it was finally agreed that Sampson was to sell the land on the basis of $80 per acre net to Kirkpatrick, one-fourth to be cash. Pursuant to this arrangement, Mr. Sampson advertised all the lands belonging to Kirkpatrick and his associates for sale at public auction. The auction sale was had, but this particular piece of land was not sold. Thereafter, and on or about March 22, 1920, defendant, Otto Draeger, and Sampson entered into negotiations relative to the purchase and sale of said land, which resulted in defendant agreeing to buy the land for $100 per acre, and paying Sampson $500, and Sampson giving defendant a receipt in the words and figures as follows:

"Received—Wasco, Cal. March 22, 1920, of Otto Draeger of Vacaville, Cal., check for five hundred dollars on account and as first payment on purchase of 160 acres of the west half of section 27, township 27 south, range 24 east, M. D. B. & M. (definite legal description to be supplied) at $100 per acre (sixteen thousand dollars) with a further cash payment of three thousand five hundred dollars when certificate of title showing land clear of incumbrance is ready for delivery, and deed for same. The balance of purchase price to be divided, $4,000 in three years and $8,000 in five years, with privilege of partial payments of $1,000 in advance of date due. W. A. Sampson."

★Rehearing denied.

It will be noted that the defendant, Draeger, did not sign the foregoing receipt, or any writing whatever relative to the land, and the contract, as far as he was concerned, was entirely oral. At the time defendant received said receipt from Sampson, he did not know that Kirkpatrick and his associates owned the land. Defendant negotiated with Sampson under the belief that the land belonged to Sampson.

Within two weeks after the payment of the $500 and the giving of the receipt above set forth, W. A. Sampson died. After his death, defendant paid to Kirkpatrick the full amount of $80 per acre for the land, and obtained from him a deed to said land, and, after receiving the deed from Kirkpatrick, took possession of the property. The estate of W. A. Sampson was probated, and all his rights under the contract with the defendant were distributed to the plaintiff.

Upon these facts the trial court found that the plaintiff, as successor in interest of W. A. Sampson, was entitled to judgment against the defendant for the sum of $2,700, the balance of the purchase price of said land under the contract with W. A. Sampson, and rendered judgment accordingly.

Many contentions are made for a reversal of the judgment. It seems to us, however, that only two questions need be determined: First, did W. A. Sampson and Otto Draeger enter into a valid and enforceable contract of sale and purchase? or, to state it another way, Did W. A. Sampson enter into such a contract with Otto Draeger that could be specifically enforced against Otto Draeger? Second, was there a part performance by Otto Draeger, sufficient to bind him, notwithstanding his failure to sign the contract?

We think both these questions must be answered in the negative.

Section 1741 of the Civil Code provides:

"No agreement for the sale of real property, or of an interest therein, is valid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing, and subscribed by the party to be charged, or his agent, thereunto, authorized, in writing; but this does not abridge the power of any court to compel the specific performance of any agreement for the sale of real property in case of part performance thereof."

The party to be charged in this action was the defendant, Otto Draeger, and his signature was absolutely essential to make an enforceable contract against him, except where his conduct has amounted to such a performance, or part performance, of the contract as to relieve the contract of the necessity of his signature. Harper v. Goldschmidt, 156 Cal. 245, 104 P. 451, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 689, 134 Am. St. Rep. 124. Therefore, unless the defendant did something to relieve the contract from the necessity of his signature, it cannot be enforced against him. In the case at bar the defendant, Draeger, paid $500 to W. A. Sampson, and took Sampson's receipt therefor, but did not go into possession of the property, or exercise any dominion or control over it, until after he had paid Kirkpatrick $80 an acre for the land, and had received a deed from him. This is wholly insufficient to show a part performance on the part of Draeger.

In the case of Harper v. Goldschmidt, supra, the court said:

"But where as in this case, the contract is wholly executory, and the evidence of it amounts to nothing more than a receipt signed by the vendor, and the alleged part performance is nothing more than the payment of a small amount of money by the nonsigning vendee, and the acceptance of a receipt therefor, no case can be found which holds such to be sufficient part performance to relieve from the statute of frauds. * * * The statute is satisfied and the nonsigning defendant is held where the contract has been executed upon the part of the vendor, or lessor, by the giving of a deed or lease which has been accepted by the vendee or lessee. * * * In such a case the contract has been wholly executed by the one party, and the acceptance of the deed or lease is consistently held to be a sufficient part performance to charge the other party. So, also, in case of executory contracts where the nonsigning vendee enters into possession, or exercises dominion in other ways over the land, it is held that this amounts to such a part performance as will bind the nonsigning vendee. But where the act of the vendee is no more than the payment of a small amount of the purchase price, and the acceptance of a receipt for that amount, leaving all of the rest of the contract executory, both upon his part and upon the part of the vendor, no case has been pointed out which holds such acts to amount to a part performance which will bind the vendee. 'His refusal to complete the contract after paying part of the purchase money is no fraud upon the seller but his loss.'"

Therefore, if we admit that W. A. Sampson was the vendor, and the defendant, Otto Draeger, the vendee, yet, under the undisputed facts in this case, there was no such part performance of the contract on the part of the defendant as the law contemplates.

Plaintiff, while admitting that the contract, as far as defendant is concerned, was oral, nevertheless contends that defendant obtained and is enjoying the full fruits thereof, and cannot escape liability by pleading the statute of frauds. We find no merit in this contention. Defendant agreed orally to pay W. A. Sampson $100 per acre for the land, and actually paid him $500. Sampson did not own the land. Thereafter defendant bought the same land from the owners for $80 per acre, and received no credit whatever for the $500 he had paid to W. A. Sampson. In fact, the owners, at the time they sold to defendant, knew nothing of the negotiations carried on by W. A. Sampson; therefore the contract that defendant entered into with the owners of the land was an entirely different contract than the one made with W. A. Sampson. Defendant could have bought the land from the owners at any time for $80 per acre; therefore, under these facts, how can it be contended that defendant obtained the fruits of the contract entered into with W. A. Sampson?

The whole difficulty in respondent's case is that W. A. Sampson did not take a binding and enforceable contract of purchase from the defendant, and the defendant did not perform the contract so as to take out of the statute of frauds.

If it be conceded that the plaintiff's action is one to collect a commission from the defendant, still he cannot maintain the action, for the reason that there is no note or memorandum of any kind signed by the defendant agreeing to pay a commission to W. A. Sampson.

From the view we have taken of the case, the other points raised become wholly immaterial. We find no basis upon which the judgment can be sustained.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

BUFFALO WEAVING & BELTING CO. v. BOYLE MFG. CO. (Civ. 4870.)*

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 22, 1927.

Rehearing Granted Jan. 20, 1928.

1. Sales ⚡384(6)—Contract for purchase of luggage straps to be manufactured held breached, as respects damages, as of date of seller's declaration after permitting extension.

Where seller of automobile luggage straps permitted extensions of delivery period for more than year, date of purchaser's breach, as respects damages, was fixed by seller's declaration of breach; reasonable time for shipping instructions having expired.

2. Sales ⚡384(6)—Market value of straps manufactured under contract on date of breach should have been excluded on objection that it was improper basis for measuring damages (Civ. Code, §§ 3300, 3353).

In action for damages for alleged breach of contract under which defendant agreed to purchase web automobile luggage straps manufactured by plaintiff, testimony by president of plaintiff company as to market price of straps on date breach was declared should have been excluded, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 3300, 3353, on objection that market value was not proper basis for measuring damages.

3. Sales ⚡384(6)—Loss for breach of contract to purchase straps to be manufactured held difference between manufacturing cost and contract price.

Loss of seller under contract for sale of web automobile luggage straps to be manufactured by seller held, under proof, one of loss of profits, being the difference between costs of manufacturing in the finished ready to deliver state and the contract price.

4. Appeal and error ⚡241—Objection to testimony of market value as improper basis of damages held waived by motion to strike solely on ground that contract was not breached on date in question.

Objection to testimony of market value as improper basis for measuring damages for buyer's breach of contract for luggage straps to be manufactured held waived by motion to strike testimony solely on ground that contract was not breached on date in question.

5. Appeal and error ⚡171(1)—Appellate court cannot change rule of damages after objection to such rule as applied in lower court was waived.

Objection to application of erroneous rule of damages having been waived in lower court in motion to strike testimony thereon, appellate court cannot change the rule.

6. Sales ⚡384(1)—Evidence that selling price, on date of declared breach of contract protecting buyer against seller's price decline, had declined to market price precluded recovery.

Where contract for purchase of web automobile luggage straps contained provision that buyer would be protected against seller's own price decline, there can be no recovery for breach of contract where plaintiff's own evidence showed that its selling price on date of declared breach was the same as goods would bring in open market, since in such case no damage accrued.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by the Buffalo Weaving & Belting Company against the Boyle Manufacturing Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

G. C. De Garmo and H. B. Cornell, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fredericks & Hanna, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem. This is an action for damages for the alleged breach of a contract, under which defendant agreed to purchase a large quantity of web automobile luggage straps from plaintiff. The contract is based on an order and correspondence had between plaintiff and defendant directly and through plaintiff's agent, with headquarters in San Francisco. For convenience we shall occasionally refer to plaintiff as the "Weaving Company," to defendant as "Boyle Company" or "Boyle" and to the San Francisco representative of plaintiff as "agent." Judgment went for plaintiff according to the prayer of the complaint, and defendant appeals.

The case is here on a bill of exceptions, which contains some oral testimony and a number of letters. For convenience, the es-sententials of the letters have been condensed under our own numbers, which do not conform to numbers used in the transcript.

The negotiations begin with letter No. 1, from agent to Boyle, April 22, 1920. Agent solicits business for his principal, Weaving Company herein, and states that Weaving Company "would like to have * * * sample of your trunk strap." Advises it would be good time to place order for next season, with shipment later.

Letter No. 2, April 23, 1920. Boyle replies, asking quotations on 50,000 to 75,000 for future delivery; 10,000, immediate delivery.

Letter No. 3, April 27, 1920, agent to Boyle:

He has communicated with his principal for low quotations, and "we are pretty well sold up on trunk straps, but if we should take on our [sic] order for a quantity of 50,000 to 75,000 for future delivery, I assume it would mean some time in September or October, and that would give us ample time to get these made up."

Letter No. 4, May 10, 1920, agent to Boyle, quoting $40 per gross f. o. b. Buffalo, subject to change. Wire reply so buckle can be arranged for.

Letter No. 5, May 11, 1920, Boyle Company to agent:

"We are in receipt of your favor of the 10th inst. quoting $40 per gross f. o. b. Buffalo on quantities of 50,000 to 75,000 1¼" 6' trunk straps, as per sample submitted, and herewith inclose our order No. 280 covering 80,000 of same. We would ask you to kindly wire this order in to your factory and ask them to make a 'special rush' of the 10,000 referred to in order. The order is, of course, placed on the understanding that these straps will match up with the samples submitted."

The order was dated May 11, 1920, inclosed with letter No. 5, and, omitting salutation, signature, and two or three additional, but nonessential, requirements under subtitle "Important Instructions," is as follows:

"Enter our order as follows, for shipment. * * * Route via Santa Fé at Chicago. Terms: * * *

"Order No. 280. Quantity: 80,000. Description: 6' straps made from 1¼" russet trunk. Web. Complete with nickel plated buckle and tip, as per sample submitted. $40.00 per gross f. o. b. Buffalo.

"N. B.—10,000 of the above to be shipped very earliest possible—balance later.

"Important Instructions. Please acknowledge receipt of this order, show price, and state when shipment will be made."

Letter No. 6, May 13, 1920, agent to Boyle, acknowledges order.

Letter No. 7, May 14, 1920, agent to Boyle. Received information permitting him to assume 10,000 will be shipped within a month.

Letter No. 8, Weaving Company to Boyle, May 18, 1920: Acknowledgment of order No. 280. In good position to get off first lot of straps. Only waiting for express shipment of buckles to rush forward. Fortunate having webbing on hand.

Letter No. 9, May 24, 1920, agent to Boyle: Sending today's mail sample web strap. Different from stock strap; therefore would like approval.

Letter No. 10, May 26, 1920, Boyle to agent:

Strap O. K. "In regard to shipment of this order, as previously advised, we wish 10,000 straps shipped at the earliest possible moment. The balance of the order however we do not want shipped until about the first of next year. * * * We would ask that you take up the matter of shipping instructions with us some time about the 1st of December. * * * We are wondering if we would be protected on this order in the event of a decline in price prior to date of shipment."

Letter No. 11, May 28, 1920, agent to Boyle:

Order simply stated, as to delivery after first 10,000, "balance later." Agent quite sure Weaving Company inferred they were to make up and ship from time to time as completed. Weaving Company arranging for raw material on this basis. Writing as to protection against factory price decline. "Manufacturing conditions abnormal; help and raw materials scarce. If you could permit us to make monthly shipments, beginning about July 1st, you would then be sure of a sufficient quantity to take care of your requirements, instead of making shipment to you of the entire order complete, some time after December 1st."

Letter No. 12, June 2, 1920, Boyle to agent:

Note you have written Weaving Company about price decline. We appreciate factory position. Apart from the 10,000 straps, will need none until spring. "We do not think it unreasonable to ask you to protect us against your own decline, a practice quite common in our own business. * * * In regard to shipping instructions, we could agree to your making monthly shipments commencing about the 1st of October and ending January 1, 1921."

Letter No. 13, June 4, 1920, agent to Boyle:

Have written Weaving Company about protecting you against factory price decline and reason you ordered early was to be sure having straps in time. "I fully agree with you that as a rule, orders of this kind are taken with a protection against the manufacturer's own decline. I am quite sure there will be no question about this, but would prefer to have this come direct from my principals. * * * Also note your shipping instructions, commencing about October 1, 1920, and ending January 1, 1921."

Letter No. 14, June 7, 1920, agent to Boyle:

"Our people inform me they will protect you against their own decline, although they say you must take into consideration the fact that they * * * have had to buy this material outright * * * and can get no protection. * * * Now further with reference to shipment, they state it would be some little time before they complete the first 10,000 straps, and in view of increasing freight congestion * * * they feel it would be well for you to have these monthly shipments coming along to you, and in that way you would be assured of having the straps on hand; whereas, if you call upon us to furnish the entire quantity in two or three months we might be held up owing to * * * contingencies that might arise. * * * Furthermore, it would mean we would have to accumulate a lot of web for the next five or six months, before we start on your order. Inasmuch as we are going to protect you in our own decline in price, you will undoubtedly yield to our point of making monthly shipments, as we shall certainly not crowd you with an enormous amount of goods each month. When they wrote their letter they did not have my letter with reference to beginning shipments October 1st and ending about January, 1921. I am in hopes, however, when they receive these instructions, they will be able to make up the straps and get them ready to ship monthly, beginning October 1st and completing the entire order by January 1, 1921. If, however, you will permit us to begin shipments a little earlier, will be glad to have you advise us."

Letter No. 15, June 15, 1920, agent to Boyle:

"They [respondent company] feel inasmuch as you are permitting them to make monthly shipments beginning October 1 and ending January 1, 1921, this is very satisfactory, and as I have already informed you we would protect you in the event of a decline in our own price."

Letter No. 16, July 9, 1920, agent to Boyle: Refers to another order.

Letter No. 17, October 28, 1920, Weaving Company to Boyle: Adjusting shipments to date at $32 per gross.

No. 18, telegram, Boyle to agent, November 30, 1920:

"Cancellation of many orders for automobile accessories necessitate our cancellation of all orders on your files unshipped at this date."

Letter No. 19, November 30, 1920, Boyle to Weaving Company: Incloses telegram sent agent. Regrets necessity of cancellation because of lack of orders.

Letters No. 20 and No. 21, November 30 and December 6, 1920, Weaving Company to Boyle:

Acknowledge receipt of cancellation telegram and advise consultation with agent. "Asking him to take the matter up with you, as he did the original order."

Letter No. 22, December 7, 1920, agent to Boyle:

Gives history of deal and argument. "At the time you placed this order with us, it was undoubtedly placed in good faith, and our people accepted the same at a fixed price, with the understanding that in the event of a decline on our own price, we would protect you and give you the benefit of same. * * * However, we gave you the benefit of a decline of 20 per cent. unsolicited, and it has been our intention that in the event of our making further declines that we continue to give you the benefit of same on unfilled portion of your order. Now our people do not feel as though they should accept cancellation of this order, as you will recall when it was placed we had to commit ourselves for the hardware, which we purchased at a fixed price, without any protection in the event of a decline by the manufacturer. We have all this material in our plant, and all paid for. Now there is no doubt but what you are going to want these straps as soon as business revives, which we all hope will be shortly after the first of the year. Our people feel you should be willing to allow the order to stand on our books for future shipment. We have a lot of straps all made up for shipment this month, and trust you will permit us to send them along, as they are made up special to your order."

Letter No. 23, December 11, 1920, Boyle to agent:

"Your letter of the 7th inst. regarding cancellation of our order on made up web straps received and contents noted. Your proposal to keep this order on your books for future shipment is agreeable to us, but we wish it to be understood that no part of this order is to be shipped without written instructions from us to that effect." Hopes business conditions will soon permit permission to ship part of order.

Letter No. 24, December 13, 1920, agent to Boyle:

Appreciate your position. Believe revival of business about first of year. Believe Boyle probably be asking for shipments by first of year. "If there is any further declines our people propose to give you the benefit of same."

Letter No. 25, December 21, 1920, Weaving Company to Boyle:

"We have heard from our Mr. Wirtner [agent] with reference to your order, and have noted the correspondence which you have had with him. We are very glad indeed that you have decided to keep this order on our books, and we earnestly hope that conditions will improve so that you will find the usual heavy demand for your goods. You will see that we are going to protect you on declines and shall do all in our power to give you good service in every way."

Letter No. 26, October 5, 1921, agent to Boyle: Complains about not receiving orders. Reminds Boyle buckles purchased. Asks for webbing business.

Letter No. 27, November 12, 1921, Weaving Company to Boyle: Calling attention to special buckles carried for Boyle's work, and asks for orders.

Letter No. 28, November 21, Boyle to agent:

Checked over stock. " * * * We have * * * enough to give us a good start for the coming season. We will, however, undoubtedly be in the market later on for a further supply of this commodity, and you will certainly hear from us as soon as the writer is able to get a better line of what our requirements are likely to be."

Letter No. 29, November 23, 1921, agent to Boyle: Appreciate advising conditions. Very much like to receive your order, but very glad to hold special buckles until your requirements bring you in the market.

Letter No. 30, February 11, 1922, Weaving Company to agent:

Expresses disappointment regarding Boyle orders, and says: "Their promise to give us an opportunity of figuring when they are in the market does not sound good to us; we want some relief. * * * Our loss on the web is not so serious as the buckles, as we have, of course, other uses for the webbing. If he can't use the straps, we want shipping instructions on the buckles which were ordered especially for him. We want no profit and are willing to bill them out to him at cost."

Letter No. 31, February 15, 1922, agent to Boyle: About the same as letter No. 30. Suggests buckles be taken off their hands.

Letter No. 32, February 18, 1922, Boyle to agent:

Declines to receive buckles. Hopes for revival of business. "Rest assured that we will place no strap orders without consulting you."

Letter No. 33, March 1, 1922, is a bill for the buckles, sent to Boyle. (But buckles were not shipped.)

Letter No. 34, March 8, 1922, Boyle to agent: Returns buckle invoice. Says charge not in order at this time. Will give additional order in line with agent's letter of November 23d.

Letter No. 35 (no date), Weaving Company to Boyle:

Recites history of deal. Demands shipping instructions for rest of order to specify shipping within three months after receipt of instructions at the factory decline price, if any, not to exceed $40 per gross at time of shipment. "If we do not receive shipping instructions from you as above outlined within the time mentioned, we shall consider you in default and that you have breached your contract with us, and that the modification of the contract to guarantee you against our decline in price having been made on your agreement to take the straps out in a certain time, and you not having done so, that such modification is of no further force or effect, and that the original agreement to pay $40 per gross is reinstated, and that our damage will be the difference between such $40 per gross and the market price, whatever it may be at the time of your default."

Letter No. 36, April 25, 1922, Boyle to Weaving Company: Acknowledges receipt of last letter from Weaving Company. Surprised attitude assumed. States they are purchasing no straps from other source. Assures Weaving Company will purchase from them when in need.

Letter No. 37, February 7, 1923, Boyle to Weaving Company: States conditions are such that they can use 3,000 more straps, and orders same.

Letter No. 38, February 16, 1923, Weaving

Company to Boyle: Refers to former correspondence and states they have placed the matter in attorney's hands.

No goods other than the 1,400 gross delivered and paid for were ever shipped. Suit was brought on the 13th of February, 1923, whereby plaintiff sought to recover the sum of $6,755.50 damages, estimated by deducting the market price of straps as of the date of defendant's letter of April 25, 1922, from the contract price. According to the complaint and the testimony of the president of the plaintiff corporation, this sum as damages is arrived at as follows: $40 per gross contract price, less $25.25 per gross market price, times 458 gross undelivered, equals $6,755.50.

[1] Appellant herein (Boyle Company) contends that the original contract was voluntarily nullified, and that another and different contract became effective by the exchange of the cancellation telegram, the reply thereto, and appellant's letter of December 11, 1920. The trial court found that the original contract remained in force, and gave judgment in accord with the pleadings and plaintiff's (Weaving Company's) theory of the case.

We are of the opinion that the original contract was never nullified, but remained in full force and effect, except that the time of shipping the goods was extended for a reasonable time, and that such reasonable time had expired on the 15th of April, 1922, the date of letter declaring a breach of the contract.

[2] George L. Mathewson, president of the respondent company, was called as a witness for the purpose of proving the market value of the straps in question, and after proper qualification was asked:

"What was the market price of the straps covered by the Boyle Manufacturing Company contract on April 15, 1922?"

To which counsel for appellant interposed the following objection:

"We object to that question and also the answer on the ground that it is immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent for the reason that under the pleadings the market value is not the basis for the fixing of the damages and is not material."

The court overruled the objection, with leave to move to strike. On pages 77 and 78 of the transcript is the following:

"At the conclusion of the hearing defendant moved to strike out all of the testimony of the witness George L. Mathewson concerning the market value of such straps and buckles in 1922 on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, in this, that no breach of contract was shown to have been created at that time, and the court thereupon denied the motion."

Mr. Mathewson's testimony was as follows:

"A. [to question above quoted]: $25.25.

"Q. Per gross? A. Per gross.

"Q. Do you know the market price during the balance of the month of April, 1922? A. The same.

"Q. And you do know it, and that was the price? A. Yes.

"Q. Do you know the market price during May and June, 1922? A. $25.25.

"Q. And that is the market price f. o. b. Buffalo? A. Yes.

"Q. So that the difference then between the contract price of $40 and the market price of $25.25 per gross is $14.75 a gross? A. I base my opinion of market value during this period from April 15, 1922, to July, 1922, partly upon sales of straps similar to those covered by the Boyle Manufacturing Company contract."

He then testified that sales were made by his (respondent) company of similar straps on June 23, July 19, June 5, June 30, May 15, and June 24, 1922, at $25.25 per gross, and said:

"Those dates I have just given in my answer to the last question are the dates upon which sales were made by the Buffalo Belting & Weaving Company of similar straps to those covered by the Boyle Manufacturing Company contract at the price I have stated, f. o. b. Buffalo. Those were sales made in the usual course of business."

He then testified that there were other sales on or prior to April 15, 1922, to wit, April 8, May 26, April 24, April 18, April 11, and March 28, 1922, at $25.25 per gross; and that "the market value of these straps as covered by the contract from March 1, 1922, to August 1, 1922, was $25.25 per gross f. o. b. Buffalo."

[3-5] We believe the objection to the original question which elicited this testimony was good and should have been sustained; but when counsel for appellant moved to strike Mathewson's testimony he seems to have narrowed the ground of his objection to one point, viz., that the contract was not breached as of the date stated in the question—April 15, 1922—claiming it would seem that the breach, if there ever was one, occurred on some other date, and, therefore, that the market price of the goods of that date is not applicable in the estimation of damages. The motion to strike was not that the method of measuring damage sought to be applied through the question was erroneous. That it was erroneous is clear. Lund v. Lachman, 29 Cal. App. 31, 154 P. 295. There is no contention that the straps were made up, except in the letter of December 7, 1920, where it is stated that Weaving Company has "a lot of straps all made up for shipment this month," or that they were ever all made up and actually sold in the market so as to afford the smallest possible loss. The damages, if any, should have been estimated under section 3300, rather than under section 3353, of the Civil Code. The loss, under the proof in this case, was clearly one of loss of profits—the difference between the cost of manufacturing in the finished, ready to deliver state and the contract price. Utter v. Chapman, 38 Cal. 659, 665; Connell v. Higgins, 170 Cal. 541, 549, 150 P. 769; Hale v. Trout, 35 Cal. 229; Cederberg v. Robinson, 100 Cal. 93, 34 P. 625; Johnson v. Hinkel, 29 Cal. App. 78, 154 P. 487. The objection to the rule of damages as applied below seemingly having been waived in the motion to strike, this court cannot here change the rule. Durkee v. Chino Land & Water Co., 151 Cal. 561, 569, 570, 91 P. 389; Merrill v. Kohlberg, 29 Cal. App. 382, 385, 386, 155 P. 824. Since the date of the breach of the contract is by us herein determined as contended for by respondent, to wit, April 15, 1922, Mathewson's testimony is proper, and the trial court was right in denying the motion to strike.

[6] There is, however, an insurmountable obstacle to the recovery of the plaintiff on the testimony introduced. The time of shipping the straps (other than the 10,000) was left open in the original order. The correspondence before the order was given showed that it was given for seasonal and not immediate delivery. Many letters passed between the parties in which respondent tacitly conceded the choice of date of shipment to rest with appellant. Appellant wanted to be protected against factory price decline, and finally the parties' minds met when respondent, by agent, writes appellant that "they feel inasmuch as you are permitting them to make monthly shipments beginning October 1 and ending January 1, 1921, this is very satisfactory, and, as I have already informed you, we would protect you in the event of a decline in our own price"; and, in another letter, that, "inasmuch as we are going to protect you in our own decline in price, you will undoubtedly yield to our point of making monthly shipments." Here we have the parties construing each other's rights when all is amicable between them.

"It is to be assumed that parties to a contract best know what was meant by its terms, and are the least liable to be mistaken as to its intention; that each party is alert to his own interests, and to insistence on his rights, and that whatever is done by the parties contemporaneously with the execution of the contract is done under its terms as they understood and intended it should be. Parties are far less liable to have been mistaken as to the intention of their contract during the period while harmonious and practical construction reflects that intention, than they are when subsequent differences have impelled them to resort to law, and one of them then seeks a construction at variance with the practical construction they have placed upon it. The law, however, recognizes the practical construction of a contract as the best evidence of what was intended by its provisions. In its execution, every executory contract requires more or less of a practical construction to be given it by the parties, and when this has been given, the law, in any subsequent litigation which involves the construction of the contract, adopts the practical construction of the parties as the true construction, and as the safest rule to be applied in the solution of the difficulty." Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. 1, 14, 15, 84 P. 145, 150 (6 L. R. A. [N. S.] 275).

The subsequent extension of time to deliver carried the full contract along unimpaired. When respondent decided to consider the time unreasonable and declared a breach, it could not eliminate any part of the contract. The contract at all times contained the provision that the Boyle Company would be protected against Weaving Company's own price decline. By the testimony of the latter's president, the company's own selling price on the date of the declared breach had declined to $25.25 per gross, the very figure the goods would bring in the open market. Applying the rule of damages used in the case, no damage at all accrued. Had the objection to the questions put to Mathewson been sustained, the same result would have obtained, as there was no testimony whatever as to loss of profits.

Judgment reversed.

88 Cal. App. 82

BIRCH et al. v. ORANGE COUNTY
(two cases). (Civ. 3361.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 23, 1928.

1. Taxation §40(3)—Assessment of oil land at $600,000 and surrounding oil lands at $40,000 to $177,250, held irreconcilable with impartial performance of official duties.

Inequality between assessment of oil land, producing 138,601 barrels during three-month period at $600,000, and assessment of surrounding lands, producing from 72,185 to 135,587 barrels of oil of about same specific gravity, and water content during same time, at $40,000 to $177,250, held too gross to be reconciled with impartial performance of official duties, though it was more difficult to drill on other properties, and former property was in center of oil field.

2. Taxation §40(3)—Much lower assessment of few other properties does not warrant reduction of assessment; "equalize."

Mere fact that a few properties are assessed much lower in proportion to value than others is not sufficient ground for reducing assessment of latter, though showing at least constructive fraud, as assessment must be compared with average assessment of all other properties in county in determining whether unequal burden of taxation has been imposed; "to equalize" being "to make equal, to cause to correspond, to be like in amount or degree, as compared with something."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Equalize.]

3. Taxation §543(7) — Assessment officials' testimony as to valuing oil land at nearly four times maximum estimate of owners and experts, held not to create conflict, requiring that assessment be upheld.

Assessor's and equalization board members' testimony that they estimated value of certain oil land at about $2,000,000, held not to require that assessment thereof be upheld; being insufficient to create conflict with owners' testimony that they tried unsuccessfully to sell land for $500,000, and testimony of petroleum geologists and engineers that market value was from $400,000 to $539,000.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Actions, consolidated for trial, by A. Otis Birch and others, copartners, doing business under the firm name and style of the Birch Oil Company, against the County of Orange. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Clyde C. Shoemaker, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Alex P. Nelson, and L. A. West, both of Santa Ana, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiffs brought two actions, under the provisions of section 3819 of the Political Code, to recover excess taxes paid by them under protest for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1916. The actions were consolidated and tried together. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, and this appeal is from the judgment. In a former trial judgment of nonsuit was entered. That judgment was reversed on appeal. Birch v. County of Orange, 186 Cal. 736, 200 P. 647. The second trial was had upon the same pleadings as the first.

[1] The plaintiffs own a tract of oil land about a quarter of a mile in length from north to south and an eighth of a mile wide, containing 21.16 acres. This land is bounded on the north by lands of the Crown of the Valley Oil Company, under lease to the Columbia Oil Producing Company; on the east by those of the Brea Canyon Oil Company; on the south by those of the General Petroleum Company; and on the west by those of the Fullerton Oil Company. These surrounding holdings are much larger in area than that of the plaintiffs. This fact is not of great significance, however, because only parts of such surrounding lands have been proved to contain oil, and they have but little value other than for the oil therein. Nearly all the plaintiffs' oil wells are located about 120 feet from the boundaries of their land, and many of the best wells of the surrounding owners are about the same distance on opposite sides of the Birch boundaries. The year 1916 "was the first year in which there was an attempt made to readjust the valuations of the oil properties" of the county "on a production basis." The following table has been compiled from facts to which the county assessor testified at the trial; the first column of figures giving the number of producing wells upon each holding, the second the number of barrels of oil produced during the three months next preceding March 1, 1916, the third the assessor's valuations placed upon the lands and the mineral rights therein, and the fourth the valuations fixed by the county board of equalization:

Birch Oil Co.	8	138,601	$645,120	$600,000
Fullerton Oil Co.	8	108,982	34,915	47,155
General Petroleum Co.	8	84,554	40,000	40,000
Brea Canyon Oil Co.	23	135,587	130,000	177,250
Columbia Oil Producing Co.	5	72,185	111,690	111,690

Nearly all the oil produced by the Brea Canyon Oil Company came from ten of its wells, most of which are near the Birch property; that property being fully developed, and "the center of the developed territory in that oil district." The wells of all the five companies produced gas in commercial quantities, but the comparative value thereof and the proportionate amounts produced by the respective companies were not such as to materially affect the problem of equalization. The gross annual returns from the Birch property were $290,000, and the operating expenses $200,000. About half the product of the Birch wells at the time of the assessment was "light oil, * * * bringing 71 cents, and the other oil * * * was about 62 cents." The foregoing facts were substantially proved at the hearing before the board of equalization and at the former trial. These assessments were considered by the Supreme Court on the former appeal and, in relation thereto, at page 740 (200 P. 649), it is said:

"On the very basis used by the assessor the excessive and unreasonable disparity between the assessments upon plaintiffs' lands and others of like value and similarly situated is so obvious and inconsistent with any theory of fair dealing that it cannot be reconciled on the mere presumption that the assessor and board of equalization did their duty as they saw it. In the absence of any explanation or justification for this inequality (and there is none offered), it stands out so glaringly and out of all reason that of itself it raises an inference of bad faith."

No reasonable explanation of such disparity appears in the record on this appeal. The assessor testified at the last trial that the specific gravity of the oil produced from the Birch property was from 19 to 29, "more of the higher gravity than the lower," that of the General Petroleum 19, Brea Canyon 23,

Columbia 28, and Fullerton 23; that the oil of the other companies contained a higher water content than that of the Birch Company, although other and specific evidence shows that the percentage of water in the oil from the Birch wells is about the same as the average in that of the other companies; and that it was more difficult to drill wells on the other properties than on the Birch land. The difficulty of drilling would be an important factor in determining the value of undeveloped oil land, but it is a false quantity in fixing the value of lands in which drilling has been completed, as were the lands immediately surrounding those of the plaintiffs, and which were adopted by the assessor as a basis of comparison. Giving the fullest consideration to the evidence tending to support the assessment, the inequality is too gross to be reconciled with the impartial performance of official duty by the assessor and the county board of equalization. It is true that the Birch property appears to be in the center of the oil field, but the difference in oil production between the plaintiffs' wells and those of the surrounding lands, making all due allowance for difference in quality, is not such as to justify the astonishing difference in valuations. That the assessor and the board of equalization must have realized this gross inequality is evidenced by the fact that in the year 1917 the same properties, under similar conditions, were assessed as set forth in the following table, arranged in the same manner as the one already given:

Birch Oil Co.	8	51,918	$454,390
Fullerton Oil Co.	9	73,010	345,000
General Petroleum Oil Co.	8	64,489	197,155
Brea Canyon Oil Co.	23	98,679	392,820
Columbia Oil Producing Co.	6	45,166	406,465

[2] The mere fact, however, that a few other properties are assessed much lower in proportion to value than those of the plaintiffs, while showing at least constructive fraud, is not a sufficient ground for reducing plaintiffs' assessment. "To equalize is to make equal, to cause to correspond, or be like in amount or degree, as compared with something." Wells Fargo & Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 56 Cal. 194, 196. Obviously, in determining whether an unequal burden of taxation has been placed upon him, a complaining taxpayer's assessment is to be compared with the average assessment of all the other properties in the county. Wild Goose County Club v. County of Butte, 60 Cal. App. 339, 212 P. 711; Mahoney v. City of San Diego, 198 Cal. 388, 397, 245 P. 189. Of course, if the taxpayer shows that his property is assessed at a greatly higher proportion of its value than that of several other persons, the inference may arise therefrom, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that his assessment is disproportionate to the assessments of the county as a whole, but, when it is shown that his assessment is not disproportionate to that of other property generally, to reduce his assessment merely because the property of a few others is assessed too low would only increase the inequalities already existing in the assessment roll of the county.

[3] In this case, however, the uncontradicted evidence shows that the plaintiffs' property was assessed for a greater percentage of its value than other property in the county generally. The assessor testified that the property of the county as a whole was assessed at one-third of its value. Two of the plaintiffs testified that the Birch property was of the value of only $500,000 in March, 1916 and that during the latter part of 1915 and the early part of 1916 they endeavored to sell it at that price, but were unable to do so. Harry R. Johnson, a "petroleum geologist and valuation engineer," testified that the market value of the Birch property on the first Monday in March, 1916, was $530,000. Robert B. Moran, a "geologist and petroleum engineer," testified that the value was $400,000. Carl H. Beal, another "petroleum geologist and engineer," placed the value at $539,000. Walker S. Clute, a geologist, placed it at $460,000. Against this testimony is that of the assessor, not that the value of the Birch property was any particular sum in March, 1916, but that, in making the assessment in that year, he "estimated this piece of property at nearly $2,000,000; that is, $1,955,175," and the testimony of some of the members of the board of equalization that, based on the evidence produced before the board, they "figured" or "fixed" the value at about $2,000,000. Clearly, such testimony is not sufficient to create a conflict, especially in view of the striking disparity between the valuation placed upon the Birch property and those upon the surrounding lands, which the assessor and such members of the board estimated as one-third the value thereof.

The assessment of 1918, proportionately the same as that of 1917, was upheld. Birch v. County of Orange, 59 Cal. App. 133, 210 P. 57. That assessment was based on a much higher market price of oil than prevailed in 1916. It appears from the decision in that case that for the year 1918 the assessor computed the value of the oil lands and the mineral rights therein by multiplying the net annual income therefrom by 10, and then taking 40 per cent. of such total value as the assessed value. In this case the uncontradicted evidence shows that the net annual income from the Birch property at the time of the assessment was $90,000. Multiplying this by 10 would give a total value of $900,000. Taking one-third thereof, as in the assessment of other property in the county during that year, would give an assessed valuation of $300,000, or only half the amount fixed by the board of equalization. The personal property and the wells of the several companies were assessed separately from the lands and mineral rights, and generally without apparent inequality. The assessments upon such personal property and wells, therefore, have been left out of consideration in this discussion. Of course, to arrive at the total assessment of any owner, the amount of such additional assessment must be added to the valuation as stated herein.

Viewed from any angle, the inequality of which plaintiffs complain is so great that the assessment of their property cannot be upheld.

The judgment is reversed.

BRYSON v. INTERNATIONAL INDEMNITY CO. (Civ. 3395.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 29, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 27, 1928.

1. Insurance ☞616½—Judgment against automobile owner held not conclusive against indemnity insurer, who had refused to defend, as to issue not adjudged (St. 1919, p. 776; Civ. Code, § 2778, subd. 5).

Judgment against insured automobile owner, in action for personal injuries, held not conclusive, in action under St. 1919, p. 776, by special administrator of injured person's estate against the indemnity insurer, who had refused to defend, as to issue whether injured person was passenger for consideration, which issue was not adjudged, notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 2778, subd. 5, providing that, if indemnity insurer neglects, on request, to defend person indemnified, a recovery against the latter is conclusive against the former.

2. Insurance ☞435—In action by injured person's administrator against indemnity insurer, insurer may defend by proving policy does not cover injuries to class to which injured person belonged (St. 1919, p. 776).

In action under St. 1919, p. 776, by injured person's administrator against indemnity insurer, after judgment has been obtained against the insured for damages for injuries, insurer may defend by proving that the policy does not indemnify against liability for damages to persons of class to which injured person belonged.

3. Appeal and error ☞1071(1)—Where finding on issue was not unequivocal, because confused by erroneous legal theory, parties held entitled to retrial of issue.

Where finding on material issue in automobile indemnity insurance case was not an unequivocal finding because trial court erroneously considered defendant was estopped by another judgment from contesting the issue, both parties held entitled to retrial of issue.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Frank Bryson, special administrator of the estate of Ciriaco P. Sordia, deceased, against the International Indemnity Company, upon a policy of automobile liability insurance. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed with direction.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; SEAWELL and PRESTON, JJ., dissenting.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Cooper, Collings & Shreve, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. June 17, 1921, the defendant issued its policy of indemnity insurance to Avran S. Tomich against liability for injuries by accident in the use of his Ford truck to "any person or persons other than passengers carried for an expressed or implied consideration" up to an amount not exceeding $10,000 in any one accident and not exceeding $5,000 to any one person, but excluding "any liability imposed by any Workmen's Compensation Act." Under the heading "Schedule of Statements," the following appear:

"(5) The automobiles are used for the following purposes only: Hauling.

"(6) None of the automobiles herein described are rented to others or used to carry passengers for any express or implied consideration, except as follows: No exceptions."

The policy provides:

"No action for the indemnity provided by this policy shall lie against the company except for reimbursement of the amount of loss actually sustained and paid in money by the insured in full satisfaction of a judgment duly recovered against the insured after final determination of the litigation. * * * It is a condition of this policy that the insolvency or bankruptcy of the insured shall not release this company from the payment of damages for injuries sustained or loss occasioned during the term this policy is in force; and provided, further, that, in the event judgment shall be secured against such insolvent or bankrupt assured hereunder in an action brought by any injured person, or his heirs or personal representatives in case of death from any accident covered hereunder, then an action may be brought against the company on this policy, and subject to its terms and conditions, by such injured person, his heirs or personal representatives, as the case may be, to recover on said judgment an amount not in excess of the amount of such judgment nor in any event an amount in excess of the limits of indemnity as set forth in this policy."

Tomich was a sewer contractor, engaged in repair work and in new construction. The truck in question was used in connection with such work. In his employ was a man named Ciriaco P. Sordia, who during the life of the policy was injured through the negligence of Tomich in causing the truck to overturn while he and Sordia were riding therein on their way from the place of employment. Sordia brought an action against Tomich for damages caused by such negligence and recovered judgment therein in the sum of $6,300. After the commencement of that action and before the trial thereof, Tomich gave notice thereof to the defendant herein and demanded that it take charge of his defense therein, as provided in the policy, but the defendant refused and denied all liability in the matter. Tomich became insolvent, and Sordia made demand upon the defendant for payment of the sum of $5,000 in accordance with the terms of the policy, and, upon defendant's refusal to make such payment, this action was commenced to recover the sum demanded. The defendant answered, denying liability on the ground, among others, that at the time of the accident Sordia was "being transported by the insured for an implied consideration." Thereafter Sordia died, and the special administrator of his estate was substituted as plaintiff. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed.

The provisions of the policy giving a right of action against the company to an injured person in the event of the insolvency of the insured are in literal compliance with the statute of 1919 relating to actions of that character. (Stats. 1919, p. 776.) Since the briefs herein were filed, that statute has been considered in three cases. Malmgren v. Southwestern Automobile Ins. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 255 P. 512; Pigg v. International Indemnity Co. (Cal. App.) 261 P. 486; Marple v. American Automobile Ins. Co. (Cal. App.) 255 P. 260. It is unnecessary to discuss any of the points raised by the appellant herein which were decided in those cases.

As stated, the answer alleges that at the time of the accident Sordia was "being transported by the insured for an implied consideration." It appears from the record that the issue thereby raised was not carefully tried; counsel for the plaintiff being of the opinion that the defendant was estopped to raise the question by the judgment against Tomich. Apparently on that theory, the court made the following finding:

"The court finds that, by reason of the decision and judgment heretofore entered in that certain action in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles, entitled 'Ciriaco P. Sordia, Plaintiff, versus Avran S. Tomich, Defendant,' being numbered 102747 on the docket of said court, and having been entered on the 11th day of October, 1922, and for that reason only, that it is not true that the said Ciriaco P. Sordia at the time of the collision and accident on the 19th day of November, 1921, was being transported by the said Avran S. Tomich for an implied, or any consideration, and further finds that, had it not been for the judgment hereinbefore rendered, it would have been true that the said C. P. Sordia at the time of the collision and accident on the 19th day of November, 1921, was being transported by the said A. S. Tomich for a consideration express or implied."

[1, 2] The judgment roll in Sordia v. Tomich was introduced in evidence. The complaint therein stated a simple cause of action for damages resulting from the negligence of the defendant, Tomich, and the answer consisted of a denial of such negligence and a defense of contributory negligence. The findings were limited to the issues raised by the pleadings. The judgment roll therein contains no reference to the defendant in this action or to any policy of indemnity insurance. To have established in the action against Tomich the facts which the defendant herein sets up as a defense would have only strengthened the case against him, because a higher degree of care is required of a carrier of persons for reward than of such a carrier without reward. Civ. Code, §§ 2100 and 2096. The statute cited requires a provision in such a policy, that, in the event of the insolvency of the insured and the recovery of judgment for damages against him by an injured person, "an action may be brought against the company, on the policy and subject to its terms and limitations, by such injured person, * * * to recover on said judgment." Had the insured paid the amount of the judgment, it would have been conclusive in his favor against the company on every issue properly tried in the action against him, he having notified the company of the action and requested it to defend the same. Civ. Code, § 2778, subd. 5. Since the policy provides for an action on such a judgment by the injured person against the company, under the circumstances stated, the evident intent is that such person shall have the rights which the insolvent insured would have had if he had paid the judgment. Such a judgment is conclusive only in respect to the matters adjudged. No one would contend that it precludes the company from defending on the ground that it did not issue the alleged policy or that the policy issued by it does not cover the motor vehicle which caused the injury. It seems equally clear that the company may show in defense that its policy does not indemnify against liability for damage to persons of the class to which the injured person belongs. In other words, before the company can be held liable as an indemnitor, it must be proved that it is an indemnitor. "While one who is required to protect another from liability is bound by the result of litigation to which such other is a party, provided the former had notice of such litigation, and an opportunity to control its proceedings, a judgment against a party indemnified is conclusive in a suit against his indemnitor only as to the facts thereby established. The estoppel created by the first judgment cannot be extended beyond the issues necessarily determined by it." 14 R. O. L. 62; 31 C. J. 461; Pezel v. Yerex, 56 Cal. App. 304, 309, 205 P. 475.

[3] The finding herein quoted may mean that at the time of the accident Sordia "was being transported by the said A. S. Tomich for a consideration express or implied," but that, by reason of the judgment in favor of the former against the latter, the defendant herein is estopped to defend on that ground, but it is not an unequivocal finding either one way or the other on the issue whether Sordia was a passenger for a consideration. Tomich has a poor command of the English language. As testified by the adjuster of the defendant, it was difficult "to get from Mr. Tomich the facts as to the accident." From some of his answers to leading questions it may be inferred that Sordia was a passenger for a consideration. On the other hand, his testimony as a whole would warrant the inference that Sordia was not a passenger for a consideration. In this state of the evidence, the case having been tried on an erroneous theory of the law, both parties are entitled to an unequivocal finding on the issue, which is the only material issue in substantial controversy, but it appears to be unnecessary to retry any other issue.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to retry the single issue whether Sordia was a passenger for an express or implied consideration at the time of the accident and thereupon to enter judgment for the party in whose favor such issue may be found.

87 Cal. App. 584
Ex parte CARLSON. (Cr. 1428.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 15, 1927.

1. Constitutional law ☞88—Right to engage in lawful and useful occupation is subject to legislative regulation in public interest.

While the right to engage in a lawful and useful occupation cannot be taken away under the guise of regulation, such occupation may be subjected to regulation in the public interest, even though the exercise of power to regulate involves in some degree a limitation upon the exercise of the right regulated.

2. Constitutional law ☞70(3)—Court cannot interfere with legislative regulation of occupations for public interest, in absence of clear showing statutes are arbitrary and unreasonable.

The manner and extent of the regulation of occupations for the public interest are matters primarily for legislative determination, with which the courts cannot interfere unless it clearly appears that a statute enacted ostensibly for the purpose of regulation imposes an arbitrary and unreasonable burden upon the pursuit of the occupation.

3. Insurance ☞3—In exercise of police power, state may adopt statutes for regulation of insurance agents.

In the exercise of police power, the state may adopt statutes for the regulation of insurance agents.

4. Insurance ☞12—State may require agents to be licensed.

The state may require that any agent doing business in the state shall have a certificate or license under state authority for the transaction of such business.

5. Constitutional law ☞238(1), 240(1)—Persons following commonly designated business or vocation may be classified by Legislature for regulatory purposes into new classes, where there exists reasonable basis for distinction.

Persons following a commonly designated business or vocation may be classified by the Legislature for purposes of regulation into new classes or subdivisions, where there exists a reasonable basis for a distinction between them.

6. Insurance ☞12—Fees imposed upon insurance agents for carrying on business are not a "tax" (Pol. Code, § 633, and § 633aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 1931).

The fees provided by Pol. Code, § 633, and section 633aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 1931, for the licensing of life, health, or accident insurance agents and insurance agents in general, are in no proper sense a tax on the business conducted by insurance agents, but are imposed by virtue of police power for the purposes of regulation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Tax—Taxation.]

7. Constitutional law ☞101—Insurance ☞12—Licenses issued to insurance agents are not contracts and create no vested rights (Pol. Code, § 633, and § 633aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 1931).

Licenses required of and issued to insurance agents under Pol. Code, § 633, and section 633aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 1931, for the purposes of regulating the business, are not contracts, and create no vested rights.

8. Constitutional law ☞101—Licenses issued in exercise of police power for regulatory purposes may be modified by Legislature in public interest (Pol. Code, § 633, and § 633aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 1931).

Licenses, such as the licenses required of insurance agents under Pol. Code, § 633, and section 633aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 1931, issued in the exercise of the police power, are for the protection of the public and not for the benefit of the licensee, and may be modified by the Legislature, or conditions may be imposed when the public interest requires, regardless of whether the time for which the license was issued has expired.

9. Insurance ☞4—Statute requiring licenses for life, health, and accident insurance agents, repeals general act licensing insurance agents to the extent its provisions revise or supersede former act (Pol. Code, §§ 633, 633c, and § 633aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 1931).

Pol. Code, § 633aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 1931, requiring licenses to be taken out by life, health, and accident insurance agents, repeals sections 633, 633c, relative to the general licensing of insurance agents, to the extent that the provisions of sections 633 and 633c are revised or superseded by section 633aa.

10. Constitutional law ☞230(2)—Legislature could, by licensing act, place life insurance agents in separate class from other insurance agents (Pol. Code, § 633aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 1931).

It was competent for the Legislature, by Pol. Code, § 633aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 1931, to place life insurance agents in a separate class, for the purposes of a regulatory license, from general insurance agents.

11. Constitutional law ☞230(2)—Insurance ☞4—Act licensing life, health, and accident agents, held not discriminatory (Pol. Code, § 633aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 1931).

Pol. Code, § 633aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 1931, providing for the licensing of life, health, and accident insurance agents, held not discriminatory, in view of its requirements, which impose no unreasonable burden upon such agents.

12. Constitutional law ☞70(3)—Legislative determination that regulation of business or vocation is essential under police power will not be disturbed, in absence of clear showing regulation has no relation to ends for which police power exists.

The determination by the Legislature that a necessity exists for the regulation of businesses and vocations under the police power will not be disturbed by the courts, in absence of clear showing that such regulation has no relation to the ends for which the police power exists.

Application by Walter M. Carlson for a writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Chief of Police, City and County of San Francisco, to secure the release of petitioner. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Knight, Boland & Christin, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

CASHIN, J. Petitioner was charged in the police court of the city and county of San Francisco with a violation of section 633aa of the Political Code (as added by St. 1927, p. 1931). The complaint alleges that he acted as the agent for a life insurance company, to wit, Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, without first obtaining a license to do so from the insurance commissioner of the state of California. A warrant for his arrest issued, upon which he was taken into custody, and he seeks to be released on habeas corpus.

The above section was adopted at the legislative session of 1927, and took effect on August 2, 1927. It provides that:

"No person shall, within this state, act as a life, health or accident agent for any life insurance company until such person shall have first obtained a license under the provisions of this section from the insurance commissioner authorizing him so to act."

The section further provides that the applicant for a license shall file with the commissioner a statement from the life insurance company which he seeks to represent, setting forth certain facts, and, further, that the applicant shall answer under oath such interrogatories as may be propounded by the commissioner, and that no license shall issue until the latter has satisfied himself as to the qualifications of the applicant. The section also provides that:

"Nothing herein contained shall be construed as giving such agent authority to act under the provisions of either sections 633 or 633a of the Political Code, without obtaining a license thereunder, nor shall any licensee under said sections 633 or 633a of the Political Code have authority to act as a life insurance agent under the provisions of this section, without obtaining a license hereunder."

Section 633 of the Political Code, which in its present form has been in effect for several years, provides that:

"No person shall within this state act as the agent of any insurance or surety company or society [other insurer] until such person shall have first obtained a license from the insurance commissioner authorizing him or it so to act,"

—its other provisions being the same as those of section 633aa. Under each of the sections the insurance commissioner is required to collect from the applicant a fee of $1 for issuing the license, and each provides that the license shall expire on the 1st day of July following its issuance.

It is admitted that since the year 1924 there has been issued to petitioner annually the license provided by section 633, the last—which was dated July 1, 1927, being for the year ending on July 1, 1928. Petitioner contends that section 633aa renders void and ineffective the license issued under section 633, and thus deprives him of a property right without due process of law, that by requiring life insurance agents to procure an additional license the section is discriminatory and deprives such agents of the equal protection of the law, and, further, that the license he now holds is essentially a contract, the obligation of which the section impairs.

[1, 2] While the right to engage in a lawful and useful occupation cannot be taken away under the guise of regulation, such occupation may be subjected to regulation in the public interest even though the exercise of the power to regulate involves in some degree a limitation upon the exercise of the right regulated (Riley v. Chambers, 181 Cal. 589, 185 P. 855, 8 A. L. R. 418), and the manner and extent of the regulation are matters primarily for legislative determination (County of Plumas v. Wheeler, 149 Cal. 758, 87 P.

909), with which the courts cannot interfere unless it clearly appears that a statute, enacted ostensibly for the purpose of regulation, imposes an arbitrary and unreasonable burden upon the pursuit of the occupation (Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 32 P. 870, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152; People v. Ratledge, 172 Cal. 401, 156 P. 455; In re Bruce, 54 Cal. App. 280, 201 P. 789).

[3, 4] In the exercise of its police power, the state may adopt statutes for the regulation of insurance agents, and may require that any agent doing business in the state shall have a certificate or license under state authority for the transaction of such business. Commonwealth v. Roswell, 173 Mass. 119, 53 N. E. 132; Stern v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 90 Misc. Rep. 129, 154 N. Y. S. 283; Swearingen v. Bond, 96 W. Va. 193, 122 S. E. 539, 540; Noble v. English, 183 Iowa, 893, 167 N. W. 629; La Tourette v. McMaster, 248 U. S. 465, 39 S. Ct. 160, 63 L. Ed. 362.

[5] Although under section 633 all insurance agents, irrespective of the kind of insurance business transacted, were placed in the same class, under the rule that the classification of occupations and forms of business may be made whenever the difference or distinction on which it is founded is not wholly without reason, it is an established rule that those who follow a commonly designated business or vocation may, where a basis for a reasonable distinction exists, be classified or subdivided into new and separate classes. 17 R. C. L. "Licenses," § 38, p. 518. Accordingly, it has been held that an act is not illegally discriminatory because it places automobile dealers (In the Matter of Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706) or professional chauffeurs (In the Matter of Stork, 167 Cal. 294, 139 P. 684) in a class by themselves, or that it distinguishes between collectors of rent and other collectors, or between real estate brokers and salesmen (Riley v. Chambers, supra).

[6-8] The fees provided for by sections 633 and 633aa are in no proper sense a tax on the business conducted by insurance agents, but are imposed by virtue of the police power upon persons engaged therein to defray the necessary cost of regulation. Schmidt v. Indianapolis, 168 Ind. 631, 80 N. E. 632, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787, 120 Am. St. Rep. 385; Phœbus v. Manhattan Club, 105 Va. 144, 52 S. E. 839, 840, 8 Ann. Cas. 667; Commonwealth v. Boyd, 188 Mass. 79, 74 N. E. 255, 108 Am. St. Rep. 464; State v. Hovorka, 100 Minn. 249, 110 N. W. 870, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1272, 10 Ann. Cas. 398. Moreover, such licenses are not contracts (Stone v. Fritts, 169 Ind. 361, 82 N. E. 792, 15 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1147, 14 Ann. Cas. 295; Lowell v. Archambault, 189 Mass. 70, 75 N. E. 65), and create no vested rights (State v. Hovorka, supra; People v. N. Y. Health Department, 189 N. Y. 187, 82 N. E. 187, 13 L. R. A. [N. S.] 894; 17 R. C. L. "License," § 5, p. 476); and, licenses issued in the exercise of the police power being for the protection of the public and not for the benefit of the licensee (State v. Reeves, 112 S. C. 383, 99 S. E. 841), the regulations prescribed may subsequently be modified by the Legislature, or new conditions imposed, whenever the public interest requires (State v. Hovorka, supra; Stone v. Fritts, supra), regardless of whether the time for which the license was issued has expired (Portland v. Cook, 48 Or. 550, 87 P. 772, 9 L. R. A. [N. S.] 733).

[9-12] It is evident from the fact that section 633aa places the agents of life insurance companies in a separate class, and from the provision therein that such agents should not be authorized to act by procuring the license provided by sections 633 and 633c, that the Legislature intended to revise the latter sections, in so far as they applied to the class created by the new section; and, as held in the following cases, where such intention appears the former statute is repealed to the extent that its provisions are revised or superseded by the later act. Pierpont v. Crouch, 10 Cal. 315; State v. Conkling, 19 Cal. 501; In the Matter of Yick Wo, 68 Cal. 294, 9 P. 139, 58 Am. Rep. 12. Where a license is required for the purpose of regulation, the licensee is bound to know that the license so held is subject to a modification or repeal of the law under which it was issued, from the making of which change, if the public interest requires it, no incidental inconvenience suffered by the licensee can stay the power of the state. McMillan v. Knoxville, 139 Tenn. 319, 202 S. W. 65. Although the earlier statute included all insurance agents in the same class, it was competent for the Legislature, if necessary for the purpose of regulation, to place those engaged in the business of life insurance in a separate class. As indicated by the act, such reclassification was found to be necessary; and we cannot say but that differences in the manner of conducting the business of those engaged in the several branches of insurance furnished a reasonable basis therefor. Moreover, in view of its requirements, which impose no unreasonable burden upon agents for life insurance companies, the act was not discriminatory. As stated above, it is primarily for the legislative body, clothed with the power, to determine when regulation is essential (County of Plumas v. Wheeler, supra), and its determination in this regard, in view of its better knowledge of all the circumstances and the presumption that it is acting with due regard for the rights of all the parties, will not be disturbed by the courts, unless it can plainly be seen that the regulation has no relation to the ends for which the police power exists (Ex parte Hadacheck, 165 Cal. 416, 132 P. 584, L. R. A. 1916B, 1248).

We find no merit in the grounds urged for declaring the section to be invalid, and the writ is therefore discharged, and the petitioner remanded.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

PEOPLE v. SPRAIC. (Cr. 1515.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 21, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 16, 1928.

1. Criminal law §1023(5), 1134(8)—Appeal from verdict was nugatory, but points made could be considered on appeal from judgment.

Where defendant appealed from judgment of conviction and from the verdict, appeal from verdict was nugatory, since law authorizes no appeal from a verdict, but points made could be considered on appeal from judgment.

2. Jury §128—Court properly required accused to exercise all challenges for cause before talesman were submitted to prosecution for examination (Pen. Code, §§ 1067, 1072, 1073, 1086, 1087).

Where accused questioned first twelve prospective jurors regarding general qualifications under Pen. Code, § 1072, and passed them, court properly required accused to exercise all his challenges for cause under section 1073, before talesman were submitted to prosecution for examination under section 1072, since section 1067, dividing challenges into either peremptory or for cause, and section 1087, specifying order in which each party shall exercise challenges for cause, do not have bearing on order of parties inter se, but matter was covered by section 1086, requiring defendant to exhaust all challenges, except peremptory challenges before prosecution began.

3. Criminal law §1166½(6)—Excluding questions to prospective jurors, made to show bias, after defendant exhausted peremptory challenges, held not error, where jurors answered similar questions satisfactorily.

Sustaining objections to questions whether jurors would follow instruction that insane person is incapable of committing crime asked two prospective jurors, later sworn on jury, after accused had exhausted peremptory challenges, held not error, where jurors, replying to other questions, had stated that they had no prejudice against insanity as defense, and would follow court's instructions.

4. Criminal law §1166(1)—Where court appointed insanity experts to examine defendant three days before trial, defendant, suffering no prejudice because of delay, could not complain of refusal to appoint expert on motion made under statute two months previously (Code Civ. Proc. § 1871, as added by St. 1925, p. 305).

Where defendant's principal defense in murder prosecution was insanity, and court, on stipulation of both sides, appointed experts to examine defendant regarding insanity three days before trial, and both testified, defendant, not showing that he suffered prejudice because of delay in making appointments, could not complain of refusal of court to grant motion for appointment of expert witnesses under Code Civ. Proc. § 1871, as added by St. 1925, p. 305, made more than two months before trial.

5. Criminal law ⚡438—In murder prosecution, admitting photographs of slain persons lying on floor, where first discovered, to explain testimony, held not error.

In prosecution for murder, admitting in evidence photographs of slain persons as they lay on floor, where they were first discovered, referred to by some witnesses, and used to explain their testimony regarding position of bodies, held not error, even though photographs had gruesome appearance.

6. Homicide ⚡300(3)—Instruction, in substance, that one may justify homicide as in self-defense on such view of circumstances as man without reason would take, held erroneous (Pen. Code, § 198).

Instruction, mingling doctrines relating to insanity and self-defense, and declaring, in substance, that one may justify homicide as in self-defense on such view of circumstances as would be taken by man without reason, held erroneous, and properly refused under Pen. Code, § 198, since one attempting to shield himself behind doctrine of apparent necessity can do so only if necessity would have been apparent to reasonable man under all circumstances of case as known to slayer.

7. Homicide ⚡190(7)—Evidence of previous threats by deceased against defendant, not communicated to defendant, is not admissible on issue of self-defense, where there is no evidence that deceased was aggressor.

In homicide case, where self-defense is in issue, evidence of previous threats by deceased against defendant, and not communicated to latter, is not admissible, where there is no evidence tending to show that deceased was aggressor.

8. Homicide ⚡244(1)—Evidence of abusive conduct held insufficient on which to predicate self-defense in murder prosecution.

In murder prosecution, evidence of abusive conduct of deceased toward defendant held insufficient on which to base a claim of self-defense.

9. Homicide ⚡151(3)—Burden was on defendant to prove justification for homicide, where there was no evidence on which to base claim of self-defense.

In murder prosecution, where, at time defendant offered evidence to show deceased had threatened to kill defendant, there was no evidence of the circumstances of the homicide, burden was on defendant to prove circumstances of justification or excuse at least, to extent of raising a reasonable doubt in minds of jury on that point.

10. Criminal law ⚡680(1)—Order of proof rests largely in court's discretion.

Order of proof rests largely in discretion of trial court.

11. Homicide ⚡190(7)—Court did not abuse discretion in excluding proposed evidence of threats by deceased against defendant, not communicated to defendant, where defendant proposed to supply evidence that he killed in self-defense.

In prosecution for homicide, court did not abuse discretion in excluding proposed evidence, on issue of self-defense, of threats by deceased against defendant not communicated to defendant, where defendant's counsel declared at time that he expected to show later by defendant's testimony that he acted in self-defense.

12. Homicide ⚡244(1)—Evidence held not to show deceased was aggressor, justifying admission of evidence of threats by deceased against defendant not communicated to defendant.

In murder prosecution, evidence held not to show that deceased was aggressor so as to justify admission of evidence that deceased had made threats against defendant, which were not communicated to defendant, on issue of self-defense.

13. Homicide ⚡294(1)—Instruction on mental derangement, including statement that irresistible impulse would be defense to murder, held properly refused.

In murder prosecution, instruction regarding defendant's derangement of mind, including statement that an irresistible impulse would be defense, held properly refused.

14. Criminal law ⚡829(1)—Refusal of instruction covered by instructions given is not error.

Error cannot be predicated on refusal of instruction covered by instructions given.

15. Criminal law ⚡770(1)—Trial court must give instructions on proper request therefor, regarding law applicable to any state of facts logically deducible from any evidence.

It is duty of trial court to give instructions on proper request therefor as to law applicable to any state of facts that may be logically deducible from any evidence, regardless of weight or credibility of that evidence which is within sole province of jury.

16. Criminal law ⚡1172(1)—Instruction to effect that jury need not consider rules of law not applicable to facts though possibly superfluous held not error.

In murder prosecution, giving instruction that fact that court gave instructions regarding particular rules of law must not be taken as an indication that rules applied to case on trial, or as indicating that court considered them necessarily applicable, and that they should not consider instructions not applicable to facts found, although possibly superfluous, was not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Douglas L. Edmonds, Judge.

John Spraic was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals from the judgment and from the verdict. Judgment affirmed. Appeal from the verdict dismissed.

L. E. Dadmun and C. L. Welch, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, Justice pro tem. [1] Defendant was tried on an information charging him in two counts with murder of Homer E. Ranes and Mildred Ranes, who were husband and wife, and was convicted of manslaughter on each count. He appeals from the judgment and "from the verdict." The law authorizes no appeal from a verdict, and hence the latter appeal is nugatory, but all the points made may be considered on the appeal from the judgment.

[2] Appellant's first point relates to the procedure on the impanelment of the jury. When the first twelve prospective jurors were seated in the box, defendant questioned them as to their possession of the general qualifications of jurors, or, in other words, as to the existence of any ground of challenge under section 1072 of the Penal Code, and passed them. He then claimed that, before he was required to examine them further with a view to making any challenge for cause under section 1073, the people should examine them for general qualifications, and make any challenge they desired under section 1072. The court ruled against this contention, and required defendant to exercise all his challenges for cause before the talesmen were submitted to the prosecution for examination. Section 1067 of the Penal Code, on which appellant seems to rely, merely divides challenges into classes—peremptory and for cause. Neither that section nor section 1087, which specifies the order in which each party shall exercise his challenges for cause, has any bearing upon the order of the parties inter se. That matter is covered by section 1086 of the Penal Code, as follows:

"All challenges to an individual juror, except peremptory, must be taken, first by the defendant, and then by the people, and each party must exhaust all his challenges before the other begins."

This means that the defendant shall exhaust all of his challenges other than peremptory challenges before the prosecution are required to begin. The ruling complained of was clearly right.

[3] Defendant further complains of the rulings of the court sustaining objections to questions which he put to two prospective jurors who were later sworn on the jury after his peremptory challenges had been exhausted. The questions put to these two jurors were substantially alike; one of them being as follows:

"Q. If the court would instruct you that, an insane person is incapable of committing a crime as a matter of law, would you have any hesitancy in following that instruction?"

Replying to other questions, each of these jurors stated, in substance, that he had no prejudice against insanity as a defense, and that he would follow the instructions of the court as to the law, even though he should not agree with the court as to what the law ought to be. This was sufficient to show that the jurors were in an unbiased frame of mind so far as the defense of insanity was concerned, and defendant was not entitled to examine them in greater detail as to suggested instructions.

[4] The defendant's principal defense at the trial was insanity, and he now complains of the refusal of the court to grant his motion for the appointment of expert witnesses under the provisions of section 1871 of the Code of Civil Procedure (St. 1925, p. 305) to examine him as to his sanity. This motion was made more than two months before the trial, and was not then ruled on. Three days before the trial, on stipulation of both sides, the court did appoint two experts to examine the defendant as to his sanity, and they both testified at the trial. There is nothing in the record to show that the defendant suffered any prejudice by reason of the delay in making these appointments, and, in the absence thereof, he cannot complain of the action of the court, even if section 1871 confers any rights at all on the parties to an action—a question which we do not decide.

[5] There was no error in admitting in evidence photographs of the two slain persons as they lay on the floor where they were first discovered. These photographs were referred to by some of the witnesses, and used to explain their testimony as to the position of the bodies, and were hence admissible, even though they had a gruesome appearance. People v. Saenz, 50 Cal. App. 382, 195 P. 442.

[6] Defendant complains of the refusal of the trial court to give the following instruction asked by him:

"If you find by preponderance of testimony that the defendant, at the time of the homicide, was deprived of his reason, and you further find that he was deprived of his reason by the acts, statements, and conducts of the deceased, and that, while defendant was so deprived of his reason, he thought he was acting in self-defense, and according to his lights he was acting in self-defense, though those lights, supplied by a vacant mind, were dim and unsatisfactory, yet they were all the defendant had at the time, and defendant, under those conditions, acted on the facts as they appeared to him, and he (the defendant) had an honest belief that he was in danger of his life or immediate bodily harm at the hands of the deceased, then killed the deceased, he could not be found guilty as charged in the information, and it will be your duty to find defendant not guilty."

The jury was fully instructed as to the law concerning insanity as a defense. This instruction mingles the doctrines relating to insanity and self-defense, and declares, in substance, that one may justify a homicide as in self-defense on such a view of the circumstances as would be taken by a man without reason, whereas the true rule is that one who attempts to shield himself behind the doctrine of apparent necessity can do so only if the necessity would have been apparent to a reasonable man under all the circumstances of the case as known to the slayer. Pen. Code, § 198. It was therefore properly refused.

At the trial it was proved that defendant shot and killed Mr. and Mrs. Ranes at the time alleged in the information, the shooting of the two being almost simultaneous, and this was admitted by him at the time of his arrest and in his testimony at the trial. There was, however, no eyewitness of the fatal encounter other than defendant himself, and no testimony was given in behalf of the prosecution as to the circumstances thereof. Mr. Ranes and Mrs. Ranes lived directly across the street from defendant, and were accustomed to address to him opprobrious epithets commenting on his foreign nationality. There was testimony that they also made threats to him that they would drive him out of the community, and that they interfered with his property, business, and affairs, causing him financial loss. In his defense defendant offered evidence to show that each of the persons killed had at various times made threats to kill or shoot defendant, none of which were made in the presence of or communicated to the defendant. This evidence was objected to on the ground that the threats were not communicated to the defendant, and also that no evidence had been given tending to show that the killing was done in self-defense, and hence no proper foundation had been laid. The court excluded the testimony thus offered, and defendant now complains of the ruling.

[7] In a homicide case where self-defense is in issue, and the evidence is conflicting, or leaves a doubt as to which party was the aggressor in the affray, evidence of previous threats made by the deceased against the defendant but not communicated to the latter is admissible as tending to establish the fact that the deceased put his threats into execution and began the affray. But to make evidence of such threats admissible there must be some evidence tending to show that the deceased was the aggressor.

In People v. Thomson, 92 Cal. 506, 511, 28 P. 589, 590, the court said:

"Again, in this case a deadly encounter took place; one party was killed; the survivor insists that the killing was done in self-defense, and that the deceased made the first attack. Who was the aggressor was an issue of vital importance to the jury; justice could only be reached by its proper solution, and, as disclosed by the evidence, it was enveloped in doubt. Under these circumstances, all the acts and conduct of the deceased, either in the nature of overt acts of hostility, or threats communicated or uncommunicated, were proper evidence to be considered by the jury as shedding light—to some extent, at least—upon the issue as to whether the deceased or the defendant was the aggressor in this fatal affray."

There are other authorities to the same effect, but they all condition the admissibility of such evidence upon the fact that the evidence is otherwise equivocal as to whether the deceased was the aggressor. People v. Arnold, 15 Cal. 476; People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 676; People v. Lamar, 148 Cal. 564, 83 P. 993.

In People v. Gonzales, 33 Cal. App. 340, 164 P. 1131, the court sustained an order striking out evidence produced by the defendant of previous threats by the deceased against defendant, some of which appear to have been uncommunicated, and said:

"When this evidence was tendered there was no testimony whatsoever tending to show any act of aggression committed by deceased at the time of the homicide indicating that he intended to attack defendant. Since there was neither claim nor proof of a hostile demonstration by deceased at the time of the homicide, the fact that he had theretofore made threats against defendant, could not justify the latter in killing him."

[8-11] In the case at bar there was, when defendant's offer was made, no evidence at all of the circumstances of the homicides, and hence nothing on which to base a claim of self-defense. The evidence of the abusive conduct of the Ranes toward defendant could not serve that purpose. In this condition of the record, the burden was on the defendant to prove circumstances of justification or excuse, at least to the extent of raising a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury on that point. One of the grounds of the objection to defendant's offer was that no showing of this kind had been made, and the objection was properly sustained on this ground. When the objection was made, defendant's counsel declared that he expected to show later by defendant's testimony that he acted in self-defense. In this respect the case differs from People v. Gonzales, supra, where, on motion to strike, defendant failed to make such an offer of proof, but we do not think this difference calls for a different decision. The order of proof rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, and we cannot say that its discretion was abused in this matter. It might well have concluded that, if the proposed evidence of threats were admitted, and then defendant failed to supply the promised evidence, it would be difficult for the jury to eradicate from their minds the evidence of such threats.

[12] Furthermore, the event justified the action of the court, for, when the defendant took the stand, he testified to no acts on the part of either of the slain persons at the time of the killing which could reasonably be construed as a hostile demonstration against him, or give rise to an application of the rules of law relating to self-defense. He testified in substance that just before the homicides he met Mr. Raney on the street coming from the store with a package in his hand, and entered into a conversation with him for the purpose of trying to get Raney to leave defendant alone once more; that Raney denied doing anything to defendant or bothering him, and said: "Let us go and see my wife and talk with her"; that they both started toward Raney's house, and just as Raney came off of the sidewalk he said "he was going to get me out of there"; that, when they were on the porch, Raney went into the house, leaving defendant outside, slammed the screen door in his face, called him an unpleasant name, and said, "Stay out," and "the next thing I heard the shots. I don't know how I fired them." On cross-examination defendant said that Raney was shaking and angry at the time they met on the street, and then "acted like he was going to show me that he was going to be friends"; that, as Raney shut the screen door, "he started to act like he was going to grab something, and said he was going to get me at that time"; and that he was trying to close the screen door when the shots were fired. The defendant in his testimony made no mention whatever of Mrs. Raney or of any action on her part at the time of the shooting. The defendant could not reasonably have believed from these circumstances that he was in imminent danger of great bodily injury or of the commission of a felony at the hands of either of the Raney's, or that such danger could be averted only by killing them or either of them.

[13, 14] Another ruling complained of was the court's refusal to give this instruction:

"If, after listening to all the evidence introduced, and instructions of this court, you should find that the defendant, at the time he is charged with the commission of the crime, as alleged in the information, was so affected with disease of mind as thereby to have lost the power to choose between right and wrong, and committed the act charged in the information without being conscious thereof, and did not possess will power sufficient to control the impulses arising from his mental derangement and thereby avoid doing the act, it will be your duty to find the defendant not guilty."

Taking this instruction as a whole, it is erroneous, because it includes a statement that an irresistible impulse would be a defense, which is not the law. People v. Morisawa, 180 Cal. 148, 179 P. 888. Defendant claims that this instruction embodies the rule established by subdivision 5 of section 26 of the Penal Code; that persons who committed the act charged without being conscious thereof are incapable of committing crimes. There was no evidence that defendant was unconscious of what he was doing, and the argument in support of this instruction is merely that he was unconscious of the moral nature of the act he was committing. If it can be so construed it was fully covered by other instructions given on the subject of insanity.

[15, 16] The court gave the jury the following instruction:

"The court has given you instructions embodying such rules of law as may be necessary to assist you in arriving at a verdict. As to some of these instructions, their application depends upon the light in which you view the evidence.

"The fact that the court has given you instructions as to particular rules of law must not be taken by you as an indication that such rules are necessarily applicable to the cause on trial, or as indicating that the court considers them necessarily applicable. Where there is a conflict of evidence, the question as to whether a particular rule of law is applicable depends frequently and solely upon the conclusion as to what the facts are, and the jury are the sole judges of the facts.

"If any instruction is applicable only if a particular situation or state of facts exists, and if you find that no such situation or state of facts exists, then you should not take such instructions into consideration in your deliberations."

Defendant complains of this instruction, and discusses it at considerable length, his grounds of attack being that thereby the court abdicated its function of declaring the law, repudiated all its other instructions, and left the jury to determine for themselves what constituted the law applicable to the case. We do not think the instruction is open to the criticisms thus directed at it by the defendant. It is the duty of a trial court to give instructions on proper request therefor as to the law applicable to any state of facts that may be logically deducible from any of the evidence, regardless of the weight or credibility of that evidence, which are within the sole province of the jury; and this duty the court performed in this case. But when the jury, in the exercise of their function of passing on the evidence, reject the evidence tending to prove a fact, and conclude that the fact does not exist, there is no longer any occasion for them to consider or apply to the case any instruction as to the legal effect of the existence of that fact. The instruction complained of did no more than inform them of this obvious rule, and the giving of it, although possibly superfluous, was not error.

No other points are made for reversal, and, as we find no error, the judgment is affirmed. The appeal from the verdict is dismissed.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 22, 1927.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨227(1)—Claim against decedent's estate need not state facts with detail of complaint, and sufficiency is not tested by rules governing pleadings (Code Civ. Proc. § 1494).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1494, claim against deceased person's estate need not state facts with all precision and detail of a complaint, and sufficiency of claim is not tested by rules governing pleadings.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨221(1)—Where executrix allowed claim as prepared without question except regarding amount, it must be inferred nature was understood and form approved.

Where executrix allowed claim as presented without question except as to its amount, it must be inferred from such allowance that nature of demand was understood and form of claim approved.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨202(2)—Claim for damages consequent upon services in submitting to blood transfusion which deceased agreed to pay, held not "contingent claim."

Where plaintiff had put in claim with executrix "to reasonable value of services in submitting to blood transfusion to deceased and to damages consequent thereupon, $2,500," which deceased had agreed to pay, that portion of claim relating to damages consequent to services did not constitute "contingent claim," for reason that liability for all elements of damage proximately resulting from plaintiff's services became absolute at time contract was made, and did not depend upon happening of future possibility.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Contingent Claim.]

4. Executors and administrators ⇨202(2)—That part of claim against deceased's estate is contingent does not invalidate entire claim, but merely requires such part to be particularized (Code Civ. Proc. § 1494).

That part of claim presented to executrix against deceased's estate was contingent would not invalidate entire claim, but only effect thereof would be to require particulars of contingent portion to be set forth under Code Civ. Proc. § 1494.

5. Executors and administrators ⇨227(4)—Executrix waived requirement that claimed contingent portion of claim be set forth by failing to object to sufficiency prior to allowance (Code Civ. Proc. § 1494).

Executrix waived requirement that claimed contingent portion of claim for value of services in supplying blood transfusion and for damages consequent thereupon be set forth under Code Civ. Proc. § 1494, by failure to object to sufficiency of claim on any ground prior to its allowance.

6. Executors and administrators ⇨227(1)—Form of claim for compensation for submitting to blood transfusion and damages consequent thereupon held sufficient to cover decedent's contract to pay resulting damages and to identify action as founded on claim.

Claim against decedent's estate "to reasonable value of services in supplying blood transfusion to deceased and to damages consequent thereupon, $2,500" was sufficient in form to cover portion of decedent's contract to pay plaintiff all damages which she might suffer as consequence of her services, and action instituted by plaintiff was founded on it and conformed to claim as presented.

7. Executors and administrators ⇨205(2)—Where action for services in supplying blood transfusion was based on express contract, jury was not restricted to amounts customarily paid for services.

Where action against deceased's estate for services in supplying blood transfusion and damages consequent thereupon was based upon terms of an express contract and not upon ordinary quantum meruit, jury was not restricted in fixing value of services to amounts customarily paid, but was entitled to take into consideration all peculiar circumstances under which contract in question was entered into.

8. New trial ⇨162(1)—If amount awarded be excessive, court may make conditional order denying new trial if prevailing party remits excess (Code Civ. Proc. § 657).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, providing for new trial, where damages appear excessive as given under influence of passion or prejudice, court may, if amount awarded be excessive, make a conditional order denying motion for new trial, if prevailing party will consent to remit excess, and granting it in absence of such consent.

9. Appeal and error ⇨933(4)—It cannot be assumed, from court's making order denying new trial if excess damages be remitted, that court concluded verdict was product of passion and prejudice (Code Civ. Proc. § 657).

It is not to be assumed, from court's making conditional order denying new trial if prevailing party consents to remit excess damages, that trial court concluded that verdict was product of passion and prejudice justifying new trial, under Code Civ. Proc. § 657.

10. New trial ⇨77(2)—That award of $2,495 for services in submitting to blood transfusion and damages therefrom was influenced by passion held not shown as affecting right to new trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 657).

Facts and circumstances did not justify determination that, as a matter of law, award of damages of $2,495 for plaintiff's services in supplying blood transfusion and damages resulting therefrom was influenced by passion or prejudice warranting new trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, where plaintiff's actual expenses were about $776 and plaintiff suffered continuous pain and carried scar, and another operation was necessary.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Ross Campbell, Judge.

Action upon an express oral contract for services by Leona Pearl Standiford against Harriet E. Cantrell, executrix of the last will and testament of Sarah Jane Hilliard, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

T. J. Sheridan and Harry L. Horn, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

I. M. Peckham and Sherman G. Blood, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. A verdict for the sum of $2,495 was awarded against defendant, as executrix of the last will and testament of Sarah Jane Hilliard, deceased, in an action based upon an oral contract the decedent is alleged to have made to pay plaintiff for services rendered decedent during her last illness, in submitting to a blood transfusion and for the damages plaintiff might suffer as a consequence of said operation. Pursuant to a conditional order made by the trial court on motion for a new trial, plaintiff remitted $995 of the sum awarded by the jury, thereby reducing the amount of the judgment to $1,500, from which judgment defendant appeals.

Briefly stated, the grounds urged for reversal are that no valid claim for damages consequent to plaintiff's services was presented against the decedent's estate, and that therefore plaintiff was limited in her action to a recovery of the reasonable value of the services rendered; also that the elements of damage pleaded were not sustained by the proof; that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions proposed by defendant; that excessive damages were awarded under the influence of passion and prejudice; and that consequently the court erred in not granting a new trial.

The essential facts are as follows: For some time prior to Mrs. Hilliard's death, which occurred on December 9, 1922, she suffered from a malignant ailment necessitating treatment by blood transfusions. She had undergone four transfusions, and was unable to obtain more of the particular type of blood required. Plaintiff and her parents were friends and acquaintances of Mrs. Hilliard, and during the early part of October, 1922, Mrs. Hilliard told Mrs. Standiford, plaintiff's mother, of her serious condition and asked if she would furnish the necessary blood for a transfusion. Mrs. Standiford's husband objected to her doing so, and finally Mrs. Hilliard persuaded plaintiff, who was present, to submit to the transfusion. There is some conflict as to the exact words used at that time, but there is ample testimony to show that plaintiff's consent was given only after Mrs. Hilliard had made promises to the effect that, if the service was rendered, she would "make it right" with plaintiff; that plaintiff

"would be well taken care of and not be out anything"; that the operation would not require an incision to be made, the blood being taken, as Mrs. Hilliard explained it, through a needle, and would result in no pain and leave no scar; that plaintiff would not lose more than three days from her employment; that Mrs. Hilliard would bear all of the hospital and other expenses which might be incurred by plaintiff as a consequence of the transfusion, and would "stand by" plaintiff, "take care" of her, and "do the right thing" by her. At first plaintiff was disinclined to enter into the arrangement, but, owing to Mrs. Hilliard's importunities and critical condition, she finally consented. The next day plaintiff's blood was typed and proved satisfactory; and the transfusion operation was performed, but, in order to perform a successful direct transfusion, it became necessary for Mrs. Hilliard's physician to cause an incision to be made in plaintiff's arm an inch or more in length, and to destroy one of the veins, so as to allow the blood to pass directly from the vein of the "donor" to the vein of the patient through a paraffine receptacle. Approximately a half pint of plaintiff's blood was taken. The physician testified that before attempting to operate he was "rather skeptical as to taking very much of her blood," on account of plaintiff's youth, but, upon being assured by her that she was of age and was willing to submit to the transfusion, he proceeded with the operation.

The evidence further shows that upon arriving home after the operation plaintiff was in a very weakened condition, and collapsed after entering the house. Later her mother assisted her to bed, and it was three days before she was about. As a result of the transfusion, she continued to suffer much pain; the wound, although stitched, did not heal readily, and she remained under the daily treatment of Mrs. Hilliard's physician until about the date of Mrs. Hilliard's death, at which time a "keloid" formation developed on plaintiff's arm. Thereupon she consulted a physician of her own choosing, who immediately sent her to the hospital and operated for the removal of the keloid, which he described as being about an inch long and half an inch wide. Upon recovering from the anesthetic, she found her arm in a cast which extended from the elbow to the wrist, reinforced with steel braces on the upper and lower sides, which she was compelled to wear for a month. During that time an infection started in the wound which required daily treatment by the doctor for three or four months. With reference to plaintiff's condition at the time of trial, her physician testified that she was still suffering pain; that as a result of the operation a scar tissue had developed affecting one of the nerves, causing continuous pain along the radial side of the arm, and that to relieve the pain another operation was necessary which might eventually require the process of skin grafting.

Prior to the blood transfusion operation, plaintiff had been employed in a telegraph office at a minimum wage of $16 a week. The trial took place in November, 1923, approximately 13 months after the transfusion, and the evidence shows that from the time of the operation to the time of trial plaintiff was able to work only a month, and was then compelled to give up on account of the painful condition of her arm. The actual expenses incurred by plaintiff for medical and hospital treatment following the transfusion amounted to $285, and besides she suffered loss of wages for approximately a year, amounting to about $776. It would therefore appear that the total amount she was allowed by the judgment for her services in submitting to the transfusion operation, for the continuous pain suffered, the scar she carried, and for the payment of the medical and hospital expenses to be thereafter incurred, was approximately $439.

The claim presented against the estate of the decedent was in the following form: "To reasonable value of services in supplying a blood transfusion to said deceased and to damages consequent thereupon, $2,500"—but, not being supported by the affidavit required by section 1494 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the claim was returned to the claimant for the purpose of having such affidavit attached. After conforming to the legal requirement mentioned, the claim was again presented, and on February 19, 1923, was allowed by the executrix for the sum of $15. It does not appear that said claim was ever approved by the judge of the court, however, and four months subsequent to the filing of the action herein the executrix endeavored to cancel the allowance by indorsing thereon, "The within claim is rejected this 5 day of July, 1923."

The allegations of the complaint relating to the making of the contract and its terms were as follows:

"On October 23, 1922, at the city and county of San Francisco, Sarah Jane Hilliard employed plaintiff to submit to a transfusion of blood from this plaintiff to said Sarah Jane Hilliard, to the extent of one pint or more, on the following terms: Plaintiff agreed to submit to certain blood tests at the St. Francis Hospital, in the city and county of San Francisco, and, if said blood tests proved plaintiff a satisfactory subject for making the said blood transfusion, said plaintiff was to submit to a blood transfusion and supply to Sarah Jane Hilliard not less than one pint of plaintiff's blood, and, in consideration therefor the said Sarah Jane Hilliard agreed to pay to this plaintiff such sum of money as would 'make it right' with this plaintiff, and to pay all expenses made necessary by said blood transfusion, and save plaintiff harmless from damage or expense incidental thereto or resulting therefrom. And the said Sarah Jane Hilliard then and there, as part of said transaction, warranted to this plaintiff that the said blood transfusion would not require cutting or incision in this plaintiff; that it would not hurt plaintiff at all; that plaintiff would not be sick or indisposed; that the said blood transfusion would leave no scar."

[1-6] We are unable to sustain defendant's contention that the form of claim presented limited plaintiff's recovery to the reasonable value of the services rendered and precluded any recovery for damages consequent thereto. The facts hereinabove set forth prove beyond question, we think, that Mrs. Hilliard made an express contract to compensate plaintiff, first, for services as "donor" in submitting to the blood transfusion, the value of which service was left open for further determination; and, secondly, for all damages proximately resulting from such service, the amount of which obviously was not ascertainable at the time the contract was made. The claim as presented fairly covered both provisions of the contract; it being expressly set forth in the claim that the demand was for the reasonable value of the services rendered and for damages consequent thereupon.

Nowhere does the Code define the precise form of a claim (Doolittle v. McConnell, 178 Cal. 697, 174 P. 305; Elizalde v. Murphy, 163 Cal. 681, 126 P. 978; McGrath v. Carroll, 110 Cal. 79, 42 P. 466); and it is held that it need not state facts with all the precision and detail of a complaint, nor is the sufficiency of a claim to be tested by the rules governing pleadings (Pollitz v. Wickersham, 150 Cal. 238, 88 P. 911; Thompson v. Koeller, 183 Cal. 476, 191 P. 927). The purpose of presenting a claim is merely to advise the representative of the estate and the judge before whom the claim comes for allowance of its nature and amount; and if, when the claim is presented, the representative of the estate is uncertain as to any matter connected therewith, the insufficiency should be pointed out or request made for further particulars or details with reference thereto; otherwise, even in cases of general rejection, objections to the formal insufficiency thereof are deemed to be waived. E. Martin & Co. v. Brosnan, 18 Cal. App. 477, 123 P. 550; Smith v. Furnish, 70 Cal. 424, 12 P. 392; 11 Cal. Jur. 702. As shown, the executrix here allowed the claim as presented without question, except as to its amount; and it must be inferred from such allowance that the nature of the demand was understood and the form of the claim approved.

That portion of the claim relating to damages consequent to the services did not, in our opinion, constitute a "contingent" claim, for the reason that liability for all elements of damage proximately resulting from plaintiff's services became absolute at the time the contract was made, and did not depend upon the happening of any future possibility. Verdier v. Roach, 96 Cal. 467, 31 P. 554. But, even assuming that a portion of the damages claimed was not definitely ascertainable in amount at the time the claim was presented, and that consequently that portion of the claim be deemed to be contingent, the entire claim for damages was not invalidated thereby, and the only effect thereof would be to require the particulars of the contingent portion to be set forth (section 1494, Code Civ. Proc.); and, as already pointed out, defendant waived such requirement by failure to object to the sufficiency of the claim on any ground prior to its allowance (Western States Life Ins. Co. v. Lockwood, 166 Cal. 185, 135 P. 496). We conclude, therefore, that the form of the claim presented was sufficient to cover that portion of Mrs. Hilliard's contract to pay plaintiff all damages which she might suffer as a consequence of her services and that the action instituted by plaintiff was founded on and conformed to the claim as presented.

[7] The contention defendant makes that the evidence is insufficient to prove the amount of damages awarded is directed chiefly to the question of the reasonable value of the services. In this connection defendant offered the testimony of physicians and hospital executives to prove that the customary price paid for transfusions ranged from $25 to $75. But it should be kept in mind that the action herein is based upon the terms of an express contract and not upon the ordinary quantum meruit. The jury was therefore not restricted in fixing the value of the service to the amounts customarily paid, but was entitled to take into consideration all of the peculiar circumstances under which the contract in question was entered into. With respect thereto, the evidence shows that in the vicinity of San Francisco blood for transfusion purposes was usually purchased from men in the military service stationed near by, who are entitled to free hospitalization and medical treatment by the government in case of illness. The blood for the previous transfusions was so obtained for Mrs. Hilliard; but, as she stated to plaintiff, she was unable to obtain any more of the particular type of blood necessary for her treatment, and that consequently her condition was becoming extremely grave; and it was under these circumstances that plaintiff consented to submit to the operation. But in any event, assuming that she be allowed only $75 for the service, it would still leave only $364 to compensate her for a year's suffering, and the scar she will bear, to defray the medical and hospital expenses to be incurred, by reason of the future operation to relieve the pain, and cover loss of time while undergoing and recovering from the operation.

[8-10] With reference to the trial court's order directing the remission of a portion of the damages awarded by the jury, the Code provides that, where it appears that excessive damages have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice, a new trial may be granted (Code Civ. Proc. sec. 657); but it has long since been settled that the court may, if the amount awarded be excessive, make a conditional order denying the motion if the prevailing party will consent to remit the excess and granting it in the absence of such consent (Bentley v. Hurlburt, 153 Cal. 796, 96 P. 890); and, furthermore, it is not to be assumed from the making of such conditional order that the trial court concluded that the verdict was the product of passion or prejudice (Swett v. Gray, 141 Cal. 63, 74 P. 439). In the present case defendant does not point out, nor have we been able to discover, any facts or circumstances which would justify the determination that as a matter of law the award of damages by the jury here was influenced by passion or prejudice.

The refusal of the court to give defendant's proposed instructions numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, and 9 was not error. They were all based upon the legal proposition contended for by plaintiff that the claim plaintiff presented against the estate did not include a demand for damages resulting from the services in submitting to the blood transfusion, and that therefore plaintiff was not entitled to any award therefor. We have already pointed out that this contention is without merit.

In our opinion, defendant has not shown error, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

87 Cal. App. 783
PEOPLE v. KIRWIN. (Cr. 1541.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 23, 1927.

1. Embezzlement $\S$ 23—Statute does not make restitution of embezzled property a defense, except under certain circumstances (Pen. Code, § 512).

Pen. Code, § 512, does not, in view of section 513, provide that restitution of property embezzled is a defense to embezzlement charge, but that it is not a defense except under certain circumstances.

2. Embezzlement $\S$ 23—Accused could not plead restoration as defense where restoration was not made before embezzlement prosecution was laid before magistrate, though made before district attorney filed "information" (Pen. Code, § 512).

Defendant, in an embezzlement case, could not, under Pen. Code, § 512, plead restoration of embezzled property as a defense, where restoration was not made before the case was laid before the magistrate, although it was made before the district attorney filed his information; "information," as used in section 512, meaning, in view of sections 809 and 811, not the formal filing of a complaint by the district attorney, but the laying of the facts constituting embezzlement before a magistrate preliminary to further action thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Information (in Criminal Law).]

3. Embezzlement $\hookrightarrow$ 28—Information stating defendant embezzled "shares" of stock, though embezzlement statute referred to "certificates" of stock, held to state public offense (Pen. Code, §§ 967 and 1131).

Although Pen. Code, §§ 967 and 1131, relating to the crime of embezzlement, refer to "certificates" of stock, and information stating that defendant embezzled "shares" of stock held to state a public offense.

4. Embezzlement $\hookrightarrow$ 32—Information held sufficient without charging facts showing accused was bailee, and character and purpose of bailment.

An information charging embezzlement need not allege facts showing accused was bailee and showing character and purpose of the bailment; hence an information charging that defendant was the agent and bailee of complaining witness, that he was a person intrusted with and having in his control personal property, allegedly embezzled, and, by virtue of his trust as such agent and bailee, the embezzled property came into his care, possession, custody, and control, was sufficient to state the offense of embezzlement.

5. Embezzlement $\hookrightarrow$ 44(4)—Evidence held to show that shares of stock embezzled represented by certificate were the property of complaining witness.

Evidence that shares of stock embezzled were represented by single certificate known as a "street certificate" passing by delivery, and that before inception of bailment to defendant it was in possession of complaining witness and was by her delivered to defendant, and there being no evidence that certificate was property of any other person, held to show that shares represented by certificate were the property of the complaining witness.

6. Criminal law $\hookrightarrow$ 1147—Power to deny probation rests exclusively in trial court, and is not reviewable by District Court of Appeal.

The power to deny probation rests exclusively in the trial court, and a refusal to grant it is not reviewable by the District Court of Appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

L. J. Kirwin was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. W. Bell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, P. J. Defendant was informed against for the crime of embezzlement, and was convicted. He appeals from the judgment and from an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The subject of the offense, as alleged in the information, was "100 shares" of the capital stock of a certain corporation, which it was charged that appellant held as bailee. During the preliminary examination of appellant, and while the complaining witness was on the stand in the committing magistrate's court, appellant offered to her and she took from him a certificate for an equal number of the shares of the stock of the same corporation. Appellant contends that this restitution was a complete defense to the charge upon which he was later committed, under the provisions of section 512 of the Penal Code, which reads:

"The fact that the accused intended to restore the property embezzled, is no ground of defense or mitigation of punishment, if it has not been restored before an information has been laid before a magistrate, or an indictment found by a grand jury, charging the commission of the offense."

It will be observed, however, that this section does not provide that restitution is a defense, but that it is not a defense except under certain circumstances. The enactment must be read in connection with section 513 of the same Code, which is to the effect that, when all proper circumstances are present, the fact of restitution "is not a ground of defense, but it authorizes the court to mitigate punishment, in its discretion."

[2] The question now to be determined is whether the law as declared in these sections has any application to the case of appellant. He contends that the word "information," as employed in section 512, refers to the pleading of that name which is filed by district attorneys, and he therefore insists that the restitution made by him was not too late, for the reason that an information is not filed by a district attorney in a particular case until after the preliminary examination of the accused. We think the word, as used in the section, cannot be given the meaning which appellant would ascribe to it. This seems apparent from the language of the enactment itself, for the information must have "been laid" before the magistrate himself, while the information prepared by a district attorney is filed with the superior court after a magistrate has concluded his labors and a commitment has resulted. Pen. Code, § 809. We think the word used in section 512 was intended to import the laying before a magistrate of a charge, or of "information," that a public offense has been committed and that it has been committed by the person whose preliminary examination is sought. A somewhat similar use of the word "information" occurs in section 811 of the Penal Code. As the word in section 512 must be so read, it follows that the restitution came too late, for it was made while appellant's preliminary examination was in progress. We do not decide whether sections 512 and 513 would have been available to appellant on appeal merely because the trial court resolved against him the discretion referred to in the latter section, if the discretion was so resolved, and even if the restitution had been made before the committing magistrate had been "informed" of the charge against appellant.

[3] In view of the fact that two sections of the Penal Code (967 and 1131), relating to the crime of embezzlement, refer to certificates of stock, appellant contends that the information failed to state a public offense, in that it was alleged therein that he embezzled "shares" of stock. The contention is answered by People v. Williams, 60 Cal. 1, which was decided after sections 967 and 1131 of the Code had assumed their present form, in so far as, if at all, they may be said to give any support to appellant's claim. The information was not, therefore, subject to the assault which appellant makes upon it. Notwithstanding the decision in People v. Williams, which arose out of the exigencies of the particular case, we think it were better if the information now before us had charged the embezzlement of a certificate of stock for the number of shares evidenced by it.

[4] The information charged that appellant "was the agent and bailee of" the complaining witness, that he "was a person intrusted with and having in his control the personal property" alleged to have been embezzled, and "by virtue of his trust as such agent and bailee" the property embezzled "came into the care, possession, custody, and control of him" (the appellant). It is insisted that these allegations were insufficient, for it is said that the information should have alleged facts showing that appellant was a bailee and showing the character and purpose of the bailment. There is other matter in the information which, while not strictly descriptive of the nature of the bailment, perhaps affords some aid to the allegations above quoted. It is charged that appellant, in committing the embezzlement, did "appropriate the said personal property to his own use, and to uses and purposes not in the due and lawful execution of his said trust as agent and bailee and person so intrusted as aforesaid." However, although the rule was as contended for by appellant, under an old line of cases decided before the adoption of the Codes (People v. Cohen, 8 Cal. 42; People v. Peterson, 9 Cal. 313; People v. Poggi, 19 Cal. 600; People v. Smith, 23 Cal. 280), it is now different. The information, without the aiding allegation to which we have referred, is sufficient in its averment that the bailment was in existence. People v. Gordon, 133 Cal. 328, 65 P. 746, 85 Am. St. Rep. 174; People v. Goodrich, 142 Cal. 216, 75 P. 796; People v. O'Brian, 8 Cal. App. 641, 97 P. 679; People v. Riccardi, 50 Cal. App. 427, 195 P. 448.

[5] The information alleged that the shares charged to have been embezzled were the property of the complaining witness, a married woman. The evidence showed that the shares were represented by a single certificate of stock, and it is contended that there was no showing that the paper, or shares represented by it, was the property of the complaining witness. We think the evidence was sufficient to show the ownership as alleged. The certificate was one of the character known as a "street certificate," that is, one which showed the indorsement of the original holder and therefore passed by delivery. Before the inception of the bailment it was in the possession of the complaining witness and was by her delivered to appellant. There was no evidence that the shares, or the certificate, were the property of any other person.

[6] It is contended that the trial court erred in refusing to allow appellant to make an application for probation. The power to deny probation rests exclusively in the trial court, and a refusal to grant it is not reviewable here. People v. Laborwits, 74 Cal. App. 401, 240 P. 802.

Other points are stated by appellant, but they are not argued, nor is authority cited to support them. As to such points, there is nothing for us to decide. People v. Zarate, 54 Cal. App. 372, 201 P. 955.

Judgment and order affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 29, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 27, 1928.

1. Master and servant ⇨372—Compensation is not allowable for injury resulting from inherent bodily defect or not superinduced by extraordinary movement or action.

Where physical injury results from inherent bodily defect, and not an outside cause, or is not superinduced by some extraordinary movement or action, compensation is not allowable.

2. Master and servant ⇨417(7)—Review of Industrial Accident Commission's decision extends only to ascertainment of whether there is testimony supporting findings.

Appellate court, on review of decision by Industrial Accident Commission, cannot draw its own inferences from testimony set forth in record and conclude therefrom whether or not petitioner is entitled to compensation, since jurisdiction extends only to ascertainment of whether there is testimony supporting the findings of the commission.

Evidence held sufficient to support finding of Industrial Accident Commission that injury to knee of employee, while running to catch truck on highway, was not caused by injury arising out of or occurring in course of his employment.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Insurance & Safety Act by Dudley Newton, Jr., a minor, by his guardian ad litem, Mrs. Dudley Newton, opposed by H. Brown and the Eagle Indemnity Company. PLUMMER, J. This cause is before us upon the application of the petitioner for a writ of certiorari to review and annul the decision of the Industrial Accident Commission denying compensation to the above-named petitioner. The facts in this matter are uncontradicted. The record shows the following: Dudley Newton, a boy 20 years of age, was in the employ as a general roustabout of H. Brown, a highway contractor, on or about October 6, 1926, and had been in such employment for some months. On the 6th day of October, 1926, while working in the county of Yolo, on a public highway, he was sent by his employer to a point about one mile distant on the highway to get a truck. He went to a point on the highway where he knew the truck would pass, and waited for it. As he was waiting, the truck came along, but at about the same instant of time another automobile passed between the truck and the boy, so, being afraid, as the boy testified, that the truck driver did not see him, he halloed to the truck driver, and ran down the highway after the truck. The truck slowed down, and, as the boy was running along the dirt portion of the highway, he heard or felt his knee snap. He did not fall, although he felt his leg crumple under him. He recovered without falling, and continued to the truck, got on the truck, and rode on the truck for about one hour. His knee started to ache and swell, and his employer sent him to Dr. Harris. Hospitalization and treatment thereafter followed. On December 19, 1926, a refracture occurred when the boy stepped into a hole or depression while walking. The testimony shows that the boy did not stumble, trip over anything, or step into any depression while running after the truck. The only inference that can be drawn from the testimony is that the ground on which the boy was running did not have anything to do with the injury, and that the troubles of the kneecap simply occurred as the boy was running after the truck. The opinion testimony of the attending physician and surgeon, Dr. Harris, is as follows:

"From this man's history, and from the fact that there was no bruise, excoriation, or contusion at or about the knee joint, I would be led to believe that the fracture of the patella was caused spontaneously while the boy was running to catch a truck. I do not believe there was any extraordinary strain or trauma or exaggerated movement, but that the fracture occurred as a result of the normal motion of the leg in running. The recurrence, in my opinion, was not caused by an extraordinary movement, but simply by a misstep. Operative findings at the second setting showed the fracture to have recurred through previous fracture lines. I do not believe there was any period of partial disability following either fracture."

The testimony of Dr. Harbaugh is as follows:

"A fracture of the patella could occur in the manner described in the record, without any particular accidental feature."

Upon these facts the commission found as follows: (1) Dudley Newton, Jr., aged 20, was employed as a roustabout on October 5, 1926, at Sacramento, Cal., by H. Brown, whose insurance carrier was Eagle Indemnity Company, a corporation; (2) on said date, while running, the employee sustained spontaneous fracture of the patella of the left knee; (3) the evidence does not establish that said fracture was caused by injury or strain arising out of or occurring in the course of his employment.

[1] Compensation was accordingly denied. A petition for a rehearing being denied, application was made to this court for a writ of certiorari. By finding that the injury to the petitioner's patella was spontaneous, the commission found, in effect, that the injury was the result of some internal impulse, energy, or natural law without external force; that being one of the definitions of the term used by witnesses. In other words, the finding of the commission is that the injury to the minor resulted from an inherent defect in the patella, although the record does not show any previous diseased condition of the patella, or that the petitioner had experienced any previous trouble therewith. The finding can only be interpreted in the light that the injury resulted from an inherent defect, and not through any extraneous, accidental, or inducing cause, and therefore did not arise out of the course of the minor's employment, or by reason of his employment, but simply occurred during the course of, or time of, employment. It would appear that the theory of the commission was and is that the injury complained of is a matter which would come, probably, under health insurance, and not under the provisions of "the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Laws." That the injury occurred during the time of employment or during the course of employment is unquestioned. The testimony of the petitioner shows that the injury to the patella of his left leg occurred while he was on a mission to obtain a truck for his employer. The testimony of the petitioner likewise shows that there was no extraneous or outside force or accidental means present to induce or produce injury to the patella. While the layman would naturally infer that the running of the petitioner caused the patella to snap, there is no testimony to that effect. The testimony only is that it occurred while the petitioner was running. The medical or expert testimony is to the effect that there was no extra strain upon the kneecap, but "that the fracture occurred as a result of the normal motion of the leg in running." While the word "accident" has been eliminated from section 6 of "The Workmen's Compensation Act" (St. 1917, p. 834) the phrase "arising out of, and in the course of the employment" has been interpreted to mean that the injury must result by reason of the employment in which the employee is engaged, and not by reason of some inherent natural defect which simply culminates during the time of employment. In other words, if the agency which culminates in a physical injury is an inherent defect, and not an outside cause, or if the injury is not superinduced by some extraordinary movement or action, compensation is not allowable. Again, as stated in William Simpson Construction Co. et al. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 74 Cal. App. 239, 240 P. 58:

"In the first place, the burden of proof is upon the applicant to prove that the injury received was one which would sustain an award. It must be conceded that the burden is upon the applicant for compensation to show that the injury arose out of as well as in the course of the employment; and there is no presumption, as contended by respondents, that because an injury occurs in the course of the employment it arises out of or because of that employment." Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 186 Cal. 587, 200 P. 17.

[2, 3] Likewise, in the Simpson Case, it was also held:

"Whenever the subject under consideration is one within the knowledge of experts only, and is not within the common knowledge of laymen, the expert evidence is conclusive upon the question in issue."

Again, this court is not in a position to draw its own inferences from the testimony set forth in the record and conclude therefrom that the petitioner is or is not entitled to compensation. Our jurisdiction extends only to the ascertainment of whether there is testimony in the record, and was testimony before the commission supporting its findings. As said in Dearborn v. Industrial Accident Commission, 187 Cal. 591, 203 P. 112, quoting from the case of Southern Pacific Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 177 Cal. 378, 170 P. 822:

"This court, in reviewing awards of the commission, is not acting as the court of appeal. It has no power to waive the effect of positive evidence. It must assume that the commission believed all the evidence given which tends to sustain the award. * * * The findings are not subject to review except in so far as they may have been made without any evidence whatever in support thereof."

The opinion of the medical experts in this case is of the same binding force and effect after the commission has acted thereon as any other portion of the testimony set forth in the record. Neither layman nor expert has testified that the injury was not "spontaneous." The opinion of the experts that it was such is admissible testimony, and, when the commission has acted thereon and so found, the law seems to be well settled that appellate courts are bound thereby. This statement of the rule appears in the case of Tartar v. Industrial Accident Commission, 191 Cal. 703, 218 P. 39, to wit:

"It is well settled that the findings of the Industrial Accident Commission upon questions of fact are conclusive, and are not subject to review where there is any substantial evidence to support them"—citing a number of California cases.

Further, to the same effect, and also as to the definition of the term "arising out of, and in the course of the employment," we may cite the case of Storm v. Industrial Accident Commission, 191 Cal. 4, 214 P. 874, where it is said:

"An injury, in order to be compensable under the terms of the Compensation Act, * * * must have been sustained by the employee 'arising out of, and in the course of the employment,' and must have been 'proximately caused by the employment.'"

The opinion in the Storm Case then quotes the following, which is supported by a number of authorities:

"The accidents arising out of the employment of the person injured are those in which it is possible to trace the injury to the nature of the employer's work, or to the risks to which the employer's business exposes the employee. The accident must be one resulting from a risk reasonably incident to the employment." "But it excludes an injury which cannot fairly be traced to the employment as a contributing proximate cause."

If the expert testimony in this case had been to the effect that the injury to the petitioner's left patella resulted from some extraordinary strain or accidental stumbling or striking against some protruding object on the highway, then and in that case a finding that compensation was allowable could readily have been upheld under the ruling of this court in the case of Elk Grove District v. Industrial Accident Commission, 34 Cal. App. 589, 168 P. 392, where the petitioner suffered an injury by reason of an extraordinary strain in the course of her employment in endeavoring to remove heavy benches or seats from in front of a bookcase in order to obtain a desired book to be used in connection with her duties as a teacher. The finding in this case is based upon testimony of medical experts exactly contrary to that in the case just cited, and whether correct or incorrect, supports the finding of the commission, and by that finding we are bound. It being a question of fact as to whether the injury to the petitioner arose out of or in the course of his employment, or was simply spontaneous, and occurred during the time of his employment, and that fact, being found adversely to the petitioner's contention, and being based upon the expert testimony to which we have referred, supports the findings of the commission, and, being a question of fact determined by the commission, cannot be disturbed upon appeal. The only question of law involved herein is as to whether there is any testimony supporting the finding of the commission, and, having found such testimony, our inquiry there stops.

The decision of the commission is affirmed.

WITTER et ux. v. BANK OF MILPITAS
et al.* (Civ. 6047.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 13, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1928.

1. Mortgages $\S$ 369(7)—Evidence held to sustain finding beneficiary of trust deed had not waived provision authorizing it on interest default to consider whole debt due, and require trustee to sell.

Finding that trust deed provision, on default of payment of interest on secured debt, beneficiary could consider whole debt due and payable, and, on written application, require trustee to sell, had not been waived, held warranted by the evidence.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1041(1)—Sale under trust deed will not be disturbed, where findings against contention of unfairness were supported by conflicting evidence.

Findings against plaintiffs' contention that unfair advantage was taken of them in sale under trust deed will not be disturbed, where record showed that as to some of the findings there was no evidence contradicting them, and, as to others, evidence was conflicting.

3. Mortgages $\S$ 341—Sale under trust deed is not void merely because trustee was officer in beneficiary corporation.

Sale made under trust deed by trustee who is also officer in beneficiary corporation is not void merely because of trustee's relation to beneficiary.

4. Mortgages $\S$ 369(7)—Evidence held to show that trustee did not wrongfully withheld portion of proceeds of sale paid for necessary work on premises authorized by trust deed.

Where plaintiffs, in attack on sale made under trust deed empowering trustee to care for property, claimed that portion of proceeds from sale was wrongfully withheld, evidence held sufficient to show trustee had not wrongfully withheld portion of proceeds paid for such care.

5. Mortgages $\S$ 342—Where beneficiary under trust deed was empowered to appoint new trustee, and it did so, sale by new trustee carried title.

In attack on trustee's sale under trust deed, which provided that beneficiary could at any time appoint successors of trustees named in instrument who should have same power as original trustee, and beneficiary appointed such other trustee who conducted sale, held such sale was good, since, on appointment, new trustee became vested with title to trust premises.

6. Mortgages $\S$ 369(1)—Statutes authorizing court to appoint expert to investigate and testify, and statutes as to mode of transfer, held inapplicable to action to set aside foreclosure of trust deed (Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 1091-1135; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1871 as added by St. 1925, p. 305).

In attack on sale made by trustee under trust deed, where plaintiff invoked Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 1091-1135, providing mode for transfer of real property, and Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1871, as added by St. 1925, p. 305, empowering court to appoint expert to conduct investigation and report to court, held statutes were inapplicable.

7. Mortgages $\S$ 354—Notice of sale under trust deed that should have read "front door of county courthouse," but omitted word "house," held cured by reference to recorded deed containing correct information.

In attack on trust deed providing that, in making sale, trustee should publish time and place of such sale at "front door of county courthouse," and notice, as published, omitted word "house," and was worded "front door of county court," but contained exact reference to book and page where deed was recorded, which contained correct information, held that reference in deed cured slight defect in published notice.

8. Appeal and error $\S$ 662(1)—Where record contained no evidence contrary to finding of court, contention that finding was not sustained by evidence held unavailing.

Where sale under trust deed was attacked on ground that notice was not published in newspaper of general circulation, and notice was published in paper decreed by superior court to be newspaper of general circulation two years prior to date of sale, but record contained nothing to show that finding was not sustained by evidence, it cannot be so argued.

9. Mortgages ⚡357—Where there was no request to adjourn sale under trust deed, plaintiffs cannot complain because there was but one bidder.

In attack on sale made under trust deed, where only one bid was made, and no request was made that sale should be adjourned, plaintiff may not complain, in absence of other facts supporting claim, that sale should have been adjourned.

10. Mortgages ⚡363—Sale under trust deed was not nullity because representative of beneficiary made bid without written instructions; writings subsequently made being sufficient.

In attack on sale made under trust deed, where plaintiffs contended that attorney for beneficiary appeared at sale, and made bid, which was nullity because he had no written instructions at time, and no writing was issued or money passed, held, it was not necessary to have written instructions, or that contract be executed on doorsill of courthouse at time of sale, but writings subsequently made were sufficient.

11. Mortgages ⚡349—Sale made by trustee under trust deed, not conducted by licensed auctioneer, held at "public auction" within meaning of deed.

In attack on sale made under trust deed on ground that sale was not made at public auction, and was therefore void because not conducted by licensed auctioneer licensed by city of San Jose, under Charter art. 1, div. 2 (St. 1915, p. 1874), where no ordinance was introduced to show that auctioneers were licensed or regulated, words "public auction" must be taken in ordinary sense, and in that sense sale complied with terms of deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Auction.]

12. Mortgages ⚡360—Trust deed, authorizing two trustees to make sale, neither directed nor required that two attend sale, and sale by one was good.

In attack on sale made under trust deed by one trustee on ground that it was void, where trust deed authorized two trustees to make sale, held, that sale was good, since trust deed neither directed nor required two should attend sale, nor that both as in a duet conduct the auction.

13. Mortgages ⚡360—Notes need not be taken up by trustees selling under trust deed, where deed does not so provide.

Attack on sale made under trust deed on ground it was without consideration, since notes were not taken up by trustees, was not good, since, if makers wanted notes surrendered to them, it was their duty to apply therefor.

14. Mortgages ⚡364—Requirement for payment of price in cash at sale under trust deed did not require beneficiary purchasing to actually transfer cash to trustee and receive it back in payment of debt (Civ. Code, § 3532).

Beneficiary purchasing at trust deed sale held not required to actually pay cash to trustee and receive it back in payment of debt, notwithstanding cash provision of trust deed; Civ. Code, § 3532, not requiring idle acts.

15. Appeal and error ⚡762—Errors of law first raised in closing brief will not be considered.

Errors of law, first discussed in closing brief, will not be considered, since they should have been presented in opening brief.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by George F. Witter and wife against Bank of Milpitas and others to set aside a sale under deed of trust. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs moved for new trial, which was denied. From a judgment for defendants, and denial of new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

George F. Witter, of Oakland, for appellants.

C. L. Witten and William H. Johnson, both of San Jose, for respondent Bank of Milpitas.

L. D. Bohnett, of San Jose, for respondents Ramstad.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs commenced an action against the defendant bank and its grantee to set aside a sale made by the trustees under a deed of trust. The defendants appeared and answered, and a trial was had in the trial court before the court sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the defendants, and a judgment was entered thereon. The plaintiffs made a motion for a new trial, the motion was denied, and the plaintiffs have appealed, bringing up a bill of exceptions. The portions of the record necessary to the consideration of any given point will be stated in connection with the discussion of the point.

[1] 1. The plaintiffs complain because they were not given actual notice of the intended sale. The trust deed did not contain a provision requiring actual notice. On the contrary, the sixth paragraph provided that, if the debtor failed to pay his interest at the time provided, in that event the beneficiary might consider the debt as immediately due and payable, and that the trustees on the written application of the beneficiary might proceed to sell the property. The plaintiffs contend that the defendant bank waived the provision just referred to by its conduct. They call to our attention that, from the time the loan was negotiated, they were frequently in arrears in the payment of interest, etc., and, notwithstanding that fact, their payments were accepted when tendered, and they cite and rely on the rule stated in Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 295, 110 P. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126. The defendants do not question the doctrine of that case, but contend that the facts of the case at bar do not bring it within the rule. They call to our attention the conversations and correspondence set forth in the bill of exceptions. Turning to the bill of exceptions, it will be noted at once that the plaintiffs received their loan from the bank on the 19th day of January, 1915. It will also be noted that, by reason of the nonpayment of interest, the bank wrote to the plaintiffs on June 9, 1916, exercising its option to declare the principal due and payable. That act was never canceled. Thereafter numerous letters were sent to the plaintiffs by the defendant bank asking for its money. Excepting only the last payment, from the day the notes were signed until the very last payment, the payments made were made when the plaintiffs were in default, and no single payment paid all interest then due. The last payment paid the interest five days in advance. During the same time the plaintiffs were promising to pay, asking for extensions, and representing that they were negotiating a sale of the property so that they could take up the loan. On July 29, 1918, the bank wrote the plaintiffs that they could have an extension of time providing they paid up the interest due July 19, 1918, back taxes, and kept the interest paid up promptly, and kept some one on the place to take proper care of it. The letter closed with the statement: "You have ten days from date in which to make the payment as above provided." The interest mentioned was not paid until December 14, 1918. The discussions continued as above stated, and in October, 1918, Mr. Witter had a conversation with Mr. Reed, the vice president of the bank, regarding the possible foreclosure. Referring to that conversation, the plaintiff testified that Mr. Reed said no foreclosure would be undertaken without notice to the plaintiffs. Mr. Reed testified that he never made the statement. In December, 1918, the bank again threatened foreclosure in a letter addressed to Mr. Gehring, attorney for Mrs. Blais, who held a second trust deed. Mr. Gehring informed the plaintiffs. They handed to him a check for the interest. He delivered the check to the bank, and, at the time of the trial, he testified that on accepting the check "they said the loan was satisfactory." There was no evidence that Mr. Gehring was acting for the plaintiffs, nor that he repeated to them "that they (the bank officials) said the loan was satisfactory." The court found against the plaintiffs on the issue of lulling them into inactivity. The finding is sustained. Sargent v. Shumaker, 193 Cal. 122, 134, 223 P. 464. The payment last mentioned paid the interest to December 19, 1918. No further payments were made, and, on February 4, 1919, the board of directors of the defendant bank ordered its agents to cause a sale of the premises.

[2] The plaintiffs contend that an unfair advantage was taken of them. They assert that they learned the foreclosure had taken place on March 24, 1919, and that on March 28, 1919, Mr. Gehring and Mr. Blais called at the bank and offered to pay plaintiffs' indebtedness, and the bank refused the offer. They call to our attention that on March 27, 1919, the defendant bank adopted a resolution to sell the property to A. G. Ramstad for $8,500, whereas the bank had foreclosed on it for $6,425.05. The plaintiffs cite and rely on Winbigler v. Sherman, 175 Cal. 270, 165 P. 943. In that case, at page 275 (165 P. 946), the court quotes with approval as follows:

"Where the inadequacy is palpable and great very slight additional evidence of unfairness or irregularity is sufficient to authorize the granting of the relief sought."

In their brief the plaintiffs cite many probative facts. Before we proceed to consider those probative matters, it is necessary to consider the state of the record. Those probative facts were introduced in response to the allegations of the complaint of the plaintiffs, wherein the plaintiffs had alleged separately: (1) Numerous irregularities on the part of the trustees; and (2) numerous fraudulent acts on the part of the trustees and the defendant bank. The trial court made findings in response to each of said allegations. Each and all of those findings are against the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs contend that such findings are not supported by the evidence. As to some of the findings, there was no evidence contradicting them, and as to some of the other findings the evidence was conflicting. This court may not disturb them.

[3] In connection with this point we understand the plaintiffs to contend that Mr. Giacomazzi could not act as trustee because he was an officer of the defendant bank. They cite and rely on Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 17, 28 P. 788. The case cited is not helpful. It was on an altogether different set of facts. The rule applicable is stated in Copsey v. Sacramento Bank, 133 Cal. 659, 66 P. 7, 204, 85 Am. St. Rep. 238; and Herbert Kraft Co. v. Bryan, 140 Cal. 73, 79, 73 P. 745.

[4] The plaintiffs say that the claim of the bank, "including costs and expenses of sale, was $6,425.05"; that the property was sold for $6,525.05; and they assert that the trustees have wrongfully failed to pay them the balance claimed to be $100. Between the date of the execution of the notes and the date of the sale the property was vacant at times and in need of care. The trust deed authorized the bank or the trustees, "4. * * * to enter, hold, protect, repair, and care for said property, including improvements, trees, vines and crops thereon, as they or either of them see fit * * * all at the trust and charge of said trustors. * * *" It also authorized the trustees, after sale made, out of the proceeds to pay "6. * * * first the expenses of sale and these trusts including reasonable compensation for their services, counsel fees of $200, and cost of certificate or abstract of title to time of sale, all to accrue on any default of said trustors hereunder, next all amounts with interest due from said trustors pursuant to paragraph fourth of this instrument. * * *" The attorney for the bank, Mr. Witten, made the bid. He testified:

"The amount of the bid made by me was $6,525.25, and was made up of principal and interest, $6,300.05, advertisement, $25.00, attorneys' fees, $200.00. One hundred of my fee went to pay a party who had done work on the orchard."

There was no cross-examination and no contradictory evidence. It is clear that the trustees do not wrongfully withhold $100 or any other sum.

[5] 3. The third point made by the plaintiffs is that there was no devolution of title. The point involves a consideration of the following fact: The deed of trust, as originally executed, conveyed the property to M. Lynn and A. L. Crabb as trustees. It also provided that, in the event of a default, the trustees could sell the property. Furthermore, it provided (omitting irrelevant parts):

"Said beneficiary may, at any time by instrument in writing appoint a successor, * * * or discharge and appoint a new trustee in the place of any trustee named herein or acting hereunder, * * * who shall have all the estate, powers, and duties of said trustee predecessor."

By an instrument in writing dated March 6, 1917, the bank appointed E. P. Giacomazzi in the place and stead of M. Lynn. Thereafter Giacomazzi and Crabb conducted the trustee sale and conveyed the property. Lynn did not join nor did he execute a deed. Under the facts it was not necessary. Wood v. Gridley, 217 Ill. App. 579. At page 585 the court said:

"Upon the appointment being made under the power, the new trustee becomes vested, ipso facto, with the title to the trust premises and is clothed with the same power as if he had been originally named in the will. No conveyance need be made to him by the former trustee, or by the former trustee's heirs or representatives, if he be dead. Craft v. Indiana, D. & W. Ry. Co., 166 Ill. 580 [46 N. E. 1132]; Reichert v. Missouri & I. Coal Co., 231 Ill. 238 [83 N. E. 166, 121 Am. St. Rep. 307]; Edwards v. Edwards, 22 Ill. 121; 39 Cyc. 312, and cases cited."

[6] The plaintiffs invoke sections 1091-1135 of the Civil Code and section 1871 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as added by St. 1925, p. 305. Those sections have no application to the facts.

[7] 4. The trust deed provided that in making a sale the trustees should "publish the time and place of such sale * * * at public auction at the front door of the county courthouse in the county of Santa Clara. * * *" The notice as published omitted the word "house," and was worded "front door of the county court in San Jose." There is no claim that the sale as made was not made at the front door of the county courthouse at San Jose in the county of Santa Clara. The notice as published contained an exact reference to the date, parties, and the book and page of the recordation of the trust deed. That deed contained the correct information. That reference cured the slight defect of which the plaintiffs complain. Lau v. Scribner, 197 Mich. 414, 163 N. W. 914, and cases there cited. See, also, Hinds v. Clark, 173 Cal. 49, 54-55, 159 P. 153.

[8] 5. In this same connection it is contended that the notice was not published in a newspaper of general circulation. The notice was published in the Daily Record. A decree of the superior court adjudging the Daily Record to be "a newspaper of general circulation" was introduced in evidence. The trial court made findings on the issue against the plaintiffs. As we understand, the plaintiffs contend that the adjudication was made two years prior to the date of the sale, and that the adjudication is no evidence that the Daily Record was, at the time of the sale, a newspaper of general circulation. There was no evidence that the judgment determining the status of the Daily Record had been vacated. There is nothing in the record, therefore, from which it can be argued that the findings made by the trial court on this branch of the case are not sustained by the evidence. In re Simpson, 62 Cal. App. 549, 217 P. 789.

[9] 6. In making their sixth point, the plaintiffs state that the trustees did not do their duty, and continue the sale for want of bidders. They point out that there was only one bidder, the officer of the bank; they call attention to the fact that it is their claim that the property was sold for a little over $6,000 when it was of a value of nearly $25,000; and they argue that to uphold the sale would be to uphold a set of facts that was tantamount to a fraud. The argument would be impressive, if it were sustained by the record. But the record discloses that, at the time of the sale, there was only one bid. There was no request made by any one that the sale should be adjourned to a day certain. The court found that the property was not of a value of $25,000, and that it could not have been sold for more than $8,500. That finding is supported by the evidence. In the absence of any other facts supporting the claim that the sale should have been adjourned, the plaintiffs may not complain. Freeman on Void Judicial Sales, § 32.

[10] 7. It is next contended that there was no sale. That fact was alleged in the plaintiffs' complaint, and the trial court made findings against the plaintiffs. In presenting the point to this court, we understand the plaintiffs to contend that, when Mr. Witten, the attorney for the bank, appeared at the sale and made a bid, his act was a nullity because he held no written instructions at the time, no writing was issued at the time, and no money was passed at the time. It was not necessary that he hold written instructions, nor that a contract be executed on the doorsill of the courthouse at the time of the sale, nor that money should pass at that same time and place, nor that the notes be surrendered. The writings subsequently made were sufficient. Bank of Orland v. Finnell, 133 Cal. 475, 478, 65 P. 976.

[11] 8. The eighth point made by the plaintiffs is that the sale was not made at public auction, and was therefore void. In other words, they contend that, because the auction was not conducted by a licensed auctioneer, then it was not a public auction. The power to license is vested in the city of San Jose by virtue of the terms of its charter, article 1, division 2. See Stats. 1915, p. 1874. No ordinance was introduced which shows that auctioneers are licensed at that place or which purports to regulate auctions or define what is a public auction. The words "public auction" are not defined by statute, and therefore they must be taken in their ordinary sense. Estate of Gird, 157 Cal. 534, 542, 108 P. 499, 137 Am. St. Rep. 131. Construed in that sense, the trustees fully complied with the terms of the deed.

[12] 9. The plaintiffs contend that the sale was made by one only of two trustees, and therefore void. They note the fact that the sale was actually conducted by Giacomazzi. The rest of their argument is the same as made under division 3, supra. For the reasons there stated, it is clear that the argument is without merit. Moreover, the deed of trust authorized the two trustees to make the sale. It neither directed nor required that the two should attend the sale, nor that both as in a duet conduct the auction.

[13, 14] 10. It is next contended that the sale was made without consideration. In this connection the plaintiffs make two complaints—they object because the trustees did not take up the notes and return the notes to the makers, and they object because the trustees did not require the bank to pay cash. As to the first complaint, it does not come within the terms of the trust deed. It is wholly silent on the subject. If the makers wanted the notes surrendered to them, it was their duty to apply to the bank therefor. As to the second complaint, it is quite clear that the deed provided that the sale would be for cash; however, if the beneficiaries bid at the sale, the deed contained no language that commanded the trustees to require that the bank carry to the sale a sack of cash, make its bid, obtain its deed, pay in cash, and then demand back the cash and credit it as a payment on the notes. Having determined their duty to make a sale, the trustees had the right to conduct it as they did. The idle act of carrying around the sack of cash is not mentioned in the contract, and "the law neither does nor requires idle acts." Civ. Code, § 3532. In Voorhies v. Voorhies, 66 Misc. Rep. 78, 82, 120 N. Y. S. 677, at page 681, the court said:

"1. As the deed gave to the trustee a power in trust to sell and turn over the proceeds as he chose, to the extent of all the proceeds, equity will deem it a valid exercise of his powers to turn over the real property instead. * * * The same reasoning, applied in all the cases giving the beneficiary the right of election to take the property instead of the money, applies equally to these assumed facts, if the trustee were willing to convey the property directly, instead of selling and turning over the proceeds. While the beneficiaries could not elect or compel the trustee to convey the property and thus terminate the trust, yet, when the trustee had himself determined, in the exercise of his discretion, that he would thus terminate the trust by selling and turning over the proceeds, there is no reason why he could not instead convey the property directly. This he did, by his deed of January 25, 1875, giving good title to John James Voorhies and his wife."

11. The plaintiffs contend that plaintiffs have been deprived of their property without due process of law. That point is but another method of arguing the contentions presented in the preceding divisions. For the reasons stated above, the point must be ruled against the plaintiffs.

[15] We have taken up and discussed each point made in the opening brief. In their closing brief the plaintiffs, for the first time, set forth certain errors of law. There are two reasons why we do not take up each one and discuss it. If the plaintiffs relied on said errors or any one of them, the plaintiffs, in fairness to the defendants and to the court, should have presented such points in their opening brief. 2 Cal. Jur. p. 734, § 424. In the second place, it is clear, if we make a detailed comparison, that the points stated in the opening brief were but another method of stating the errors of law which plaintiffs enumerate in their closing brief.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

RUTLEDGE v. RUTLEDGE. (Civ. 3389.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 24, 1927.

1. Divorce ⇨133(3)—Evidence of cruelty and removal of furniture and stove held to justify wife in leaving residence and warrant granting her divorce for desertion (Civ. Code, §§ 98, 104.)

Evidence of cruelty and removal of wife's furniture and stove held to justify wife in leaving residence and to warrant granting her a divorce for desertion under Civ. Code, § 98, providing that departure of one party from family dwelling caused by cruelty or threats of bodily harm is not desertion by the absent party, but is desertion by the other, and also under Civ. Code, § 104, providing that, if place selected by husband is unfit and wife does not conform thereto, it is desertion by husband from the time her reasonable objections are made known to him.

2. Divorce ⇨152—Decree reciting that an interlocutory divorce decree "should be granted plaintiff" held sufficiently definite to constitute "interlocutory decrees" under statute (Civ. Code, § 131.)

Decree reciting that "an interlocutory decree of divorce should be granted the plaintiff from the defendant on the grounds of desertion" held sufficiently definite to constitute an interlocutory decree, establishing plaintiff's right to a divorce, under Civ. Code, § 131, providing that, if court determines divorce should be granted, an interlocutory judgment must be entered declaring that party in whose favor court decides is entitled to a divorce.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. W. Guerin, Judge.

Action for divorce by Rosa L. Rutledge against Gilbert W. Rutledge. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. W. Widney and Lorrin Andrews, both of Los Angeles, for cross-complainant and appellant.

Willis O. Tyler, of Los Angeles, for cross-defendant and respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff had judgment in an action for divorce on the ground of desertion, and the defendant appeals.

It appears from the transcript that prior to the 1st day of September, 1923, the plaintiff had been occupying a certain residence constituting the community property belonging to the plaintiff and the defendant; that the defendant for some period of time had been occupying a garage situate on the same lot as the residence occupied by the plaintiff. It also appears that up until said date some litigation had been pending between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that the defendant had been enjoined from entering upon the residence occupied by the plaintiff. On the 1st day of September, 1923, the complaint alleges, the testimony in the transcript shows, and the court found, that the defendant went to the house occupied by the plaintiff, tore open the screen door, broke the fastening hook thereon, entered the building and room occupied by the plaintiff, and removed from the front bedroom the furniture which the plaintiff was then and had theretofore been using in connection with her occupancy of the house referred to; that at the same time the defendant disconnected the gas range that plaintiff had used while occupying said residence, removed the same from the house, and left plaintiff no means for preparing her meals, heating water, etc.; that the defendant, in entering said house, did so with the intention then and there to abandon the plaintiff and force her from his company, etc. The court further found that the defendant did not return to said residence on the 1st day of September, 1923, for the purpose or with the intention of peaceably and properly occupying said home as his natural and lawful right. The court further found the existence of the community property of the value of about $5,000 described in the complaint. The substance of the findings of the court is to the effect that the conduct of the defendant was such as to compel the plaintiff to leave the residence referred to, and that such conduct constituted desertion on the part of the defendant under the provisions of section 98 of the Civil Code.

[1] The contention made upon this appeal is not so much that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of the court that the defendant's conduct was such as to justify the plaintiff in leaving the residence referred to, but that there is no corroborating testimony. In the first place, attention may be called to the testimony of the plaintiff on cross-examination partly set out in the appellant's opening brief. After setting forth the acts of the defendant in relation to the defendant forcibly entering the house occupied by the plaintiff, and his acts and conduct toward her, the appellant's brief sets forth the following:

"When asked if she left her home after this, she testified as follows: 'Possibly I might have stayed there after that, I guess maybe three or four days. Nothing happened there all that time between Mr. Rutledge and me.'"

Basing his argument upon this excerpt of the testimony, it is argued that the plaintiff shows thereby that she was not afraid of the defendant, and that nothing that he had done had put her in fear of any bodily injury or such as to induce in the mind of the plaintiff apprehension as to any future misconduct on the part of the defendant. This excerpt from the testimony, however, whether intentionally or otherwise, omits the vital and significant portion thereof. The testimony of the plaintiff, from which this excerpt is lifted, is as follows:

"I was afraid of him when he first came to the door. After the police went away I went back to the house and I did stay there that night. Nothing happened because I got Yale locks put on the door that afternoon so I could stay locked in there. I locked myself in the room. Possibly I might have stayed there after that, I guess, maybe three or four days. Nothing happened there all that time between Mr. Rutledge and me. He could not get to me. If he was in, I was locked up when he was there. I could not stay in the house all that time, because I could not stay shut up in one room all the time. That was the only room I had to be in, that one room."

Comment is unnecessary. At the time the defendant forced his way into the premises occupied by the plaintiff, removed the plaintiff's belongings from the room that she had occupied, disconnected and took out the gas stove used by the plaintiff, and installed the stove used by himself and placed his own furniture in the bedroom from which he had removed the belongings of plaintiff, the defendant was assisted by two men who were called and examined and testified as to all of the acts testified to by the plaintiff, save and except as to the testimony of the plaintiff that defendant had seized her by the throat, which they did not see, and also pushed her over a slight railing. The defendant also testified upon the stand that at one time he did strike his wife; that his wife then drew a pistol upon him, and he did not ever strike her after that. The defendant also testified:

"I pushed her back. I just pushed her back. She kept trying to claw my eyes out; jumped on me like a tiger. I knew her point; I knew what she was up to; I just pushed her away. She caught hold of the banisters, stepped over; I think it was her dress being so narrow is what kind of threw her. She fell over; she fell down," etc.

There was considerable testimony as to the screams of the plaintiff and the noise made, which is wholly immaterial and need not be further referred to. The defendant, in his testimony, denied his intent to separate himself from the plaintiff or to drive the plaintiff from the premises, but this denial of intended desertion on the part of the defendant is rebutted by the following significant fact: On the 5th day of September, 1923, after a four days' trip from South Carolina, a daughter of the defendant by a different wife arrived in Los Angeles in response to a letter that she had received from the defendant notifying her to come to Los Angeles, as he intended to make a place for her in the house into which he entered on the 1st day of September, 1923. This conclusively shows that he intended to make a place for his daughter to keep house for him by forcibly ejecting the plaintiff therefrom. All of which sufficiently corroborates the testimony of the plaintiff as to the acts and conduct of the defendant. Such conduct brings this case also within the terms of section 104 of the Civil Code. We think the finding of the court that the plaintiff reasonably apprehended danger from the hands of the defendant, sufficiently sustained, and that the defendant's conduct justified the plaintiff in leaving and remaining away from the premises referred to, and that such conduct on the part of the defendant constituted, in law, desertion.

[2] Appellant also urges that the trial court erred herein in its interlocutory decree, and that in fact no interlocutory decree has been entered. The language used by the court is as follows:

"That an interlocutory decree of divorce should be granted the plaintiff, Rosa L. Rutledge, from the defendant, upon the grounds of desertion."

Section 131, Civil Code, reads:

"* * * If it determines that the divorce ought to be granted, an interlocutory judgment must be entered, declaring that the party in whose favor the court decides is entitled to a divorce."

While the language used by the trial court in its interlocutory decree does not follow the literal wording of section 131, Civil Code, we think it sufficiently definite to all intents and purposes to constitute an interlocutory decree establishing the right of the plaintiff to a divorce. No complaint is made as to that part of the decree settling the property rights of the parties to this action.

There appearing no reason why a new trial should be granted herein, the judgment is affirmed.

WESTLAKE MERCANTILE FINANCE CORPORATION v. MERRITT et al. ★
(Civ. 5754.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 27, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 23, 1928.

1. Bills and notes ⇨343—Indorsee's knowledge that negotiable instrument was given in consideration of unperformed executory agreement does not prevent holding in due course.

Knowledge that an instrument negotiable in form was given in consideration of an executory agreement which had not been performed does not deprive indorsee of the character of a bona fide holder in absence of notice of breach.

2. Bills and notes ⇨343—Indorsee receiving bills before breach was not deprived of character of bona fide holder by recital in bills that they were accepted in consideration of purchase of goods.

Recital in bills that "the obligation of acceptor arises out of the purchase of goods from the drawer" held not to deprive indorsee of character of bona fide holder where sales contract had not been broken at time of transfer of instruments.

3. Bills and notes ⇨165—Statement of transaction of negotiable instrument does not render unqualified promise to pay conditional (Civ. Code, § 3084).

Fact that an unqualified promise to pay a negotiable instrument is coupled with statement of the transaction which gave rise to the instrument does not render the promise conditional under Civ. Code, § 3084.

4. Bills and notes ⇨165—Right of bona fide purchaser of trade acceptances containing recital that acceptors' obligation arose from purchase of goods, "maturity" "being" in "conformity" with original terms of purchase, held not impaired as against acceptors by drawer's subsequent breach (Civ. Code, §§ 1641, 1644, 1654, 3084).

In action by bona fide purchaser against acceptor of trade acceptances, reciting that "the obligation of the acceptor hereof arises out of the purchase of goods from the drawer, maturity being in conformity with original terms of purchase," it was no defense to acceptors that drawer had subsequent to time of transfer of bills breached sales contract, since "maturity" referred to due dates of instruments as conforming with dates under original terms of purchase, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 1641, 1644, 1654, 3084; and the word "being" used in recital is equivalent to "which is," and "conformity" means "correspondence in form and manner, resemblance, agreement, harmony."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Be—Being; Conformity; Maturity.]

5. Appeal and error ⇨757(3)—Printing in appellant's brief of testimony as to circumstances of purchase of bills warranted review of finding that purchaser had notice of condition (Code Civ. Proc. § 953c).

Where appealing plaintiff printed in its opening brief material portions of the testimony of its witnesses respecting circumstances which attended purchase of bills sued on, there was a sufficient compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, requiring printing of portions of record on which appellant relies to permit review of finding of trial court that purchaser had notice that maturity of bills was conditional; rule that evidence must be printed being for convenience of court.

6. Appeal and error ⇨174—Objection to capacity of drawer or indorsee to sue cannot be urged for first time on appeal.

Question of capacity of drawer of bills to sue, or of right of indorsee of bills to maintain action thereon, must be raised by answer or objection at trial and cannot be urged for first time on appeal.

7. Appeal and error ⇨174—Objection of acceptors, sued by indorsee, that drawer doing business under fictitious name had not complied with statute, held not available for first time on appeal (Civ. Code, § 2466).

Objection that drawer of trade acceptances did business under fictitious name without having filed certificate with clerk as required by Civ. Code, § 2466, where not raised by answer or objection at trial in action by indorsee against acceptors, could not be urged on appeal.

8. Evidence ⇨594—Uncontradicted testimony of unimpeached witnesses cannot be disregarded.

Though credibility of witnesses is question for jury or trial court sitting as a jury, trier of fact is nevertheless bound by the presumption that witnesses speak the truth, and, in absence of contradictory evidence tending to impeach their credibility, their testimony cannot be disregarded.

9. Bills and notes ⇨337—Mere knowledge of facts putting prudent man on inquiry does not prevent transferee from being holder in due course (Civ. Code, § 3137).

Mere knowledge of facts sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry, without actual knowledge, or mere suspicion of infirmity or defect in title, does not prevent transferee of negotiable instrument from occupying position of holder in due course, unless circumstances or suspicions are so obvious as to indicate bad faith under Civ. Code, § 3137.

10. Bills and notes ⇨525—Evidence held insufficient to sustain finding that indorsee suing acceptors on trade acceptances had actual notice of condition of sales agreement subsequently breached by drawer (Civ. Code, § 3137).

In action by indorsee of trade acceptances against acceptors on acceptances stating transaction arose from sale of goods, evidence held insufficient to support finding that indorsee had notice or actual knowledge of condition contained in sales agreement providing for shipment of goods within specified time and permitting return under Civ. Code, § 3137, which conditions, or some of them, were subsequently broken by drawer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by the Westlake Mercantile Finance Corporation against Chas. A. Merritt and Chas. A. Parlier, individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Merritt & Parlier. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

George H. Woodruff and Woodruff, Musick, Pinney & Hartke, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Elmer D. Jensen, of San Jose (H. A. Blanchard, of San Jose, of counsel), for respondents.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from a judgment entered for the defendants in an action on two bills of exchange, called trade acceptances each for the sum of $420.

The bills were dated April 30, 1925, and were drawn on the defendants and accepted by them on the day they bore date. The instruments were drawn by Aristocrat Distributing Company, the name of this concern being affixed thereto by J. B. Vallen, were made payable on June 30, 1925, and July 30, 1925, respectively, and each contained the following recital:

"The obligation of the acceptor hereof arises out of the purchase of goods from the drawer, maturity being in conformity with original terms of purchase."

And defendants denied that the bills were due or payable, and alleged as a defense to each cause of action that maturity "was and is dependent upon conformity with the original terms of purchase, and * * * that the Aristocrat Distributing Company failed, refused, and neglected to perform the terms of purchase," and "that the Westlake Mercantile Finance Corporation, the plaintiff herein, and the assignee of said Aristocrat Distributing Company had notice that maturity of said bill of exchange was dependent upon conformity with the original terms of purchase."

The defendants conducted a mercantile business in San Jose, and the amounts for which the bills were drawn and accepted represented the price of certain washing machines which the drawer agreed to sell and deliver to the defendants. There was introduced in evidence over objection a written memorandum signed by the drawer and delivered to the defendants at the time the bills were accepted. This memorandum, by its terms which described the machines for the price of which the bills were accepted, granted to the defendants for the period of one year the sales right for Aristocrat washing machines, and contained the following provisions:

"Goods ordered below to be shipped at earliest convenience," and further "that if sufficient sales of above goods have not been made either in cash or time paper to cover amount of and before maturity of acceptances given herewith dated 90 and 120 days from date said dealer may return at end of agreement any of above goods remaining unsold on shipping instructions furnished at the time."

The defendants also testified that the drawer agreed to ship the machines within two weeks, to furnish salesmen and advertising matter, and conduct an advertising campaign to further the sale of the machines, all of which it failed to do. According to this testimony, the machines did not arrive in San Jose until about July 3, 1925, at which time defendants refused to accept delivery, and it was shown that the latter on June 29, 1925, by registered letter addressed to the drawer, which, owing to a change in the drawer's address, was not delivered by the postal authorities, attempted to notify the drawer of their election to rescind the order on the ground of delay in delivery.

According to the witnesses for the plaintiff, whose testimony was taken by deposition, the bills were indorsed by the drawer to plaintiff on May 4, 1925, the consideration paid therefor being the sum of $789.60, and, according to the same testimony, the purchase was made without knowledge or notice of any infirmity in the instrument. The testimony of these witnesses was not contradicted, nor were the witnesses cross-examined by the defendant.

The court found that it was agreed between the drawer and the defendants that the maturity of the bills would depend upon performance by the drawer of the original terms of purchase, that the latter had not performed, and that the plaintiff had actual notice at the time of the transfer of the bills that the maturity of both was dependent upon such performance by the drawer, and as conclusions of law therefrom that the bills were not due or payable, and that the plaintiff took the same subject to defenses.

The appeal was taken under the alternative method, and it is contended that the findings that the plaintiff had notice that the acceptances were conditional are unsupported.

It was not alleged or shown that the drawer at the time the agreement was made did not intend to perform, nor does the record disclose testimony which supports the conclusion that the indorsee had knowledge of the terms of the sales agreement or notice thereof other than the statement of the transaction contained in the recitals mentioned. Moreover, as shown by the testimony of defendants, no breach of agreement had occurred at the time the bills were indorsed to the plaintiff. The defendants contend, however, that the recitals were sufficient to put the indorsee on notice as to the provisions of the sales agreement, making the acceptances conditional, and that as a consequence the bills were not negotiable.

[1-3] Knowledge that an instrument negotiable in form was given in consideration of an executory agreement which has not been performed does not deprive an indorsee of the character of a bona fide holder in the absence of notice of a breach (Flood v. Petry, 1655 Cal. 309, 132 P. 256, 46 L. R. A. [N. S.] 861; Pratt v. Dittmer, 51 Cal. App. 512, 197 P. 365), which in the present case had not occurred at the time of the transfer; nor does the fact that an unqualified promise to pay is coupled with a statement of the transaction which gave rise to the instrument render the promise conditional (Civ. Code, § 3084; People's Bank v. Porter, 58 Cal. App. 41, 208 P. 200).

[4] It is clear that the recital that "the obligation of the acceptor arises out of the purchase of good from the drawer" was but a statement of a transaction which gave rise to the instrument, but defendants contend that the concluding portion, "maturity being in conformity with original term of purchase," meant that maturity should depend upon performance by the drawer of the terms of the sales agreement, and that this agreement by reference was made a part of the acceptances.

The word "being," the present participle of the verb "be," is equivalent to "which is" (Porter v. Ritchie, 32 Utah. 381, 91 P. 24, 27), and has been held to be sufficient as an averment of an existing fact (State v. Boncher, 59 Wis. 477, 18 N. W. 335; In re Nickodemus, 18 Fed. Cas. 222, No. 10,254), and the word "correspondence" means "correspondence in form and manner, resemblance, agreement harmony" (Webster's International Dictionary).

The language of a contract should be interpreted most strongly against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist, which is presumed to be the promisor (Civ. Code, § 1654), and in accordance with this rule it has been held that if a drawee intends to qualify or attach a condition to his acceptance he must do so distinctly and unmistakably, or his acceptance will be taken to be absolute (8 Cor. Jur., Bills and Notes, § 496, p. 323). In the present case the bills having provided definite dates of payment, viz., June 30, 1925, and July 30, 1925, the recitals when read with these provisions in accordance with the rule that contracts are to be construed as entireties (Civ. Code, § 1641), the words used being understood in their ordinary and popular sense (Civ. Code, § 1644), created no uncertainty as to when the bills should mature, but clearly referred to the due dates of the instruments as being the dates of maturity which conformed with the original terms of purchase.

It is urged by defendants that plaintiff has failed to print in its briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, as required by section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, the portions of the record upon which it relies in support of its contention that the finding of notice of the condition is unsupported, and, further, that it appears from the testimony that Aristocrat Distributing Company is a fictitious name under which J. D. Vallen was conducting his business, and it not being shown that the provisions of section 2466 of the Civil Code were complied with, the action cannot be maintained.

[5] In the following cases the rule requiring the evidence relied upon on appeal to be printed was construed as one for the convenience of the court (Oliver v. Robnett, 190 Cal. 51, 210 P. 408; Gibbons v. Yosemite Lumber Co., 190 Cal. 168, 211 P. 4; People v. Woods, 190 Cal. 513, 519, 213 P. 951; O'Connor v. West Sacramento Co., 189 Cal. 7, 207 P. 527), and in the present case plaintiff having printed in its opening brief the material portions of the testimony of its witnesses respecting the circumstances attending the purchase of the bills, there is a sufficient compliance with the rule.

[6, 7] The question of the capacity of the drawer to sue, or of the right of plaintiff as indorsee of the bills to maintain an action thereon, was not raised by the answer or by objection at the trial, and cannot be urged for the first time on appeal. Sweeney v. Stanford, 67 Cal. 635, 8 P. 444; Phillips v. Goldtree, 74 Cal. 151, 13 P. 313, 15 P. 451; Cook v. Fowler, 101 Cal. 89, 35 P. 431; Quan Wye v. Chin Lin Hee, 123 Cal. 185, 55 P. 783; Paff v. Ottinger, 32 Cal. App. 439, 163 P. 230; Helms v. Pacific Mill Co., 57 Cal. App. 442, 205 P. 708.

[8, 9] Defendants also contend that regardless of whether a condition was expressed in the acceptances the court was not bound to believe that the bills were purchased without notice of the condition contained in the sales agreement, and that the evidence justified a finding to the contrary. While the credibility of the witnesses is a question for the jury or the trial court sitting as a jury, they are nevertheless bound by the presumption that witnesses speak the truth, and in the absence of contradictory evidence or other facts tending to impeach their credibility their testimony cannot be disregarded. It is the declared law of the state that to constitute notice of an infirmity in an instrument negotiable in form or a defect in the title of the person negotiating the same, the person to whom it is negotiated must have actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith (Civ. Code, § 3137), and mere knowledge of facts sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry without actual knowledge or mere suspicion of infirmity or defect in the title does not preclude the transferee from occupying the position of a holder in due course unless the circumstances or suspicions are so cogent and obvious that to remain passive would amount to bad faith (Popp v. Exchange Bank, 189 Cal. 296, 208 P. 113; Goodale v. Thorne, 199 Cal. 307, 249 P. 11).

[10] In the present case the bills were purchased for the plaintiff by its president, whose employment, however, had ceased before his deposition was taken. This witness testified to the circumstances under which the purchase was made and the price paid, and no finding contrary to his testimony as to the amount was made. Moreover, nothing appears from his situation or the character of his testimony which would reasonably support a finding that his testimony was influenced by improper motives, nor was his account of the transaction inherently improbable. The same applies to the testimony of all the witnesses for the plaintiff, none of whom were cross-examined or contradicted, nor was the court for the reason above stated in a position to find against their credibility from the manner in which they testified.

The above testimony—and the record contains no other evidence respecting the transaction between the drawer and the plaintiff—was insufficient to support a finding that the latter had notice in fact or knowledge of the condition contained in the sales agreement, and it is manifest that the finding of notice was based upon the view of the trial court that the recitals in the bills were constructive notice of the condition.

It being our conclusion that the bills with the acceptances were in terms unconditional, and that the finding of notice was unsupported, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

RYDELL v. BEVERLY HILLS PRINTING & PUBLISHING CO. (Civ. 4972.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 31, 1927.

1. Landlord and tenant §290(5)—Defendant in unlawful detainer action cannot set up counterclaim or file cross-complaint.

In an unlawful detainer suit, a defendant cannot set up in his answer a counterclaim or file a cross-complaint, even though it arises out of subject-matter of original action.

2. Pleading §365(1)—Notice of motion to strike portion of answer designated as affirmative defense held sufficiently specific.

A notice of motion to strike portion of answer specifically designating such portion the "affirmative defense" was sufficiently specific to authorize court to order such portion stricken out.

3. Pleading §365(1)—Defendant proceeding to trial thereby waived right to notice of ruling on motion to strike portion of answer.

Defendant waived any right to notice of ruling on motion to strike portion of answer by thereafter proceeding with trial, and, where he failed to be present when case was called after due notice, he cannot thereafter be heard to complain.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Action by J. A. Rydell against the Beverly Hills Printing & Publishing Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Porter C. Blackburn, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Oscar W. Houge, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HAHN, Justice pro tem. This appeal arises out of an action of unlawful detainer. The complaint is drafted in the usual form. Among other things, it is alleged that the defendant entered into possession of the property of the plaintiff under an oral agreement, by the terms of which the defendant agreed to pay on the first of each month as rental the sum of $100. It is further alleged that at the time of the filing of the action there remained unpaid on account of rental for the month of July the sum of $74.50, and the full monthly rental of $100 for the month of August; also that a written notice demanding payment of the overdue rent within three days, or possession of the premises, had been given to the defendant, and that the defendant refused to either pay the rental or deliver up the possession of the premises.

An answer and cross-complaint were filed by the defendant. In his answer he does not deny the terms of the lease or that he entered possession or was in possession of the demised premises, but he does deny that there was due or unpaid the amounts charged in the complaint, and he further denies that he owes anything as rental to the plaintiff for the months of July and August. The answer further, under a heading designated as an "affirmative defense," alleges that the defendant suffered damage in the sum of $193.80, by reason of the malicious interference by the plaintiff with defendant's possession of the demised premises, and more particularly alleges that this damage was suffered by the defendant because the plaintiff had made malicious and unbecoming remarks concerning the defendant to a subtenant who, perchance, by reason of having heard the remarks of the plaintiff, left the premises, failing to pay the rental he owed therefor, and failing also to pay other obligations he owed the defendant.

The cross-complaint contained two counts, the first charging in substance that, while the defendant was in lawful possession of the premises under the lease agreement referred to in the complaint, the plaintiff unlawfully trespassed upon the demised premises, at divers and numerous times, and that by "uttering unbecoming, slanderous, and libelous remarks about the cross-complainant addressed to his help and to the subtenants of cross-complainant," the cross-complainant was damaged in the sum of $500. The second count sets forth substantially the same matter contained in the answer under the special defense designated as "affirmative defense."

The plaintiff moved to strike the entire answer from the files, for the reason that it was not filed within the time provided in the order of the court overruling defendant's demurrer to the complaint. In the same motion plaintiff moved to strike the counterclaim from the answer (which is the portion designated under the heading "affirmative defense"), and also moved to strike the entire cross-complaint; this motion being based on the contention that the matter contained in the counterclaim and cross-complaint constituted "improper and illegal pleading," and, further, that the same did not constitute a defense to the cause of action set forth in the complaint. The motions were duly argued and submitted, and subsequently, on September 19th, the court made the following minute order:

"Motion to strike answer and cross-complaint, heretofore submitted, the court now orders that the order striking out all of line 29, page 1, to line 23, inclusive, of page 2, of answer and cross-complaint, granted; otherwise motion is denied."

On September 23d a formal order signed by the judge was filed, which contains the following language:

"It is hereby ordered that the cross-complaint of the Beverly Hills Printing & Publishing Company a corporation, defendant, and the counterclaim of the said defendant be and the same are hereby stricken out as an improper pleading in an answer to unlawful detainer, but the plaintiff's motion to strike defendant's answer from the files is hereby denied."

No notice of the court's ruling on the motions to strike appears to have been given to the defendant or his counsel, but on October 15th notice that the trial of the cause was set for the 31st was duly served on defendant's counsel.

On October 31st, the date set for trial, according to appellant's brief, "the parties proceeded to trial, and, upon appearing in court, the defendant learned for the first time that the court had stricken out part of his answer and all of his cross-complaint in response to plaintiff's motion to strike out the answer and cross-complaint." In the recitals in the judgment signed and filed in the case, it is declared that the plaintiff and his attorney were present, but that no one appeared for the defendant at the time of the trial.

The grounds urged by appellant for a reversal of the judgment may be considered under three heads: First, That the court erred in granting plaintiff's motion to strike out the portion of the answer designated as a counterclaim, and the cross-complaint; second, that the court under the notice of motion to strike did not have a right to strike out a portion of the answer; and, third, That the court had no right to proceed to hear the case and render judgment, because no notice of ruling on the motion to strike had been given to the defendant.

[1] As to the first point, it has been so firmly settled that in an unlawful detainer suit a defendant may not set up in his answer a counterclaim or file a cross-complaint, that discussion of this contention would hardly seem necessary. Appellant concedes this to be the rule in California, but contends that there is an exception to the rule where the alleged wrong, which the defendant desires to set up as a counterclaim or cross-complaint, arises out of the subject-matter of the original action. This contention has been definitely held untenable in the case of Knight v. Black, 19 Cal. App. 527, 126 P. 516. In that case, an action of unlawful detainer, the defendant undertook to set up as a part of his defense a claim for damages which he alleged he suffered because of the acts of the plaintiff in attempting to evict him from the demised premises. The court in that case used the following language in sustaining the ruling of the trial court in refusing to permit the defendant to offer the defense in a cross-complaint:

"It is the law in this state and also in other jurisdictions where unlawful detainer statutes are in terms or essentially similar to our own that a counterclaim or cross-complaint of any kind or character is neither proper nor permissible in actions in unlawful detainer."

The cases cited by appellant in support of his contention are actions in ejectment, and, of course, are not applicable to the instant case.

[2] The next point urged by appellant is that, inasmuch as the notice of motion to strike did not specifically specify any particular words, or designate any particular lines in the answer, the court had no authority to grant the motion to strike portions of the answer. We find no merit in this contention, for the notice of motion specifically designates as the portion the plaintiff would move to be stricken out of the answer the "affirmative defense" therein contained. This is what the court ordered stricken out and designated as the counterclaim in its formal order.

[3] The next and last point urged by appellant is equally without merit. If we may assume that the defendant and his counsel were present at the time of the trial, as stated in appellant's brief, it nowhere appears in the record that any objection was made to proceeding with the taking of evidence in the case, and it will be presumed, assuming defendant was entitled to notice of ruling on the motion to strike, that he waived any right to such notice by proceeding with the trial. If, on the other hand, we are to accept the recital in the judgment that the dependant was not present in person or by counsel when the case was called, the appellant is in no stronger position, because he had due notice of the trial, and, if he saw fit to ignore his day in court and there present his objections to proceeding with the trial, he cannot now be heard to complain. In closing, it may be pertinent to suggest that we have had no authorities submitted to us that would support appellant's contention that he was deprived of any substantial right in not having notice of sustaining the motion to strike served upon him.

As we find no error in the record, it is hereby ordered that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

FORREST v. ROYAL INS. CO. et al.
(Civ. 3241.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1927.

1. Principal and agent ⇨22(1), 122(1)—Declarations of agent are not proof of agency or authority.

Declarations of alleged agent as to existence of agency and extent of his authority are not proof of agency.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1051(1)—Admission of insurance adjuster's declarations as to his agency for insurer held harmless, where agency was otherwise established.

The admission of improper evidence consisting of insurance adjuster's declarations as to his agency for insurer and extent of his authority was harmless, where facts stated thereby were established by other evidence.

3. Insurance ⇨92—Evidence held to show that person adjusting damages to recovered stolen automobile was insurer's adjuster, with authority to represent insurer.

Evidence held to show that person purporting to act as insurance company's adjuster in adjusting damages to insured's automobile, found after it had been stolen, was company's adjuster, with authority to act for it, and that garage man who repaired the car was justified in delivering it to insured owner on adjuster's promise that company would mail garage keeper a check for the repairs.

4. Novation ⇨12—That automobile repairer permitted insurer's adjuster to take possession of automobile on his promise that insurer would mail check for repairs held not to show intent to release insured owner from liability (Civ. Code, §§ 1530, 1532, and § 1531, subd. 2).

That garage keeper permitted insurance adjuster to take possession of recovered stolen automobile after he made repairs thereon on adjuster's promise that insurer would mail a check for repairs held not to show the intent to release insured owner from liability for repairs and to substitute insurer, under Civ. Code, §§ 1530, 1532, and section 1531, subd. 2, as to novation.

5. Novation ⇨1, 12—Whether new agreement constitutes novation is question of intention, and must clearly appear (Civ. Code, § 1530, and § 1531, subd. 2).

Whether a new agreement amounts to a novation within Civ. Code, § 1530, and section 1531, subd. 2, is always a question of intention, and intention on the part of all parties that such agreement shall constitute a novation should clearly appear.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Sterling P. Forrest, Jr., against the Royal Insurance Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, and Leo C. Dunnell, of Richmond, for appellants.

H. Nelson French and Ralph H. Cowing, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

WEYAND, Justice pro tem. Appellant C. H. Spurlock, on or about October 16, 1923, insured his automobile with the Royal Insurance Company, which said company is also an appellant herein. This insurance was secured by said Spurlock through one Augustine N. Trainor, who was at said time acting as agent of said company at Fairfield, Solano county, Cal. While this insurance was in force and effect, the car of Spurlock was stolen from Spurlock and the same was thereafter found in Oakland, Cal., in a damaged condition. Appellant Spurlock reported the theft of the machine to the agent Trainor, and Trainor in turn reported the theft to the Royal Insurance Company. Spurlock requested of Trainor that the repairs that were necessary to put the automobile in the condition it was before the theft be made by Sterling P. Forrest, Jr., the respondent herein. Forrest's place of business was, however, in the city of Sacramento. Spurlock agreed to tow the automobile to Forrest's place of business in Sacramento. The insurance company, through Trainor, consented to this arrangement, and the injured machine was by Spurlock brought to the garage of plaintiff for repairs. In addition to the repairs that were caused by reason of the theft, Spurlock on his own account had some small repairs made and for which he paid on the day of the delivery of the automobile by Forrest to one B. W. McKay, whose connection with the affair will be now stated. According to the policy of insurance, it became the obligation of the insuring company to have the car repaired and placed in as good a condition as it was before the theft. When appellant Spurlock was informed that the machine was fully repaired and ready for delivery, he again went to the agent Trainor, and Trainor then instructed Spurlock to be in Sacramento at a certain hour next day to meet an adjuster, and Trainor, after a telephonic conversation with the general adjuster of the Royal Insurance Company in San Francisco, gave to Spurlock a slip of paper with the words, "Meet Mr. B. W. McKay, at 11 o'clock, at the Hupmobile Garage, Sacramento," written thereon. The evidence does not disclose that Spurlock ever knew or even saw this B. W. McKay until he went to Sacramento in obedience to the suggestions and directions of Trainor. At the appointed time, McKay proceeded to examine the repaired automobile, and he also examined the bill of charges. Spurlock then paid for his part of the garage bill, and McKay directed the plaintiff to deliver the machine to Spurlock, and stated that he (McKay) would have the insurance company pay to plaintiff the bill for the repairs that became necessary on account of the theft. The automobile was by the plaintiff delivered to the possession of McKay, who drove it out of plaintiff's garage and delivered it into the hands of Spurlock.

For some reason not made to appear the insurance company a few days later sent to Spurlock a check to pay for the damage this machine suffered. The check sent Spurlock was in the exact sum agreed by McKay as the amount the insurance company should pay to plaintiff. Spurlock cashed this check and gave to McKay a check on a Suisun bank signed by appellant, which McKay cashed, and thereafter left for parts unknown. Plaintiff's bill remains unpaid, and this action was instituted to compel payment. The appellant Royal Insurance Company now maintains that it is not liable for the bill of plaintiff. It contends that McKay had no right or authority to make any promises on the part of the company. That there is no legal proof in the record that McKay was an agent of the company. That they paid the amount of this bill to the party who held their policy, and they have the returned check showing that Spurlock received the money. Appellant Spurlock contends that he was relieved from the obligation because the Royal Insurance Company were substituted as debtors to the plaintiff when McKay made the promise that the insurance company would send plaintiff a check for the repair bill.

Plaintiff contends he is entitled to payment of the bill from both defendants. Plaintiff had judgment in the lower court, from which both defendants appeal. While the contentions of appellants are somewhat to cross purposes, yet they make common cause against the plaintiff, filing a joint brief herein.

[1-3] The only error claimed by appellant Royal Insurance Company is:

"That the court committed prejudicial error in admitting numerous declarations of Mr. McKay, from which the court concluded he was authorized to and did enter into the agreement with Mr. Forrest above mentioned."

If the trial court did conclude, solely from the declarations of McKay, that he was such agent and had such authority, unquestionably there was error. We cannot hold that the court did determine the question as to agency from the testimony of McKay. There was in the record much testimony from other sources that clearly indicated that McKay was an adjuster of this company. Spurlock was given the name of McKay as the adjuster for the company by Trainor, who was the agent through whom Spurlock effected this insurance. The general adjuster of the company, one Rea, gave to Trainor the name of this man McKay as adjuster. The check of the insurance company sent Spurlock was strangely made out in the exact sum McKay fixed as the amount the company should pay. Upon the taking of the evidence, some witnesses testified as to what McKay said during the transactions at the time of adjustment as to being an agent of the company, but we think it clearly appears that the trial court was not at all impressed with that testimony. At the very outset of the testimony the judge of the trial court, speaking of this matter said:

"As to telling anything that Mr. McKay told him as to the repairs to be done, and that the Royal Insurance Company would pay for them, he could testify to that, subject, of course, to a showing later on that Mr. McKay had the authority to make that statement."

Again, on this same subject, the court said:

"His statement that he was the agent is not the proof of agency."

In addition to what has been said above, one witness testified directly that Spurlock, a codefendant, introduced McKay to plaintiff as an adjuster for the Royal Insurance Company.

In California Jurisprudence, vol. 2, p. 1020, it is said:

"The admission of improper evidence is harmless where the fact thereby sought to be shown is otherwise fully and properly established by evidence which is unobjectionable."

A long line of California cases support this text. In McGowan v. Burg Bros., 59 Cal. App. 223, 210 P. 545, it was held that the testimony of the alleged agent as to his agency was harmless when the fact was proven otherwise.

As to the authority of McKay to make a promise for and on behalf of the insurance company that they would pay this bill, we are of the opinion that he had the power to make any and all promises or arrangements, to the end that the bill be paid, and as to how it should be paid, McKay was sent there, as the evidence shows, after the company received a request from their agent Trainor to send him. Their agent told Spurlock to be at the garage of plaintiff to meet an adjuster. Spurlock, as well as plaintiff, was interested in the adjustment of the claim for repairs. The promise of McKay that he would have the insurance company send plaintiff a check was the only logical thing that could be expected of McKay after adjusting the amount of the claim. It will be again noted that the company sent Spurlock a check for the exact amount McKay fixed as the amount the company should pay. In other words, they fully ratified every act of McKay, unless it be as to his promise that the check would be mailed to plaintiff. There was no testimony on the part of the defendant company that McKay did not have the authority he claimed. In Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Barnard (C. C. A.) 111 F. 702, as to the authority of an adjuster, the court said:

"An adjuster is empowered to settle the alleged loss. A settlement of the loss necessarily involves the exercise of the option to pay the damages sustained, or to rebuild or repair the building injured. The whole is always greater than and includes all its parts, and the authority to settle a loss includes the power to do any lawful act and to make any legal contract to fix the amount of and to discharge the liability. An adjuster of an insurance company authorized to settle an alleged loss has the power to determine its amount, and how, when, and where it shall be paid. * * *"

We therefore are of the opinion that plaintiff was justified in delivering the car to McKay upon his promise that the company would mail to plaintiff a check covering the amount sued for.

[4, 5] Appellant Spurlock claims there was a novation. His contention is that the plaintiff herein released him from the payment of this bill, and agreed to substitute in his place as the debtor the defendant company. Section 1530, Civil Code, defines novation as follows: "Novation is the substitution of a new obligation for an existing one." Section 1531, Civil Code, defines the manner in which novation is accomplished. In subdivision 2 of that section it is clearly stated that to accomplish a novation there must be the "intent" to release the old debtor. We cannot conclude that because the plaintiff permitted McKay to take possession of the car after its repair, upon his promise that the company would mail plaintiff a check, shows an intent to release Spurlock. Novation is proven by showing a meeting of the minds of the parties to the contract. The positive testimony of plaintiff is that he did not consent to a release of Spurlock, nor intend his release.

"Whether a new agreement amounts to a novation is always a question of intention; and intention on the part of all parties that such agreement should constitute a novation must clearly appear." Cal. Jur. vol. 20, p. 249.

"Novation is made by contract, and is subject to all the rules concerning contracts in general. Civ. Code, § 1532. As in the case of other contracts there must be competent parties and a mutuality of consent between them." 20 Cal. Jur. p. 247.

The trial court decided this point on the testimony before it, and that testimony was to the effect that plaintiff never agreed to nor intended any release of any claim as against Spurlock. We therefore conclude that the trial court was not in error in holding, as it did, upon this point.

There being no error of a prejudicial nature in the record, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

DREW et al. v. LINDSAY NAT. BANK et al.
(Civ. 3304.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1927.

1. Contracts  171(1)—Deposit securing lessee's performance of lease of olive packing house held not to secure performance of contract to purchase olives from growers owning majority of lessor corporation's stock.

Contract to make deposit with bank as security for lessee's performance of conditions of lease of olive packing house held to negative contention that deposit was also made as security for lessee's performance of contract to purchase olives from certain growers, though latter owned about two-thirds of lessor corporation's capital stock when lease and other contracts were executed; contracts with corporation and such growers being independent transactions.

2. Pleading  236(2)—Denial of leave to file fourth amended complaint during trial, commenced over year after filing of original complaint, held not abuse of discretion.

Where original complaint, filed over year before trial, in sellers' action for amount deposited by purchaser of olives as security for performance of lease of packing house, set forth in full addendum contract requiring deposit, and plaintiffs were permitted to file three amended complaints, it was not abuse of discretion to deny leave during trial to file fourth amended complaint alleging intent to make such contract part of purchase agreement and failure to do so because of mutual mistake.

3. Reformation of instruments  1—Equity court may reform contract, but cannot make new contract, nor add or substitute new parties.

While court of equity will reform contracts under many varying circumstances, it has no power to make a new contract, and can neither add additional parties, nor substitute other parties for those appearing on face of writing.

4. Landlord and tenant $\Rightarrow$ 184(2)—Burden was on defendants, denying allegation that rent was unpaid, to prove payment thereof.

Where answer denied allegation of complaint, in action for deposit made as security for lessee's performance of lease, that rent was unpaid for certain year, burden was on defendants to prove payment of such rental.

5. Limitation of actions $\Rightarrow$ 127(13)—Action for rent, nonpayment of which was first alleged in second amended complaint, filed over four years after termination of lease, held barred (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1).

Where plaintiffs, in action for deposit, made by one agreeing to purchase their olives as security for performance of lease of packing house, first alleged his failure to pay rent in second amended complaint, filed over four years after lessor's termination of lease, cause of action for such rent was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by A. M. Drew and others against the Lindsay National Bank and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 260 P. 372.

Feemster & Cleary, of Visalia, and A. M. Drew, of Fresno, for appellants.

D. E. Perkins, of Visalia, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. August 1, 1918, the plaintiffs and R. M. Carr entered into a written contract with defendant Mennillo, by the terms of which Mennillo agreed to purchase the olives grown by the other parties to the contract during the succeeding five years at an agreed price per ton therefor. The contract contained the following clause:

"It is understood and agreed that this contract is not to be binding upon the said first parties until it is indorsed by some person, or firm, or corporation as security for the carrying out of the covenants and conditions thereof by the said second party, or that a satisfactory surety bond is furnished that the said second party will carry out all of the covenants and conditions of the said lease and the said contract."

In pursuance of the provisions of the clause quoted and for the purpose of giving effect to the contract, Mennillo caused the following indorsement upon the contract to be executed by the Santa Barbara Olive Company, B. J. Ruddle, and C. R. Mennillo:

"The undersigned, for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar and other valuable considerations to — running, does hereby indorse this contract and guarantee the said second party will carry out all the terms, covenants and conditions thereof during the running of the lease and contract."

At the time of the execution of the contract first mentioned, the Lindsay Ripe Olive Company leased its olive packing house and equipment to Mennillo for a term of five years, at the semiannual rental of $390, payable in advance on the "1st day of August and the 1st day of February" of each year during the term. The lease contained the following provisions:

"It is understood * * * that the said second party will use the said building for the processing of olives purchased from the members and stockholders of the said first party according to the terms and conditions of the agreement of even date herewith and hereto attached and made a part hereof, and that the said olives of the said stockholders of this corporation aforesaid shall have the first right to delivery and acceptance at such packing house according to the aforesaid agreement. It is understood, however, that the said second party shall have the right to purchase other olives from other parties on such terms and conditions as he may make and that the same shall be processed in the said house and that he may also use the said house for the packing of fruit and vegetables when not needed for olive packing."

Neither party was able to produce the lease at the trial, but the court found, from conflicting evidence:

"That by the terms of said lease it was agreed that in case said F. A. Mennillo did not pay the annual rental at the time in the lease provided, that the lessors, by giving thirty days' notice in writing of such default, should have the right to re-enter said premises and remove all persons therefrom and repossess and enjoy said property."

September 18, 1918, the Lindsay Ripe Olive Company, as party of the first part, and defendant Mennillo, as party of the second part, executed an instrument which was attached to the contract of August 1, 1918, between plaintiffs and Mennillo, and which reads as follows:

"This addendum, made this 25th day of September, 1918, to that certain contract dated August 1, 1918, made by the Lindsay Ripe Olive Company, first party, with F. A. Mennillo, second party, wherein the said first party agrees to lease a certain olive packing house in the city of Lindsay to the said second party for the term of five years, and whereas the said second party was to give a bond or indorsers to the contract sufficient to satisfy the said first party that the said second party would carry out all the terms in accordance with the conditions of said agreement and of said lease, and whereas the said second party has failed to give such bond. It is now agreed that the said second party will deposit with the Lindsay National Bank in the form of a certificate of deposit, and that the said certificate of deposit shall remain in the possession of the said Lindsay National Bank during the running of the agreement, or to such subsequent time as shall hereafter be agreed upon between the parties hereto, the said sum of twenty-five hundred ($2,500.00) dollars, to be held as security by the said bank for the said first party to said agreement, that the said second party will carry out the covenants and conditions of the lease and the agreement required as aforesaid. * * * Should the said second party fail, neglect or refuse to carry out the provisions and conditions of the aforesaid contract the said sum of $2,500.00 shall be delivered to the said first party, or such proportion thereof as may be necessary to meet the liquidated damages incurred by any breach of said contract."

The sum of $2,500 was deposited in compliance with the terms of the agreement. Mennillo went into possession of the packing house and performed the covenants of the lease and of his contract to purchase plaintiffs' olives until the early part of the year 1920, when he disappeared and apparently abandoned the packing house and his business at Lindsay. It does not appear that he thereafter, at any time, asserted any right to use the premises or made any claim thereto. At the time of his departure, he was heavily indebted to the defendant bank. He assigned his stock of processed olives to the bank, and the bank thereafter sold the same and applied the proceeds thereof upon the indebtedness. After such application, however, his remaining indebtedness to the bank was in excess of $2,500. In an action thereafter brought, the bank recovered judgment against Mennillo for the balance of such indebtedness and caused the money deposited as aforesaid to be seized under a writ of execution and applied in partial satisfaction of the judgment.

About September 1, 1920, the Lindsay Ripe Olive Company re-entered into possession of the packing house. During the remainder of the time covered by the lease and the sales contract, the plaintiff and Carr were unable to sell their olives for the prices specified in the contract, and they sold them at lower prices. The court found that on September 1, 1920, Mennillo was in default in the payment of rent in the sum of $390. The uncontradicted evidence shows that he was in default in a larger sum. Drew testified that the sum of $800 was then due as rent. This testimony was doubtless based on his previous testimony that the lease provided for a monthly rental of $100. He later testified that the lease provided for a semiannual rental of $390. A simple computation, based on such testimony, shows that the unpaid rental on September 1, 1920, amounted to $520. The plaintiffs and Carr and the Lindsay Ripe Olive Company made demand on the defendant bank that said sum of $2,500, deposited with the bank, be paid over to them, but the bank refused to pay any part thereof to any of them. After making such demand, Carr and the Lindsay Ripe Olive Company "assigned and transferred unto plaintiffs herein all of their claim to and all of their right, title, and interest in the said $2,500." Thereafter this suit was brought to recover the amount of the deposit. Judgment was entered in favor of defendants for costs of suit, and the plaintiffs have appealed.

[1-3] Appellants contend that the deposit of $2,500 with the defendant bank was made as security for the performance by Mennillo of the terms of the sales contract as well as those of the lease. The addendum contract of September 25, 1918, is so certain and explicit in its terms as to furnish a complete answer to this contention. It is true that the plaintiffs and Carr owned about two-thirds of the capital stock of the Lindsay Ripe Olive Company at the time the lease and other contracts were executed, but it is not perceived that that fact is at all material. Mennillo's contract with the corporation and that with the plaintiffs and Carr were independent transactions. During the progress of the trial, the plaintiffs asked leave to amend their third amended complaint by alleging "that what was intended by the addendum was to make it a part of the purchase agreement"; that the failure to so provide in the addendum contract was due to the mutual mistake of the parties thereto. In asking leave to so amend, counsel for the plaintiffs stated that the granting of the request "will * * * necessitate the continuance of the case, and we are perfectly willing to take care of any expenses that have been incurred up to this time as a condition to the continuance." The court denied the motion. The trial was commenced in March, 1925. The original complaint, filed January 4, 1924, set forth the addendum contract in full. The plaintiffs were permitted to file three amended complaints. Under the circumstances stated, it was not an abuse of discretion to deny leave to file a fourth amended complaint. Further, the plaintiffs were not parties to the addendum contract. "While a court of equity will reform contracts under many varying circumstances, still it has no power to make a new contract. * * * A court of equity can neither add additional parties nor substitute other parties for those already appearing upon the face of the writing." Mabb v. Merriam, 129 Cal. 663, 664, 62 P. 212; Wilson v. Shea, 194 Cal. 653, 657, 229 P. 945.

[4] As stated, the court found that on September 1, 1920, Mennillo was "in default in the payment of said rent to the extent of $390," while the uncontradicted evidence shows that he was then in default in the sum of $520. The complaint alleges that the rent was unpaid for the year 1920, and the answer denies that allegation. The burden was on defendants to prove payment of such rental if made. 20 Cal. Jur. 952. It must be taken as established, therefore, that Mennillo paid no rent for the year 1920.

[5] The court found that plaintiffs' cause of action for such rent was "barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure," to the effect that an action upon a contract in writing must be commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued. The transcript on appeal does not show when the action was commenced, but the third amended complaint, upon which the action was tried, was filed March 27, 1925, more than four years after the last payment of rent to which the lessor was entitled became due, the lessor, as stated, having terminated the lease about September 1, 1920. The original complaint and certified copies of the first and second amended complaints have been forwarded to the clerk of this court, but an examination of the allegations thereof shows that the original complaint and the first amended complaint were based solely on Mennillo's alleged breach of his agreement to purchase the plaintiffs' olives. In the second amended complaint, filed December 15, 1924, the plaintiffs, for the first time, alleged that Mennillo had failed to pay rent; the allegation therein being "that said defendant in the year 1920 * * * wholly failed and refused to pay the rental under said lease." The finding, therefore, that plaintiffs' cause of action was barred is fully sustained by the evidence, and, since this finding is decisive of the case, it is unnecessary to consider appellants' contention that the court erred in finding that they conspired together to oust Mennillo from the premises further than to say that no evidence has been discovered which tends to support that finding.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Criminal law ⇨1159(5)—Conviction of robbery on sufficient evidence of prosecuting witnesses who identified defendant will not be disturbed.

Conviction of robbery on sufficient testimony of prosecuting witnesses who had opportunity to observe and properly identify defendant will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. Criminal law ⇨1159(2)—Appellate tribunal should not disturb verdict unless it is unsupported by evidence, or testimony is improbable or false.

An appellate tribunal should not disturb verdict in criminal case unless there is no evidence to support it, or unless testimony is so improbable or false as to be incredible.

3. Criminal law ⇨404(4)—In robbery prosecution, admitting testimony of circumstances of defendant's arrest and gun and flash-light found on ground at time held not error.

Where defendant was arrested 17 days after alleged robbery by officers when he suddenly appeared in the street ahead of them, admitting testimony as to circumstances of arrest and admitting in evidence gun, belt, holster, and flash-light which fell to the ground when he threw up his hands held not error, since gun and flash-light so found, though not positively identified as ones used in the robbery, were similar to those used therein.

4. Criminal law ⇨369(2)—Admitting testimony of circumstances of arrest and gun and flash-light found held not error because it aroused suspicion of other robberies.

Where defendant was arrested by officer 17 days after alleged robbery, admitting circumstances of arrest and gun and flash-light which fell from his person at the time held not error, because it might arouse suspicion that defendant had committed or was about to commit a separate offense.

5. Criminal law ⇨1169(1)—Admitting evidence of defendant's arrest in possession of gun and flash-light similar to those used in robbery held not prejudicial (Pen. Code, § 836, subsec. 3).

Under Pen. Code, § 836, subsec. 3, authorizing officers to arrest without warrant when they had reasonable cause to believe defendant guilty of felony, admitting in robbery prosecution evidence of fact of defendant's arrest in addition to circumstances of defendant's arrest without warrant by officers in the street and gun and flash-light which dropped from his person at the time, and which were similar to those used in the robbery, was not prejudicial error since defendant's denial of possession of the gun evidenced consciousness of guilt.

6. Criminal law ⇨1036(1)—Defendant, not objecting to testimony as to arrest, could not predicate error on admission of such testimony.

Where defendant in robbery prosecution did not object to question to witness as to whether he was officer who made arrest and as to conversation when witness arrested defendant, defendant could not predicate error on admission of evidence.

7. Criminal law ⇨1171(3)—Remark of deputy district attorney during cross-examination that it sounded as though prosecuting witness was being tried held not prejudicial.

In robbery prosecution, remark of deputy district attorney during cross-examination of prosecuting witness that examination had run to most inordinate length, and that it sounded to him as though witness was on trial rather than defendant, held not prejudicial to defendant.

8. Criminal law ⇨1171(1)—Argument of deputy district attorney in answer to argument of defendant's attorney held not prejudicial nor reflection on defendant's counsel.

In robbery prosecution, statement of deputy district attorney in argument that defendant's attorney did not give him much to answer because he went too far afield, and that defendant's attorney was not justified in stating that he would not willfully withhold anything jury ought to know and would not try to save a criminal from being convicted, though inappropriate, held not prejudicial error, being his interpretation of testimony, and not a reflection on defendant's counsel.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Henry A. Stoerker was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Rosecrans & Emme, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendant was convicted and sentenced for the crime of robbery and appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. The principal basis of his complaint is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, although he does assign as error the admission of certain testimony, and also charges misconduct on the part of the district attorney.

[1, 2] At about 9:45 p. m. on the evening of May 2, 1927, two of the people's witnesses, Arthur M. Taube and Emma A. Kropp, were held up and robbed of $118 in money and a diamond ring worth approximately $500 as they sat in an automobile on the top of a hill at City Terrace, just east of Los Angeles. Some minutes after they had stopped their machine at this point a man threw a flash-light in their faces, pointed an automatic gun at Taube with the command to "Stick 'em up; I mean business." Taube was first searched for money; then the robber went to the other side of the car and took Miss Kropp's ring; came back again to Taube's side of the automobile, and after another search secured the remainder of the latter's money. Both of these witnesses identified the defendant as the man, and picked him out of five or six other men at the county jail as being the one who committed the robbery, as did also the witness Miss Goldie Blasman. The last-named witness was driving out Ramona boulevard with a Mr. Rosen on the evening of April 27, 1927, returning home from "some doings" at the schoolhouse, at about 10 p. m., when Mr. Rosen stopped to fix the muffler. As he did so a man approached with flash-light and gun and ordered Rosen to "stick 'em up." He took Mr. Rosen's watch and money, and then took from Miss Blasman's finger her diamond ring and also took her wrist watch.

On the night of May 14, 1927, at 11:30 p. m., Deputy Sheriffs E. J. Small and C. H. Pearson were driving east on Manchester avenue, when suddenly the defendant appeared in the middle of the street ahead of them. The officers turned a spot light on him and as they did so he threw his hands under the overcoat he was wearing and something fell to the ground, which later it developed was a 38-caliber gun fully loaded, with belt and holster. A few feet from here the officers also picked up a flash-light. The witnesses Taube, Miss Kropp, and Miss Blasman all testified that the gun and flash-light were similar in appearance to those used by the man who held them up. The defendant introduced evidence of an alibi, which, had it been believed by the jury, would have amply supported a verdict of not guilty.

The defendant also introduced testimony to show that there was no moon on the night of May 2, 1927, and since the lights of the automobile in which Mr. Taube and Miss Kropp were sitting were turned off, and since there were no street lights in the immediate vicinity, counsel argues that these two witnesses could not identify the defendant. However, the witness Taube said he thought that the defendant laid the flash-light down, and that sometimes the light reflected on the defendant. Miss Kropp testified that the defendant stooped over a bit to take the ring off her finger. There were street lights in the neighborhood where Rosen and Miss Blasman were robbed. Under all these circumstances we can see nothing inherently improbable in the testimony of these witnesses or any of them. And while counsel have called our attention to instances where the identification has later proved to be erroneous, it is so well settled that the appellate tribunal should not disturb the verdict of the jury unless there is no evidence to support it, or unless the testimony is so improbable or false as to be incredible, that citation of authority is unnecessary. The objection which appellant has to this evidence involves a weighing of it. The jury evidently believed the testimony of witnesses for the prosecution, and that their opportunity for observation was sufficient to enable them to properly identify the defendant. We must content ourselves with this determination.

[3] The appellant asserts that the testimony regarding the circumstances of the arrest should not have been admitted, nor should the articles found at that time, to wit, the gun, belt, holster, and flash-light have been admitted. It is true that these articles were not positively identified as being used at the time of the robberies, but we think the objection counsel has to this evidence runs to its weight rather than to its admissibility. In the case of People v. Hale (Cal. App.) 254 P. 639, pistols found in defendant's room to which others had access five days after the robbery, were received, not as proof that pistols were used in committing the robbery, but for "the purpose of showing that the defendants had the means of doing what the witnesses had charged them with doing." The testimony in this case is that the gun and flash-light were similar to those used in the robberies. The rule of law, under the circumstances, is satisfied sufficiently to warrant their introduction in evidence. People v. Ferdinand, 194 Cal. 555, 229 P. 341.

Necessarily, these articles might not have been introduced, had the witnesses not been allowed to detail the circumstances under which they obtained possession of them. A similar contention was urged in the case of People v. Mar Gin Suie, 11 Cal. App. 42, 103 P. 951. There the officer arrested the defendant a few days after the homicide complained of and found a couple of pistols in his room. These guns were claimed by a woman occupant of the room. In reply to the objection the court said:

"As a part of the original case of the people, we think the testimony with regard to the finding of the pistols was proper as furnishing a circumstance bearing upon the charge, whether directly or remotely was for the jury to decide in view of all the other facts and circumstances. * * * The woman declared. * * * it is true, and in fact claimed ownership of everything in the room; but the people not only had the right to the testimony complained of, but to prove every other circumstance occurring at the time of the arrest of the defendant having any bearing on the crime for which the defendant was arrested or upon his conduct when arrested. [Italics ours.] His actions when the detective inquired as to the ownership of the pistols were proper to be described to the jury, and in that connection it was proper enough to receive the testimony relative to the finding of the pistols."

It must be borne in mind that there was testimony that the robberies were committed with pistol and flash-light, identified in the manner already discussed. Under this situation the statement of the court in People v. McDowell, 64 Cal. 467, 3 P. 124, is pertinent:

"The testimony of the witness Hicks as to the slung-shot in the possession of the defendant, and as to the statement made by defendant, was relevant and material, because there was evidence tending to show that the wounds inflicted upon the person of deceased might have been caused by such an implement."

See, also, People v. Szafcsur, 161 Cal. 636, 119 P. 1083. So, too, in the case of People v. Winthrop, 118 Cal. 85-91, 50 P. 390, 392, it is said:

"Nor was there any error in admitting evidence of the circumstances attending defendant's arrest, including his declarations at the time, or in permitting the prosecution to introduce the various articles taken from his person. This evidence showed that when arrested, shortly after the commission of the offense, defendant was apparently hiding in the city of Oakland away from the place of his residence; that he was in disguise, and passing under an assumed name, and denied his identity to the arresting officer; that among the articles found upon his person were several newspaper clippings containing accounts of the robbery and a recently purchased railroad ticket from Oakland to Mojave. Such evidence is always admitted as having a tendency greater or less, according to the circumstances, to establish guilt."

[4] It can scarcely be suggested that the possession of newspaper clippings and a railroad ticket can be of greater probative value than the possession of the gun and flash-light, or that hiding away in Oakland in disguise has more weight than being in the middle of the street armed as was defendant at 11:30 at night, or that denial of identity is entitled to greater consideration than denial of the possession of the gun which the officers saw him drop. It is suggested, however, that these circumstances were prejudicial because they had a tendency to arouse suspicion that defendant had committed or was about to commit a separate offense. Were this so, it would not render testimony, otherwise admissible, inadmissible. In People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 652, 663, 49 P. 1049, 1052 (40 L. R. A. 269), it is said:

"Touching the suggestion of counsel that the evidence tended to prove the attempt of defendant to commit another offense, and thus to prejudice him in the eyes of the jury, the case of People v. Walters, 98 Cal. 138 [32 P. 864], is in point. In that case the court, speaking through Beatty, C. J., said: 'It is true that in trying a person charged with one offense, it is ordinarily inadmissible to offer proof of another and distinct offense, but this, only because the proof of a distinct offense has ordinarily no tendency to establish the offense charged. But whenever the case is such that proof of one crime tends to prove any fact material in the trial of another, such proof is admissible, and the fact that it may tend to prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jurors is no ground for its exclusion. These remarks are applicable to any case in which two persons are murdered or assaulted at the same time, and as part of the same transaction.' See, also, People v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 668 [4 P. 1144, 6 P. 700, 846]; People v. Smith, 106 Cal. 74, 82 [39 P. 40]; People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 460, 468 [44 P. 186]; People v. Bidleman, 104 Cal. 613 [38 P. 502]; People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 517 [36 P. 16]; People v. Walters, supra; People v. McGilver, 67 Cal. 55 [7 P. 49]; People v. Sanders, 114 Cal. 216 [46 P. 153]; Moore v. United States, 150 U. S. 57 [14 S. Ct. 26, 37 L. Ed. 996]; People v. Harris, 136 N. Y. 423 [33 N. E. 65]; Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 35 Am. Commonwealth*, 99 Pa. 388, 399; Id., 106 Pa. 477, 496, 51 Am. Rep. 534; Swan v. Commonwealth, 104 Pa. 218, 220; State v. Myers, 82 Mo. 558, 52 Am. Rep. 389. These cases are quoted and cited to meet not only the foregoing point, but many other objections offered in the trial of the cause, which space will not permit us to discuss at length, among which may be mentioned objections to evidence of the death of Borden, the bullet and cot offered in evidence, the taking of the pistols and clothing at Fullerton, etc. * * *

[5] Perhaps the situation here would have been attended by greater clarity had the witness been asked to detail the circumstances of the finding of the pistol and flash-light—rather than to have called for the circumstance of the arrest, but the result is the same except possibly that there is added the testimony that defendant was arrested.

However, we fail to see how this additional element could have prejudiced the defendant, even though it be admitted that it was not material. He was found in possession of articles resembling those which had been used in the robberies committed. His actions were suspicious—his denial of the possession of the pistol when he had in fact been seen to drop it evidenced a consciousness of guilt. Subsection 3 of section 836 of the Penal Code authorized the officers to make an arrest without warrant when they had reasonable cause to believe the defendant guilty of a felony which had in fact been committed. His arrest on suspicion was further justified by his subsequent identification.

[6] There is another reason why appellant is precluded of complaint in this particular. Before the officer was questioned concerning the circumstances of the arrest he was asked this question: "Were you the arresting officer in this case?" to which no objection was interposed and which the witness answered in the affirmative. Later he was asked: "At the time you arrested the defendant did you have a conversation with him? Did you ask him any question?" Again no objection was interposed, and the answer was that the witness' partner did. Still later and after all the circumstances had been developed it first appeared that the defendant was arrested "on suspicion of robbery," whether of the offenses charged not appearing. This last question and answer covering this testimony were withdrawn by the district attorney, but still no motion was made by defendant to strike out the former testimony given that defendant was arrested. It is a fundamental rule requiring no authority to support it that appellant cannot complain of testimony which has been admitted without objection. The circumstances of finding the items were properly admitted, and no objection to testimony concerning the arrest was had. Hence no error can be predicated upon the admission of either element.

[7] Error is predicated upon remarks of the deputy district attorney during the cross-examination of the witness Taube when he said:

"Objected as improper, although I will say frankly that I do not blame a witness in view of the heat of the day and the nature of the examination for getting peevish. I think the examination has run to a most inordinate length. I am willing for the attorney to elicit anything that is of advantage to the defendant if he can, but it sounds to me almost that the witness is on trial rather than the defendant."

[8] We find nothing which would prejudice the rights of the defendant in this statement, but if we had there is nothing to indicate that counsel attempted to have the error corrected, or that, had he made such effort, it would have been fruitless. In fact, in another instance where a question was asked by the deputy district attorney which counsel deemed to be prejudicial, the court, upon request, very promptly instructed the jury to disregard it. The last statement of the district attorney assigned as misconduct made during the course of his argument is as follows:

"As I said before, he did not give me much to answer, because he went too far afield. That is, not if I stick to the evidence. He did say that he would not willfully withhold anything that he thought you ought to know, and he would not try to save a criminal from being convicted, and I think I am justified in saying, from what I know about the case, that counsel was not justified in making that statement to you. I just want to recall, while we are talking about the law and generalities. * * *

Appellant deems this a reflection upon defendant's counsel, and perhaps the deputy district attorney might have chosen other words to express his sentiment which would have been a bit more appropriate, but so far as the effect upon the jury is concerned, the statement simply means that two gentlemen differed concerning the interpretation to be put upon the testimony. We fail to find any prejudicial error.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Code, § 4252, as re-enacted in St. 1925, p. 71, providing for salary for county assessor, was untenable, since section 4252 must read in connection with section 4290, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1323, providing fee for assessor for collecting tax on unsecured personal property, unless otherwise provided, and, when read together, there was no room left for operation of this rule, since section 4252 merely fixed salary, and section 4290 declared additional compensation.

3. Taxation —310—Provision in statute held not to deprive assessor of right to fees granted by statute subsequently enacted (Pol. Code, § 1857, as amended by St. 1893, p. 264, and § 4290, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1323).

In mandamus proceedings by county against county assessor to compel return of sum retained by him as fees for collection of tax on unsecured personal property under Pol. Code, § 4290, and section 1857, which provides taxes collected for school purposes are not subject to fees for assessment, was without weight, since latest amendment to section 1857 was in 1893 (St. 1893, p. 264), and the latest amendment of section 4290 was in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 1323), and must be considered as controlling provision as subsequent expression of lawmaking power on same subject.

Petition for writ of mandate by the County of Ventura to be directed to Jasper Barry to compel payment of sum retained by defendant for his own use. Writ denied.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. (259 P. 764).

James C. Hollingsworth, Dist. Atty., of Ventura, for petitioner.

Robert M. Clarke, Clarke & Bowker, and Walter E. Barry, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Petition for writ of mandate directing and compelling respondent, as assessor of the county of Ventura, to pay to H. R. Vandelinder, as treasurer of said county, the sum of $8.85 now retained by said respondent for his own use, as 6 per cent. of the sum of $147.60 collected by him as taxes on unsecured personal property within the said county belonging to Star Petroleum Company, a corporation.

The question is whether or not respondent, as assessor of Ventura county, is entitled to collect fees in accordance with the provisions of section 4290 of the Political Code, that is, retaining 6 per cent. of the total amount collected by him as such assessor as unsecured taxes levied upon personal property taxed within the said county.

Respondent's contention is that said section 4290 authorizes such retention of fees by him; that said section is the general law applicable to all cases where there is no special provision to the contrary in existence; that

202 Cal. 550

VENTURA COUNTY v. BARRY, County Assessor. (L. A. 9940.)★

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 8, 1927.

Rehearing Denied with Modification Jan. 5, 1928.

1. Taxation —310—Where general provision in statute was contravened by exception, held, on removal of exception, general provision, which was but in abeyance, governed (Pol. Code, § 4252, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1210, and § 4290, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1323).

Where assessor of Ventura county retained sum as fees for collecting tax on unsecured personal property within county, in accordance with Pol. Code, § 4290, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1323, and county contended that section 4252, as amended by St. 1923, p. 1210, repealed such provision in section 4290, by providing no commissions be retained, held, that language in section 4290, "unless in this title otherwise provided," was general, and applied to all cases not otherwise provided for, and that the amendment of section 4252 (St. 1923, p. 1210), did not repeal such provision, but was an exception, and section 4290 only remained in abeyance until conflicting provision of section 4252 was removed by re-enactment (St. 1925, p. 71), when it became operative again.

2. Taxation —316—"Expressio unius est exclusio alterius" held not applicable, where one salary statute was not restrictive and another granted additional fees (Pol. Code, § 4252 as re-enacted by St. 1925, p. 71, and § 4290, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1323).

In mandamus proceeding by county against assessor to compel return of sum retained as fees, contention that rule of "expressio unius est exclusio alterius" was applicable to Pol.

section 4252 of the Political Code is the special provision relating to the county of Ventura; and that, inasmuch as there is no inhibition in said section 4252 against the retention of said fees, the provision of section 4290 authorizing retention is applicable to him.

After a most careful research among the statutes and decisions, including an independent investigation upon our part, we are constrained to conclude that respondent is correct in his contention, and under the law as it is now written he has the right to retain such percentage. The question presented is purely one of statutory construction.

Section 4290, as it existed on the 22d day of June, 1923, and as it now exists, in so far as material to this controversy, was and is as follows:

"The salaries and fees provided in this title shall be in full compensation for all services of every kind and description rendered by the officers named in this title either as officers or ex-officio officers, their deputies and assistants, unless in this title otherwise provided, and all deputies employed shall be paid by their principals out of the salaries provided in this title, unless in this title otherwise provided:

"Assessor. Provided and except, that the assessor shall be entitled to receive and retain for his own use, unless in this title otherwise provided, six per cent. on personal property tax collected by him, as authorized by section three thousand eight hundred twenty, and fifteen per cent. of all amounts collected by him for poll taxes, and road poll taxes, and also five dollars per hundred names of persons returned by him as subject to military duty, as provided in section one thousand nine hundred one. * * *

On the said 22d day of June, 1923, section 4252 of the Political Code, after providing for salaries for the assessor and his deputies, was amended, and contained the following clause (Stats. 1923, p. 1210):

"All commissions or fees now or hereafter allowed by law shall be paid into the county treasury and no compensation shall be allowed the assessor for preparing the military roll of a county of this class."

However, by the statutes of 1925 (page 71) said section 4252 was again re-enacted with the above language omitted.

It is the contention of petitioner that the enactment of 1923 repealed, in so far as the county of Ventura was concerned, said section 4290, relating to retention of percentages on unsecured personal property taxes collected by the assessor, and that the subsequent omission or repeal of the above-quoted language by the act of 1925, did not serve to re-enact the repealed provisions of section 4290. In this contention petitioner calls to his aid section 328 of the Political Code, which reads as follows:

"No act or part of an act, repealed by another act of the Legislature, is revived by the repeal of the repealing act without express words reviving such repealed act or part of an act."

This section of the Code is undoubtedly effective in all cases meeting the test therein provided for. It applies to implied repeals as well as express repeals. County of Yolo v. Colgan, 132 Cal. 265, 276, 64 P. 403, 84 Am. St. Rep. 41.

The real question presented, however, is whether or not the 1923 provision of section 4252 did repeal expressly or by necessary implication any portion of said section 4290. It may here well be noted that section 4290 is a substantial duplicate of section 215 of the County Government Act of 1897 (Stats. 1897, p. 572), which latter section in turn was a substantial re-enactment of section 216 of the County Government Act of 1893 (Stats. 1893, p. 507). It may also here be noted that section 4252 of the Political Code, now applicable to Ventura county, is but a re-enactment of what was formerly section 4259 of said Code, which in turn was a substantial duplicate of section 187 of the County Government Act of 1897 (Stats. 1897, p. 543), which in turn was a substantial re-enactment of section 192 of the County Government Act of 1893 (Stats. 1893, p. 463).

In other words, these two Code sections have been side by side in the legislation of this state respecting this subject for more than 30 years. The clause substantially as above quoted as a part of the act of 1923 has existed continuously since 1913 (Stats. 1913, pp. 1177, 1178-1179), and was continued in the re-enactments of that section in 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 224), 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 127), and 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 678). In other words, from 1893 to 1913, a period of 20 years, the assessor of Ventura county was entitled under the law to collect percentage fees. From 1913 to 1923, a period of 10 years, he was denied that privilege. In 1925 said clause, as above stated, was omitted from the re-enactment of said section, and we can see no escape from the conclusion that the assessor of Ventura county is again entitled to resume the right to collect this percentage and retain it for his own use.

If each enactment of section 4252 and its forerunner, section 4259, from the year 1913 to the year 1923, was a repeal of section 4290, and each re-enactment of 4290 was in turn a repeal of section 4252, then each of these sections has been at least twice repealed.

[1] We think that petitioner has misconceived the principle of statutory construction applicable to this situation. In the first place, it is plain that these two statutes are in pari materia. It is also plain that there is no inherent antagonism between them, for section 4290 contains the significant language "unless in this title otherwise provided." In other words, the general section, 4290, is to apply in all cases not "otherwise provided" for in some other section of the same title, and where otherwise provided for the general law is not repealed, but remains in abeyance only.

The rule of law applicable to this situation is well stated as follows:

"The statutory rule against the revival of a statute by the repeal of a repealing act relates to absolute repeals, and not to cases where a statute is left in force and all that is done in the way of repeal is to except certain cases from its operation. In such cases the statute does not need to be revived, for it remains in force, and the exception being taken away, the statute is afterwards to be applied without the exception. * * *" 25 R. C. L. 934.

The rule has again been stated by the annotator (Ann. Cas. 1918B, p. 284) in a note in the case of Manchester Tp. Supervisors v. Wayne County Commissioners, 257 Pa. 442, 101 A. 736, where the following language is used:

"A statute abrogating the common-law rule as to the revival of an act by the repeal of the repealing act, has no application where the effect of an act is not to abrogate entirely a former act but merely to withdraw from the operation of the earlier act a portion of the cases included within its terms, leaving the earlier act still in force except as to the cases specifically provided for by the later one. Under such circumstances the repeal of the later act has the effect of again bringing the cases provided for by it within the operation of the original act."

The principle is again stated in Ex parte Williamson, 116 Wash. 560, 565, 200 P. 329, 331, as follows:

"It is argued, however, that this conclusion leaves the matter where it was before; that the act operated to suspend the general statutes in so far as it conflicted with them, and that these statutes are not revived by the suspension of the suspensatory act. But the rule is otherwise. The rule against the revival of a statute by the repeal of a repealing statute relates to absolute repeals only, and not to instances where the statute is left in force, and all that is done in the way of repeal is to except certain cases from its operation. In such instances the original statute does not need to be revived, for it remains in force, and, the exception being taken away, the statute is to be applied without the exception."

In the case of Pepin Tp. v. Sage (C. C. A.) 129 F. 657 (note, Ann. Cas. 1918B, p. 285); it appeared that a statute defining the boundaries of a township and city was nullified by the enactment of a statute placing a part of the territory within the limits of a village. It was claimed that, under the Minnesota constitutional provision prohibiting the revival of a repealed statute by the repeal of the repealing act, the statute was not revived by the repeal of the village act. Applying the exception as set out above, the court said:

"We think these provisions are not applicable to the act dissolving the village. Originally the township and city included the territory in question, and the special acts which placed it within the village contain no reference whatever to the township or city, or to their boundary lines, or to the statutes defining them. The statutes creating the township and the city were not at any time repealed, but were left in force. The township and the city were not at any time extinguished, but remained in existence under the operation of those statutes. The effect of the special acts creating the village and defining its boundaries was to except the territory covered by it from the township and the city and from the operation of the statutes creating them. Subject to that exception, the legislative will, as at all times registered and expressed in living, operative, and valid statutes—not enactments entirely repealed, either expressly or by implication—placed this territory in the township and city. When the special acts which by implication put that exception upon these statutes were repealed, the exception was at an end. These statutes and their definition of the boundaries of the township and city were then operative as if there had been no exception. They did not need to be revived because they had not been repealed."

The principle is likewise recognized in 23 Cal. Jur. § 100, p. 718, as follows:

"A general statute, controlled in some of its provisions by a subsequent special statute, is revived by amendment of the latter, intended to give effect to the former. And in cases of conflict between a general and special act, which results in an implied repeal of certain provisions of the former, the subsequent repeal of the latter act may operate to revive the provisions of the general act."

The case of People v. Hunt, 41 Cal. 435, itself furnishes an illustration of the difference between the rule here announced and the cases covered by section 328 of the Political Code. This principle is also recognized in the case of People v. Phoenix, 6 Cal. 92, and Smith v. Mathews, 155 Cal. 752, 103 P. 199. That the two sections of the Code in question are not repugnant to each other as they now read, nor as they formerly read, is implied in the statement of the court found in County of Sacramento v. Pfund, 165 Cal. 84, 88, 130 P. 1041, 1042, as follows:

"Section 4235 merely fixes the compensation and leaves section 4290 to declare what additional compensation may be received and what is forbidden."

Section 4235 referred to is a section in all respects similar to section 4252 here under consideration. See, also, Alameda County v. Dalton, 148 Cal. 246, 248, 82 P. 1050.

[2] The above conclusions dispose of the contention that the rule of "expressio unius est exclusio alterius" should be made applicable to section 4252, which has for its provision the following language:

"In counties of the twenty-third class the county officers shall receive as compensation for the services required of them by law or by virtue of their offices the following salaries, fees and expenses, to wit. * * *"

As above noted, section 4252 must be read in connection with section 4290, and, when they are read together, there is no room left for the operation of this rule.

[3] Neither can any weight be given to section 1857 of the Political Code, which provides, respecting taxes collected for school purposes, that the assessor shall not have fees or compensation for assessing, collecting, or receiving the same. The latest amendment to section 1857 was in 1893. Stats. 1893, p. 264. The latest amendment and re-enactment of section 4290 was, as we have noted, in 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 1323). As the latter re-enactment is a subsequent expression of the lawmaking power on this same subject, it must be given control over the provisions of the earlier section, and no authority need be cited to sustain this rule.

We can take no notice of the contention that the county assessor of Ventura county during this and subsequent fiscal years may, on account of the conditions pertaining in that county, collect a large amount of taxes, and thereby secure for himself unusual compensation for performing the duties of his office. It is, however, consoling to think that, for every dollar the assessor gets, the county treasury will receive approximately $16. It has been the custom throughout the state for perhaps 40 years to allow these commissions to assessors, and such policy has no doubt been a wise one, for by so doing large amounts of taxes have been secured for the treasury, which but for this incentive might well have been lost to it.

The application for mandate is therefore denied.

We concur: SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. GLASSELL et al.
(L. A. 9871.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 4, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ☞110—Order denying motion for new trial is nonappealable.

Order denying defendants' motion for new trial, after judgment in condemnation proceedings, is nonappealable.

2. Appeal and error ☞870(6)—Order denying motion for new trial may be considered on appeal from judgment.

Action of court in condemnation proceedings in denying defendants' motion for new trial, after judgment, may be properly considered on appeal from the judgment.

3. Eminent domain ☞167(4)—Statutory authority authorizing condemnation proceedings for public park purposes must be strictly pursued (Park and Playground Act, as amended).

Proceedings under the Park and Playground Act, as amended (St. 1909, p. 1066; St. 1913,

p. 414; St. 1921, p. 349), to assess and collect any outlay necessary to establishment of parks and playgrounds, are in invitum, and statutory authority must be strictly pursued, and every condition or other prerequisite to the exercise of jurisdiction be observed, especially every requisite of statute having semblance of benefit to landowner.

4. Eminent domain ☞180—Notice required by law authorizing condemnation of property for public park purposes is necessary prerequisite to acquiring jurisdiction (Park and Playground Act, § 9, as amended by St. 1913, p. 418, § 4).

In proceeding under the Park and Playground Act, as amended (St. 1909, p. 1066; St. 1913, p. 414; St. 1921, p. 349), to condemn property for public park purposes, notice provided for under section 9 of the act, as amended by St. 1913, p. 418, § 4, held necessary to acquirement of jurisdiction to make and enter decree fixing award to property owners.

5. Evidence ☞83(6)—Presumption that clerk gave proper notice in condemnation proceedings will not be indulged in case of direct attack on judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15; Park and Playground Act, as amended).

Presumption will not be indulged under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15, that official duty has been performed by clerk pursuant to decree in condemnation proceedings under the Park and Playground Act, as amended (St. 1909, p. 1066; St. 1913, p. 414; St. 1921, p. 349), reciting that due and legal notice of time and place had been given, where attack on judgment by defendants therein is a direct, and not a collateral, attack.

6. Appeal and error ☞934(1)—Though uncontradicted presumptions favor correctness of judgment, facts may be shown on direct attack, and judgment itself reversed or modified.

All presumptions, uncontradicted by, or inconsistent with, record, are in favor of correctness of judgment, but in case of direct attack the true facts may be shown, and judgment itself on appeal may be reversed or modified.

7. Appeal and error ☞840(1)—Appellate court, on direct attack on judgment, may appeal to record for facts.

Where there is a direct attack on judgment, appellate court may appeal to record, including the bill of exceptions for the facts.

8. Judgment ☞518—Seasonable motion to vacate judgment is direct attack.

Even a motion to vacate judgment, if seasonably made, is a direct attack thereon.

9. Eminent domain ☞184—Personal notice to property owners and appearance to contest award held not waiver of necessity of notice required under law authorizing proceeding to condemn land for public parks (Park and Playground Act, § 9, as amended by St. 1913, p. 418, § 4).

Personal notice to owners of property to be taken for public park purposes under Park and Playground Act, as amended (St. 1909, p. 1066; St. 1913, p. 414; St. 1921, p. 349), together with appearance to contest award of referees and introduction of evidence before the court, held not a waiver of necessity of notice required by section 9 of the act as amended by St. 1913, p. 418, § 4, since object of proceeding was not alone to fix value of property taken, but also to establish basis of tax demanding that other property owners of district who were to bear the burden be heard.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. M. Jamison, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the City of Los Angeles against Andrew Glassell, Una E. G. Moss, Louis A. Clarke, and M. E. Latham and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants named appeal. Appeal from order denying the motion for a new trial dismissed, and decree appealed from reversed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeals, 255 P. 209.

J. E. Hannon, B. R. Berlin, and Ernest U. Schroeter, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Donald M. Keith, and Leslie K. Floyd, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This is an action brought by the city of Los Angeles under the Park and Playground Act, as amended (Stats. 1909, p. 1066, Stats. 1913, p. 414, Stats. 1921, p. 349), to condemn 40 lots in the Torthorwald tract No. 1, in said city, for public park purposes. Several separate answers were filed by the various defendants, alleging ownership of the property, and claiming compensation for the taking thereof. Referees were appointed by the court to fix the compensation to be allowed defendants. Upon the filing of the report of the referees, defendants named above filed exceptions thereto, whereupon the matter was heard before the superior court, and the court made findings increasing the compensation nearly 50 per cent. over that allowed by the referees.

[1, 2] A motion for a new trial, supported by affidavits, was regularly made and denied. No counter affidavits were filed putting in issue the matters set forth in the affidavits of the moving parties. An interlocutory judgment of condemnation was entered accordingly, but the defendants mentioned, still being dissatisfied with the awards as to them, took this appeal from so much of the judgment as affected their respective interests. Said defendants attempted also to appeal from the order denying their motion for new trial. Such order in a case of this character is nonappealable (Heine Piano Co. v. Bloomer, 183 Cal. 398, 191 P. 900, and cases there cited), and need not be further considered. But the action of the court in denying motion for new trial may be properly considered on appeal from the judgment.

Upon further consideration of this cause we find ourselves in accord with the conclusion of the learned District Court of Appeal to the effect that the interlocutory judgment entered herein must be reversed, but we prefer to base our conclusion upon slightly different reasoning.

[3] It requires no citation of authority upon the proposition that eminent domain proceedings are in invitum, and the same may be said of proceedings to assess and collect any outlay necessary to the establishment of parks and playgrounds under the act here involved:

"* * * And the statutory authority (must) be strictly pursued, and every condition or other prerequisite to the exercise of jurisdiction be observed, especially every requisite of the statute having the semblance of benefit to the landowner. * * *" 20 Corpus Juris, pp. 882, 883.

Appellants question the validity of the proceedings upon several different grounds. The most important one, and the only one that need be here considered, is the contention that, after the assessment district had been formed, the eminent domain action pursuant to ordinance of the mayor and city council instituted, jury trial waived, and after appointment of referees, hearing before them and filing of their report, the city clerk failed to comply with the provisions of section 9 of said Act of 1909 as amended in 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 418), in that he failed to give to those persons not parties to the action, who were property owners in said district, and hence interested in the improvement, notice of the time and place of the hearing before the court upon the report of said referees. So much of the provision in question as is here involved is as follows:

"Notice of the time and place of said hearing must, at least ten days before the time so appointed, be served on all the other parties, except defendants whose default has been entered. The plaintiff, or any defendant who has answered, may file exceptions in writing to said report, specifying the grounds upon which such exceptions are based, at any time within not less than one day prior to the hearing; and any such party so filing exceptions to said report, may appear at the hearing of said report and contest the same. In addition to the notice hereinbefore provided, the clerk of the court must give notice of the filing of said report, and of the time and place appointed for the hearing of the same, to all persons owning or having an interest in any property, included within the assessment district for said improvement described in the ordinance of intention, by causing said notice last mentioned to be published for five days in a daily newspaper published and circulated in the city; or, if there be no such daily newspaper, then by two insertions in a weekly newspaper so published and circulated. Any publication of such notice shall commence at least ten days before the time appointed for the hearing of the report. Said notice shall require all persons owning or having an interest in any property included within said assessment district for said improvement to intervene in said action, and file, in the office of the clerk of said court, his exceptions in writing to said report, if any he has, specifying the grounds upon which such exceptions are based. Said notice shall also contain a description of the said assessment district as set forth in the ordinance of intention. At any time within not less than one day prior to the hearing, any person not a party to the action, owning or having an interest in any property included within said assessment district, may intervene in the action, and file his exceptions in writing to said report, specifying the grounds upon which such exceptions are based; and any such person so intervening may appear and contest the said report, and introduce evidence in support of such exceptions." Stats. 1913, pp. 418, 419, § 4.

[4] A consideration of the foregoing provision leaves no doubt that the giving of this notice as above provided is necessary to the acquirement of jurisdiction to make and enter a decree fixing the award to the property owners whose lands are to be taken. This is true because the award made by such decree is the basis for the assessment against the property of the district of the necessary taxes to meet and liquidate the expense of the improvement. This statute in reality makes the property owners of the district parties to the eminent domain proceedings.

[5] Respondent, however, in answer to this contention, points out that the decree recites:

"And it appearing to the court that due and legal notice of the time and place fixed for the hearing of said report had been duly made and given as required by law, * * *"

—and contends that we must therefore indulge the presumption that his official duty was performed by the clerk (Code Civ. Proc., § 1963, subd. 15), which presumption will suffice in lieu of proof that the step required by the statute was really taken. But respondent overlooks the fact that this is a direct, and not a collateral, attack upon the judgment. The record discloses a motion for a new trial supported by affidavits attacking and putting in issue directly the failure of the record to show proof of jurisdiction in this respect. In the preparation of the record the absence of this proof is made the subject of a specification of the insufficiency of the evidence. No counter showing of any kind was made at any time on this issue. In fact, the bill of exceptions contains this recital:

"No proof was made or filed in said cause that said notice had ever been published by the clerk, as required by subdivision IX of the Park and Playground Act, under which such proceedings were commenced."

We must therefore assume it to be a fact that said notice was not published.

Section 30 of said Act of 1909 (Stats. 1909,

p. 1074), by implication, at least, acknowledges that jurisdiction cannot be obtained without the giving of this notice, for in it we find the following language:

"No publication or notice other than that provided in this act shall be necessary to give validity to any proceedings had hereunder."

[6] Section 31 of said act provides the manner of proving the publication of said notice, and makes applicable thereto section 2010 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is plain that the presumption that official duty has been performed does not enter into this situation.

It is quite true that "all presumptions not contradicted by or inconsistent with the record are in favor of the correctness of the judgment" (Lyons v. Roach, 84 Cal. 27, 29, 23 P. 1026), but it is also true that "the main difference between collateral and direct attacks is, that in the former the record alone can be inspected, and is conclusively presumed to be correct; while on direct attack the true facts may be shown, and thus the judgment itself on appeal may be reversed or modified" (Lyons v. Roach, supra, page 30 [23 P. 1026]). See, also, to the same effect, Kahn v. Matthai, 115 Cal. 689, 47 P. 698.

[7, 8] Here we have a direct attack, and we may appeal to the record, including the bill of exceptions, for the facts. Woods v. Hyde, 64 Cal. App. 433, 436, 222 P. 168, 15 Cal. Jur. § 139, p. 46. Even a motion to vacate the judgment, if seasonably made, is a direct attack. In re Dahnke, 64 Cal. App. 555, 560, 222 P. 381; Norton v. Atchison, etc., Co., 97 Cal. 388, 30 P. 585, 32 P. 452, 33 Am. St. Rep. 198; Estate of Elkerenkotter, 126 Cal. 54, 58 P. 370.

The cases relied upon by respondent, such as Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391; Young v. Red Fork Levee Dist., 124 Ark. 61, 186 S. W. 604; Hamilton County v. Chase (Iowa) 152 N. W. 580, and Dunlap v. Board of Com'rs, 85 Okl. 295, 205 P. 1100, are not in point, for, as above stated, in each of these cases the attack was collateral and not direct, and, of course, all intendments in such case are in favor of the validity of the judgment, and the recitals therein will be taken as conclusive. This rule has no saving power whatsoever for the failure to take a jurisdictional step in an action where this issue is directly presented in the case itself.

[9] Finally, respondent asserts that personal notice to appellants, their appearance to contest the award of the referees, and their introduction of evidence before the court, was a waiver of the necessity for the giving of such notice. If the rights of appellants as persons interested in the property to be taken were alone involved, this contention would be unanswerable. But, as above pointed out, the object of this proceeding was not alone to fix the value to appellants of their property taken, but also to establish legally the basis of the tax that should be imposed upon the property of the district to defray the expense of the improvement. It is due process of law under the statute that demands opportunity for the property owners of the district, who are to bear the burden, to be heard. In this aspect of the question the appearance of the property owners whose lands are being taken, not only does not suffice, but their interests may well be adverse to the interests of the district as a whole. The case of Harrington v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 185, 228 P. 15, relied upon by respondent, recognizes the distinction between jurisdiction of the subject-matter, which cannot be conferred by consent, and jurisdiction of the person, which may be so conferred after jurisdiction of the subject-matter has attached. The dual purpose of the award is overlooked by respondent.

Cases involving situations similar to that of the case at bar and with a similar conclusion to the one here announced are County of Sutter v. McGriff, 130 Cal. 124, 62 P. 412; Cook v. Manasquan, 80 N. J. Law, 206, 76 A. 310; Taylor v. Todd, 48 Mo. App. 550; Crawford v. Frio County (Tex. Civ. App.) 153 S. W. 388; In re Buffalo, 78 N. Y. 362; Mitchell v. Ills. & St. L. R. & Coal Co., 68 Ill. 286; Detroit, etc., v. Hamtramck Highway Comm., 34 Mich. 36; In re Washington Park, 52 N. Y. 131; Wayne v. Caldwell, 1 S. D. 483, 47 N. W. 547, 36 Am. St. Rep. 750.

Several other serious questions are urged, but we do not feel called upon to pause to discuss them, as they are so apparent that they are not likely to recur in further proceedings.

The appeal from the order denying motion for a new trial is dismissed, and the decree appealed from is reversed.

203 Cal. 1

SOBELMAN et al. v. MAIER et al.
(L. A. 8501.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1927.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1039(4)—Reference to wrong contract in complaint did not result in prejudicial injury, in view of defendants' admissions in answer and on trial.

Where complaint alleged sales contract of July 14, 1922, and set forth as part of said contract a written agreement dated June 23, 1922, and alleged, in paragraph 2, terms of contract and that defendants failed to comply with terms of agreement in failing to purchase more than 923,300 shells or ice cream cones and 770 cans, and defendants' answer admitted contract to purchase as alleged in paragraph 2 and that only 923,300 shells and 770 cans were accepted and paid for, defendants suffered no prejudicial injury by reference to July contract.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1039(2)—Where evidence showed later contract was made to strengthen defendants' position under earlier contract, no harm resulted to defendants because of plaintiffs' reliance on later contract in suit.

In action for damages for breach of contract whereby defendants agreed to buy certain number of ice cream cones and cans during specified periods covering one year, where evidence showed that provisions of July contract were for benefit of defendants and such contract was result of their efforts to strengthen their position under original June contract, no harm resulted to them on account of plaintiffs' reliance upon July contract.

3. Parties ⇨15—Party not signing but having interest in contract was proper party plaintiff to action for damages for its breach.

Party not signing original sales contract with defendant, but having interest therein and signing later contract between parties, was proper party to action for damages for breach of contract.

4. Appeal and error ⇨187(2)—Complaint that one was not proper party could not be made on appeal in absence of special demurrer.

Complaint that one was not proper party could not be made on appeal in absence of special demurrer to complaint on that ground.

5. Sales ⇨89—Defendants' acts in securing another contract authorized finding that performance of original sales contract was held in abeyance by mutual agreement awaiting execution of later contract.

That defendants were dissatisfied with provisions of original sales contract and were active in securing later contract, and that parties continued doing business with each other after date of second contract, authorized court's finding that by mutual consent plaintiffs did not furnish, and defendants did not buy, stipulated number of ice cream cones from certain date to date of execution of second contract.

6. Sales ⇨111—Sellers did not waive claim for damages for breach of contract to date of notice by serving notice on buyers of termination.

Sellers did not waive claim for damages for breach of defendants' contract to purchase specified number of ice cream cones and cans up to date of notice by serving notice that buyers had breached contract and that on that account termination was declared, but expressly stating their election to hold buyers responsible in damages.

7. Contracts ⇨271—One injured by breach of contract may treat contract as rescinded, keep contract alive, or treat repudiation as putting end to contract and sue for lost profits.

One who has been injured by breach of contract may treat contract as rescinded and recover upon quantum meruit so far as he has performed, or he may keep contract alive for benefit of both parties, being at all times ready and able to perform, or he may treat repudiation as putting an end to contract for all purposes of performance, and sue for profits he would have realized if he had not been prevented from performing.

8. Appeal and error ⚡1033(9)—Where facts would have justified larger award, defendants could not complain of award or lack of evidence supporting it.

In action for damages for breach of contract whereby defendants agreed to buy specified number of ice cream cones and cans, where lost profit on number of ice cream cones and cans refused would have sustained much larger award than was made by court, defendants could not complain of award or of lack of evidence to support it.

9. Contracts ⚡314—Damages ⚡40(2)—Where breach of contract makes performance by plaintiff impossible, he may decline to proceed and recover profits lost.

Where breach of contract renders it impossible for the other party to perform, he may decline to proceed in performance and sue for damages, in which case he may recover all loss occasioned by breach, including profits he would have made if contract had been performed.

10. Appeal and error ⚡1010(1)—Sufficiency of proof of profits lost from breach of contract should have been addressed to trial court, where evidence warranted court's finding.

Defendants' criticism directed against sufficiency of proof of net profits from sale of articles lost as result of defendant buyers' breach of contract was matter which should have been addressed to trial court who passed on weight of testimony, where evidence warranted court's finding.

11. Damages ⚡6—One cannot avoid liability for breach of contract because amount of detriment is difficult to prove.

Where a defendant breaches a contract, law does not hold him faultless because of difficulties that arise in proving exact amount of detriment caused by him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Action for damages for breach of contract by William A. Sobelman and another against Ed. R. Maier and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Edward F. Wehrle and Anderson & Anderson, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Goodwin J. Knight, Thomas Reynolds, and Schweitzer & Hutton, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. This is an action for damages for breach of a contract wherein plaintiffs agreed to manufacture, furnish, and sell to defendants certain specialties protected by letters patent, and defendants were to receive and accept same in certain amounts and at certain times and to pay for them as prescribed, which specialties were to be used in the making of an article of commerce known as "Cold Dogs." Plaintiffs had judgment, and defendants have appealed. They have but little to urge as to the merits of plaintiffs' claims against them. Nevertheless they have urged much of a highly technical nature in other respects and this necessitates a special reference to the pleadings, evidence, and findings.

The complaint alleges that on the 14th day of July, 1922, plaintiffs entered into a certain written contract with defendants, together with Choco-Ice Company, a Minnesota corporation, which contract is set forth in full. It is executed by plaintiff Sobelman, as first party, plaintiff Rowe as third party, and the above company as fourth party, but is unexecuted by defendants as second parties. Also set forth in full in said complaint as a part of the above-mentioned contract and referred to therein is a written agreement as above mentioned dated June 23, 1922, between plaintiff Sobelman and defendants. This agreement is duly executed and provides for the purchase by defendants of stipulated numbers of ice cream cones and cans during specified periods covering one year, with renewal privilege, at agreed prices, and for the sale thereof by plaintiff Sobelman, he being the sole licensee of Choco-Ice Company for exclusive manufacture and sale in all United States territory west of the Rocky Mountains of said so-called chocolate-coated ice cream cones or shells and cans or containers for use in filling them.

It developed that plaintiff Sobelman was not the owner of the patent for said cones and cans nor of the license for their exclusive sale in the territory mentioned, but derived all his rights in the subject-matter of the contract from a certain document dated April 29, 1922, executed to him and also to plaintiff Rowe by Choco-Ice Company, the real patentee or licensee of the patentee. Said document of April 29, 1922, is not set forth in the complaint, but was introduced in evidence on trial of the cause. After execution of the contract of June 23, 1922, defendants required plaintiff Sobelman to produce the document showing his authority in the premises. This he did, securing a copy of said writing of April 29, 1922, and immediately thereafter, in order to satisfy defendants and prevent any misunderstanding, the contract of July 14, 1922, was drafted and executed as first above set forth. The purpose of said contract was to define the rights of the respective parties under the various agreements and to assure defendants in some of the covenants in their favor in said contract of June 23, 1922. It contains also plaintiff

Rowe's ratification of the agreement of June 23, 1922, in so far as his interests are affected thereby, and likewise the Choco-Ice Company's ratification thereof. It further provides for a slightly different division of profits and for a certain method of accounting, all to the distinct advantage and benefit of defendants.

After setting forth said agreement of July 14, 1922, the complaint further alleges, in paragraph II thereof, that by its terms defendants agreed to purchase from plaintiffs 50,000 cones per day or 300,000 per week; 1,000 cans immediately upon execution of the contract, and 800 cans per month from July 1, 1922, to October 1, 1922, and agreed to pay for said cones at the rate of $12.50 per thousand and for said cans at the rate of $7 each; that defendants failed to comply with or conform to the terms and conditions of said agreement, in that they failed to purchase more than 923,300 shells up to September 12, 1922, and only purchased 770 cans; that plaintiffs were at all times ready, willing, and able to carry out their part of the agreement, wherefore they prayed judgment against defendants in the sum of $14,646.75 as damages suffered from the breach of the contract.

Defendant Maier filed a separate answer, practically identical with the amended answer of defendants Sugar and Fink, which admits execution of the contract of June 23, 1922, but denies that said defendants entered into the alleged contract of July 14, 1922, or became obligated thereunder. Said amended answer also denies their failure to comply with any of the terms or conditions of said agreement of June 23, 1922, and contains six additional and separate defenses, one claiming a waiver of the right to sue for damages by reason of a written notice dated September 12, 1922, of rescission and termination of said contract of July 14, 1922, signed by plaintiffs, charging defendants and each of them with failure to make the purchases agreed upon and notifying them that plaintiffs hold them responsible in damages therefor, and the other separate defenses alleging various false and fraudulent representations made to defendants by plaintiff Sobelman as to the following matters: The amount of ice cream necessary to fill the cones and the profit to be made from sale thereof, said misrepresentation resulting in the loss to defendants of at least $10,000; as to the ability of the licensee and patentee to manufacture and deliver the cones called for by the agreement; as to the grade of milk chocolate used in the manufacture of said cones; as to the territory for which said plaintiff Sobelman was sole licensee; as to the furnishing of tinfoil wrappers for the cones appropriately labeled "Choco-Ice" and "A Cold Dog," which wrappers were never received.

The trial court found against defendants on all issues and in favor of plaintiffs, awarding them damages in the sum of $5,966.75. With reference to the several agreements it found that plaintiffs and defendants entered into the agreement dated June 23, 1922, attached to and referred to in the agreement of July 14, 1922, set out in paragraph 1 of plaintiffs' complaint; that after the execution of said contract of June 23, 1922, at the instance of defendants, plaintiffs secured the execution of said agreement of July 14, 1922, and thereafter all parties to the agreement of June 23, 1922, continued to operate thereunder, and at no time did defendants or any of them ever repudiate or disclaim any responsibilities under the agreement of June 23, 1922, or July 14, 1922.

[14] Appellants insist that plaintiffs are declaring on the contract dated July 14, 1922, to which appellants are not parties; that at most the contract of June 23, 1922, is in the case as a part of said unexecuted July contract. They also insist that plaintiff Sobelman alone was a party to the contract of June 23, 1922, and the presence in the case of plaintiff Rowe conclusively shows a reliance upon the July contract and the insertion of this additional name as plaintiff is an added reason why the complaint on its face does not state a cause of action. There is no substantial merit in appellants' position in this behalf. The gravamen of the charge in the complaint and the issue that was tried was a breach of the agreement on the part of defendants to purchase and pay for the goods as manufactured and the damages sustained by plaintiffs for such breach during the period of time from the beginning of the contract until September 12, 1922. The amended answer of the defendants admits a contract to purchase as alleged in paragraph II of the complaint, and it was admitted on the trial that only 923,300 shells and 770 cans were accepted and paid for; therefore, no prejudicial injury could have been suffered on their part by a reference to the wrong contract. In fact, the original answer of defendants Sugar and Fink not only admitted the execution of the contract as alleged, but in legal contemplation admitted a breach thereof. Furthermore, the evidence shows clearly, as found by the court, that the provisions of the July contract were for the benefit of appellants and the contract was the result of the efforts of the then attorney for appellants or some of them to strengthen their position under the June contract, and for this reason also no harm resulted to them on account of reliance by plaintiffs upon the July contract. The presence of Oliver A. Rowe as plaintiff was proper, as it developed that appellants well knew that he had an interest in the June contract, and he was, therefore, a proper party to the action for damages for its breach. His connection with the matter was repeatedly brought home to appellants as he was an active participant in the dealings with them under the contract. Besides, even if he were not a proper party, no advantage could be taken of that situation now in the absence of a special demurrer to the complaint upon that ground.

[5] In this connection appellants complain of the finding made by the court that "by mutual consent, plaintiffs did not furnish and defendants did not buy the stipulated number of shells or cones from June 23, 1922, to July 15, 1922," insisting that no evidence can be found in the record to support this finding and that but for the default of plaintiffs in this behalf, appellants would have been able to secure one purchaser for all the product purchased from plaintiffs. After the contract of June 23, 1922, was executed, appellants, acting through an attorney, in effect advised plaintiffs that it was unsafe to proceed under it and set about procuring another contract, of which efforts the contract of July 14, 1922, was the result. As long as appellants were dissatisfied with the provisions of the contract of June 23, 1922, and were active in securing the contract of July 14, 1922, this situation positively implied to plaintiffs that active production under the contract might be held in abeyance pending termination of the proceedings set on foot by appellants themselves. In other words, the circumstances and acts of the parties clearly show a tacit, if not express, agreement that deliveries under the contract would be held in abeyance awaiting execution of the July contract; moreover, the parties continued to do business with each other after July 15, 1922, and this too would authorize the finding. In view of this situation we need not discuss the sharply contested issue as to whether or not appellants lost a customer for their whole output and were thereby damaged for obviously under this finding plaintiffs would not be answerable for any loss even in the event such claim was sustained. Nor need we pause to consider whether in any event damages for such a claim could be collected.

The finding of the court that appellants breached their contract has ample support in the evidence, and such evidence need not be here reviewed. The damages claimed by plaintiffs only extend over the period beginning with the contract and ending September 12, 1922. The record would have well warranted even greater relief than was granted by the court below.

[6] There is no merit whatever in the contention that by the written notice served September 12, 1922, plaintiffs waived their claim to damages. The court finds that on September 9th a written demand reciting past breaches of the contract was served upon defendants, and in it was a notice that damages would be claimed for failure to live up to the covenants thereof. The second writing was in legal effect, although unhappily worded, a notification to appellants that they had breached the contract; that on that account a termination thereof was declared, expressly stating, however, their election to hold appellants responsible in damages for their said failure to fulfill the contract up to the date of the notice. No claim is made for subsequent damages, and hence no reason exists for the application of the rule laid down in such cases as Lemle v. Barry, 181 Cal. 1, House v. Piercy, 181 Cal. 247, 183 P. 150, and McCready v. Bullis, 59 Cal. App. 286, 210 P. 638.

[7] In this action plaintiffs are standing upon the contract and could at least hold appellants liable for all damages accruing prior to service of the notice. "One who has been injured by a breach of contract has an election to pursue any of three remedies. He may treat the contract as rescinded and may recover upon a quantum meruit so far as he has performed; or he may keep the contract alive, for the benefit of both parties, being at all times ready and able to perform; or, third, he may treat the repudiation as putting an end to the contract for all purposes of performance, and sue for the profits he would have realized if he had not been prevented from performing." McConnell v. Corona City Water Co., 149 Cal. 60, 64, 65, 85 P. 929, 930 (8 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1171). See, also, Robinson v. Rispin, 33 Cal. App. 536, 539, 165 P. 979.

[8] Just how the court arrived at the award made does not appear clearly, but it does appear that the profit from the cones would have been approximately $2.50 per thousand; that the number of cans refused was approximately 2,630; and that the profit upon them would have been about $3.50 each. These figures would have sustained a much larger award than was made by the court; therefore, appellants are in no position to complain of the award or of the lack of evidence to support it. The rule of damages in a case like this is not in doubt.

[9] It is stated in Fountain v. Semi-Tropic Land & Water Co., 99 Cal. 677, 680, 34 P. 497, 498, as follows:

"If, however, the breach be of a covenant, the nonperformance of which will render it impossible for the other party to perform, or will frustrate the whole purpose of the contract on his part, * * * he may decline to proceed in performance and sue for damages, in which case he may recover all loss occasioned by the breach—including profits he would have made if the contract had been performed. * * *

Sutherland on Damages (volume 1, p. 113, 1st Ed.) announces the same rule as follows:

"A party to a contract is entitled to recover, against the other party who violated it, damages for the profits he would have made out of it had it been performed. It is no objection to their recovery that they cannot be directly and absolutely proved. In the nature of things, the defendants having prevented such profits, direct and absolute proof is impossible."

See, also, volume 1, p. 243, (4th Ed.) Sutherland on Damages.

Coburn v. California, etc., Co., 144 Cal. 81, 84, 77 P. 771, 772, states the general rule as follows:

"Where, however, there is no value, or where under the terms of the special contract the market value is not an appropriate or adequate criterion of damages, it has been said that the measure of damages is compensation for the actual loss suffered. (See 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1115, 1116, 2d Ed.) The law seeks to give the complaining party the value of his bargain—to prevent a loss which the fulfillment of the contract would have prevented—to put the injured party, so far as money can do it, in the same position as if the contract had been performed. (8 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 632.)"

In Hale v. Trout, 35 Cal. 229, 246, where plaintiff contracted with defendant to manufacture and deliver lumber for him at a certain price and defendant breached the contract, plaintiff being without fault, it was said:

"* * * That the rule of damages upon the breach is the clear profit which the plaintiff would have made, that is to say, the difference between the contract price and what it would have cost the plaintiff to manufacture and deliver the lumber according to the terms of the contract."

In Upstone v. Weir, 54 Cal. 124, 126, plaintiff agreed with defendant to furnish certain iron work at a stipulated price. Plaintiff furnished less than the specified amount, due to failure of defendant to receive it. The rule of damages was there stated to be:

"The plaintiff, having sued upon the contract, is entitled to recover, for the iron work furnished, such a proportion of the whole contract price as the quantity which he furnished bears to the whole quantity contracted for; and, in addition to that, the profit which he would have made, if he had been allowed to complete his contract, together with the damages he incurred in providing means for furnishing the residue of the iron-work called for by the contract, but not delivered, because of the defendant's breach."

In Tahoe Ice Co. v. Union Ice Co., 109 Cal. 242, 41 P. 1020, a contract by defendant to take the whole output of ice of plaintiff for a period of years was claimed to have been breached by defendant and the court approved the rule of damages applied in Hale v. Trout, supra, but held the rule inapplicable to this case because of the sale elsewhere by plaintiff of the ice produced for defendant.

In Ablers v. Smiley, 163 Cal. 200, 205, 124 P. 827, 829, an action for breach of a contract wherein defendant agreed to purchase from plaintiff all the ice needed for his customers, the rule of damages was stated as follows:

"It was shown that the capacity of the ice plant was sufficient to supply all of defendants' wants and that the ice for their use could be produced at an added cost to plaintiffs of twenty-five cents per ton and, therefore, at a profit of $3.75. The loss of this sum per ton on six hundred tons made the aggregate amount of damages two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars. Section 1512 of the Civil Code is as follows: 'If the performance of an obligation be prevented by the creditor, the debtor is entitled to all the benefits which he would have obtained if it had been performed by both parties.' The judgment is in accord with this rule. The rule of damages in such cases is the difference between the cost of manufacture and the contract price (Hale v. Trout, 35 Cal. 229; Winans v. Sierra Lumber Co., 66 Cal. 61, 4 P. 952). Loss of profits which are the natural result of a contract and which the law implies from a breach may be recovered without allegations of special damage. (Tahoe Ice Co. v. Union Ice Co., 109 Cal. 249, 41 P. 1020.)"

A similar principle is announced in the following cases: Coburn v. California, etc., Co., 144 Cal. 81, 84, 77 P. 771; Thompson v. Hamilton Motor Co., 170 Cal. 737, 151 P. 122, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 677; Connell v. Higgins, 170 Cal. 549, 150 P. 769; Schumann v. Karner, 184 Cal. 57, 192 P. 849; National, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Producers' R. Co., 169 Cal. 745, 147 P. 963. See note 44 A. L. R., pages 215-283.

[10, 11] The criticism directed against the sufficiency of the proof of cost of production and hence the proof of net profits from sale of the articles is a matter which should have been addressed to the judge of the court below, who passed upon the weight of the testimony. For we have no hesitation in saying that there is enough evidence to warrant a finding that the profit on the cones was approximately $2.50 per thousand. In this connection it should be noted that where a defendant breaches a contract, the law does not hold him faultless because of the difficulties that arise in proving the exact amount of detriment caused by him. "But where the prospective profits are the natural and direct consequences of the breach of the contract they may be recovered; and he who breaks the contract cannot wholly escape on account of the difficulty which his own wrong has produced of devising a perfect measure of damages." Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 245, 48 P. 62, 64.

We have considered the contentions of appellants with respect to their special defenses interposed herein, and we have no hesitancy in saying that there is ample evidence to support the findings that these special defenses were not sustained by the proofs. The record is replete with other objections and contentions by appellants, all of which we have considered, and none of which in our opinion have any merit whatsoever.

Judgment affirmed.

RICE et al. v. McCLELLAN et al.
(S. F. 12701.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 16, 1927.

1. Mandamus ☞16(1) — Prerogative writs will not be issued to compel doing idle acts.

Court will not issue its prerogative writs to compel the doing of idle acts.

2. Mandamus ☞113—Mandamus does not lie to compel levy of special school tax after time when it may be legally done.

Mandamus does not lie to compel levy of special school tax after passage of time when such levy may lawfully be made.

3. Mandamus ☞113—Schools and school districts ☞108(3)—High school district, on severance of part thereof, sending pupils to another district, was not entitled to levy tax; mandamus does not lie to compel levy of special school tax in high school district which did not maintain high school within its boundaries (Pol. Code, §§ 1720, 1741, 1751, 1755).

Under Pol. Code, § 1720, high school district, on severance of part thereof, sending its pupils under contract to another district, was not entitled to levy school tax, nor could such levy be enforced by mandamus, regardless of section 1751, permitting high school district to contract with another for education of pupils, since immediately, on severance of part of district containing schoolhouse, arrangements for temporary location of high school under section 1741 should have been made until district was ready to purchase site and erect suitable building under section 1755.

4. Schools and school districts ☞42(2)—Contracting for education of high school pupils in adjoining district does not satisfy statute requiring maintenance of high school in district (Pol. Code, §§ 1720, 1751).

Under Pol. Code, § 1720, high school district must maintain at least one high school in the district, and providing by contract for education of high school pupils in other district is not equivalent of such high school, notwithstanding section 1751 permitting such contracts.

5. Schools and school districts ☞108(3)—Where high school board had not prepared course of study or conducted high school in district, levy of special school tax is not authorized (Pol. Code, §§ 1750, 1756).

Where, after severance of part of high school district, remainder of district sent scholars under contract to another district's high school, and school board did not prepare course of study pursuant to Pol. Code, § 1750, levy of special tax is not authorized in such remaining section of former district for school purposes, in view of section 1756.

Original proceeding by Henry E. Rice and others, members of, and constituting, the Board of Trustees of the La Ballona High School District, formerly the Venice Union High School District of Los Angeles County, for mandamus to be directed to R. F. McClellan and others, members of, and constituting, Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles, to require them to include in the annual levy a special tax on property within certain territory of the county for school purposes. Writ denied.

Lyon, Fleming & Robbins, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and Ernest Purdum and J. H. O'Connor, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. The petitioners, who allege that they are "the duly appointed, confirmed, qualified, and acting members of the board of trustees of the La Ballona high school district, formerly Union high school district," have instituted an original proceeding in mandate to compel the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles to include in the annual levy a special tax on property within certain territory of the county, on the theory that such territory constitutes La Ballona high school district. The board of supervisors has refused to levy the tax on the ground that the district did not, at any time between November 25, 1925, and the 30th day of June, 1927, establish or maintain, within the district, any high school whatever for the convenience of the day pupils of the district, but that during said period all of the high school pupils of the La Ballona district attended the Venice high schools of the Los Angeles city high school district, and that at no time between said dates was any high school instruction given or furnished within La Ballona high school district, other than that furnished by the Los Angeles city high school district; and on the further ground that, on the recommendation of the county superintendent of schools of Los Angeles county, La Ballona high school district has been declared to have lapsed, and the property of the district ordered sold.

There is no dispute concerning the facts. Prior to November 25, 1925, the La Ballona high school district, formerly Venice union high school district, consisted of the Venice City, La Ballona, and Playa del Rey elementary school districts, and was maintaining and conducting a fully equipped high school. On that date the city of Venice was annexed to the city of Los Angeles, and a large portion of the Venice union high school district, including the land upon which the high school building was located, became part of the territory of the Los Angeles city high school district. The Venice union high school district, being left without a high school building, thereupon entered into an agreement with the Los Angeles city high school district, under the terms of which the Venice union high school district furnished the necessary money, personal property, and the teachers to carry on the high school in the building for the remainder of the school year 1925-26.

When the time arrived for making plans for the school year 1926-27, no high school building having been provided, and no other provision having been made for the education of its high school pupils, the Venice union high school district entered into a new contract with the Los Angeles city high school district, whereby it was agreed that the latter district should permit the attendance at Venice junior and senior high schools of all pupils resident in the Venice union high school district who were qualified to attend the seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth grades of those schools, and should furnish such pupils the same advantages, equipment, supplies, and services as were furnished to other pupils doing similar work in the Los Angeles school district. As consideration for this service, the Venice union high school district agreed to pay the Los Angeles city high school district a sum, computed at the rate of $250 per pupil, for the number of pupils represented by the total average daily attendance of pupils attending Venice junior and senior high schools from the Venice union high school district during the school year beginning July 1, 1926. The Los Angeles city high school district agreed to credit to the Venice union high school district the enrollment and average daily attendance at the Venice schools of all pupils residing in the Venice union high school district and attending said schools, such enrollment and average daily attendance to be used as a basis of part of the income of the Venice union high school district for the school year 1927-28. The Los Angeles city high school district also agreed to furnish transportation to pupils living in certain designated portions of the Venice union high school district, with the understanding that it should not collect the usual amount from the pupils so transported, but that the Venice union high school district should pay the sum of $225 per school month for the service. Under this arrangement no high school of any kind was maintained within the limits of the Venice union high school district during the year 1926-27, but the pupils residing in the district, of high school rating, were given free instruction under the contract with the Los Angeles city high school district, which reported that thirty-three units of average attendance were earned by them.

That portion of La Ballona high school district formerly known as Playa del Rey elementary district has been annexed to the city of Los Angeles for school purposes, and the name of the Venice union high school district has been changed to La Ballona high school district, which now consists only of the territory within the La Ballona elementary school district. Within the time and in the manner prescribed by the sections of the Political Code, and as the basis for the levy of a tax for the district for the school year 1927-28, the petitioners, as the board of trustees of the La Ballona high school district, made and filed with the county superintendent of schools of the county of Los Angeles an estimate or budget of the amount which would be required during the fiscal year 1927-28, for the purpose of meeting the current annual expenses of maintaining a high school in the district. The budget was approved by the superintendent, who, in turn, submitted to the board of supervisors the estimates, together with a statement showing the amount expended by the high school district for each item of estimate during the preceding year.

Subsequently, on September 1, 1927, the county superintendent, acting on the advice of the Attorney General that the 33 units of average daily attendance claimed by the La Ballona high school district did not belong to that district, but were "the earned property of the Los Angeles high school district, and that therefore the La Ballona district had no average daily attendance for the school year ending July 30, 1927," recommended to the respondent board of supervisors that La Ballona high school district be declared lapsed. The board of supervisors thereupon declared the district lapsed, and ordered its property sold pursuant to the provisions of section 1735 of the Political Code.

On these facts the board of supervisors has refused to levy any tax for meeting the budget, and will not do so, unless directed by the writ of this court.

[1, 2] Petitioners have not shown us how it would be possible, at this time, for the board of supervisors to levy a special tax, spread the assessment over the taxable property in the district, if one exists, and collect the tax for the fiscal year 1927-28. The time has passed when that may be done, and this court will not issue its prerogative writs to compel the doing of idle acts. But, assuming that it were yet possible to direct that such a tax be levied and collected, petitioners are not in position to demand that it be done.

[3] Section 1720 of the Political Code provides, in part, that "each high school district must establish and maintain for the convenience of the day pupils" of the district "at least one four year high school, or in lieu thereof at least one junior high school and at least one senior high school." Petitioners contend that the contracts entered into between La Ballona and Los Angeles city high school districts constitute a substantial compliance with this provision. We cannot approve the suggestion. While section 1751 of the Code permits one high school district to contract with another high school district for the education of its pupils entitled to attend a high school, in such subjects or in such grades as may be named in such contract or agreement, we are not prepared to say that the district may thus provide for the education of all its high school pupils in all subjects by another high school district. To accept such construction sought by petitioners would be to ignore the plain provisions of the law and to sanction the existence of high school districts without any high schools. We think it clear that the Legislature has intended that every high school district shall establish and maintain a high school, as contemplated by section 1720, supra, within its own boundaries. The conducting of a high school, or high schools, by Los Angeles city high school district is not such maintenance of a high school within the La Ballona district. Bay View School District v. Linscott, 99 Cal. 25, 29, 33 P. 781, 782. It was there said that the sections of the Code "do not expressly provide that such school shall be within the district, but such is clearly the implication." The purpose governing such location, and the "unpleasant consequences" which might flow, "if a district may under the law maintain a school outside the district," are sufficiently commented on in the opinion. See, also, Sunol School Dist. v. Chipman, 138 Cal. 251, 71 P. 340. Since the annexation of the portion of Venice union high school to the Los Angeles city high school district in November, 1925, no high school has been maintained in La Ballona high school district boundaries.

Petitioners argue that the Legislature "did not contemplate the actual construction or erection of a high school building at any particular time" within the district contracting for the education of its high school pupils in another district. That may be admitted, but it was the duty of the predecessor of La Ballona district, immediately upon the severance of the district by annexation becoming an accomplished fact, to make arrangements for the temporary location of the high school, as it was permitted to do under the provisions of section 1741 of the Political Code, until such time as it was ready to purchase a site and erect a suitable building. Pol. Code, § 1755.

[4, 5] Petitioners have not complied with the law relating to the maintenance of a high school in La Ballona district, in another particular. Section 1750 of the Political Code requires each high school board to prepare a course of study, subject to the approval of the state board of education, and designed to fit the needs of its pupils. So far as the record indicates, that was not done in this case. The contract with the Los Angeles district, which provided that the latter should furnish to the pupils of La Ballona district the same advantages, equipment, supplies, and services as were furnished to other pupils doing work in the schools, was not a compliance with the requirement of the section relating to the adoption of a course of study.

Section 1756, under which the petitioners purported to act in filing with the county superintendent of schools their estimate of the amount of money required for the present fiscal year, provides that such estimate shall be "of the amount of money required for maintaining the high school in said district for the current school year, including rent or construction of temporary quarters, if any." (Italics added). We deem it unnecessary to cite further sections of the Code relating to the subject. It is plain that La Ballona district has not maintained within its boundaries, either in permanent or temporary quarters, a high school, as required by the statute, and the action of the board of supervisors must be sustained.

The petition for a writ of mandate is denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by W. A. Kraner against the Snow Mountain Water & Power Company to foreclose mechanic's lien. From judgment of dismissal for want of prosecution, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edgar C. Chapman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Max Thelen, of San Francisco, Benjamin C. Jones, of Lakeport, and Thelen & Marrin, of San Francisco (Pillsbury, Madison & Suto, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

LANGDON, J. [1, 2] This is an appeal from a judgment entered on an order dismissing, for delay in prosecution, an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. The action was filed by the original contractor, and the order dismissing it was made under the authority and discretion vested in the trial court by statute. The only question presented by the appeal is whether or not the judge of the superior court abused the discretion vested in him by the following language from section 1190, Code of Civil Procedure:

"And in case such proceedings be not prosecuted to trial within two years after the commencement thereof, the court may in its discretion dismiss the same for want of prosecution."

It is admitted that there was a failure to prosecute the action for the period mentioned by the statute. The affidavits presented on the hearing of the motion to dismiss are conflicting as to certain matters which would enter into the exercise of discretion in the determination of the motion, and we must accept the matters appearing in the record which are most consonant with the action taken by the trial court. It is unnecessary to review these matters herein; they involve a disputed agreement for extension of time and a discussion of prior litigation between the parties hereto and others.

The parties have argued rather extensively in their briefs the force and effect of the issues, findings, and judgment in this prior proceeding. While a conclusion upon that question is not determinative of the order we are reviewing, the respondent presents its views thereon for the purpose of showing that the appellant has had his day in court upon the merits of the controversy between the parties and that this consideration properly entered into the action taken by the trial court upon the motion to dismiss the present action. The appellant, on the other hand, argues that the judgment in the former action does not make the issues presented here res judicata. We are not called upon to determine this collateral question. The plaintiff having failed to prosecute his action within the time allowed by the statute, the trial court was invested with the discretion to dismiss the action, and nothing less than an affirmative showing of appellant of an abuse of such discretion would justify this court in substituting its judgment for that of the trial judge upon this motion.

The judgment is affirmed.

Shuffleton, Jr., County Auditor of the County of Shasta, to draw his warrant in amount of certain claims previously approved by the Board of Supervisors. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Superseding Opinion of District Court of Appeal, 257 P. 564.

Jesse W. Carter, Dist. Atty., of Redding, for appellant.

William R. McKay, Dist. Atty., of Hanford, amicus curiae.

Chenoweth & Leininger, of Redding, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel the defendant, as auditor of the county of Shasta, to draw his warrant in favor of plaintiff in the amount of certain claims previously approved by the board of supervisors of that county.

The facts leading up to the proceeding and necessary to its understanding are: H. L. Moody, the father of the plaintiff, had been, prior to July 17, 1925, the owner and publisher of a newspaper known as "The Searchlight," published in Redding, Shasta County, Cal. In connection with the publication of this newspaper, he conducted a printing and jobbing business and owned and operated a general printing plant.

On September 19, 1923, he became supervisor of Shasta county. From the time he became supervisor until July, 1925, he did printing, advertising, and job work for and sold supplies to Shasta county, and claims for the same were presented to the board of supervisors and approved. He collected from Shasta county, while he was supervisor, for printing, advertising, job work, and supplies, the sum of $5,755.96. In July, 1925, several claims presented by him for printing, job work, and supplies were, upon advice of the district attorney, rejected by the supervisors, as illegal claims, and thereafter an action was brought against him by the district attorney of Shasta county to recover money which he had collected from the county for printing, advertising, job work, and supplies while he was supervisor. This action has since been tried and judgment rendered by the superior court of Shasta county against H. L. Moody and an appeal has been taken by him to this court, which appeal is at present undetermined.

About two weeks after the claims were rejected as aforesaid, in July, 1925, H. L. Moody recorded a bill of sale purporting to convey said newspaper and printing plant to H. G. Moody, his son, and contemporaneously recorded a chattel mortgage on said newspaper and printing plant, purporting to have been executed by said H. G. Moody to H. L. Moody and his wife, Emma H. Moody. Thereafter, H. G. Moody, doing business under the name and style of "The Searchlight," proceeded to do printing, advertising, and job work for and furnish supplies to Shasta county, and presented claims to the board of supervisors thereof for the payment of the same, and said H. L. Moody, sitting on the board of supervisors, approved said claims, and the same were transmitted to the auditor with the request that he draw his warrant on the treasurer of Shasta county for the payment of the same. The auditor was advised by the district attorney of Shasta county that said claims and demands were illegal, because H. L. Moody, a supervisor of Shasta county, who participated in the approval and allowance of said claims, was interested therein by reason of holding a chattel mortgage on "The Searchlight," a newspaper and printing plant furnishing said printing, job work, and supplies. The auditor, thereupon, refused to draw his warrant in favor of the petitioner, and this proceeding was instituted in the superior court of Shasta county to obtain a writ of mandate commanding the auditor to draw his warrant in favor of the petitioner on the treasurer of Shasta county for the payment of said claim and demand. The writ was granted.

At the trial, it was proven that the consideration paid by H. G. Moody to H. L. Moody for "The Searchlight" was $20,000 and the entire purchase price was represented by promissory notes which were secured by a chattel mortgage on "The Searchlight." It was admitted that the value of the machinery and equipment and all the physical properties constituting "The Searchlight" newspaper and printing plant was between $12,000 and $14,000, and that the remainder of the property making up the total value of $20,000 consisted of "good will." It also appears that after "The Searchlight" was transferred to H. G. Moody on July 17, 1925, Mrs. Emma H. Moody, wife of H. L. Moody, was employed as a bookkeeper in the office and received no compensation for her services.

The only question presented by the appeal is whether or not the claims made against the county were void because the contracts upon which they were based were in violation of sections 920 and 4322, Political Code, reading, respectively, as follows:

"Members of the Legislature, state, county, city, and township officers, must not be interested in any contract made by them in their official capacity, or by any body or board of which they are members. * * *

"Supervisors must not be interested in purchases or contracts. No member of the board must be interested, directly or indirectly, in any property purchased for the use of the county, * * * nor in any contract made by the board, or other person, on behalf of the county, for the erection of public buildings. * * *

The foregoing statutory pronouncements are in consonance with the well-settled policy of the common law, and numerous decisions are to be found vigorously enforcing the rule.

It is earnestly contended on behalf of the respondent that the facts of the present case do not bring it within the operation of section 920, Political Code, because it does not appear that the board of supervisors made the contract for the county with the plaintiff. Conceding that to be true, we turn to the consideration of the other section of the Political Code, above quoted. It is conceded that H. L. Moody, as supervisor of Shasta county, in passing upon the claims involved here, acted as a quasi judicial officer, and the only point in dispute is whether or not H. L. Moody was "interested, directly or indirectly," within the intent of section 4322, Political Code, in the supplies, printing, etc., purchased for the use of the county from "The Searchlight" because of his chattel mortgage upon all property of that business to secure to himself the full purchase price thereof.

The position of the county auditor is stated in his answer as follows:

"That the value of the security of said chattel mortgage is therefore increased by the business received by said newspaper and printing business from the county of Shasta and said H. L. Moody is benefited thereby; that the larger the volume of business received by said newspaper and printing business from said county and the greater the price paid for the printing, advertising, and supplies so furnished, the greater the value of said newspaper and printing business as security on said chattel mortgage; that it is to the interest of H. L. Moody to thus increase the value of said security."

The foregoing argument of appellant would be convincing even if this were a case of first impression in this state, but it appears that there is authority for his position, presenting precisely the same legal situation as we find in the instant case, in the case of Quatman v. Sup. Court, 64 Cal. App. 203, 221 P. 666. This was a proceeding in prohibition to prevent Hon. Claude F. Purkitt, as judge of the superior court of Glenn county, from further proceeding in the trial of an action entitled Barceloux v. Sacramento Valley Realty Co. The court stated:

"At the time of the beginning of the action by Barceloux against the Sacramento Valley Realty Company, the respondent Purkitt was the owner and holder of a promissory note, dated June 6, 1920, for the sum of $301.60, made, executed, and delivered to him by the Sacramento Valley Realty Company payable sixty days after date, and also was the owner and holder of an account against said Sacramento Valley Realty Company in the sum of $27.35."

After the action had been commenced but before trial, Judge Purkitt indorsed said note to a third party "without recourse." The petitioner, who was interested in the litigation, contended that Judge Purkitt was disqualified because of his interest. The court held him disqualified because he was a creditor of one of the parties and in deciding against the further contention that the disqualification had been removed by the indorsement of the note "without recourse," the court said:

"The authorities are practically unanimous to the effect that it does not follow that one who exempts himself from liability as an indorser by using the expression 'without recourse' or its equivalent stands free from all obligation in respect to the indorsement. His undertaking, notwithstanding the qualified indorsement, may be a substantial one, for it seems clear that he divests himself of none of the liabilities of the vendor of the paper."

Assuredly this limited liability of an indorser without recourse is less of an interest in the business of the litigant than is the interest of a chattel mortgagee upon the entire property and good will of a business to secure its full purchase price.

The case of Minor, 121 Cal. 372, 53 P. 815, holds that a judicial officer holding stock in a bank which is a creditor of an irrigation district is disqualified to act in a matter relating to the irrigation district.

The general policy of our statutory provision upon this subject has been repeatedly upheld by the courts of this state. Meyer v. City of San Diego, 121 Cal. 102, 53 P. 434, 41 L. R. A. 762, 66 Am. St. Rep. 22; Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 57 P. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31; Stockton Plumbing Co. v. Wheeler, 68 Cal. App. 592, 229 P. 1020. The court in Berka v. Woodward, supra, uses language which seems specially apt in connection with the instant case:

"Our statutes are general in prohibiting any officer from being interested in such contracts, and, if ever there was an occasion for its strict enforcement, it certainly exists in a case such as this where the contractor is a member of the common council whose duty it is to make such contracts on behalf of the city. He cannot be permitted to place himself in any situation where his personal interest will conflict with the faithful performance of his duty as trustee, and it matters not how fair upon the face of it the contract may be, the law will not suffer him to occupy a position so equivocal and so fraught with temptation."

Other states, in construing statutes similar to the ones we are considering, have extended the rule further than the instant case requires. The case of Foster v. City of Cape May, 60 N. J. Law, 78, 36 A. 1089, held that a member of a city council, who held as collateral security a share of stock of an electric light company, was disqualified to vote to authorize a contract with such company to light the city, although the value of the stock was slight. In that case, it was said:

"If interest be allowed to disqualify in any case it must in all, as it is impossible, by any scale, to measure the different effects which it may have on different minds."

The vital force of the foregoing conclusion is made apparent when we consider the possibility suggested by appellant were we to uphold the contention of the respondent: Suppose the business conducted by respondent was dependent solely or largely upon orders received from the county for its earning power. H. L. Moody, a member of the board of supervisors, would then be enabled to pass upon contracts which would be vital to the value of his security for $20,000. The possibilities of the contention of respondent stamp it as against public policy. As said by the court in the Quatman Case, supra:

"It is not a question of whether the learned trial judge would or would not act impartially. A legal question only is presented."

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

83 Cal. App. 253

JONES v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 5928.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 6, 1928.

1. Prohibition ⚡27—In proceeding to prevent proceedings under order of contempt, court must assume that facts are as set forth in affidavit in re contempt.

In proceeding for prohibition to prevent proceedings under an order of contempt on ground that affidavit in re contempt was insufficient to show contempt of trial court, court must assume that facts are as set forth in affidavit in re contempt rather than as set forth in record.

2. Contempt ⚡26—Where plaintiff produced checks in court as ordered, court held without jurisdiction to punish for contempt for refusal to permit private inspection in absence of court.

Court held without jurisdiction to punish for contempt, where certain checks were produced in court by plaintiff as ordered but plaintiff refused to allow private inspection in absence of court, notwithstanding court's instruction to parties to retire to chambers for purpose of inspecting such checks.

3. Contempt ⚡21—Court cannot punish for contempt occurring out of judge's presence unless definite order is violated.

In order to give court jurisdiction to punish for contempt where it is alleged to have occurred out of presence of judge, affidavit in re contempt must show violation of or refusal to obey definite order.

Application by Mark F. Jones for a writ of prohibition prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Hugh J. Crawford, Judge, to prevent proceedings under an order of contempt. Writ granted.

Oliver O. Clark and W. L. Engelhardt, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and S. V. O. Prichard, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, J. The petition for writ of prohibition recites in hæc verba the affidavit in re contempt in the lower court which it is contended by petitioner is insufficient to show any contempt of any order of the trial court in the proceedings wherein it was filed, or at all, and particularly that said affidavit does not show any order of the said Hon. Hugh J. Crawford requiring the petitioner to submit the documents referred to in said affidavit to the inspection of any person. It is also contended by petitioner, but not passed on herein, that the documents referred to in said affidavit as having been refused to the attorney for the defendant were not such documents as were entitled to be inspected by any one, or subject to an order for inspection by the court without their being particularly identified, or at least more particularly identified than the identification referred to in said affidavit. The affidavit is entitled in the action, Los Angeles Housing Corporation v. J. A. Crowley, and so far as necessary to be considered herein reads as follows:

"J. A. Crowley, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, on his oath states: That he is the defendant in the above-entitled cause; that on the 4th day of November, 1927, he executed and filed in the above-entitled cause which was then on trial in department 16 of the above-named court, a certain affidavit, being in the words and figures as follows, to wit:

"(Title of Action.)

"J. A. Crowley, of lawful age, being first duly sworn, on his oath states, that he is the defendant in the above-entitled cause, trial of which is now being had in department 16 of the above-entitled court; that Hugh Wilton, president and managing agent of plaintiff, is in possession of the following documents, to wit:

"1. Checks numbered 2,000 to 3,500, inclusive, of the Los Angeles Housing Corporation, drawn on the People's National Bank of Los Angeles, Cal., and the check book stubs corresponding thereto, from which said checks were taken. * * *

"That the production of the said books and documents is necessary to a complete defense of the above-entitled action by this defendant, and for the discovery of the true facts involved in the trial thereof.

"That the checks and stubs mentioned in the paragraph numbered 1 hereinabove are material for the purpose of enabling the witness Edwin B. Cassady, by an inspection thereof, to state whether or not the said Hugh Wilton stated to him, the said Cassady, that the checks introduced herein and numbered 1 to 8 inclusive, were drawn and delivered as and for payment of dividends to this affiant, and not as loans. * * *

"Wherefore, affiant prays the court for an order compelling the production of the above-named books and records by the said Hugh Wilton."

"That thereafter and on the 4th day of November, 1927, Hon. Hugh J. Crawford, judge of department 16 of the above-entitled court, granted and filed his certain order in the above cause, which said order is in the words and figures, as follows, to wit:

"Upon the affidavit of J. A. Crowley heretofore filed herein, and the testimony of Hugh Wilton heretofore given herein, and for good cause shown, it is hereby ordered that the said Hugh Wilton produce in court on Monday, November 7, 1927, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the trial hereof, the following books and documents, to wit:

"1. Checks numbered 2,000 to 3,500, inclusive, of the Los Angeles Housing Corporation, drawn on the People's National Bank of Los Angeles, Cal., and the check book stubs corresponding thereto, from which said checks were taken. * * *

"That copy of said order was served upon the said Hugh Wilton in Los Angeles, Cal., on November 4, 1927.

"That on Monday, November 7, 1927, at 10 o'clock a. m., in said department 16 of the above-entitled court, at the trial of the above-entitled cause, the said Hugh Wilton, in obedience to said order, produced in open court, among others, the following documents, to wit:

"Checks numbered 2,000 to 3,500, inclusive, of the Los Angeles Housing Corporation, drawn on the People's National Bank of Los Angeles, Cal., and the check book stubs corresponding thereto, from which said checks were taken.

"That thereupon the Hon. Hugh J. Crawford, then and there presiding in the said department 16 of the above-entitled court, on the trial of the above cause, in open court instructed the parties to the above-entitled cause with their attorneys, to retire to the chambers of said Hon. Hugh J. Crawford for the purpose of inspecting the said checks hereinbefore mentioned.

"That thereupon this defendant J. A. Crowley, together with his attorney of record, W. O. Wanzer, and Mark F. Jones, attorney of record for the plaintiff herein, together with Miss E. Taylor, secretary of the plaintiff herein, the said Mark F. Jones and Miss E. Taylor being then and there in possession of said checks, retired to the said chambers of the said judge, for the purpose of making such inspection; that after so retiring to said chambers, W. O. Wanzer, attorney for the defendant, demanded of the said Miss E. Taylor and of the said Mark F. Jones, attorney for the plaintiff, permission to inspect the said checks numbered 2,000 to 3,500, inclusive, but the said Mark F. Jones, then and there willfully and intentionally refused to permit this affiant, defendant, or his attorney of record, W. O. Wanzer, to inspect all of said checks, and willfully and intentionally refused to permit the said Miss E. Taylor to allow this affiant, defendant herein, or the said W. O. Wanzer, attorney for defendant to inspect all of said checks; that the said Mark F. Jones then and there stated to this affiant, defendant herein, and to the said W. O. Wanzer, that he would exhibit for inspection only such checks as this affiant or the said W. O. Wanzer could and would specifically designate and identify, and that unless such checks as this affiant, or his said attorney, desired to inspect could be specifically identified and described, he, the said Mark F. Jones, would and he did then and there refuse to permit inspection of such checks to be made.

"That the said Mark F. Jones now is, and at all times since the filing of the above-entitled cause in the above-named court has been, the attorney of record for plaintiff, Los Angeles Housing Corporation, a corporation, and now is and at all such times has been a duly licensed and practicing attorney at law in the state of California, with offices in the city of Los Angeles, Cal."

We are treating as true, of course, the statement in the affidavit which states "That thereupon the Hon. Hugh J. Crawford, then and there presiding in the said department 16 of the above-entitled court, on the trial of the above cause, in open court instructed the parties to the above-entitled cause with their attorneys, to retire to the chambers of said Hon. Hugh J. Crawford for the purpose of inspecting the said checks hereinbefore mentioned." By "said checks" is evidently meant certain of the documents contained in the original order as set forth in said affidavit. The record herein does not disclose such to be the fact, but does show that the real order made by the trial court was: "All right. We will take it up at half past 10. Proceed with the other case." This following a statement by Mr. Wanzer, the attorney for defendant, "I would like to request at this time that Mr. Cassady be allowed a few minutes time to examine the books that they have brought in."

[1, 2] Conceding, as we must, that the facts are as set forth in the affidavit and not as set forth in the record, we find that the books, documents, and checks set forth were actually brought into open court in accordance with the order of November 4th set forth in the affidavit.

By reason of the fact that the inspection of said checks was not requested to be had in open court, but merely a private inspection was requested by Mr. Wanzer, as attorney for defendant in the action then pending before the court, or that he was requesting a private inspection by a witness thereof, and by reason of the fact that the petitioners herein are not shown to have ever refused to obey the order of the court to produce, and by reason of the fact that the said order of the court set forth in the order of said court to produce specified that the books, papers, and checks to be brought into court were to be used in the trial of the cause and did not in any way refer to an inspection or order to be made in private by the attorney Wanzer, or by any other person, and that there was no order excepting only the oral order, a general statement of which appears in the affidavit, which oral order has been hereinbefore set forth, and which so-called order is not either a direct or a specific order of the court, as we construe it, to allow a private inspection, in the absence of the court of all or any particular part of the private books and papers of the plaintiff corporation, we will have to hold, on the face of the record disclosed by the affidavit, that there is no showing in such affidavit of any violation of an order of the court on the part of the petitioner herein.

[3] In order to give the court jurisdiction to punish for contempt, where the same is alleged to have occurred out of the presence of the judge, the affidavit in re contempt must show in a case of this kind a violation of, or a refusal to obey, a definite order. This we do not find in the affidavit.

We are not passing upon the question as to whether all the books and papers in general, of a corporation, can be required to be exhibited in open court as was ordered by the court; we are merely and only holding that this affidavit the material parts of which are hereinbefore set forth in hæc verba does not disclose a violation of any order made by the court, and we can find no allegation of any refusal to obey an order of court anywhere in said affidavit.

The court is therefore ordered to desist from proceeding further on the affidavit in re contempt hereinbefore set forth. Let the peremptory writ issue accordingly.

For the reasons hereinbefore stated, the demurrer interposed by respondents is overruled.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

88 Cal. App. 1

RENEAU v. HIRSCH. (Civ. 3376.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 24, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 20, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1004(1), 1005(1)—Damages ⇨96—New trial ⇨74—Damages for personal injury is for discretion of jury and trial judge, and decision will not be set aside unless plainly excessive.

Amount of damages in personal injury action is for sound discretion of jury and judge of trial court, whose decision, on appeal, will not be set aside unless verdict is so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at first blush, passion or prejudice on part of jury.

2. Damages ⇨132(6)—$18,000, together with $2,719 medical and hospital bill for broken and lacerated leg sustained by 17 year old delivery boy, held not excessive.

$18,000 awarded to 17 year old boy employed as grocer's delivery boy for physical injuries, together with $2,719 for medical attention, hospital bills, and loss of time for injuries consisting of broken and badly lacerated leg, held not excessive.

3. Appeal and error ⇨932(1)—Appellate court, where verdict in personal injury action is attacked as excessive, must resolve evidence in favor of respondent.

Where verdict in personal injury action is attacked as being excessive, appellate court must treat every conflict in the evidence as resolved in favor of respondent and must give to him the benefit of every inference that can reasonably be drawn in support of his claim.

4. Trial ⇨108½—Plaintiff's counsel, in action for injuries in automobile collision, properly questioned jurors as to connection with indemnity insurance company.

In action for injury in automobile collision, plaintiff was properly permitted to question jurors as to connection in any way, as agents or otherwise, or as stockholders, with indemnity insurance company.

5. Trial ⇨127—Evidence that defendant, sued for damages, is insured is inadmissible.

Evidence that defendant in action for damages is insured against loss by reason thereof is not admissible.

6. Trial ⇨133(2)—Permitting plaintiff's counsel, in action for injuries, to cross-examine defendant's medical experts as to examinations for casualty companies and compensation received held proper.

In action for injuries resulting in automobile collision, permitting plaintiff's counsel to ask defendant's medical experts on cross-examination as to examinations for casualty companies and as to compensation received therefor held proper, in view of instruction thereon.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action by Arnold H. Reneau, a minor, by James A. Reneau, his guardian ad litem, against Florence Wile Hirsch, executrix of the estate of Eugene D. Hirsch, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Haas & Dunnigan and Shaw & McDaniel, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bertrand J. Wellman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant, Eugene D. Hirsch, from a judgment entered against him upon a verdict of a jury in the sum of $20,719, in an action for damages for personal injuries.

The verdict was divided as follows:

"$18,000 for physical injuries; $2,719 for medical attention, hospital bills, and loss of time."

The essential facts are not in dispute and may be thus briefly stated: The plaintiff and respondent, Arnold H. Reneau, at the time he received the injuries complained of, was a minor of the age of 17 years, employed as a delivery boy by a grocery store in the city of Ocean Park, and receiving a salary of $18 per week. On July 7, 1923, respondent was removing groceries from his automobile truck, which he had parked near the curb on the east side of Main street, in the city of Ocean Park, when defendant's automobile driven by his chauffeur at a high rate of speed, collided with said delivery truck and crushed respondent's left leg between the truck and a telephone pole located near the curb. Respondent's left leg was almost entirely severed from his body above the knee, there being only an anterior flap holding the two parts of the leg together. Numerous pieces of wood, stone, manure, and dirt were ground into respondent's leg. The injury can best be described by quoting a portion of the testimony of Dr. C. P. Thomas, one of the attending surgeons:

"As I remember when I was called to the hospital I found him [referring to respondent] on the operating table with a very bad lacerated wound of the leg. The back part of the leg, just a little ways above the knee, and the bone broken off at that place, and the ends a long ways apart. Nearly all of the soft parts on the flexor side, that is, the under side of the leg, were severed. I found a great deal of timber in the wound, slivers of wood, more or less decayed, and, of course, he was bleeding and in great pain; suffering a great deal of shock. He had, evidently, lost a great deal of blood before he got to the hospital. My impression is that the flexor muscles were nearly all severed. Those that are definitely flexor muscles. There are some muscles that have other functions than that of flexing and helping to flex, but the main flexor muscles were severed. The bone was exposed for six inches, and the lower fragment bent back on itself, or bent back on the joint so that they were overriding. The two ends were four or five inches apart. After cleaning the wound out thoroughly, I drilled a hole through the end of each bone, or the ends of the same bone, and put a silver wire through it and drew them together and twisted the wire up snugly so as to hold the ends together. I then sewed the soft parts, each muscle to its fellow as near as I could. * * * The hemorrhage was quite profuse. He was greatly shocked and white when he came to the hospital. * * * I saw him October 20th and discharged him from the hospital, and there were no discharging wounds and his muscles had united, but they were weak yet, and the knee had limited motion only, and his general condition was fair. The limb is now somewhat smaller than the other, at the place of severance of the muscles; there is some enlargement of the knee joint, and there is a slight limitation of motion. I think it would be safe to say there is a limitation of somewhere between 10 and 25 per cent. The limb is not as strong nor as flexible as the other limb by probably 20 per cent."

The doctor further testified as follows:

"Q. I will ask you to state, doctor, whether in your opinion, this boy is suffering from any permanent injury from this limb? A. Yes, he has some permanent disability. * * *

"Q. In what way does this permanent injury affect him? How does it incapacitate him? A. Well, he hasn't full—he hasn't the ability—he hasn't the power of flexing the leg. The loss of muscular substance somewhat weakens the ability to flex the leg. * * *

"Q. Have you made comparative measurements of the two limbs to determine the extent of atrophy? A. Not with a tape measure, but only with my eye.

"Q. Except in the case where the scar tissue occurs, the balance of the leg should, eventually, with normal exercise, return to the same size as its mate? A. Yes, sir. * * *

"Q. Now, what particular motion—limitation of motion—what motion is limited in his leg? A. He is unable to flex his leg more than at right angles. * * *

"Q. The exercise and use will have a tendency to increase his power to flex, and it will so have a tendency to increase the size and strength of the muscles, is that true? A. Yes; and yet I think I should qualify that, in fairness to the boy and to your side as well. The muscle, as it appears now—the muscle ends are not actually together, that I sewed, but instead, a fibrous membrane of scar tissue has united the two ends of the muscle in such a way that they function; but they do not function as a perfect, smooth-running muscle would, and never will. * * *

*It is a very unusual injury. I don't think I ever saw all of the flexor muscles severed before in a lower extremity. I never saw the flexor muscles about the knee cut off before unless the leg was amputated. * * **

The plaintiff was in the hospital for 15 weeks, and after leaving the hospital he walked with the aid of crutches and a cane for a time, and it was not until October, 1924, that he was able to return to work.

Dr. A. H. Jones, also an attending physician, testified in part as follows:

"There is an enormous amount of scar tissue where the compound fracture was, and it involves all the flexor muscles and all the way down to the bone. The flexor muscles all have scar tissue in them and are joined together by scar tissue. The scar tissue will never be replaced by muscle tissue; conversely, scar tissue always will contract; it will contract appreciably for 10 or 12 years; and the converse is going to be true; the scar tissue is going to pinch up more than the muscle tissue as time goes on. That tends to reduce the efficiency of the muscles. It limits the possible increase in the amount of muscle tissue. There is a permanent weakness."

In speaking of the respondent's ability to walk, Dr. Jones further testified:

"Of course, he is going to feel it; it is going to be weaker, and it is going to tire easier, and it is not going to have the endurance; and in case of going down hill, why, that action of preventing a person from falling forward is going to make it, he will have to be much more deliberate about his actions, have to be careful."

In speaking of the wire in respondent's leg, Dr. Jones said:

"The first thing that happens is that there is an area of osteoporosis around the wire; and the wire begins to get loose; and there is a constant conscious feeling of something wrong at the seat of the foreign body, and nature begins to get ready to cast it off; it softens the bone around it. * * * I think there is a reasonable probability, wherever you put a foreign body in the tissues, that nature will finally pass it out. * * * It is pretty hard to say what the probable effect will be [referring to the wire in respondent's leg]; that is a very good result. Wires do not usually stay in that good; they almost always—nature resists them and casts them out. I would say, trying to make a conscientious reply, that the chances for a man to live 35 years with that wire in there were about fifty-fifty that it would at some time become a foreign body."

The respondent also testified as follows:

"Well, if I am walking, my left leg always has to come down; it comes down solid; just straight, instead of like an ordinary person walking, their knees kind of spring. The tendons are stiff. * * * Going up and down stairs I always have to put my right foot up first, because if I bend my left one the muscles and things are not strong enough to pull me up at all on the left leg—I have to watch in walking or I will fall."

There were other physicians who attended the respondent, and their opinions and conclusions were, in the main, the same as those above quoted.

The record reveals that James A. Reneau, the father of respondent and his guardian ad litem in the case at bar, commenced an independent action against defendant and appellant to recover money expended by him for medical services, hospital charges, and loss of wages, etc., for respondent, and it was stipulated that his action might be dismissed and that these charges might be considered by the jury in this case, provided the jury determined appellant to be liable.

Only two grounds are urged for a reversal of the judgment. The first and principal contention made is that the verdict is excessive; second, misconduct of the attorney for respondent.

A motion for a new trial was made upon several grounds, among them being "excessive damages, appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice." Subdivision 5, § 657, Code Civ. Proc. The motion for a new trial was denied.

[1] The rule is well established that the amount of damages in this kind of an action is committed, first, to the sound discretion of the jury, and next to the discretion of the judge of the trial court, who, in ruling upon the motion for a new trial, may consider the evidence anew, determine anew the facts, and set aside the verdict if it is not just. Upon appeal, the decision of the trial court and the jury on the subject cannot be set aside unless the verdict is so plainly "and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury." Aldrich v. Palmer, 24 Cal. 516; Wheaton v. North Beach, etc., R. R. Co., 36 Cal. 591; Swain v. Fourteenth St. R. R. Co., 93 Cal. 185, 28 P. 829; Morgan v. Southern Pacific Co., 95 Cal. 501, 30 P. 601; Lee v. Southern Pacific Co., 101 Cal. 118, 35 P. 572; Howland v. Oakland C. St. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 523, 42 P. 983; Harrison v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 156, 47 P. 1019; Reeve v. Colusa G. & E. Co., 152 Cal. 99, 92 P. 89; Hale v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 713, 106 P. 83; Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513; Campbell v. Bradbury, 179 Cal. 364, 176 P. 685; Bisinger v. Sacramento Lodge No. 6, 187 Cal. 578, 203 P. 768; *Kelley v. [2] We have carefully examined the entire record, including the evidence, and there is nothing in the record to show or suggest that the verdict was not the result of the fair and honest judgment of the jury. The award of damages made by the jury, and sustained by the trial court, is large, but when the extent and character of the injuries received by respondent and the intense pain and suffering that he endured for so long are all considered, we think the award is not at all disproportionate to the compensation reasonably warranted by the facts.

[3] Appellant, in contending that the award of damages is excessive, lays great stress upon the fact that three physicians who examined the respondent just before the trial, which was approximately a year and six months after the injury, testified that there was little or no permanent injury to respondent's leg. This testimony did nothing more than raise a conflict in the evidence, which conflict was undoubtedly resolved in favor of the respondent, and the rule is well settled that in considering an attack upon a verdict as being excessive we must treat every conflict in the evidence as resolved in favor of the respondent, and must give to him the benefit of every inference that can reasonably be drawn in support of his claim. Kimie v. San Jose-Los Gatos Ry. Co., 156 Cal. 273, 104 P. 312; Riffel v. Letts, 31 Cal. App. 428, 160 P. 845.

[4] It is next contended by appellant that counsel for respondent was guilty of prejudicial misconduct. There is no merit in this contention. During the examination of the jurors on their voir dire the following proceedings were had:

"Mr. Wellman (Attorney for Plaintiff and Respondent): I would like to know if any of the jurors are connected as a stockholder or otherwise with the Royal Indemnity & Insurance Company?"

"Mr. Dunnigan (One of the Attorneys for Defendant and Appellant): I object to that question and assign it as error."

"The Court: Objections sustained."

"Mr. Wellman: I have an authority that I wish to hand to your honor."

"The Court: Very well, show this to counsel, please."

"Mr. Dunnigan: I have read the case, if your honor please, I still desire to urge the objection and take the court's ruling."

"The Court: Let me see the case. Mr. Reporter, will you read the last question again, please? (Question read by reporter.) Objection will be overruled. The jury may answer the question."

"Mr. Wellman: Are any of you connected in any way, as agents or otherwise, or as a stockholder, with the Royal Indemnity Insurance Company?"

"Jurors: No."

This question was entirely proper. Arnold v. California Portland Cement Co., 41 Cal. App. 425, 183 P. 171.

During the cross-examination of Dr. Bohme, a physician called as a witness by defendant, the following questions were propounded by plaintiff's counsel:

"Q. Do you examine people who are injured for different casualty companies? A. I do.

"Q. To what extent do you do that kind of work? A. Almost exclusively.

"Q. Your time is devoted almost entirely to examining people who are hurt, for casualty companies and insurance companies, is it? A. And corporations.

"Q. What compensation did you receive for examining this boy?

"Mr. Dunnigan: Objected to as immaterial.

"Mr. Wellman: To show the interest of the witness.

"The Court: Overruled. A. Twenty-five dollars.

"Mr. Wellman: What compensation do you expect to receive for appearing here and testifying?

"Mr. Dunnigan: Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

"Mr. Wellman: To show the interest of the witness.

"Mr. Dunnigan: He will get his money without regard to the results.

"The Court: Objection sustained."

[5] Appellant contends that these questions were asked for the purpose of prejudicing the jury against casualty insurance corporations in general and to convey to the jury the impression that appellant was insured against any damages by reason of the collision. The rule is, of course, well settled that evidence that a defendant in an action for damages is insured against loss by reason thereof is not admissible, and it would undoubtedly be improper for counsel for plaintiff to endeavor to get such a fact before the jury by questions designed solely for that purpose. Pierce v. United Gas Co., 161 Cal. 188, 118 P. 700; Roche v. Llewellyn Iron Works, 140 Cal. 563, 74 P. 147; Dameron v. Ansbro, 39 Cal. App. 289, 178 P. 874; Arnold v. California Portland Cement Co., 41 Cal. App. 427, 183 P. 171; De Liere v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 30 Cal. App. 612, 159 P. 197.

[6] We are unable to say, however, that the attorney for plaintiff transgressed the above rule in any of his questions, or that any of the questions were not within the bounds of legitimate cross-examination. Moreover, the questions complained of were nearly all answered without objection from defendant.

The attorney for plaintiff did not in any way attempt to prove that defendant was indemnified against loss by reason of the injury to plaintiff. Furthermore, the court expressly instructed the jury as follows:

"Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, before proceeding to give you the instructions in full, the court desires in a preliminary way to instruct you as to two different matters regarding insurance. * * * The fact that you do or do not believe that the defendant is insured by a liability insurance company has nothing whatever to do with the issues of this case. It would be error on the part of this court if it permitted it to be proved that the defendant carries liability insurance; and your verdict in this case, as between the plaintiff and defendant, shall be the same whether you do or do not believe that the defendant carries liability insurance."

We conclude that no prejudicial error was committed by plaintiff's counsel in propounding the questions complained of to appellant's medical experts on cross-examination, and there is nothing in the record from which it could be inferred or insinuated that plaintiff's counsel did not ask said questions in the utmost good faith.

No other points are urged for a reversal of the judgment in this case. It cannot be doubted that plaintiff received a most unusual and severe injury, and that he suffered great pain and anguish, and that he is, to a considerable degree, at least, permanently injured. While defendant denied negligence in his answer, no attempt is made on this appeal to deny that the chauffeur of defendant was negligent.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

LEWIS v. GRUNBERG et al. (Civ. 3306.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 30, 1927.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 27, 1928.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 519—Stipulation and order relative to submission of case to referee, not embodied in bill of exceptions or transcript, cannot be considered (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 650, 953a).

Where neither stipulation nor order that case be submitted to referee to try all issues and report finding and judgment thereon were embodied in bill of exceptions as provided by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 650, nor in transcript as provided by section 953a, reviewing court cannot consider either stipulation or order.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 967(1)—Reference is presumed special unless it may be inferred from recitals in findings of referee and court that it was general (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 638-645).

Unless it may be properly inferred from recitals in findings of referee and those of court that reference to referee was general in character, it must be presumed that it was special reference for benefit of court under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 638-645.

3. Reference $\S$ 99(2)—Reference held general, in view of its recitals and fact that court had no evidence before it.

Reference held general, where referee recited as part of findings that he was appointed to find upon both questions of law and fact, and it was clear from court's findings that there was no trial held by court and no evidence taken by it and that court did not have before it evidence submitted to referee.

4. Reference ~~to~~ 99(2)—Where reference was general, judgment must be entered in accordance with referee's findings; aggrieved party's remedy for referee's error being motion for new trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 644).

Where reference was general in nature, judgment should be entered on findings of referee filed in cause, in accordance with such findings, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 644, and, for any error committed by referee, remedy of aggrieved party was by motion for new trial or other appropriate proceeding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by J. A. Lewis against A. W. Grunberg and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Grunberg & Anderson, to recover money due under a contract for the purchase of merchandise. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed with directions.

J. Oscar Goldstein, of Chico, for appellants.

Bond & Deirup, of Chico, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. January 10, 1922, plaintiff and defendants entered into a written contract whereby the plaintiff agreed to sell and defendants agreed to buy a stock of merchandise. February 1, 1922, the parties entered into a supplemental contract concerning the same subject-matter. A dispute having arisen between the parties as to the proper construction to be given the contracts as to the price to be paid for the merchandise, and being unable to reach an adjustment of the controversy, this action was commenced by the plaintiff to recover the sum of $5,265.40, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 15th day of February, 1922, being the amount claimed by the plaintiff as due under the terms of said contract.

Defendants admit by their answer that there is due the plaintiff the sum of $3,814.23, and no more.

By its judgment, the court awarded the plaintiff the sum of $4,857.74, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from April 1, 1922, and from the judgment so entered the defendants appeal.

The appeal is upon the judgment roll alone. As a part of the judgment roll there appears a report and findings of fact by a referee, which, among other matters, recites:

"Pursuant to order of reference duly made and filed in the above-entitled action, wherein the undersigned, L. G. Faulkner, Esq., was duly appointed referee with direction to find upon matters of both law and fact, and, after hearings duly held under and by authority of said reference at the city of Chico, county of Butte, state of California, before said referee and all matters and things having been presented in due form and according to law by Bond & Deirup, Esqs., attorneys for plaintiff, and by J. Oscar Goldstein, Esq., attorney for defendants, and all witnesses having been called were duly sworn and testified. Now therefore, the evidence submitted to your referee having been duly considered by him, the said referee begs leave to submit his report as follows: Findings of law and facts upon trial of the issues involved."

While the said findings and conclusions of law therefrom are inartistically drawn, still they respond to the issues raised by the pleadings and the referee recommends a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants in the sum of $3,439.76, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 15th day of February, 1922, together with their costs of suit.

June 30, 1922, the court filed its findings and conclusions of law in this cause, in which it finds that the defendants are indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $4,857.74, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from April 1, 1922, and for his costs of suit.

Judgment was accordingly entered by the clerk on July 6, 1922, in favor of the plaintiff for said last-mentioned amount. In its findings the court recites:

"The above-entitled action came on regularly for hearing before the above-entitled court sitting without a jury, a jury having been waived by the respective parties hereto. Plaintiff was represented by Messrs. Bond & Deirup, his attorneys, and defendants by J. Oscar Goldstein, Esq., their attorney. The cause was heard upon the amended complaint, as amended, and the answer thereto, as amended, and upon the report of L. G. Faulkner, Esq., the referee heretofore appointed herein, the exceptions filed by the plaintiff, and the motion of the defendants to confirm the report, which motion was based and made upon the said report and upon all the files, records, pleadings, proceedings, exhibits, and all other matters pertaining to this cause, and the matter having been argued and submitted to the court for consideration and decision, and the court being fully advised in the premises, now finds."

The appellants complain that, the order of reference having been that the referee find upon questions of both law and fact, and the referee having done so, the court was without authority to set aside the findings of said referee and substitute its own therefor. In other words, it is their contention that the findings and conclusions of the referee have the same force and effect as though made by the court and judgment should have been entered in accordance therewith.

Respondent contends that there is nothing legally before the court from which it may determine the character of the order of reference, and that it must be presumed, in the absence of an affirmative showing of error, that the court acted within its authority, and that the said order of reference was special and not general in its nature.

There appears in the clerk's transcript a stipulation signed by all the attorneys that the cause be ordered to a referee "to try all of the issues in the above-entitled action, whether of fact or of law, and to report a finding and judgment thereon."

In pursuance of said stipulation there appears in said transcript an order signed by the judge of the court appointing L. G. Faulkner, Esq., a referee "to try all of the issues in this action, whether of fact or of law, and to report a finding and judgment thereon."

[1, 2] As neither the stipulation nor the order is embodied in a bill of exceptions, as provided by section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, nor in a transcript, as provided by section 953a of said Code, this court cannot consider either said stipulation or order (Totten v. Barlow, 165 Cal. 378, 132 P. 749; Richmond v. Julian Con. Min. Co., 176 Cal. 600, 169 P. 356), and, unless it may be properly inferred by the court from the recitals in the findings of the referee and those of the court that the reference was general in its character, it must be presumed that it was a special reference for the benefit of the court (sections 638 to 645, inclusive, Code Civ. Proc.; Tyson v. Wells, 2 Cal. 122; Faulkner v. Hendy, 103 Cal. 15, 36 P. 1021).

[3] The referee recites as a part of his findings that he was appointed to find upon both questions of law and fact. The court in its findings recites the proceedings had before it, the various documents presented and considered, and it is clear therefrom that there was no trial held by the court and no evidence taken by it, and also that the court did not have before it the evidence submitted to the referee. The court finds as a fact that the wholesale price of certain merchandise that had been damaged by fire, and concerning which there was a dispute between the parties, was the sum of $2,126.74, being the amount which the referee fixes by his findings as the wholesale price of said merchandise, but the referee finds that the actual value of said merchandise was the sum of $708.98, the latter amount being found by the court to be erroneous. With this exception the court adopted the findings of the referee and ordered a judgment for an amount in excess of that found due by the referee.

[4] We are satisfied from the foregoing recitals contained in the findings of the referee, and also from the recitals in the findings of the court, that the order of reference was general in its nature, and, under the provisions of section 644 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "the finding of the referee or commissioner upon the whole issue must stand as the finding of the court, and upon filing of the finding with the clerk of the court, judgment may be entered thereon in the same manner as if the action had been tried by the court." This holding is supported by the following authorities: In re Riccardi (Cal. App.) 251 P. 650, Weavering v. Schneider, 52 Cal. App. 182, 198 P. 418, and Clark v. Millsap, 197 Cal. 765, 242 P. 918. In these cases the distinction is pointed out between findings by a referee where the reference is general or special, and holding the findings conclusive where the reference is general, as in the case at bar.

Upon the filing of the findings of the referee in this cause, judgment should have been entered thereon in accordance with the findings, and, for any error committed by the referee, the remedy of the aggrieved party was by motion for a new trial, or other appropriate proceeding. Faulkner v. Hendy, supra.

Having reached the foregoing conclusion, it becomes unnecessary to consider any other question presented by counsel for either party. The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $3,429.76, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 15th day of February, 1922. The appellants will have and recover their costs on appeal.

Ex parte JEFFCOATES. (Cr. 1456.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 4, 1928.

Infants $\Leftrightarrow$ 20—Evidence held to sustain conviction for commission of crime against infant (Pen. Code, § 288).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 288, relative to commission of lewd or lascivious acts with children, evidence of child, where corroborated by other evidence including defendant's admission, held sufficient to sustain conviction.

Application by Ollie Jeffcoates for a writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco to secure petitioner's release from custody on a charge of violation of Pen. Code, § 288. Application denied.

Harry S. Whitthorne, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

TYLER, P. J. It appears from the petition that applicant was held to answer before the superior court for an alleged violation of section 288 of the Penal Code relating to crimes against children. It is claimed that the evidence is wholly insufficient to sustain said holding or the information subsequently filed. As in all cases based upon the section referred to, the evidence is of a sordid character. No useful purpose would be subserved by a recital of the same. It is sufficient to say that, while the evidence of the child is not wholly satisfactory, there is other evidence, including the admission of the defendant that he committed the acts, which establishes sufficient or probable cause to sustain the charge.

The application is denied.

DAVIS v. TANNER et al. (Civ. 3396.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 23, 1928.

1. Municipal corporations ⚡706(5)—Evidence held to support finding of negligence of taxicab driver injuring pedestrian.

Evidence, in action for death of pedestrian struck by taxicab, that driver of taxi, in place where traffic was badly congested, suddenly swerved in front of moving street car at excessive rate of speed and without sounding horn, supports implied finding of jury that driver was negligent.

2. Appeal and error ⚡1002—Verdict based on conflicting testimony will not be disturbed on appeal, where there is substantial evidence to support judgment.

An appellate court will not disturb verdict of jury based upon conflicting testimony, where there is substantial evidence to support judgment.

3. Municipal corporations ⚡706(7)—Contributory negligence of pedestrian injured by taxicab held for jury.

Evidence held not to show that pedestrian struck and killed by taxicab was contributorily negligent as matter of law.

4. Witnesses ⚡395—Sworn testimony of witness at coroner's inquest corroborating testimony at trial held competent, in view of introduction of subsequent statement to impeach witness on theory that testimony at trial had been fabricated.

Where former statement of witness was offered to impeach her on theory that she had colored her testimony at trial through inducement of one of counsel, testimony given at coroner's inquest two days after accident and before making of statement sought to be introduced, and which corresponded with and corroborated her testimony at trial, held competent.

5. Trial ⚡83(1)—Admission of evidence otherwise competent is not error because ground authorizing its reception is erroneously stated.

If evidence is otherwise competent under the pleadings and state of the record, it is not error to admit it merely because the ground authorizing its reception is erroneously stated.

6. Appeal and error ⚡232(2)—One failing to assign proper ground for admission of evidence cannot complain of its rejection.

One may not complain of the rejecting of evidence when upon request he fails to assign proper ground for its admission.

7. Witnesses ⚡361(1), 395—Evidence of prior statements are incompetent to rehabilitate testimony at trial merely because of effort to impeach witness' reputation or evidence of former inconsistent statements.

Evidence of prior statements consistent with testimony at former hearing are incompetent to rehabilitate witness' testimony at trial merely because effort has been made to impeach her general reputation or because of evidence of former statements inconsistent with present testimony.

8. Witnesses ⚡377, 395—Previous statement corresponding to testimony at trial is competent to rehabilitate witness' evidence, where he is charged with coloring or fabricating his testimony.

Where witness is charged with coloring his testimony from ulterior motives or that his testimony is fabrication of recent date, his previous statements, corresponding to testimony at trial, are competent, particularly if made prior to impeaching statement, to rehabilitate his evidence and refute inference of recent fabrication or improper influence.

9. Appeal and error ⚡994(2)—Extent that falsity of part of witness' testimony affects his credibility is exclusively within province of jury (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3).

Notwithstanding provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3, that witness false in one part of testimony is to be distrusted in others, it is exclusively within province of trial judge or jury to determine to what extent falsity of part of testimony or of former conflicting statements affect credibility of other statements.

10. Negligence ⚡122(1)—Defendant has burden of proving contributory negligence by preponderance of evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4, defendant has burden of proving by preponderance of evidence plaintiff's contributory negligence, since law presumes that plaintiff took ordinary care of his own concerns.

11. Negligence ⚡122(1)—Presumption that person takes ordinary care of his own concerns is evidence to be weighed by jury, but may be rebutted (Code Civ. Proc. § 1957, and § 1963, subd. 4).

Presumption under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4, that person takes ordinary care of his own concerns, is itself evidence, in view of section 1957, and is entitled to be weighed by jury, together with all other evidence in case, in determining issues involved, and, in absence of evidence to contrary, such presumption will prevail, but, like any other species of evidence, such presumption may be rebutted.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

12. Appeal and error ⚡882(12)—Defendant cannot complain of instruction containing language identical to that contained in instruction given at defendant's request (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4).

Defendant cannot complain of instruction as to presumption of ordinary care in plaintiff's favor under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4, where identical language was incorporated in instruction given at defendant's request.

13. Trial ⚡295(6)—Instruction in language of Motor Vehicle Act as to care of driver of vehicle held not misleading or prejudicial when read as whole (Motor Vehicle Act, § 113[a]).

Instruction in substantial language of section 113(a), Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553), as to care required of driver of vehicle on public street, was not misleading or prejudicial, where, when read as whole, in connection with other instructions, it fully advised jury of traffic law applicable to similar situations.

14. Trial ⚡296(8)—Use of words "satisfactory evidence" was not misleading. In view of repeated instructions that preponderance of evidence alone was sufficient to justify verdict.

Instruction containing phrase that, unless presumption of exercise of due care by plaintiff is overcome by "satisfactory evidence," jury should find for plaintiff, was not misleading, in view of repeated instructions that preponderance of evidence alone was sufficient upon which to justify verdict.

15. Trial ⚡295(1)—Instructions must be considered as a whole.

Instructions to jury must be considered as a whole.

16. Death ⚡85—Measure of damages for death of husband is properly based on pecuniary loss suffered.

In action by widow for death of husband, measure of damages is properly based upon pecuniary loss suffered on account of death of husband.

17. Death ⚡88—Instruction authorizing jury to consider disposition of deceased husband in estimating damages for death held proper.

Instruction, in action for death of plaintiff's husband, that, in estimating pecuniary loss suffered because of such death, jury might consider disposition of deceased, was proper, since it is proper to consider pecuniary loss a widow sustains in being deprived of society, comfort, and protection of her deceased husband.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Vinnie Wood Davis, as administratrix of the estate of Harvey D. Davis, deceased, against C. C. Tanner, doing business under the fictitious name and style of the Brown & White Cab Company, and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

George W. Seith and Louis P. Pink, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Culver & Nourse, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment and order denying a motion for new trial following a verdict for $11,000 damages for the death of respondent's husband, who was killed by appellants' automobile while attempting to cross Spring street in Los Angeles.

The appellants contend that (1) the judgment is not supported by the evidence; (2) that the trial court erred in admitting evidence of a witness of respondent given at the coroner's inquest, which was received for the purpose of rehabilitating her testimony at the trial, after an attempt had been made by the appellants to impeach her by introducing a former written statement made by her regarding the incident, which effort to impeach the witness was apparently offered on the theory that her testimony at the trial was a fabrication on her part of recent date, or that it was given through unwarranted influence exercised on the part of respondent's attorneys; and (3) that the court erred in giving certain instructions at the request of respondent.

The respondent is the surviving widow and the duly qualified administratrix of the estate of Harvey D. Davis, deceased. Appellant Tanner is a corporation operating a taxicab business in the city of Los Angeles, under the name of Brown & White Cab Company, and the appellant Crawford was engaged as a chauffeur of the cab which was involved in the accident. The deceased was a man 42 years of age, and possessed of good health and faculties. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon of February 4, 1924, he attempted to cross Spring street in Los Angeles amid congested traffic, midway between Fourth and Fifth streets as they cross Spring at right angles. A double line of street car tracks extends along Spring street at this point. A compact line of automobiles were parked along the westerly curb throughout the block. A second line of machines were standing toward his right, opposite the safety zone, at the southerly end of the block, awaiting the traffic signal to proceed across the intersection of Fifth street. Toward his left, about 75 feet distant, a street car and the taxicab involved in this action were approaching abreast, at an ordinary rate of speed, estimated at about 8 or 10 miles per hour. Under such circumstances the deceased stepped from the westerly curbing of Spring street at a point about the middle of the block, and, passing between two of the automobiles which were parked there, he looked toward his left whence danger from traffic might be expected on his side of the street, and then saw the street car and ap-pellant's taxicab at a distance of about 75 feet, approaching at a rate of speed which would warrant a reasonably prudent person in assuming he would have ample time to safely cross the street ahead of the vehicles. He then hastened forward and reached a point about the middle of the south-bound track, where he was struck by appellants' taxicab, which was speeding up to get ahead of the street car so as to avoid the line of stationary machines toward the southerly end of the block, which were awaiting the traffic signal to continue their course southerly. The taxicab swerved in ahead of the street car, causing the motorman to clang his bell violently as a warning. The taxicab struck the deceased and carried him a distance of 60 or 75 feet before the driver was able to stop the machine. The application of the brakes, in an effort to stop, left distinct skid marks on the pavement behind the taxicab some 60 feet in length. After the machine was brought to a stop, the deceased lay injured and bleeding in the north-bound track just ahead of the front left wheel of the taxicab. He was immediately taken to the hospital, and died within a few hours thereafter. The chauffeur testified that at the time of the accident he was traveling only about 18 or 20 miles per hour; that he swerved in ahead of the street car and suddenly saw the deceased only a few feet ahead of the machine; that he immediately applied the brakes, but was unable to avoid hitting the man. Expert testimony indicates without conflict that a similar automobile, under like circumstances, traveling 20 miles per hour, could be stopped with the use of the foot brake alone within a distance of 40 feet, and that a car going at the rate of 25 miles per hour could be stopped under similar conditions within 68 feet. Judging from the length of the skid marks it necessarily follows that at the time of the accident the taxicab must have been traveling at an unlawful and excessive rate of speed, and that the driver, without sounding a warning horn, rapidly and carelessly turned his machine in ahead of the street car, in spite of the congested condition of the traffic.

[1, 2] The record in this case therefore furnishes substantial evidence to support the implied findings of the jury to the effect that appellants were guilty of a lack of ordinary care, which was the proximate cause of the injuries resulting in the death of respondent's intestate. In view of the existence of the badly congested condition of traffic at this time and place, it was clearly negligent for the driver of the taxicab to thus suddenly swerve around and in front of the moving street car at an excessive rate of speed and without sounding a warning horn.

A taxicab driver is to be commended for prompt attention to the calls of his customers, but this diligence will not justify him in driving along a street which is congested with traffic at such an excessive rate of speed as to endanger the safety or lives of pedestrians who may be exercising their lawful privilege of using the street with such ordinary care for their own safety as would be required of a reasonably prudent person, consistent with the state of traffic under the surrounding conditions.

It is a well-established rule that an appellate court will not disturb the verdict of a jury based upon conflict of testimony where there is substantial evidence to support the judgment. 2 Cal. Jur. 921, § 543.

[3] Nor can the court hold that the record, as a matter of law, discloses evidence which will warrant the court in finding that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence. At the time of the accident, the traffic had been stopped on Spring street awaiting the sounding of the traffic signal. The approaching street car and taxicab were clearly visible to the deceased. They were some 75 feet distant when he passed between the machines parked at the curbing and he looked to his left, whence danger was to be anticipated, before he attempted to cross the street. This seems to furnish substantial evidence which will refute a charge of contributory negligence, particularly since the burden was on the appellants to show such lack of ordinary care on the part of the deceased. We are therefore of the opinion that the judgment and the verdict are amply supported by the evidence.

Prejudicial error is claimed by appellants in the admission of testimony on the part of Hilda M. Hogg, which was given at the coroner's inquest, to rehabilitate her evidence at the trial after an effort was made to impeach her. The accident resulting in the death of the intestate occurred February 4, 1924; the coroner's inquest was held two days later, on February 6, 1924; the written statement of the witness offered for impeachment to show recent fabrication was taken March 14, 1924; and the trial of the case occurred February 5, 1925. In brief, the testimony of the witness Hogg was as follows:

"I was on the west side of Spring street, * * * about the center of the south-bound track, between Fourth and Fifth streets. * * * I saw both the taxicab and Mr. Davis (before the accident occurred). * * * The taxicab and street car were about a third of a block (away) coming south from Fourth street, * * * running parallel, and about the same rate of speed. I saw Davis come out from between the parked line of machines on the west side * * * and incline his head to the north. * * * They (the street car and taxicab) were away (from him) about as far as from here to the outer door (a distance of about 60 or 75 feet). The taxicab was right along the front side of the street car. * * * After looking toward the north he (Davis) looked straight ahead * * * and began to cross. * * * The taxi speeded up in order to get in front of the street car, * * * and wasn't quite straightened out * * * when it struck him. (He was) about a step from the south-bound track, and it threw him up against the radiator and the fender of the taxi, * * * and sort of shot him forward off the radiator, * * * and then struck him again. * * * When the taxi finally came to a stop, * * * the left hand wheel was in the center of the north-bound track, * * * resting against his neck."

Upon cross-examination of the witness Hogg, her statement previously taken in writing March 14, 1924, by a representative of the appellants, who went to her room for that purpose and procured her to sign the same, was introduced in evidence for the avowed purpose of impeaching her. It is evident from the following colloquy between Mr. Pink, attorney for appellants, and Mr. Nourse, representing the respondent, that appellants believed and sought to give the jury the impression that the testimony given at the trial had been changed and recently fabricated as the result of the persuasion of Mr. Loveland, an associate in the law office of respondent's attorneys, in an interview which he held with the witness subsequent to the making of the written statement which was offered for impeachment purposes. Inquiry by Mr. Pink:

"Q. Could you have Mrs. Hogg back here? I would like to ask her about her talking—who talked to her out there at her home that night?"

Mr. Nourse, replying:

"A. Mr. Loveland, in my office, went out and talked to her. * * * Q. You don't know how long he was there?"

Mr. Loveland speaking:

"A. I think we talked over the case about half an hour. Q. How long were you there? A. I was there for a whole evening. Q. Two or three hours? A. Oh no; I would say an hour and a half. Q. Who else was there? A. A man by the name of Miller, and her (Mrs. Hogg's) sister were there. Q. Was Mr. Hogg there? A. Yes."

Furthermore, in cross-examination of Mrs. Hogg, respecting this written statement, Mr. Pink, by the use of sarcasm, clearly implies that he believed the testimony given at the trial was the result of recent fabrication on the part of the witness:

"Q. It (the statement) was correct? A. As far as I could (then) recollect. Q. You mean your recollection has improved, now that a year has gone by? A. I should like to state the condition I was in at that time. * * * Q. Your recollection has improved now that almost a year has gone by? A. Yes; it has. Q. And a year from now, you will remember even better? * * * It (the statement) was made just a little over a month after the accident? A. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Pink: I see."

The inference was conveyed that because of domestic trouble the witness had not slept for several nights just prior to the time this statement was made. The details of this written statement conform very closely to the testimony given at the trial, with the exception that the witness is there quoted as saying:

"I saw the taxicab start to swerve * * * in front of the street car. * * * A business man stepped from between two automobiles parked at the west curb of Spring street * * * I saw him take just four quick steps, and step directly in front of the taxi, which was going about 10 or 12 miles an hour. * * * The taxi driver stopped just as soon as he could, 20 or 30 feet after he struck the man. * * * The taxi driver was doing all he could to avoid running over the man."

It appears this statement was taken while the witness was subject to unusual mental strain and wearied from loss of sleep for three or four nights previous; it was reduced to writing by the representatives of appellants, and her signature was evidently reluctantly given, after much urging on the part of the scrivener.

[4-6] It is apparent from the record that appellants offered the former statement of the witness Hogg to impeach her, on the theory that she had fabricated or colored her testimony given at the trial through the urgent inducement of respondent's attorneys, with whom a recent conference was developed by appellants, with the manifest inference that this interview was the cause of whatever conflict exists between her testimony at the trial and her former statement made to appellants.

Under such circumstances her testimony given under oath at the coroner's inquest two days after the occurrence of the accident and before she could have been subject to the inferred influence of respondent's attorneys was competent, since it corresponded with and corroborated in every material detail her challenged testimony given at the trial. Nor was its admission prejudicial error, because counsel failed to assign the proper ground for its acceptance. If evidence is otherwise competent under the pleadings and the state of the record, it is not error to admit it merely because the ground authorizing its reception is erroneously stated. Upon the contrary, one may not complain of the rejecting of evidence when, upon request, he fails to assign a proper ground for its admission. In the first instance, the evidence is competent and therefore not prejudicial, while in the latter case the court has not been informed of the legal ground authorizing its admission, and the refusal to admit it under such circumstances may be said to be the fault of the party offering it in improperly assigning the ground which would justify its reception.

[7, 8] It is now a well-settled rule in California and in most of the states of this nation that evidence of prior statements consistent with, or corresponding testimony given at a former hearing, are incompetent to rehabilitate the testimony of a witness given at the trial, merely because an effort has been made to impeach her general reputation, or because evidence has been adduced of former statements inconsistent with her present testimony. 27 Cal. Jur. 178, § 153; 28 R. C. L. 654, § 238; Jones on Evidence, 3d ed., 1371, sec. 869; 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, sec. 469; 7 Enc. of Evidence, 231; 40 Cyc. 2787; Mason v. Vestal, 88 Cal. 396, 26 P. 213, 22 Am. St. Rep. 310; Barkly v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 1, 15 P. 307, 5 Am. St. Rep. 413; People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85; People v. Shaw, 36 Cal. App. 441, 172 P. 401. But there is an equally uniform exception to this rule recognized by all the authorities to the effect that, where the witness is charged with changing or coloring his testimony from ulterior motives or that his evidence is a fabrication of recent date, his previous statements corresponding to the testimony given at the trial are competent, particularly if they are made prior to the impeaching statement for the purpose of rehabilitating his evidence and refuting the inference of recent fabrication, or that the testimony was given as a result of improper influence or because of undue interest. 27 Cal. Jur. 179, § 153; 28 R. C. L. 655, § 239; 40 Cyc. 2787; Wharton's Crim. Ev. (10th Ed.) § 492; 2 Wigmore on Evidence, 2d ed., 642, sec. 1126-1129; 6 Jones Comm. on Ev., 4864, §§ 2456-2458; 7 Enc. of Ev., 235; Cal. Electric Light Co. v. Cal. Safe Dep. Co., 145 Cal. 124, 78 P. 372; Barkly v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 1, 15 P. 307, 5 Am. St. Rep. 413; People v. Doyell, supra; People v. Billings, 34 Cal. App. 549, 168 P. 396; Walsh v. Wyman, 244 Mass. 407, 138 N. E. 389; State v. Spisak, 94 Wash. 566, 162 P. 998; People v. Purman, 216 Mich. 430, 185 N. W. 725; In re McClellan's Estate, 21 S. D. 209, 111 N. W. 540; Zell v. Com., 94 Pa. 273; Gilbert v. Sage, 57 N. Y. 639; Baber v. Broadway, etc., Co., 9 Misc. Rep. 20, 29 N. Y. S. 40; Griffin v. Boston, 188 Mass. 475, 74 N. E. 687; Waller v. People, 209 Ill. 284, 70 N. E. 681; McLain v. British F. M. I. Co., 16 Misc. Rep. 336, 38 N. Y. S. 77.

Numerous cases are cited by appellants to uphold this contention that the instant case does not fall within the exception of the rule above stated. There is neither substantial dispute as to the rule of law nor as to the exception thereto. The difficulty, however, arises in an effort to apply the law to the facts and circumstances of a particular case. It would be an arduous and useless task to attempt to reconcile and discriminate these various cases. In 2 Wigmore on Evidence, at page 642, is found an interesting discussion of this subject, wherein the author attempts to reconcile the conflicting arguments upon this subject found in many of the leading cases. In support of the admission of former corresponding statements to rehabilitate the evidence of a witness sought to be impeached, this text says:

"On behalf of the admission of the supporting evidence, the earlier and conventional argument is that if a contradictory statement counts against a witness, a consistent one should count for him."

Upon the contrary, the modern prevailing view is that ordinarily such statements are inadmissible. They are not evidence in themselves (27 Cal. Jur. 169, § 143), and, where the conflict is conceded, it is said:

"Since the self-contradiction is conceded, it remains as a damaging fact, and is in no sense explained away by the (former) consistent statement. It is just as discrediting if it was once uttered, as though the other story had been told a score of times."

[9] This latter view is the one relied upon by appellants in the instant case, and was forcefully expressed by Mr. Justice Bigelow in the case of Com. v. Jenkins, 10 Gray (Mass.) 488. But the able author of Wigmore on Evidence says with respect to this argument: "Forceful as it seems at first sight, it is itself, in one respect based on a fallacy." For, after all, regardless of apparent conflicting statements made by a witness, either on the stand or out of court, it still becomes the duty of a jury to determine the facts and ascertain, if possible, which story speaks the truth. While the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3) provides "that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others," this is a mere rule to guide the court and the jury in determining the credibility of the witness and the weight of his testimony. Nevertheless, "it is exclusively within the province of a trial judge (or jury) to determine to what extent the falsity of a part of the testimony * * * (or of former conflicting statements) affects the credibility of other statements. 10 Cal. Jur. 1148, § 365. And likewise it has been held that "the jury may give credence to a witness who is false in a material part of his testimony, or to one whose testimony contains contradictions and inconsistencies." 27 Cal. Jur. 183, § 156. In the case of Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 76, 9 Am. Rep. 78, Mr. Justice Cooley, one of the most eminent jurists this country has produced, refutes the argument of Mr. Justice Bigelow in the Jenkins Case, supra, and concludes by saying:

"We think the circuit judge ought to be allowed a reasonable discretion in such cases, and * * * though such evidence should not generally be received, yet * * * his discretion in receiving it ought not to be set aside except in a clear case of abuse."

Particularly is this true where an impeaching statement has been taken under circumstances such as appears in the instant case, which leaves a grave doubt as to the accuracy or binding effect of such a statement, and under circumstances which makes a former statement of the witness made immediately after the accident, when there was no intimation of bias, prejudice or favoritism, peculiarly forceful and valuable to aid the jury in ascertaining the truth. In 2 Wigmore on Evidence, p. 647, it is said:

"A consistent statement at a time prior to the existence of a fact said to indicate bias, interest, or corruption will effectively explain away the force of the impeaching evidence, because it is thus made to appear that the statement in the form now uttered was independent of the discrediting influence. The former statements are therefore admissible."

It is not necessary that the party seeking to impeach the witness shall expressly state that his evidence is offered to prove a fabrication of recent date, nor to charge that the recent evidence was given under improper inducements in order to authorize the admission of corresponding statements made upon a prior occasion. It is sufficient if the evident purpose of the impeaching party, as disclosed by the record, indicates this to have been his purpose. In the case of Griffin v. Boston, supra, after stating the general rule, which excludes former corresponding statements, the court says:

"But there is one exception to that rule, and that is when it appears from the cross-examination, or otherwise that it may be the purpose of the cross-examining counsel to show that the testimony was a recent invention or impressed upon a witness by some undue influence. In such a case it is permissible for the purpose of restoring the credit of the witness to show that the testimony he makes upon the stand is like the statement which he made shortly after the accident. * * * The plaintiff's counsel contended * * * that the purpose of the cross-examination was simply to test the recollection of the witness; but we are of opinion that, while some of the questions and answers were for this purpose, the purpose also existed to impeach the witness * * * and to show that his testimony was a recent fabrication, created under the influence of the attorney for the defendant, in his office, shortly before the trial."

Likewise, in Baber v. Broadway, etc., supra, it is said:

"In order to come within the above exceptions to the rule, it is not necessary, as contended by the appellant's counsel, there be a direct charge of fabrication."

To the same effect, it is similarly held in Re McClellan's Estate, and in Zell v. Com., supra.

[10-12] Appellants contend that the court erred in giving the following instruction, to wit:

"The burden is upon the defendant to prove the negligence of Harvey D. Davis by a preponderance of the evidence, and, in considering the evidence upon this point, you will keep in mind that the law presumes that Harvey D. Davis, at the time in question here, took ordinary care of his own concerns."

This was a correct statement of the law. Section 1963, Code of Civil Procedure, subd. 4, provides it is a presumption "that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns." This disputable presumption declares no more than is asserted in the familiar maxim that "self-preservation is the first law of life." This presumption is itself declared to be evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 1957; Stafford v. Martinoni, 192 Cal. 724, 221 P. 919; Everett v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., 45 Cal. App. 332, 339, 187 P. 996; Mar Shee v. Maryland Assur. Corp., 190 Cal. 7, 210 P. 269), and is entitled to be weighed by the jury, together with all the other evidence in the case in determining the issue involved. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, this presumption will prevail. Chalmers v. Hawkins, (Cal. App.) 248 P. 727; Hatzakorjian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 97, 239 P. 709, 41 A. L. R. 1027; Crabbe v. Mammoth C. G. M. Co., 168 Cal. 500, 506, 143 P. 714; Everett v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., supra. Like any other species of evidence, this presumption may be rebutted. Where one relies upon a defense of contributory negligence, the party charged with such negligence is entitled to the benefit of the legal presumption that he exercised ordinary care, and the defense must overcome this presumption in order to obtain a favorable judgment in this regard. Moreover, in the instant case, the identical language of this presumption was incorporated in an instruction given to the jury at the request of the appellants. It necessarily follows that one may not complain of an instruction declaring the very principle of law which is given to the jury at his own request. Hyatt on Trials, vol. 2, § 1429.

[13-17] Appellants also complain of the giving of an instruction which quoted substantially the language of section 113 (a) of the California Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553), to the effect that the driver of a vehicle upon a public street or highway must operate it in a careful and prudent manner, and at a rate of speed consistent with the existing state of traffic. This instruction read as a whole in connection with the other instructions, which fully and fairly advised the jury of the traffic law applicable to similar situations, was not misleading or prejudicial. So also the jury was clearly instructed that their verdict must rest upon a preponderance of the evidence. The use of the phrase in one of the instructions to the effect that, "unless the presumption (of the exercise of due care) is overcome by satisfactory evidence, you will find for the plaintiff," could not have been misleading, for the jury was repeatedly informed that a preponderance of the evidence alone was sufficient upon which to justify a verdict. Nor is the instruction prejudicial, wherein appellants contend all of the elements of liability were not included, because it failed to exempt them from liability unless under the circumstances they should have reasonably anticipated the accident. The jury was fully instructed upon the reciprocal duties and obligations of the respective parties, and the instructions must be considered as a whole. Fairly construed, the several instructions offered by respondent affecting the measure of damages were specifically limited to a recovery of the pecuniary loss suffered on account of the death of respondent's intestate. This is a correct basis upon which to estimate damages in the instant case. 8 Cal. Jur. 1003, § 51. One instruction is criticized because it contained the statement that in estimating the pecuniary loss the jury might consider "the disposition of the said Harvey D. Davis as to whether it was kindly and affectionate or otherwise." This was not erroneous, since it was confined to elements only which may be considered in estimating pecuniary loss, and since it is proper to consider the pecuniary loss a widow sustains in being deprived of the society, comfort, and protection of her deceased husband. 8 Cal. Jur. 1007, § 53. Taken as a whole we are of the opinion that the jury was fully and fairly instructed as to the law of the case, and that no prejudicial error exists therein.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

WATSON v. NEWMAN.

(Civ. 6023.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 31, 1927.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 27, 1928.

1. Adoption ⇨3—Statutes relating to adoption, being in derogation of common law, must be strictly construed (Civ. Code, § 224).

Civ. Code, § 224, and other statutes relating to adoption, being in derogation of common law, rule of strict construction applies, especially when purpose or effect thereof is to deprive natural parent of possession of his child.

2. Adoption ⇨3—If statute relating to adoption is open to interpretation, it should be construed in support of rights of natural parent (Civ. Code, § 224).

Courts, being solicitous in preserving integrity of family, and zealous to protect rights of parents, will construe every intendment of Civ. Code, § 224, and other statutes relating to adoption in favor of claim of natural parent, all doubts being resolved in his favor, and, if statute is open to interpretation, it should be construed in support of rights of natural parent.

3. Adoption ⇨7—Word "divorced" in statute as to consent to adoption of parents means dissolution of marriage (Civ. Code, §§ 90, 224).

Under Civ. Code, § 224, providing that consent of father to adoption is essential, unless he has been adjudged guilty of extreme cruelty, and for that cause divorced, word "divorced," strictly construed, means dissolution of marriage, and marriage is dissolved only as provided by section 90.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Divorce.]

4. Adoption ⇨7—Interlocutory divorce decree did not dissolve marriage relation within statute relating to adoption (Civ. Code, §§ 90, 224).

Under Civ. Code, § 90, entry of interlocutory decree in divorce action did not dissolve marriage relation within meaning of section 224 relating to adoption, since office of interlocutory decree is merely that of declaring that party in whose favor court decides is entitled to divorce, and relation of husband and wife remains until marriage is dissolved by final judgment.

5. Adoption ⇨7, 14—Where mother died after securing interlocutory divorce decree on ground of extreme cruelty, but before final judgment, court had no jurisdiction to make valid order of adoption of child without father's consent, and could vacate order (Civ. Code, §§ 90, 224).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 90, 224, where mother died after she had secured interlocutory decree in action for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, but before final judgment, parties were still husband and wife, and court was without jurisdiction to make valid order of adoption of child without father's consent, and was therefore justified afterwards in vacating order.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Motion by Ralph Newman against Lila Watson to set aside an order of adoption of Margaret Newman. From an order vacating the order of adoption, Lila Watson appeals. Affirmed.

Owen D. Richardson, of San Jose, for appellant.

Fred L. Thomas and Archer Bowden, both of San Jose, for respondent.

★Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

KNIGHT, J. On March 24, 1925, Lila Watson adopted the infant child of Ralph and Mary Newman without obtaining the consent of its father, and on May 15, 1925, at the instance of the father, the order of adoption was set aside. This appeal has been taken from the order vacating, and the question presented for determination is whether under the circumstances hereinafter set forth the consent of the father was essential to the adoption.

The parents of the child were married in March, 1921, and lived together as husband and wife until February, 1924, at which time they separated. Margaret Newman, the child here involved, was the issue of the marriage, having been born about seven months prior to the separation of her parents. In March, 1924, Mrs. Newman, who was then residing in San Jose with her sister, Lila Watson, filed a complaint for divorce, alleging extreme cruelty. Her husband filed a cross-complaint for divorce upon similar grounds. The record before us does not show that findings in the divorce action were ever made or waived; however, on September 4, 1924, an interlocutory judgment of divorce was granted and entered in favor of Mrs. Newman, and she was awarded the custody of the child, Newman being directed to pay $35 a month for its maintenance, and being granted the right to visit the child at reasonable times. It appears that, following the granting of the interlocutory decree, Mrs. Newman continued to make her home with her sister, the child living with them; and on March 25, 1925, Mrs. Newman died.

A few days preceding her death Newman visited her, and, according to his affidavit, Lila Watson at that time requested him "to leave" the child in her custody, which he refused to do. The next day, March 21st, Mrs. Newman executed a written consent to the adoption, and on March 24th the order of adoption was obtained, it being alleged in the petition that the father of said minor child, said Ralph Newman, was adjudged guilty of cruelty and for said cause was divorced from said Mary Newman * * * by the interlocutory judgment of said court. * * *

It was on the day following the adoption proceeding that Mrs. Newman died. Newman at this time was residing in Oakland, and within a month thereafter learned of the adoption proceeding through friends, and immediately filed a motion, supported by affidavit, to set aside the order of adoption. In his affidavit he stated, among other things, that his place of residence in Oakland, where he had lived for some time, was well known to Lila Watson, but that she had given him no notice whatever of the intended adoption proceeding. On May 15, 1925, his motion was granted.

Section 224 of the Civil Code reads as follows:

"A legitimate child cannot be adopted without the consent of its parents, if living, nor an illegitimate child without the consent of its mother if living, except that consent is not necessary in the following cases, to wit: * * *

2. From a father or mother adjudged guilty of adultery or cruelty and for either cause divorced. * * *

(Italics ours.)

The contention of appellant is that unless appealed from or set aside, an interlocutory decree of divorce is final as to all matters properly adjudicated therein; and that therefore the interlocutory decree here, having adjudged the father to be guilty of cruelty, and that his wife was entitled to a divorce from him on that ground, and not having been appealed from or set aside, the father was "divorced" upon the ground mentioned within the meaning of said section 224 of the Civil Code.

[1, 2] We are unable to sustain this contention. It may be stated generally that, since the statutes relating to adoption are in derogation of the common law, the rule of strict construction applies, especially when the purpose or effect thereof is to deprive a natural parent of the possession of his child; and the courts, being solicitous in preserving the integrity of the family, and zealous to protect the rights of the parents, will construe every intendment thereof in favor of the claim of the natural parent, all doubts being resolved in his favor; and, if the statute is open to interpretation, it should be construed in support of the rights of the natural parent. 1 Cal. Jur. 421; In re Cordy, 169 Cal. 150, 146 P. 532, 534; Matter of Cozza, 163 Cal. 514, 126 P. 161, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 214; In re McGrew, 183 Cal. 177, 190 P. 804.

[3] As shown, under the provisions of section 224 of the Civil Code the consent of the father to the adoption was essential, unless he had been adjudged guilty of extreme cruelty, and for that cause "divorced." Construing the word "divorced" strictly, it can mean but one thing, a dissolution of the marriage; and a marriage is dissolved only by death of one of the parties, or "by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction decreeing a divorce of the parties." Civil Code, § 90. (Italics ours.)

[4] It has been repeatedly held that the entry of an interlocutory decree does not dissolve the marriage relation, and the parties thereto remain in the relation of husband and wife until the marriage is dissolved by the final judgment. See cases cited in note to 9 Cal. Jur. pp. 757, 758. The office of the interlocutory decree is merely that of declaring that the party in whose favor the court decides is entitled to a divorce. Olson v. Superior Court, 175 Cal. 250, 165 P. 706, 1 A. L. R. 1589; Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 1, 147 P. 1168; Estate of Dargie, 162 Cal. 51, 121 P. 320. It is but a step in the divorce proceeding. Brown v. Brown, supra.

[5] In the present case death dissolved the marriage before the parties were divorced. At the time of Mrs. Newman's death, therefore, the parties were still husband and wife, and, while that relationship existed, the consent of the father to the adoption of his child was essential, and, not having been obtained, the court was without jurisdiction to make a valid order of adoption (Estate of Sharon, 179 Cal. 447, 177 P. 283), and was therefore justified afterwards in vacating the order (Miller v. Higgins, 14 Cal. App. 156, 111 P. 403; Estate of Pillsbury, 175 Cal. 454, 166 P. 11, 3 A. L. R. 1396; Bell v. Krauss, 169 Cal. 387, 146 P. 874).

For the reasons above stated, the order appealed from is affirmed.

GALLETTA v. LEHMAN et al. (Civ. 6026.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 31, 1927.

Judgment §589(1)—In suit to enjoin execution on justice court's judgment, validity of judgment, having been determined in mandamus proceedings, was res judicata.

Where, in mandamus proceeding to compel justice's court to recall and quash execution issued under its judgment, it was held that judgment was not void, validity of such judgment was res judicata in subsequent suit to restrain service of other executions under same judgment on ground that it was void.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by A. Galletta against Felix Lehman and another to enjoin execution pursuant to justice court's judgment and for damages. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. Slikerman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

M. H. Hernan, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend. Judgment in defendants' favor was entered accordingly, and plaintiff appeals.

The action purports to be one for an injunction and for damages. The complaint contains four counts which are loosely drawn, but it may be gleaned therefrom that by the first cause of action plaintiff seeks to enjoin the defendants from serving, or causing to be served, any executions issued, or to be issued, against plaintiff pursuant to a justice's court judgment theretofore obtained by the defendant Lehman against plaintiff; and the remaining causes of action are for the recovery of damages which plaintiff claims to have suffered as a result of being temporarily deprived of the use of a truck levied upon under certain executions previously issued pursuant to said justice's court judgment; also for exemplary damages based upon the ground that in making said levies "defendants were guilty of oppression and malice."

From an examination of the entire complaint, it becomes obvious that each of the causes of action attempted to be stated is grounded upon the assumption that said justice's court judgment is void, and therefore each constitutes a collateral attack thereon; furthermore, the question of the validity of said justice's court judgment was directly assailed by plaintiff in a proceeding in mandamus instituted by him in this court to compel the justice's court to recall and quash one of the executions issued thereunder (Galletta v. Justice's Court, 73 Cal. App. 95, 238 P. 133), and it was held that the judgment was not void, and for that reason this court refused to grant the writ directing that the execution be recalled. The foregoing decision was rendered prior to the hearing of the demurrer herein, and it is apparent therefrom that the causes of action attempted to be pleaded by plaintiff in this action were groundless. The trial court was therefore justified in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GONZALES. (Cr. 1538.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. Jan. 5, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 5, 1928.

1. Criminal law ☞1111(1)—Accused, convicted of subsequent violation of Wright Act, could not show on appeal that prior convictions were under ordinance, where not disclosed on record (St. 1921, p. 79).

In prosecution under Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79) for unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor, where accused pleaded guilty to charge, as well as theretofore having been found guilty of three several offenses of same character, was convicted, and on appeal urged that prior convictions were for violation of local city ordinance, and, consequently, conviction might not be pleaded in prosecution for violation of statute, but record on appeal failed to disclose such facts, held, since it must be assumed that record as it stood was correct, that point advanced by accused could not be sustained.

2. Criminal law ☞1144(1/2)—Nothing appearing in record as to what was done, presumption is that what ought to have been done was rightly done.

Where nothing appears in record as to what was done, it will be presumed in favor of judgment that what ought to have been done was not only done, but rightly done; and that, when record affirmatively shows what transpired, it will not be presumed that something different was done.

3. Criminal law ☞1144(5)—Though existence of jurisdictional fact is not affirmed on record, such fact will be presumed.

Though existence of jurisdictional fact is not affirmed on record, such fact will be presumed.

4. Criminal law ☞1202(1)—Accused need not be convicted as second offender under Wright Act before being charged as third or fourth offender (St. 1921, p. 79).

Where defendant pleaded guilty to violation of Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79) and to having theretofore been found guilty of three several offenses of same character and contended that she should have been convicted as second offender before information charging her as a third or fourth offender could be filed, held that, in the absence of express direction, court would not hold that intent of statute was though defendant had been found guilty of two separate violations, she could not be charged with them, unless on trial of second offense defendant was also charged with first conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Trixie Gonzales (also known as Rosa Washington) was convicted of unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors, and she appeals. Affirmed.

A. S. Maloney and Lester G. King, both of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant pleaded guilty to a charge of unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor as well as to theretofore having been found guilty of three several offenses of the same character. Thereupon she was sentenced to serve one year in the county jail and to pay a fine of $500, with the payment of $250 of such fine being "suspended." She appeals from the judgment.

The first point made by appellant is that:

"The judgment of the court is excessive, and therefore void, for the reason that a conviction under a city ordinance cannot be pleaded in aggravation of punishment in a state court in a prosecution under the Wright Act."

[1-3] In connection therewith, appellant directs attention to what she claims occurred at the time sentence was imposed, to wit, that her counsel requested the judge of the trial court to take judicial notice of the fact that each of the several prior convictions of defendant was for a violation of a local city ordinance, and, consequently, that a conviction therefor might not be pleaded for violation of a state statute. The record on appeal, however, fails to disclose the facts to which appellant refers. Nor does the language appearing in the information against defendant support her contention. Each of the several allegations as to two of the charges in the information was to the effect that at a specified time, in the police court of the city of San Bernardino, the defendant was convicted of the commission of the named offense; and as to the third of such charges, in the justice court of San Bernardino township, she likewise had been so convicted. The record is silent with reference to the designation of any particular statute or ordinance under the provisions of which either or any of such convictions of defendant was had. As in substance is stated in Crouch v. H. L. Miller & Co., 169 Cal. 341, 344, 146 P. 880, where nothing appears in the record as to what was done, it will be presumed in favor of the judgment that what ought to have been done was not only done, but rightly done; and that when the record affirmatively shows what transpired, it will not be presumed that something different was done. In 15 Cal. Jur. p. 68, where the authorities are cited, the rule is announced that, even though the existence of a jurisdictional fact be not affirmed on the record, such fact will be presumed. It thus becomes clear that this court is powerless to supply the deficiency, if any, existing in the record herein, and thus make it coincide with appellant's statement of the facts either as to what occurred at the time judgment was pronounced

LONDON GUARANTEE & ACCIDENT CO., Limited, v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 12754.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1927.

1. Master and servant ☞404, 405(1)—Hearsay evidence is admissible in proceeding before Industrial Accident Commission and may be sufficient to establish fact at issue.

Hearsay evidence is admissible in workman's compensation proceeding before Industrial Accident Commission and may be sufficient to establish any fact at issue.

2. Master and servant ☞417(7)—Industrial Accident Commission's finding of dependency, supported by evidence, is conclusive.

Industrial Accident Commission's finding that father was dependent on deceased son because deceased son had contributed $25 per month to use of his father, which sum father actually used for his maintenance and support, being supported by evidence, was conclusive, since findings of commission on question of dependency will not be disturbed when supported by evidence in record.

3. Master and servant ☞388—That father's brother owed him money held not to relieve father's dependency on deceased son.

That father's brother owed him money, interest from which would have supported him in accustomed manner, did not relieve father's dependency on deceased son, killed in course of employment, where father's mental condition was such that he did not know of debt, and it was discovered accidentally by another son after first son's death, and money was later collected.

4. Master and servant ☞388—"Dependency" exists where contributions are looked to for support in maintenance of dependent's accustomed mode of living.

"Dependency" of claimant on deceased employee does not mean absolute dependency for necessities of life, but it is sufficient that contributions of employee are looked to for support in maintenance of dependent's accustomed mode of living.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Dependency.]

5. Master and servant ☞388—That claimant owns some property does not prevent him from being dependent on earnings of deceased workman.

Mere fact that claimant has some property of his own does not necessarily prevent him from being dependent on earnings of deceased workman.

6. Master and servant ☞388—Question of dependency on deceased workman must be determined by facts appearing at time of injury.

Question of dependency of father on deceased son must be determined in accordance with facts as they appeared at time of injury to son, and subsequent obtaining of money by father could not affect award.

Curtis, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by John Murray, an incompetent person, by his guardian ad litem and trustee, for the death of Ralph Murray, his son, claimant, opposed by the London Guarantee & Accident Company, Limited, insurer. The Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation, and the insurer brings certiorari. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal, 260 P. 354.

Haas & Dunnigan, H. E. Forster, and H. C. Johnston, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. By this proceeding petitioner seeks to have annulled an order, made by respondent Industrial Accident Commission, awarding compensation in the sum of $900 to one John Murray, as a partial dependent, on account of death of his son, Ralph, through injury received in the ordinary course of employment. Upon petition for writ of review the District Court of Appeal for the Second District annulled the award, and the cause is now before us for hearing. Petitioner appears as the insurer of the employer of said deceased, Ralph Murray.

The sole question to be determined is whether the evidence adduced before respondent commission sufficiently supports its findings and establishes, first, that the father was at least partially dependent upon his said son for support, and, second, that part of the earnings of said son were actually turned over to the father and used by him for his said support and maintenance.

It will suffice to state, without setting forth the evidence at length, that it substantially imports the following facts: The aged father, a man of 76 years at the time of death of the son, was injured during 1920 or 1921 in an automobile accident. As a result he became totally incapacitated for work and suffered a mental breakdown, his mental state growing worse with passing years. He had theretofore been alienated from his wife and family and had for some 20 years led a solitary life, existing as a miser in rough shacks along the bank of the Mississippi river, and occupying himself with picking up old rags, bottles, etc. He suffered the continued mental delusion that he was absolutely penniless and without means of livelihood or support. Continuously throughout the years of the father's incapacity said deceased son had sent him each month the sum of $25. Although there were six other children, apparently none of them had ever contributed to the support of their father, and it is questionable whether their circumstances were such as would have enabled them to do so. Shortly after the death of Ralph, another son, Walter, secured the commitment of the father to an insane asylum.

Such action gave rise to a peculiar situation upon the hearing of this case before the commission in that it made it difficult, if not almost impossible, to secure the testimony desired for a proper determination of the matter. The testimony of the father could not be had, or, if secured, it would have been valueless on account of his mental condition and especial delusion as to money matters. Furthermore, owing to his queer lonely life but few of the true facts or circumstances were known to outside persons. Hence by far the greater portion of the proof, and especially that relating to contributions made by deceased to the father, consisted of hearsay evidence.

[1] Hearsay evidence, however, is admissible in a proceeding before the commission and may be sufficient to establish any fact at issue. See State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Ind. Acc. Com., 195 Cal. 174, 180, 231 P. 996, 999, and cases therein cited. As is there said:

"The cases construing the act since the adoption of the amendment of 1917 [St. 1917, p. 831] leave no room for doubt as to the probative sufficiency of hearsay evidence if in the judgment of the commission such evidence carries with it convincing force. It is, in this class of cases, legal evidence and may be sufficient in itself to sustain an award."

[2] Although here the evidence may appear to be somewhat indefinite in certain respects and lacking in requisite strength, yet in view of the circumstances of the case as above related, it was, if believed by respondent commission, legally sufficient to support their conclusion in the premises, to wit, that the son contributed $25 per month to the use of his father, which sum was actually used by said father for his maintenance and support. To put it another way, the question as to dependency is one of fact upon which the findings of the commission, having sufficient support in the evidence, are conclusive. "It is to be borne constantly in mind that questions as to who are dependents and the extent of dependency are to be determined primarily by the commission, and, in accordance with general rules governing the review of findings, its conclusions in this regard will not be disturbed when supported by evidence in the record." 27 Cal. Jur. 289, § 25.

The record further shows that at the time the father received news of the death of his son, Ralph, he was visiting another son, Walter, at Fort Dodge, Iowa. During the visit, said Walter discovered some figures in a notebook belonging to the father, who, upon being questioned, admitted that at some previous date he had loaned to his own brother (Walter's uncle), $5,000 or more, in return for which the brother made out certain promissory notes. However, instead of delivering them to the lender as evidence of the debt, he kept both notes and money. He never paid interest on the money, nor did he make known the existence of the transaction during passing years. Said Walter thereupon went to the brother and succeeded in securing his father's property, reduced to cash in amount of $5,500. He was thereafter appointed guardian for his father, and as such guardian retained said sum for the purpose of meeting expenses at the insane asylum.

[3] In the face of the fact that at the time of the injury the father was utterly without knowledge of his right to said money, it is contended that because it really belonged to him he was not dependent upon his son, Ralph, as interest from said estate would have supported him in his accustomed manner of living, or he could have been using the principal, in which event his dependency would only have started upon exhaustion of said fund. The mere statement of such a contention reveals its fallacy. In the first place, the father did not actually have possession of the estate, nor was it of any monetary value to him. So far as he was concerned, at most it consisted of the unproved claim, if he should happen to remember its existence, of an insane man against his brother, and the verbal promise of said brother to pay, which promise might or might not be fulfilled. The brother never recognized the debt or evidenced the slightest intention of paying it. As it had passed from the memory of the father, he was in no position to look to it for support. But for the chance discovery of the figures in the notebook, the true facts might never have come to light. Certainly such a situation cannot be held to have relieved dependency upon the son.

[4, 5] The true test of dependency is stated as follows in L. R. A. 1916A, p. 248:

"Dependency * * * does not mean absolute dependency for the necessities of life; it is sufficient that contributions of the workman are looked to for support in the maintenance of the dependent's accustomed mode of living.

"The mere fact that the claimant has some property of his own does not necessarily prevent him from being dependent upon the earnings of the deceased workman" (citing Carter's Case [1915] 221 Mass. 105, 108 N. E. 911).

See, also, 25 R. C. L. 771, § 66, where the rule is similarly stated, and 27 Cal. Jur. 289, § 25.

[6] The subsequent obtainment of the estate cannot affect the award made, as questions of dependency are determined in accordance with the facts as they may appear at the time of injury to the employee. 27 Cal. Jur. 291, § 26, and many cases there cited.

Award affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

CURTIS, J. I dissent. The undisputed evidence shows that John Murray, the respondent and the father of the deceased, was, at the time of the death of his son, possessed of property of the value of approximately $5,500. This property consisted of money loaned out by the brother of the father, and was represented in the form of notes receivable, and there is not a scintilla of evidence to show that these notes were not worth their face value. In fact, as recited in the majority opinion, they were in a short time after the death of the son "reduced to cash in an amount of $5,500." The finding, therefore, of the commission, that the father was partially dependent upon his son during the lifetime of the latter, finds no support whatever in the evidence.

CONDON v. ANSALDI. (S. F. 12125.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 20, 1928.

Hearing Denied in Bank Feb. 16, 1928.

I. Appeal and error ⇨933(6)—Minute order governs in specification of grounds for granting new trial, and is conclusively presumed to set forth action taken by court.

Where, in record, statement by court tends to support contention that new trial was granted solely on ground of supposed error of court in giving instructions, and minute order granting motion for new trial contained no such specification, but was simply general order granting motion, held, under these circumstances, minute order must govern, and it must be conclusively presumed to set forth action taken by court on motion.

2. Appeal and error ⇨933(4)—Order granting new trial, not specifying ground as on insufficiency of evidence, will be presumed not based on that ground (Code Civ. Proc. § 657).

Where order granting new trial which was appealed from did not specify that it was granted on ground of insufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, it will be presumed, on appeal, that it was not based upon that ground.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1064(1)—Instruction that negligence of driver of automobile striking pedestrian was to be determined without regard to injury sustained held prejudicial.

Where, in action for injuries alleged by plaintiff to have been sustained when she was knocked down and run over by automobile owned and driven by defendant, court instructed that jury was to determine question of negligence without any regard to injury plaintiff may have sustained, and there was conflict of evidence respecting negligence of defendant, held, giving of instruction was prejudicial to rights of plaintiff.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨705(11)—Pedestrian may hold driver of automobile, although driver's negligence was not sole cause of injury, if it was proximate cause.

Where, in action against driver of automobile for injuries which plaintiff sustained when struck by automobile, court instructed jury that, unless defendant was solely responsible for occurrence of accident complained of, the verdict must be for defendant, held, that new trial was properly granted, since law does not require that negligence of defendant must be sole cause of injury, and all that is required is negligence shall be proximate cause of injury.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Mary Condon against Giovanni Ansaldi for damage for personal injuries. Judgment for defendant, and from order granting plaintiff's motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Cooley & Gallagher, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Reisner & Deming, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. [1-3] Action to recover damages for injuries which plaintiff alleged she sustained in being knocked down and run over by an automobile owned and driven by defendant. A trial was had before a jury which rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was granted by the court, and the defendant has appealed from this order. It is contended by appellant that the motion for a new trial was granted by the trial court solely on the ground of the supposed error of the court in giving instructions numbered 28 and 29. While there is in the record a statement by the court which would tend to support this contention of appellant, the minute order granting the motion for a new trial contains no such specification, but is simply a general order granting the motion. Under these conditions the minute order must govern, and it must be conclusively presumed to set forth the action taken by the court upon the motion. Morgan v. Robinson Co., 157 Cal. 348, 107 P. 695; Weisser v. Southern Pacific Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 426, 83 P. 439, 7 Ann. Cas. 636; Kent v. Williams, 146 Cal. 3, 79 P. 527; Ben Lomond Wine Co. v. Sladky, 141 Cal. 619, 75 P. 332; Power v. Fairbanks, 146 Cal. 611, 80 P. 1075; Biaggi v. Ramont, 189 Cal. 675, 209 P. 892. As the order appealed from does not specify that it was granted upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, it will be presumed that it was not based upon that ground. Section 657, Code Civ. Proc. The only ground urged by respondent, therefore, which can be considered by this court in determining the validity of said order, is the alleged error of the trial court in giving certain instructions numbered 20, 21, 28, and 29, which were given the jury at the request of the appellant. We can see no real objection to instructions numbered 20 and 21. In instruction numbered 28, however, the jury were instructed that:

"You are to determine the question of negligence without regard to any injury the plaintiff may have sustained."

Just what meaning was intended to be conveyed by this instruction is not clear. That it would have the effect of confusing the minds of the jurors we think is quite evident. However, it may have had a more serious and injurious effect upon the jurors than simply confusing them, owing to the evidence in this particular case. The nature of the injuries sustained by the plaintiff in the collision with defendant's automobile might have had an important bearing upon the jury's determination of the defendant's negligence, had they been permitted to consider said injuries. Plaintiff sustained a broken leg and other severe wounds as the result of her coming in contact with the automobile. She testified that she was knocked down and run over and her leg broken by the force of defendant's automobile as it was driven at a rapid rate of speed by defendant.

[4] On the other hand, the defendant testified that he saw plaintiff "coming, and at the same time she stopped, and she hung herself on the radiator, and the machine was stopped right there, and the time I started to get off the machine the lady was hanging there with her hands on the radiator cap, and she fell right back." While she might have received a broken leg in falling from the machine in the manner described by defendant, yet such a serious injury would have been an unusual result from such slight fall. On the other hand, it is quite a common experience for a victim of an accident who, while walking upon a paved street, has been knocked down and run over by an automobile, to receive a broken limb or even a much more serious injury. Had the jury been permitted to take into consideration the serious nature of plaintiff's injuries, it might have concluded that the plaintiff's, rather than the defendant's, version of the accident was the true and correct account of what happened at the time of the collision. In view of the sharp conflict in the evidence respecting the negligence of defendant, the giving of this instruction in our opinion was prejudicial to the rights of the plaintiff, and justified the judge of the trial court in granting the motion for a new trial. In this same instruction, as well as in instruction numbered 29, the court told the jury that, "unless the defendant is solely responsible for the occurrence of the accident complained of, your verdict must be for the defendant." In Griffith v. Oak Ridge Oil Co., 190 Cal. 389, 392, 212 P. 913, 914, this court, through Chief Justice Myers, said:

"The law does not require that negligence of the defendant must be the sole cause of the injury complained of in order to entitle the plaintiff to damages therefor. All that is required in either respect is that the negligence in question shall be a proximate cause of the injury.
* * *

We cannot say but that the plaintiff was prejudiced by the giving of this instruction, as well as that part of instruction No. 28 first quoted above. It evidently was the opinion of the trial judge that by the giving of these two instructions the rights of the plaintiff had been seriously prejudiced, and for that reason he granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial. In doing so we think he acted properly.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

KELSEY v. MILLER. (L. A. 8539.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 5, 1928.

1. Husband and wife $\hookrightarrow$ 14(3)—That wife aided husband's divorce from former wife did not per se work forfeiture of her right to procure joint tenancy deed of property purchased with her funds.

That wife, before marriage, counseled, aided, assisted, and abetted husband's divorce from former wife did not per se work a forfeiture of her right to dispose of her property on same terms as others, as by procuring execution of joint tenancy deed to property paid for with her funds.

2. Deeds $\hookrightarrow$ 196(3)—Evidence in suit to annul joint tenancy deed held to rebut presumption of husband's undue influence over wife (Civ. Code, §§ 158, 2235).

In administrator's action against decedent's husband to annul joint tenancy deed, evidence held to rebut presumption of undue influence by husband, under Civ. Code, §§ 158, 2235.

3. Husband and wife $\hookrightarrow$ 266—Marriage $\hookrightarrow$ 11—Invalidity of one divorce decree would not inevitably nullify husband's subsequent marriages and acquisition of property rights from later wife.

Invalidity of one divorce decree for want of jurisdiction to render it would not inevitably nullify husband's subsequent marriages and transactions whereby he obtained property rights from subsequent wife.

4. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 65—Wife's pro confesso, filed in husband's divorce suit, constituted appearance, giving court jurisdiction of defendant.

Pro confesso, executed by wife and caused to be filed as record in husband's divorce suit, reciting that she waived notice, copy, pleading, and term, and agreed to immediate trial, constituted appearance, giving court jurisdiction of defendant.

5. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 329—Evidence held not to show fraud or collusion invalidating husband's foreign decree of divorce from former wife.

Evidence held not to show fraud or collusion, invalidating foreign divorce decree granted husband in suit brought by him against former wife without substituted service after she filed bill for divorce against him in another state.

6. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 326—Parties remarrying are estopped to deny validity of foreign divorce.

Parties to foreign divorce decree are estopped by remarriage to other persons to deny validity of decree, even if void on collateral attack as showing want of jurisdiction on its face.

7. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 327—Husband requesting wife to accompany him to another state, qualifying himself to practice medicine therein, remaining there some time, and not returning to former state, held bona fide resident when granted divorce therein.

Husband requesting wife in good faith to accompany him from Massachusetts to Tennessee, qualifying himself to practice medicine in latter state, remaining there several months after sanitarium of which he was medical director closed, and not returning to Massachusetts, but going to and remaining in California, held a bona fide resident of Tennessee at time of divorce decree granted him therein.

8. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 326—Tennessee divorce judgment will not be held invalid on collateral attack for failure to allege plaintiff's residence in state and defendant's desertion or absence for statutory time (Shannon's Code Tenn. § 4203, and § 4201, subds. 4, 8).

Judgment of divorce, granted in Tennessee will not be held invalid on collateral attack because statutory requirements of two year's residence by plaintiff in that state and desertion or absence of defendant for two years (Shannon's Code Tenn. § 4201, subds. 4, 8, and section 4203) were not alleged in complaint nor incorporated in judgment.

9. Evidence $\hookrightarrow$ 80(1)—Laws of another state are presumed same as those of state on similar subjects.

Supreme Court must presume, in absence of contrary showing, that laws of another state are the same as those of California affecting similar subjects.

10. Judgment $\hookrightarrow$ 503—Judgment of court having general jurisdiction of subject-matter cannot be successfully attacked collaterally because of imperfect or defective complaint.

Judgment of court having general jurisdiction of subject-matter cannot be successfully attacked in collateral proceeding because of imperfect or defective complaint in action in which rendered; judgment in accord with prayer of such complaint being nothing more than error.

11. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 168—Failure to allege plaintiff's residence for statutory time does not affect court's jurisdiction as respects collateral attack (Civ. Code, § 128).

As respects collateral attack, failure to allege that plaintiff in divorce suit resided in state and county in which brought for time prescribed by Civ. Code, § 128, does not affect court's jurisdiction to hear and determine action, if it obtained jurisdiction of defendant.

12. Divorce $\hookrightarrow$ 327—Divorce obtained on substituted service outside state of matrimonial domicile by simulating residence therein may be held void in any other state.

Where one spouse goes to another state than that of matrimonial domicile, and there obtains divorce under residence simulated for such purpose and not in good faith, judgment is not binding on courts of other states, and may be held void therein on proof of fraudulent residence and substituted service only.

13. Marriage $\hookrightarrow$ 40(1), 50(1)—Proof of prior marriage and parties' continued life is insufficient to make case against second ceremonial marriage but proof that first marriage was not set aside is required.

Merely proof of prior marriage and continued life of both spouses is not sufficient to make a case against second ceremonial marriage, but there must be further showing that first marriage had not been set aside by judicial decree.

14. Marriage ⚭40(1)—Legality of marriage regularly solemnized is presumed.

There is a very strong presumption in favor of the legality of a marriage regularly solemnized.

15. Marriage ⚭40(11)—In view of burden of proof, parties to regular marriage in state were husband and wife, absent evidence that husband was not divorced from former wife.

In absence of testimony in former wife's deposition as to whether she had obtained divorce decree or affirmative showing that husband had not obtained valid decree against her, he and one whose marriage to him was regularly solemnized in California after foreign divorce decree assailed as void were husband and wife under laws of such state whatever their marriage status before, in view of burden of proof on one attacking second marriage.

16. Divorce ⚭168, 172—Final divorce decree is binding on all as to determination of marital status, and immune from collateral attack on other than statutory grounds (Code Civ. Proc. § 1916).

Final divorce decree, being a judgment in rem establishing and dissolving matrimonial status is binding on all the world as to determination of such status and immune from collateral attack on grounds not specified by Code Civ. Proc. § 1916.

17. Divorce ⚭1—Marriage ⚭2—Marriage and divorce are questions of public policy largely within state's sound discretion.

Marriage and divorce are questions of public policy committed largely to sound discretion of the several states.

18. Marriage ⚭40(1)—Judgment upholding marriage status of persons seriously affected must be sustained, if reasonably possible.

Policy of law requires that trial court's judgment upholding marriage status of persons seriously affected thereby be sustained, if reasonably possible.

19. Witnesses ⚭204(1) — Letter instructing attorney to get writer's share of property for his children by former marriage if anything happened to him and wife held inadmissible as privileged.

In action to annul joint tenancy deed to plaintiff's decedent and her husband, letter from husband to his attorney, stating that he wanted latter to get husband's share for his children by former marriages, "for whom I am doing many of these things," if anything happened to him and wife on automobile trip, held properly excluded from evidence as privileged and of little, if any, relevancy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Frank M. Kelsey, special administrator of the estate of Mary Moore Miller, deceased, against Jared H. Miller. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Anderson & Anderson, Victor T. Watkins, and John L. Richardson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Kimball Fletcher, A. P. Thomson, MacDonald & Thompson, and Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal, L. A. No. 8539, which will presently receive our attention, is the first in numerical order of three separate appeals pending in this court from judgments affecting the estate of Mary Moore Miller, deceased. The second appeal, L. A. No. 8894, 263 P. 213, is entitled "Frank M. Kelsey, as Special Administrator of the Estate of Mary Moore Miller, Deceased, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. Jared H. Miller, Defendant and Respondent, Security Trust & Savings Bank, a Corporation, Citizens' National Bank, a Corporation, and Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank, a Corporation, Defendants," and was taken by the special administrator from a judgment awarding plaintiff costs only in an action brought to compel Jared H. Miller to account to said estate for all moneys belonging to said Mary Moore Miller which might have come into his hands or that were received by him from her during a seven-year period of assumed marital relations, which was terminated by her death, and during which period of time said Jared H. Miller and Mary Moore Miller held themselves out to be and lived together as husband and wife. Said third appeal, L. A. No. 9013, 263 P. 214, entitled "George W. Moore, Contestant and Respondent, v. Jared H. Miller, as Executor of the Estate of Mary Moore, Deceased, Lillian Hays, Formerly Lillian Miller, and Russell C. Miller, Respondents and Appellants," was taken from a decree revoking the probate of the last will and testament of said Mary Moore Miller, deceased. All of said actions, including the instant case, were doubtless brought on behalf of the collateral kindred of said decedent and arise out of the same state of facts and involve many similar issues of law and fact.

The complaint herein L. A. No. 8539, which was twice amended, will be referred to as the "complaint," rather than as the "second amended complaint." The action was brought to obtain a decree of annulment of a certain deed, dated November 10, 1915, wherein the grantees, Mary Moore Miller, since deceased, and her husband, Jared H. Miller, defendant and respondent, were named as joint tenants, with the right of survivorship, in and to lot 35, Kensington Place, situate in the city of Los Angeles, and valued at $16,500. The money furnished to pay the purchase price of said real property was taken from funds acquired by the wife before marriage. Incidental to the main purpose of the action, plaintiff prays, as the special administrator of said estate, to be let into the possession of said real property, which, since the demise of Mary Moore Miller on February 17, 1921, has been and now is in the possession of said Jared H. Miller by virtue of said deed, and that he and the other defendants named in the action who claim an interest adverse to said estate be forever barred and enjoined from asserting any claim of interest in or to said real property, and for general relief.

It is claimed by appellant that two major controlling propositions have been established by the evidence, which, if given the probative force which they are entitled to receive, would inevitably compel a reversal of the judgment. These propositions may be thus summarized: First, that the decree granted to Jared H. Miller on September 15, 1909, by the circuit court of Shelby county, state of Tennessee, in the action of Jared H. Miller v. Edith C. Miller, his former wife, purporting to dissolve the matrimonial bonds theretofore existing between him and said former wife, was invalid by reason of certain alleged fraudulent methods employed by Jared H. Miller in obtaining said decree, including collusive conduct on the part of both parties to said action, and, said marriage not having been lawfully dissolved, the subsequent marriages of Dr. Jared H. Miller with Mary Moore were void from the beginning. Second, that if matrimonial relations which were maintained by her and Dr. Jared H. Miller were maintained in the belief that she was his lawful wife, when as a matter of law she was not such lawful wife, the deed of joint tenancy being a gift and made in the belief and under the influence of the existence of the marital state, would bring the transaction within the confidential relation clauses of sections 158 and 2235, Civil Code, which provide that transactions between husband and wife "by which he obtains any advantage from his beneficiary, are presumed to be entered into by the latter without sufficient consideration, and under undue influence," and the presumption of undue influence would of itself be sufficient to vitiate the conveyance. Other allegations of fraud and undue influence practiced on the part of said Jared H. Miller are alleged to consist in false reports and representations made by him to said Mary Moore to the effect that he was a person possessed of great wealth and was engaged in handling large affairs and that he possessed unusual capacity, sagacity, and ability as a developer, promoter, and manager of large business and financial enterprises, when as a matter of fact he was insolvent and was lacking in the qualities which he boasted of possessing. These latter representations are offered as affording other and additional inducements which moved Mary Moore to consent to enter into the marriage relation with him and did thereafter influence her to place her estate largely within his control.

The appellant claims that the matrimonial status of respondent Miller and Mary Moore Miller depends upon the validity or lack of validity of said divorce decree granted to said Jared H. Miller from Edith Chesley Miller (whose maiden name was Edith Chesley) by the circuit court of the county of Shelby, state of Tennessee, on September 15, 1909. Dr. Jared H. Miller was a graduate physician and surgeon. His marriage with Edith Chesley was solemnized by his father, the Rev. Frederick M. Miller, at North Brookfield, state of Massachusetts, in 1901. Shortly after said marriage they moved to Palmer, Mass., where they resided for a period of almost three years. There a son, Chesley Russell Miller, was born. Between the years 1903 and 1905, for a period of something like two years, they lived apart. During said period he spent a year in Europe, the wife having returned to her mother's home. In 1905 he resumed the practice of his profession at Boston, and his wife rejoined him. They lived together intermittently and unhappily until April, 1909, when the wife again left him. A part of their early married life was spent in Massachusetts and a portion was spent in a Connecticut city, where Dr. Miller was connected with a sanitarium. Edith Chesley Miller, since the granting of the Shelby county decree, remarried and has since been living with her husband in Springfield, Mass. By her deposition, which constitutes a part of the record herein, she deposed to the fact that in the month of May, 1909, a period when she and Dr. Jared H. Miller were living separate and apart, he visited her and requested her to rejoin him and accompany him to Raleigh, Tenn., where he was to assume the position of medical director of a sanitarium, but that she refused to do so. This request, it appears from the deposition of Edith Chesley Miller, was made in good faith. A few days thereafter, to wit, June 1, 1909, she filed an action in the courts of Massachusetts praying for a decree annulling the bonds of matrimony then existing between them and alleging acts of cruelty on his part and charging him with being an habitual user of intoxicating liquors and drugs. By her deposition, taken in the instant case, she recanted as to the liquor and drug charges made in her complaint and deposed that said charges had been overstated by her attorney and that her former husband was not addicted to the use of drugs and that the intoxication therein alleged as habitual was occasional only. The complaint seems to have been served on Dr. Jared H. Miller on the day it was filed, and he departed from Boston for Tennessee on the following day. No further pleadings were filed or proceedings of any nature taken by said plaintiff, Edith Chesley Miller. Shortly after Dr. Jared H. Miller arrived at the Tennessee sanitarium to assume his duties Edith Chesley Miller arrived in Tennessee, prompted by the belief that her husband had taken their son, Chesley Russell Miller, with him. In this she was mistaken. The boy, who, it seems, was placed by judicial order in the custody of Dr. Miller, was at Summerville, Mass., a short distance out of Boston. Upon one of her visits at the Tennessee sanitarium the proprietor thereof, in the presence of Dr. Jared H. Miller, urged her to rejoin her husband at the sanitarium and resume matrimonial relations with him. This she positively stated she would not do. Within a few days thereafter she returned to Massachusetts, where she afterwards remarried and has since resided with her husband. Dr. Miller qualified as a practicing physician of Tennessee in conformity with the laws of that state, and, according to his testimony, which is corroborated by subsequent events, had no intention of again returning to Massachusetts. He remained at the Tennessee sanitarium until it was closed as an unsuccessful venture. He then went to Memphis, where he resided for several months, and finally departed for California to visit his daughter by his first marriage, who was then living at the home of his father, the Rev. F. M. Miller, at Lankershim. Subsequently he entered the practice of his profession at San Francisco and finally located in Los Angeles. The marriage with Edith Chesley was respondent's second marriage, his first wife having died a short time after the birth of the daughter above mentioned.

The complaint sets out a number of acts and matters which, it is claimed, bore directly upon the execution of said deed and which were fraudulently employed and resorted to by respondent to induce, and which did induce, said Mary Moore Miller to execute said deed. The Shelby county decree is alleged to have been procured by respondent, who was plaintiff in said divorce proceeding, upon the false and fraudulent representation made by him to said court that he had acquired a legal residence in the state of Tennessee, when as a matter of fact he was not a bona fide resident of said state, and, further, that both parties to the proceeding were guilty of collusion in causing and procuring said decree to be made. It is next alleged that on March 29, 1911, at the city of Berkeley, county of Alameda, state of California, said Jared H. Miller pretended to contract a marriage with Irene Ayers by engaging in a ceremony which in form conformed to the marriage ceremonial, but which nevertheless was void by reason of the undissolved marriage bond then existing between respondent and said Edith Chesley Miller; that respondent and said Irene Ayers Miller lived together as husband and wife until July 13, 1914; that thereafter and on or about November 17, 1914, by the institution of a false and fraudulent action in the chancery court of the county of Shelby, state of Tennessee, respondent was granted a decree of divorce from said Irene Ayers Miller; that at the time said action was commenced and said decree was granted said court was without jurisdiction of either person or the subject-matter of the action, for the reason that said respondent was not then nor had he ever been a bona fide resident of said state; that said Irene Ayers Miller had no notice, actual or constructive, of the pendency of said action or of the entry of said decree until September 14, 1922; that on November 20, 1914, at the city of Jackson, county of Madison, state of Tennessee, said Jared H. Miller and Mary Moore went through the form of a marriage ceremony; that thereafter, to wit, October 13, 1915, at the city of Memphis, state of Tennessee, the same parties, having complied with all the ceremonial forms and statutory requirements essential for the legal solemnization of marriages, went through the form of and engaged in a pretended marriage ceremony for the second time, which was also void by reason of said Miller not having been legally divorced from said Edith Chesley Miller.

It is further alleged in this connection that the intermarriage of said Jared H. Miller and Irene Ayers, if said marriage was in law valid, continued to be a subsisting marriage contract, inasmuch as the decree granted by the circuit court of Shelby county on November 17, 1914, purporting to divorce them, was fraudulently procured. As an additional objection and obstacle to said pretended marriage of October 13, 1915, by said Jared H. Miller and Mary Moore, it is alleged that at the time it was purported to have been solemnized there was pending in the superior court of the state of California, county of Alameda, an action wherein and whereby said Irene E. (Ayers) Miller as plaintiff was praying for the dissolution of the matrimonial bonds then existing between her and said Jared H. Miller; that he appeared in and defended said action, but did not mention or refer to the purported decree of divorce rendered in his favor by the chancery court of Shelby county, state of Tennessee, whereby his said pretended marriage with Irene Ayers Miller was decreed dissolved on November 17, 1914; that an interlocutory decree of divorce was rendered on September 28, 1915, by said superior court of Alameda county, adjudging the plaintiff, Irene Ayers Miller, entitled to a divorce from said Jared H. Miller, but the final decree was not entered therein until October 5, 1916. The complaint contains no allegation of any other marriage having been performed, in which said Jared H. Miller and Mary Moore were the contracting parties. The answer, however, alleges the celebration of a subsequent marriage ceremony performed at the city of Fresno, California, on May 11, 1918, and the court finds this allegation to be true and that this marriage was legal in all respects.

It is not claimed that any of the marriage ceremonies performed since the decree entered by the circuit court of Shelby county on September 15, 1909, were void as lacking in legal symbols or form, but it is claimed that all subsequent marriages pretended or attempted to have been entered into by said Jared H. Miller since his marriage with Edith Chesley are absolutely void for the reason that no valid decree of divorce was ever made or entered by any court dissolving said marriage.

The complaint alleges and the court found that at the time of the trial of the instant case said Edith Chesley Miller was a resident of the state of Massachusetts and was known as Edith C. Berriman, and that Irene E. Ayers was a resident of the state of California. It is alleged by plaintiff that at the time of the Memphis marriage, October 13, 1915, Mary Moore was wholly ignorant of the fact that said Jared H. Miller was a married man, and that she was induced by the fraudulent representations made by him to believe and did believe that he was a single man, and there was no legal obstacle debarring him from contracting marriage with her, and that she continued in such belief to the time of her death. Fraudulent representations are alleged to have been made by him to her that he was possessed of large properties and wealth, which representations being accepted by her as statements of truth influenced her conduct in dealing with him to her detriment. His insolvency is also alleged.

It is alleged that after the performance of said marriage ceremony at the city of Jackson on November 20, 1914, said Miller and Mary Moore entered upon matrimonial relations and continued to live together as husband and wife to the day of her death, to wit, February 17, 1921; that as her pretended husband, but well knowing that he was not her lawful husband, said Miller gained and secured her love, affection, and confidence, and by indulging in meretricious representations beguiled her into the belief that he was her lawful husband, and that he was well qualified to manage and care for her properties and invest her funds, and thereby induced her to place into his hands for said purposes sums of money aggregating in excess of $200,000; that as a part of his design he represented that he was about to purchase the real property described in the complaint and present it to her as a home for both; that said Mary Moore expressed a desire to participate in said purchase and to pay one-half the purchase price of said home, and, while he pretended to protest against her paying any part of said purchase price, with seeming reluctance and unwillingness he finally yielded to her desire in the matter and consented that she pay one-half of said purchase price; believing that he intended to and would pay the remaining one-half of said purchase price, Mary Moore consented to and agreed with respondent, Dr. Miller, that the deed, which is dated November 10, 1915, and recorded May 11, 1916, should be taken in the names of both as joint tenants with the right of survivorship; that said respondent did not pay the said one-half or any part of said purchase price; but without her knowledge or consent he paid the whole of said purchase price out of the separate moneys and property of said Mary Moore.

The certificate of marriage attesting the solemnization of the marriage of said Jared H. Miller and Mary Moore on October 13, 1915, as authorized by the marriage license theretofore issued, is pleaded at large. A number of sections of the statutes of the state of Tennessee bearing upon the question of the legality of the decrees of divorce granted by the Tennessee courts to respondent from Edith Chesley Miller and Irene Ayers Miller, respectively, and affecting his right to remarry thereafter, are incorporated in the complaint and answer, some of which will hereafter be considered.

The answer makes full and complete denials of each and every allegation of the complaint from which any adverse inference or conclusion may be drawn as to the legality of the divorce decree granted to respondent by the Tennessee court in the case of Jared H. Miller v. Edith Chesley Miller, and of all other allegations that tend to impair the validity of the marriages of Jared H. Miller and Mary Moore. The proceedings instituted in the superior court of the county of Alameda, whereby Irene Ayers Miller was granted a decree of divorce from respondent, are admitted to be true. Respondent alleges that he domiciled in the state of Tennessee on June 5, 1909, with the intention of making and did make said state his place of legal residence, and resided therein until about November 21, 1914. The history of the two marriages entered into by respondent and Mary Moore in Tennessee and the third at Fresno, Cal., is recited, and in this connection it is alleged that, relying upon the legality of said marriage ceremonies, respondent and said Mary Moore Miller lived together as husband and wife, beginning with the celebration of the first marriage, to wit, November 20, 1914, to the time of her death. The answer specifically denies that said Mary Moore was not informed as to respondent's matrimonial status as affected by the several divorce proceedings mentioned in the complaint, and alleges in this connection that she was absolutely informed as to each and every marriage and divorce proceeding mentioned in the complaint, and that she knew and was as fully advised as to the legal effect thereof as was the respondent. He denies that he reported falsely on his wealth or his earning capacity, and alleges that he stated to Mary Moore all the facts concerning his financial standing; denies that he was insolvent or was not possessed of any real or personal property prior to and at the times said marriage ceremonies were performed with said Mary Moore; admits that respondent secured, obtained, and had the love, affection, and confidence of said Mary Moore during the entire period of their relationship, but denies that it was obtained by the practice of deception or artifice; admits that from time to time during the continuance of their marital relations Mary Moore Miller gave to him either as a gift outright or made him a joint tenant with herself in various property and sums of money; denies that at the time the real property in suit was purchased he agreed or promised to pay or was expected to pay one-half or any part of the purchase price thereof; alleges that Mary Moore Miller well knew that respondent was at said times without means to purchase said property, and pursuant to her desire and wish she paid the whole of said purchase price from her separate estate, except the sum of $500, which sum was paid by respondent from his separate estate; that said real property was purchased either with the separate funds of Mary Moore Miller given by her to respondent for that purpose or with funds held in joint tenancy by said Mary Moore Miller and respondent, except said sum of $500 furnished by respondent, that said Mary Moore Miller was in possession of all the facts relating to the purchase of said real property, and that the terms of said deed contain the free and voluntary act, wish and desire of said Mary Moore Miller that he and she should hold and enjoy said real property as joint tenants with right of survivorship, the title to which became vested in him upon the death of said Mary Moore Miller.

The court found that the estate of Mary Moore Miller was not at any time the owner or entitled to the possession of said real property described in said deed; that said claims asserted by said estate as to ownership and right of possession were unsupported by the evidence; that upon the death of Mary Moore Miller said Jared H. Miller became and has since continued to be the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and entitled to the possession thereof. It further found that prior to September 4, 1909, Jared H. Miller and Edith Chesley Miller were husband and wife, and that the decree of divorce granted September 15, 1909, to said Jared H. Miller by the circuit court of Tennessee in the action brought by him against said Edith Chesley Miller, was valid and dissolved the marriage tie theretofore existing between said Jared H. Miller and Edith Chesley Miller. The subsequent marriage of respondent with Irene Ayers, solemnized in the city of Berkeley, Alameda
